COLUMBIAN MAGAZINE.—The January number of this work, comes to us elegantly embellished. First we have in mezzotinto, The Storming of Palace Hill at the Battle of Montery. Next, Harvey Birch and the Skinners: then Les Modes Parisiennes, and withal, a piece of Original Music. The number contains some excellent reading. Miss Sedgwick, this time, lays fiction aside, and relates true stories, as 'better adapted to the December of our lives.' Mr. Paulding has a good article on, The All Seeing Eye. Fanny Forrestor, Mrs. Child. Mrs. Osgood, Mrs. Sigourney, also contribute for this number. The publisher enters with large encouragement upon his sixth volume, and expects increased patronage. Terms, $3 per year, in advance. One copy two years, or two copies one year for $5 00. Five copies for $10 00. Address Israel Post, Nassau St. N. York.

BOSTON OLIVE BRANCH.—This elegant and highly popular New England weekly Journal, has been handsomely improved, of late. The publisher has announced in the last number, that clubs often shall have the paper for $15, or $1,50 apiece, and larger clubs on still more favorable terms: Rev. T. F. Norris, is still Editor and Proprietor. Rev. S. Lovell, and Rev. H. G. Barrus, are Assistant Editors. H. C. Goodwin publisher. Br. Goodwin, we are sorry to say, your paper of Dec. 12, never came to us, though we got 19th and 26th. Will you be so obliging as to send it? O, the mails.

BRAITHWAITE'S RETROSPECT.—We have received Part Second of this valuable medical work. We noticed the 'Retrospect' two weeks ago. It is an American republication of an English half yearly Journal, highly recommended by numerous medical men. The second part comprises about 150 pages, and contains numerous articles, many of them on useful topics, under the heads of Practical Medicine, Surgery, Midwifery, Anatomy and Physiology. The work is to be had at the low price of $1 per year in advance. And being published in parts of several ounces in weight, the postage upon it is a very trifle. Address, Daniel Adee, Fulton St. N. York.

MONTHLY REPORTER.—A double number of this work is received, dated, December, 1846, which completes the complement, promised by the publisher. The number is quite interesting. It contains several Sermons and Addresses by the Editor, and the Minutes of the Philadelphia Conference, M. P. Church. The Thanksgiving on our first page is taken from this number of the Reporter.

BOTANICO MEDICAL REFORMER.—The first number of Vol. 3, of this work has been sent us. It is published at Mt. Vernon, Ohio by Dr. J. Kost, who has made arrangements for an improvement of the work, and to issue it semi-monthly hereafter. The present number is chiefly occupied by a lecture of Professor Fonendon, on Obstetrics, in the S. B. M. College, Macon, Ga. Dr. K. insists that there must be reform in Medical Science, as well as elsewhere. Terms, of the reformer, $1 per year in advance.

CHRISTIAN SOUVENIR.—The December number, is received, embellished with a portrait of Rev. Dr. Judson, with a biographical sketch; also a beautiful colored flower. The Souvenir is an interesting, and good work. Rev. Messrs. Moore & Lipscomb, Editors, F. C. Wilson, Publisher, Chesnut St. Philadelphia. Terms, $1 per year.

RUSSIA AND TURKEY.—Apprehensions are entertained that that Ottoman power will soon be overthrown. Russia is gathering an immense force, about 100,000 men. Servia and Walachia are to be chastised, and then it is not unlikely a blow will be struck against Turkey itself. So thinks our sapient exchange, the N. York Sun.

BIBLE SOCIETY MEETING.—We remind our friends of the public meeting in behalf the Bible cause, to be held at the Presbyterian Church, Zanesville, on Sabbath evening, (candlelight) 10th inst. A general attendance is invited.

THANKSGIVING SERMON.—The sermon given on our first page, delivered on the late Thanksgiving Day, will be found quite appropriate for the New Year's occasion.

MOVEMENTS OF SECEDERS.—By request, we publish this week, the Constitution agreed upon by a small party who lately seceded from the M. P. Church in the Ohio District. Though its publication does not come within the usual range of our duties, yet we are pleased to accommodate the wishes of the friends of the document, as it is couched in respectful terms. As in the incipient stage of their organization their publishing means are perhaps somewhat limited, we will try and be so accommodating as to publish a little for them. The worthy brother who serves as Committee of publication, is the only individual of the Association, who has, to our knowledge, aided us, to the amount of one dollar, either as agent or subscriber for the Western Recorder. If so, he is the only one who has claim to the use of our columns. We are gratified, for once, to give him place in our paper. Further, as a chronicler of passing events, we would be induced to lay the article before our readers, for the information of those who may be desirous to know the movements of some who have withdrawn from us. Three of the M. G's. whose names are signed to the Constitution, were recently connected with the Ohio Conference. The others were of the unstationed list. It will be seen that with some lay brethren, they have set up for themselves. Their Constitution contains some good things, borrowed from Free Masonry and elsewhere. But we spare our criticisms, as we do not crave a controversy with our seceding brethren, being otherwise sufficiently employed. Some of them we number with our personal friends. The document can stand or fall by its merits. Our readers can judge for themselves. The committee expresses the opinion that the 7th and 10th articles will be amended at the next meeting which will take place at Port William, O. the third Thursday of May next.

THE GOOD CAUSE OF SABBATH SCHOOLS.—We cheerfully publish the following short article from Rev. Mr. Chidlaw. He is a Presbyterian minister of Hamilton County, Ohio, and is actively engaged in an agency for the American S. S. Union. Many of our brethren will recollect that in May last, at the General Conference in Cincinnati, Br. C. had the privilege of addrdssing the Conference one afternoon, in behalf of the Sabbath School cause. We shall be pleased to have him communicate for our paper, whatever he may have to offer at any time, in behalf of the interests of so worthy and so useful an enterprise.

Written for the Western Recorder.

GOOD WORK WELL DONE.

The subscriber gratefully acknowledges the sum of $10,00 received from the Tanners' creek, Ia, Sabbath School through the hands of Wm. Smith, Esq, to pay for a library of S. S. books for the use of the convicts in the State Prison at Jeffersonville Ia.

B. W. CHIDLAW.
Agt. Am. S. S. Union.

In addition to the above, I would state, that a few weeks ago I visited the above Prison, and presented the books for the use of the convicts now numbering about 140. The officers of the Prison received the books with great pleasure, and promised to superintend their circulation among the unfortunate prisoners under their care, I found the prison very poorly supplied with books, and the prisoners with whom I converse I appeared exceedingly anxious to read, and I have no doubt, the books thus introduced among them, will shed beams of heavenly light not only into their gloomy cells, but into minds benighted by sin. May God abundantly bless the S. Schools on Tanners' Creek and cause their liberality to abuond more and more. B. W. C.

Cleves, Hamilton Co. O. Dec. 24, 1846.

PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS.—We learn from the Pittsburgh Gazette, that the contract for conveying the volunteers from that city to N. Orleans was taken by the following five steamboats; Messenger, New England, Aliquippa, Circassian and St. Anthony, they are said to be of the best boats on the Ohio. The government pays $4, 000 to each of these boats for the transportatian to N. Orleans. Another small item ($20,000) of war expense. The regiment embarked, and left P. on the 21 and 22 ult. The scene of separation at the departure, is said to have been very affecting. Bars are prohibited on the steamboats, by regimental orders.

HYDROPHOBIA.—We learn by the Ohio Statesman that Mr. H. D. V. Williams, of Lima, Ohio, who was for a long time connected with the land office at that place, died a few days age, in consequence of a bite received from a rabid dog, in Marion, O., in October last. He leaves a family, and large circle of frinds.

MEETING HOUSES.—Those who would know how to build and furnish a house of worship, will find some excellent suggestions on the subject in an article on our fourth page, by Rev. Mr. Brown, of Zanesville.

MARKETS.

Wheat continues to bring in Zanesville and Putnam 55cts.; Flour, $3,25, Pork $2,25.

At Cincinnati on the 28th ult. Flour was worth $3,80; Pork, from $3,15 to $3,28.

In Philadelphia on the 22nd ult., Flour ranged from $3,75 to $3,81; Wheat, $1,05.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

STEAM TYPE SETTER.

Another invention, and to the newspaper profession the most astounding of all, has just been brought into successful operation in this city. We allude to Clay & Rosenberg's Steam Type Setter, which, by the aid of two men and three boys, can put up as much printed matter as ten compositors can do by the present system. This is indeed alarming. Our profession has hitherto been deemed secure from the innovations of labor-saving machines. The disciples of Faust were supposed free from these formidable competitors of human labor. But we may now exclaim, "who is safe!" Intellectual labor itself is invaded by these mechanical humanities, and so unexpected is this discovery of a perfect steam type-setting machine, that we would as soon have looked for a thinking machine! The steam type-setting machine is a veritable reality. It does its work well and accurately. The operator sits before two sets of keys situated like the keys of a piano; his fount of type is before him, arranged in rows; each letter or figure is in its own row, piled up separately; each type has its own key, and attached to the key is a lever which, when the key is touched, pushes out one type into what may be called a railway track, where there is an endless chain in operation for conveying the types into a little box, where they are received and piled up in a line. By an index before him, the compositor sees at once when his line is completed. He then stops the machine, gives the full line signal to his assistant, who opens the box and slides the line into its column of printed matter. The assistant then adjusts the line, and if leaded composition, he adds a lead, and about as soon as he has this done, the compositor has another line ready for him! In fact the types jump into the composing "stick" (or "box," as the new term is) as fast as the compositor can touch the keys. Every time he touches a key he sets a type. A compositor like Herz, the pianist, for example, would set one of the columns of the Sun in twenty minutes! This seems incredible: but we have seen books and pamphlets composed by it. In our opinion, the impetus which these machines will give to the printing business, will avert any injuries which their introduction at first view might threaten to inflict upon the profession. —N. Y. Sun.

WONDERFUL PERIL AND ESCAPE.—Edward Davis, foreman in Alderman Kanonse's machine shop at Jersey City, imprudently attempted last week to rectify something in the machinery, while the steam engine was at work. Some part of his apparel got entangled in the "coupling," by which he was bent up and whirled round at least 60 times, his feet striking some joist and plank at every revolution. The engineer, with presence of mind, stopped the engine as soon as he discovered the accident, and Mr. Davis was extricated, and conveyed to his boarding house in a state of insensibly. After a while he became partially restored to his senses, when to the surprise of all it appeared that he received no serious injury beyond some bruises in his feet, and a light loss of blood, although his boots and even his stockings and other parts of his dress were torn from his body.

LO! THE POOR INDIAN.

A letter, dated Nov. 20. from the neighborhood of Fort Scott, in the Osage Nation, published in the St. Louis Republican, gives the most distressing accounts of the exposed state of the frontier, left with a mere handful of soldiers, and threatened continually with bands of predatory Indians, whose rude passions have been inflamed by the wars of the white men, raging around them. But what is far more to be lamented, and denounced by every independent man who has a particle of respect for justice and the honor of his country, is the conduct of the Government in regard to the poor Indians lately removed from Western New York, as exhibited in the following paragraph:

"We have on our border, and near us, an unfortunate band of badly treated Indian emigrants. They are portions of the Six Nations of New York. They were sent here by Government, according to treaty stipulations. Their treatment, suffering and condition cannot be described. I have said they were from New York. They were brought hither by the Government agents in June last, but with promises that money should be paid them on their arrival here. By the treaty, they were to have houses, fields, mills, churches, school-houses, and other comforts erected for, and extended to them. But, up to this time they have not received a dollar of money, nor has a cabin, to say nothing of a house been erected. No churches nor school houses have been prepared, nor has a field been opened. The consequences are easily told. Of the whole number, more than one half have been consigned to their mother earth—while those who remain are borne down by sickness and the loss of so many friends. The Government is responsible for this destitution and affliction. The people of the Six Nations have seen better days, and something besides the government ration was necessary to their comfort, and was provided for in the treaty. As yet, the Government authorities have not responded to an appeal made by them, through their agent, while other nations, before and since their emigration, have had moneys paid to them. There is something wrong in the proceedings towards these wretched Indians, and some one should be made to suffer, and account for their wrongs. I appeal to Benton, Crittenden, Sevier and other Senators, to move an investigation into this matter. The interposition of the independent press is invoked, and I ask the whole country to see that the stain is removed from the national honor."

Who can read this statement without blushing for his country, without a thrill of indignation against those who have brought this great shame upon it, and without mourning in pity and sorrow for the poor unfortunate Indian! Will not God be avenged on such a nation as this? Will not the cries of those famishing and dying Indians; driven from their homes, robbed of their property, despoiled of all their comforts, and left to perish in the wilderness, come up before the Great Father of All!"—and will he not avenge his elect who cry unto him night and day from the midst of their unutterable woe?—Pitts. Gaz.

From the Boston Olive Branch.

Fathers of Methodism in New England.

We insert a note below from the venerable Snelling, the first New England or Boston boy who became a Methodist minister. He still lingers with us, quite active, after considerable more than half a century of hard ministerial labor. His reference to his old companions, the deceased Pickering and Broadhead, calls us back into an age gone by, and compels us to ask, 'the Fathers where are they?' Alas, a few only of those venerable men of iron nerves, indomitable will and untiring industry are left. Soon alas, too soon, not one will be left.

Methuen, Mass. Dec. 18, 1846.

MESSRS. EDITORS,—When I read in the last Olive Branch of the death of Rev. George Pickering, whom I have ever esteemed one of my particular friends, it brought to my mind many things which transpired years ago. I became acquainted with him when he first began to travel in these New England States, and we have been on terms of intimacy and sincere friendship for more than fifty years. He was stationed in Boston before we had any Meeting-house, when our number was small, and preached in a chamber fitted up for public worship. When the meeting-house, called the Old Bethel, was dedicated, he preached the dedication sermon, and may be considered one of the first planters of Methodism in New England. I have travelled hundreds of miles with him, and have witnessed his indefatigable labors, and ardent zeal in the cause of our Divine Master. As a Presiding elder, he was always punctual to attend Quarterly meetings, and as a stationed minister, always found at his post. I hope his death will be sanctified to his dear family. His house used to be one of my homes, when I traveled Needham Circuit nearly fifty years ago. May the widow and children have all that grace that is calculated to support them under this trial. And now will just mention my friend, Rev. John Broadhead, who died a few years ago. We were acquainted with each other nearly 50 years. A short time before he died he came to see me; our interview was very agreeable. he knew I was a Protestant Methodist, but I found him the same invaluable friend. When he took his leave, said he, "My friendship is as great for you as it ever was." I told him mine was as great for him. He and Br. Pickering both labored together when Methodism was in a state of infancy; when Methodist preachers were few in number, and the labor was great; their names will not soon be forgotten in Massachusetts, New Hamshire, and Vermont. 'Remember them who have spoke unto you the word of God; whose faith follow considering the end of their conversation.' Elisha delighted in the company of Elijah, and kept with him, and prayed that a double portion of his spirit might rest upon him; and when he was taken up into heaven, he cried, My father, my father, the chariot of Israel and the horsemen thereof. His mantle fell and Elisha took it up and went back to Jordan, smote the waters, and said, Where is the Lord God of Elijah?—He required no more for Elijah, but for Elijah's God. This is a comfort to the Church, the God of Elijah is still the same. Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord, they rest from their labors and their works follow them. Your brother in the gospel. JOSEPH SNELLING.

LATEST FROM MEXICO.—Mexican papers have been received at Washington. Their tone is less arrogant than heretofore, towards the United States. The correspondence between Gen. Santa Anna and Gen. Taylor, relative to the termination of the armistice, has been published. American prisoners have been released and money given to defray their expenses. Santa Anna says, that no peace will be made by Mexico while our soldiers remain on her soil or our fleet before her ports. There is no confirmation of reports relative to the mutinous conduct of troops at San Luis de Potosi.—Pitts. Com. Journ.

Appointments by the Legislature of Indiana. Horrace P. Biddle, President Judge of the eighth Judicial Circuit; Samuel Hanna, of Wayne county, Treasurer of State, and Douglass Maguire, Indianapolis, auditor of public accounts.

Starvation.—We find in the New York papers the following account of a most distressing case:

An Irishman, his wife and two children, just landed from an emigrant ship, were found dying in our streets on Monday last, and taken to the almshouse. The Express gives the following account of this unfortunate family, as narrated at the office of the commissioner of the almshouse. The mother was a complete skeleton, and the sunken cheeks and eyes of the whole family told the melancholy truth that they were the victims of the most intense suffering. One of the children was so nearly dead that it could not walk; while it was with the utmost difficulty that even the father could totter across the floor, he was so exceedingly feeble. They were all as near dead as it was possible for the living to be, and want of food was the only cause which had brought them to this miserable state, as it was evident they were neither sickly nor intemperate. In answer to all questions asked them, their replies were, 'We want some bread—do give us some bread—we will die if you do not give us some bread.' As a matter of course this unhappy family were attended to, but the utmost caution was necessary in administering their food. When they were seated at the table the first thing that the mother did was to feed her youngest child, and as she did this took not a particle herself, but uttered a strange, wild laugh; and when the child was made quite sick by even a table-spoon full of rice, the mother wept most bitterly, and said, 'O my child is going to die.'' After this strange feast was ended, the forsaken and poverty-stricken members of the family were taken to the hospital, where, we are pleased to know, they are doing well, but are even now not far from death's door."

The Question of Slavery in the new territories is a fruitful theme of debate in Congress. Already are speeches made on the probable introduction of African slavery into Oregon, New Mexico and California. It has been prohibited in Oregon by the legislative act of the settlers, and can never be established in that region. In New Mexico and California there has been an apprenticeship, or feudal system, but the soil and climate of both, the character of the emigrants and the toils of the journey thither preclude the possibility of introducing negro slaves to cultivate either territory. Should these territories be transferred to this Union, they will be settled by the same hardy race that is now improving the great north western wilderness; building cities on the Pacific, and supplanting the African in the cultivation of the fertile fields of Maryland, Virginia, Kentucky, Delaware and North Carolina.

Texas is to be the grave of American slavery. as all acquainted with the nature of that country and the character of the emigrants resorting thither will readily admit. The hardy German emigrants and the intelligent freemen of our northern states are overrunning the high table lands of that fine country, while a few straggling parties of slaves occasionally settle upon the small patches of sugar and cotton and fever land on the coast. Texas is now witnessing the "masterly" power of that "inactivity" which permits human liberty to work out its own great achievements in its own time. So long as the high temperate lands of Texas can be had, as at present, for fifty cents an acre, while those of the United States are selling at a dollar and a quarter, just so long will freemen emigrate thither from our own States and from Europe to help dig the grave of African slavery.—N. Y. Sun.

A Rum-Seller Indicted for Manslaughter.—A rum-seller in New-Bedford, as we learn from the Mercury, by the name of John Britnell, lately furnished one of his victims with brandy until he fell senseless to the floor. The helpless man was then dragged into a cellar, where he was laid near a window with neither sash nor shutter, the thermometer being at 17 degrees, and cold water poured upon him. He then was taken from the cellar with no signs of life about him except breathing, and the rum-seller wishing to close his shop for the night, he was left in an outer room, lying on his face, with his head within fourteen inches of a red hot stove. On that same spot he was found in the morning dead. He had not stirred. The Jury of inquest returned the following verdict:

"That Philip G. Simmons came to his death by congestion of the brain, caused by the excessive use of brandy, and subsequent exposure to the cold, and of the head to extreme heat; upon the premises of John Britnell, of whom the brandy was obtained, and through whose recklessness the exposure took place. J. B. Congdon, Foreman."

Britnell was arrested on Thursday last, and held to bail in the sum of $1000, on a charge of manslaughter.

We learn from Col. Hatch, that the sensation created in New-Bedford, by the event above recorded, is extensive and deep. A town meeting was called immediately, which was held on Saturday, and numerously attended. A vote was passed, appointing a large committee to take immediate and energetic measures to suppress the illegal traffic in intoxicating drinks, which was represented as greatly on the increase, and constantly causing much suffering and crime, beside that which was so horribly exhibited to the public in the case of poor Simmons!—Boston Journal.

Indiana.—The Legislature of Indiana met on the 7th inst. Gov. Whitcomb's message represents the finances of the State as improving.—The amount of revenue paid into the State Treasury during the last fiscal year is $293,861, being nearly $14,000 more than was estimated by the Auditor's report for 1845. No doubt exists that ample funds will be in the treasury, under the present assessment and rate of taxation, to meet the July payment required by the State debt bill of the last session, should that go into operation. He says an arrangement has been agreed upon with the bondholders in London for the payment of the State debt and the completion of the Wabash and Erie Canal, by the payment of one half the principal and interest of the debt by taxation, and the other half by the property and tolls of the canal, from the State line adjoining Ohio to Evansvile; such property to be assigned to three trustees, and the State to be freed from the responsibillity on that portion of the debt and interest to be secured. The principal of the proposed arrangement has received the assent to the committee of bondholders, and the expression of a great majority of the citizens is also decidedly in its favor. Steps have been taken to carry the act into effect on the part of the bondholders here, and parties holding bonds to the amount of more than $4,000,000 are ready to surrender them in conformity with the principle to the arrangement.

Sudden Death.—Captain Smith. of the barque Kennebec, of Waldoborough, Maine, suddenly fell dead on the quarter dect, on the 28th of October, in the harbor of Rio de Janeiro. The Kennebec had just arrived from Rio Grande do Sul.

Awful Explosion.—In a coal mine near Birmingham, England, an explosion of gas took place, killing 19 men and three horses.

Disasters at Sea in 1846.—The report on commerce and navigation shows the number of disasters which have occurred at sea during the year ending June 30, 1847. The number of vessels lost was 142, (40 ships, 24 brigs, 64 schooners and 14 sloops,) of the aggregated tonage of 26, 897 against 120 vessels (24 ships, 33 brigs, 57 schooners and 6 sloops) in 1845, of the aggregate tonnage of 20,309 tons. The number of steamers lost in the year 1846 was 22, of the aggregate tonnage of 4314 tons—belonging, 1 to Mobile, 1 to Apalachicola. and 20 to St. Louis; against 8 in the year 1845, of 1231 tons—belonging, 1 to New Orleans and 7 to Cincinnati.

Since report, the September and October gales, whose destructive effects have already been recorded, have occurred. They will help to swell the list of disasters the next year. The life of a seaman is proverbially one of suffering and hardship, and from the facts annually recorded of losses, would appear to be also one of unusual risk and danger of life. Yet accurate statistics prove that the average of human life is wisely maintained in all professions and that seamen in the aggregate are as safe as those employed in trades or professions upon land. The introduction of temperance principles in the maritime service, is doing much to ameliorate the condition of seamen. It is producing habits of economy among them enabling them to save their hard-earned money, instead of squandering it heedlessly, besides adding to their greater security and comfort while at sea.—Dol. Newspaper.

Magnetic Telegraph.—Mr. O'Reilly found that the the rooms in Burke's Building would not answer the purposes of a Telegraph office, and he has taken rooms in Breed's building, over the Mayor's office. These rooms are said to be admirably adapted to the purpose. In a few days we shall have telegraphic communication with Philadelphia.—Pitts. Gaz.

LOSS OF A PACKET SHIP.

[By Philips & Co's. Express from Boston, via. New Haven.]

The following particulars are from the log of the ship Washington Irving, from Liverpool 21st. November, which arrived at Boston 20th inst. She brought the crew and passengers of the packet ship Thomas P. Cope, Capt. Milliken, from Philadelphia for Liverpool, which was struck by lightning at sea on the 19th November.

The lightning set the mainmast head and rigging, and cargo, consisting of hemp and tallow, on fire. Capt. Milliken immediately cut away the mainmast, and attempted, without success, to extinguish the fire in the hold. In this situation they remained on board the ship till the evening of the 5th of December, when the English ship Emigrant, from Liverpool for St. John, N. B., fell in with them, and took off part of the passengers, when a gale came on. On the morning of the 6th of December the gale abated, and the remainder of the passengers, captain and crew were taken on board the "Emigrant." On opening the hatches of the Thos. P. Cope, as the last of the crew left, a dense volume of smoke arose, which rendered it difficult for them to get to the boat. In about three hours afterward, distant five miles. an immense volume of smoke and flame was seen to burst up from her, and she suddenly disappeared.

The Emigrant had got short of provisions and water, and falling in with the Washing. Irving, the latter took off the crew and passengers of the Cope, being eighty two souls in all. Supplied the Emigrant with three barrels of bread, and a barrel of flour. Capt. Quereau and crew of the Sch. Defiance rescued on the 14th Dec., by the Washington Irving went on board the Emigrant. Wednesday evening, Dec, 17th, hove to, judging myself between Cape Cod and Cape Ann, with very strong gales from E. N. E, and very thick weather. The W. Irving has been since the 11th within two days sail of Boston, with the wind at W N W, and thick weather nearly all the time.

Commodore Stockton at the Sandwich Islands.—The Rev. Walter Colton, Chaplain of the U. S. frigate Congress, in a recent letter from Montery, speaking of their late visit to the Islands, says:—

"The missionaries were very hospitable and attentive to us. We visited all their schools and were highly delighted. They are doing an immense amount of good. I spoke in their great stone church to some three thousand persons, on the christian symathy felt in the United States for them—and then told them Commodore Stockton was present, and I hoped he would consent to address them—he was sitting by the side of the king—came forward and spoke for an hour with fervency and effect, on the benefits of the Christian religion, &c. The king and high chief came up at the close, and thanked us for our addresses. We raised two hundred dollars on board our ship to aid the seamen's chaplain at the port of Honolulu, and sailed for this port, which we reached in twenty-three days—nearly three thousand miles."

Ohio Magnetic Telegraph.—An association has been formed, of which Mr. Hugh Downing is the agent and temporary president, for extending a line of Magnetic Telegraph from Pittsburgh through Wheeling, Columbus, Dayton, and Cincinnati, to Louisville. "This branch of the great system of Magnetic Telegraphs, is to be designated Ohio Magnetic Telegraph. At Pittsburgh, it is to connect with the telegraphic lines communicating with Philadelphia, New York, &c., and at Louisville to connect with another line communicating with St. Louis, and New Orleans."

It is said there will be no difficulty in raising the required amount of money to complete the work, and the association coatemplate having the telegraph in successful operation from Pittsburgh to Cincinnati within six months.—Watch. of Valley.

Fire.—We regret to hear that the Saw Mill and Axe Factory belonging to the Rev. Z. H. Coston, at Braddock's Fields, were totally consumed by fire sometime between 12 and 3 o'clock on Friday morning. It is supposed to have caught from a stove in the grinding room of the Axe Factory, as the fires in the furnaces had been carefully extinguished the previous evening.—Otherwise it must have been the act of an incendiary. Loss about $3000, no insurance. Mr. C. has been very unfortunate with this concern.—The freshet, sometime since, took away about $5000 worth of Logs. He had pursued, caught and sold part of them below, and had just returned on Thursday night.—Pitts. Com. Jour.

John Q. Adams.—When the roll of the House of Representatives was called at the opening of Congress, the name of Mr. Adams, received no answer. As this was a new fact in the history of his long membership of that body, and as it occured on account of his detention at home by sickness, it was well calculated to excite interesting reminisences, and unwelcome foreboding. No man ever commanded greater respect in that Hall, and when his seat there becomes finally vacant—who will be found to fill it. Who can fill the place of J. Q. Adams? His physicians have expressed their opinion, that he will not be able to attend the present session.—Watch. of Valley.

Canal across Long Island.—The inhabitants of Long Island have memoralized the Legislature, setting forth that they are deprived of convenient access to market for the sale of their produce, and they propose that the Legislature enact a general system of laws for works of internal improvement, in order that an association may be formed for the completion of a canal across Long Island, from Peconic Bay, at Canoe Place, Suffolk County, to the waters of the harbor of New York. There are a number of navigable bays which by short cuts, would open a secure navigation of eighty miles. and would cost a very inconsiderable sum.—N. Y. Sun.

Mr. Bonnett, a Revolutionary soldier, and an old and highly respected citizen of this place, was buried with military honors on Saturday after noon. He came to this country as a volunteer with La Fayette, during our Revolutionary war.—Pitts. Com. Jour.

An Incident.—A dog belonging to a private in the Du Quesne Grays, yesterday attempted to follow his master on board the New England. The officers had him thrown overboard. The faithful animal continued to swim round the boats, howling piteously, and making vain attempts to get on board to his master. The crowd on shore shouted to the Captain to take the dog on board, and the soldier declared that if he was not, he would desert. Captain Herron at last consented, and as the poor creature was drawn on board and bounded forward to his master, the crowd on shore gave a deafening shout of applause.

Look Out.—Writing or marking anything except the address upon newspapers forwarded by mail, is hereafter to be punished by a fine of five dollars for each offence.

A young man, named William Bell, was killed on the 9th inst., a short distance back of Jeffersonville, Indiana, by the accidental discharge of his gun, on which we was carelessly leaning.

Fraud in Flour.—We see by the Ledger, that the Flour Inspector in Philadelphia has been busy for a day or two past, detecting and throwing out barrels of flour for short weight. consigned to Lee & Bunker from one of the Manayunk mills. The weight short is stated to be from one to three pounds on a barrel. The penalty is ten cents for every barrel that is short weight, and ten cents besides for every pound short. So that a barrel three lbs. short pays a penalty of 40 cents, and a barrel one pound short a penalty of 20 cents.

Governor.—Chancellor David Johnson has been inaugurated Governor of South Carolina, and Dr. Wm. A. Cain, Lt. Governor.

Expulsion of free Negroes.—The proposition of Governor Smith of Virginia to expel 49,842 free Negroes now residing in that State, meets no favour in Virginia.

Fourierites Dissolved.—The "Northamton Industrious Association" has been dissolved, and one of the members, Mr. Hill, takes the property and pays the debts. The company had dwindled down to a small number. These communities are very attractive in theory, but fatally repulsive in practice.

Railroad.—Application is to be made to the New Jersey Legislature to incorporate a company to make a railroad from the western terminus of the Elizabethtown and Somerville Railroad to the borough of Easton, Pa., and thence to the Delaware Water Gap. This addition will run to some of the best coal mines in Pennsylvania, and by a short route and light carrige, can bring down vast quantities of coal to the navigable waters of the Raritan, and thus profitably throw a large supply into the city of New York.—N. Y. Sun.

Dr. Baily left Cincinnati, last week for Washington City; where he designs to issue the first number of "The National Era., early in January.

Old Lady Burnt to Death.—A melancholy death took place in Boston last Wednesday morning, as we learn from the Transcript. A respectable old lady, Mrs. Elizabeth Simonds, mother-in-law to Mr. J. G. Libbey, was burned to death by her clothes accidentally taking fire. She was 81 years old and had been for the last ten years blind and deaf.

Died on Wednesday last, at Providence, R. I., aged 62, the Hon. Geo. Engs, late Lieut Governor of that state. He was one of the pillars of the State, and is much lamented.

Judge Chambers, of Maryland, while out gunning the other day, met with a serious accident, by the explosion of his powder-flask. His face is badly burned and much disfigured.

The Parkersburg Case.—The General Court of Virginia has ordered the discharge of the three citizens of Ohio, who had been arrested for kidnapping slaves from Virginia. A majority of the court decided that the offence was committed beyond low water mark on the Ohio, and therefore not within the limits or jurisdiction of Virginia.

Florida.—The Legislature is in session. Gov. Morsley in his message recommends the following amendments to the constitution.

1. Biennial instead of annual sessions of the General Assembly.

2. A residence of six months, instead of two years within the State, a necessary qualification to suffrage.

3. So amend the 12th section of the 5th article, that the election of Judges of the Circuit Court be hereafter made by the People by General Ticket, from the whole State; and that their term of service be limited to not less than five and not more than ten years.

Curious Coincidence.—The Boston Traveller of Monday night says:—"In our paper to-day we report the loss of the ship Thomas P. Cope, of Philadelphia, by fire, and the abandonment at sea, of the brig Thos. P. Cope, of Branswick. Me.—The only two vessels of that name in the United States.

Appointments by the President.—By and with the advice and consent of Senate.—John Y. Mason, of Virginia, to be Secretary of the Navy, in place of George Bancroft, resigned,

Fire and Loss of Live.—On the 26th ult., the wife of Mr. McCormick, residing in Farmer's Creek township, Jackson county, Iowa, went to a neighbor's for help in cutting wood, leavidg in the house her sick husband and two children. During her absence the house caugh fire, and on her return she found it a heap of smouldering ruins, and all that was dear to her on this earth buried therein.

Dr. Beecher is to supply the pulpit of the Congregationalist church, on 7th st. between Western Row and John streets, until further notice.—Cin. Herald.

MISCELLANY.

"The Consequences of smoking, &c."

The wide-spread habit of smoking has not yet had medical attention paid to it and its consequences. It is only by two or three years' observations that Dr. Laycook had become fully aware of the great changes induced in the system by the abuse of tobacco, and of the varied and obscure forms of disease to which especially excessive smoking gave origin. He proceeded to state some of them as they were met with in pharyngical mucous membrane, the stomach, the lungs, the heart, the brain, and the nervous system. The tobacco consumed by habitual smokers varied from half an ounce to twelve ounces per week, the usual quantity from two to three ounces. Inveterate cigar smokers will consume from four to five dozen per week.

The first morbid result is an inflammatory condition of the mucous membrance of the lips and tongue; then the tonsils and pharynx suffer,—the mucous membrane becoming dry and congested. If the thorax be examined well, it will be found slighly swollen, with congested, veins meandering over surface, and here and there a streak of mucous. Action ascends upwards into the posterior nares, and there is a discharge from the upper part of the pharynx, and irritation is felt by the anterior nares. The eye become affected with heat, slight redness, lachrymation, and a peculiar spasmodic action of the orbicularis muscle experienced, together with intolerance of light an awaking from sleep in the morning. The frontal sinues do not escape, but there is a heavy dull ache in their region.

Descending down the alimentary canal we come to the stomach, where the results, in extreme cases, are symptoms of gastritis. Pain, tenderness, and a constant sensation of sickliness and desire to expectorate, belong to this affection.

The action of the heart and lungs is impaired by the influence of the narcotic on the nervous system; but a morbid state of the larynx, trachea and lungs results from the direct action of the smoke. The voice is observed to be rendered hoarser, and with a deeper tone. Sometimes a short cough results, and a case of ulceration of the cartilages of the larynx came under the doctor's notice. The patient was such a slave to the habit, that he hardly ever had the pipe out of his mouth. Similar sufferings have been caused by similer practices in other instances.

Another form is a slight tickling low down in the pharynx or trachea, and the patient coughs or rather hawks up a gumous looking blood. It is so alarming as to be mistakeable for pulmonary hæmoptysis.

The action of tobacco smoking on the heart is depressing; and some individuals who feel it in this organ more than others complain of an uneasy sensation about the left nipple—a distressing feeling, not amounting to faintness, but allied to it. The action of the heart is observed to be feeble and irregular. An uneasy feeling is also experienced in or beneath the pectoral muscles, and oftener on the right side than on the left.

On the brain the use of tobacco appears to diminish the rapidity of cerebral action, and checks the flow of ideas through the mind. It differs from opium and henbane, and rather excites to wakefuness, like green tea, than composes to sleep—induces a dreaminess which leaves no impression on the memory, leaving a great susceptibility, indicated by a trembling of the hands and an irritability of temper.—Such are secondary results of smoking. So are the blackness of the teeth and gum-boils; there is also a sallow paleness of the complexion, an irresoluteness of disposition, and a want of life and energy, and, in constant smokers who do not drink, a tendency to pulmonary phthisis.

Dr. Wright, of Birmingham, in a communication to the author, fully corroborates his opinions; and both agree that smoking produces gastric disorders, coughs, and inflammatory affections of the larynx and pharynx, diseases of the heart, and lowness of spirits; and, in short, is very injurious to the respiratory, circulating, alimentary, and nervous systems.—N. Y. Albion.

True Nobility.—We find a most beautiful anecdote of a man in elevated station, with whose name Europe is now re-echoing, and whose good deeds to his nation seems to warm the hearts of those who love virtue and justice in America. It purports to be an abstract of a letter from Rome and is published in an English paper. It runs to the effect that a man was arrested in Rome whilst distributing clandestinely a pamphlet entitled "History of Pius IX, the enemy of religion and chief of young Italy." When the Pope heard of the arrest, he ordered the man to be brought before him. After interrogating the offender, his Holiness said, "As your faults affect onty myself, I pardon you." The man fell at the feet of the Pope, and offered to reveal the names of the authors of the pamphlet, but the Pope replied—"Let their fault be buried in silence, and may repentance touch their hearts.."

This is one of the most touching instances of character exalted and elevated by purity and christian love, that we ever remember to have seen.—Bost. Trans.

An Extinguisher.—"If people were not hanged for murder," said a young lady some time ago, "if persons were not hanged for murder, we should not be safe in our beds."—A member of the Society of Friends, who happened to be present and heard this argument for capital punishment, drew his chair up to the lady and said, "I want to ask thee a question or two. Dost thou think a man ought to be hung before he has repented?" "Oh, no; certainly not! No one ought to be sent into eternity until he is prepared for the kingdom of Heaven!" "Good," said the friend, "but now I have another question to ask thee. Dost thou think any man ought to be hung after he has repented and is fitted for the kingdom of heaven?" We need not say the lady was speechless.

If you had.—"If you had always avoided rum," said a wealthy though not intelligent grocer to his intemperate neighbor, "your early habits of industry and intellectual abilities would have placed you in any station, and you would now ride in you carriage."

"And if you had never sold rum for me to buy," replied the bacchanal, "you would have been my driver."

The Old Woman and the Telegraph.—A pedler passed a bad half crown upon a poor woman living on the line of the Electric Telegraph in England. She had heard wonderful stories of the wires that passed her door, and as the fellow was too far to overtake him with her heels, she resolved to head him by the Telegraph. Snaching up the kitchen poker, and climbing up the embarkment, she rushed to the wires to give the alarm. But the poker was not long enough to reach the machinery. Back she ran to the cottage, caught up the 'long brush,' and remounting the railway, rattled the wires of the telagraph and bawled out at the top of her voice to inform Mr. Johnson, at Gateshead, of the fraud, and desired him to detain the rogue of a hawker that she might have him punished for his crime.

To Writers for the Press.—Please observe the following simple rules, and you will always have the satisfaction of seeing your articles in print as you desire them:

1. Write plainly, especially proper names, cities and of unusual occurence, quotations from foreign and dead languages, &c.

2. Dot your i's; cross your t's; and observe your stops.

3. Write on but one side of the paper, and make use of good ink.

4. When you de ire any part of your composition to be italicised, underscore it once; if you wish small CAPITALS, twice; FULL CAPITAL, three lines.

5. Write fairly and openly, so that each word may appear distinctly from its neighbors.

Thus do, and you will become the printer's favorite, and your own obliged servant.—Fountain.

An old lady hearing somebody say, "the mails are very irregular," said, "it was just so in my young days—no trusting any of 'em.

NOTICES.

Columbia Circuit.—Our second quarterly meeting will be held on the 20th and 21st of February, at Pleasant Hill meeting house, 7 miles west of the town of Athens. We invite Brs. M. Scott, W. W. Tipton, C. J. Sears, and we promise our aid on any occasion, when timely notice shall have been given. We ask an interest in the prayers of all, that we may on that occasion have the prosence of the Great Head of the Church.

S. Elliott.

Delaware Circuit.—We hold our next Quarly Meeting in the town of Delaware, commencing the 9th of Jan. 1847. We invite, Rev. T. Potter, and as many of our brethren as can come and help us. W. Hatfield.

Lancaster Circuit.—Our second Quarterly Meeting, will commence, Jan. 16, 1847, at New Salem. We respectfully invite Brs. A. H. Bassett, C. Springer, C. S. Callihan, W. Marshall, W. Maynard, and S. Catlin.

W. Munhall.

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT.

LETTERS RECEIVED.

Geo. Hutchens, D. B. Dorsey, E. Squires, S, W. Laishley, 2. I. Smucker, O. V. Warren, 1 sub. P. T. Laishley, 1 sub. J. Pelan, J. Huntsman & J. Sisson, H. Patterson, P. M. G. Brown, T. Hanna, B. W. Chidlaw. S. Elliott, 1 sub. J. I. Stillians, W. Randall, W. M'Pherson, J. H. Thomas, Paul Pry, 2. W. Haymond, P. M. J. Stephens, J. Hill, T. Forshee, S. Morrison. J. C. Hazlett, 1 sub. J. B. Jewell. 2 subs. G. B. Wooster. O. V. Warren.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

From.	For.	Pays to Vol.	No.	$ cts.
E. Squires, Va.		8	12	2 00
R. Beckham, O.		8	52	2 00
J. Huntsman, Mo.	J. Sisson,	9	26	5 00
H. Patterson, Pa.	D. Gardner,	8	30	2 00
G. Brown, Pa.	E. Alexander,	8	52	2 00
"	Miss S. Armstrong,	8	52	2 00
W. Randall, Ia.		8	52	2 00
W. M'Pherson, O.		8	52	2 00
J. H. Thomas, O.	A. Snyder,	8	52	2 00
John Stephens, O.		8	52	2 00
S. W. Laishley, O.		8	52	2 00
J. C. Hazlett, Pa.	L. M. Layton,	8	52	3 00
J. B. Jewell, Mich.	I. Morton,	8	38	1 00
O. V. Warren, O.	Wm. Kabler,	8	52	2 00

New Subscribers this week, 6. Discontinuences, 4.

Br. L. M. Layton, $3 paid to Br. Springer at the conference, paid him for Vol. 6, and us for half of Vol. 7. Now, $3 more by Br. Hazlett, settles the balance on Vol. 7, and is in full also for Vol. 8. A slight mistake, was made in the credit given you in No. 5.

Br. J.C. Haselett, all O. K. again. Much obliged.

The P. M. at Palatine Hill, Va. informs us that O. Hartley has not for a long time taken his paper from the office. He is indebted for two volumes and one quarter. Will Br. Helmick, or some other agent, please collect for us?

Br. J. B. Jewel, please do what you can for our paper, as agent, as you have so well begun. It is only itinerant preachers, however, that receive our paper at $1 per year, as you will see by our published terms. Please write again, and give us definitely that name and post office.

Received for Annual Register.

W. Maynard,	$3 00
G. B. Wooster.	1 00

Thirty pamphlets sent to Br. G. B. Wooster, Michigan, for which he has paid.

Annual Register 1847.—Our edition of 5,200 copies is running short. But like the Razor Strop Man, we have 'a few more left' which we well be pleased to send out to those who order them. G. Conclin, Cincinnati, and C. Craig, Pittsburgh, have each also a small lot to dispose of.

By the by, this little publication cost us considerably more than one hundred dollars, cash, notwithstanding the job was executed at our own office. Those therefore who have received their pamphlets as ordered, will greatly oblige us by forking over the dimes. We are anxious to be out of debt. Much obliged to those who have been prompt in paying.

Br. G. M. Scott, we were expecting opportunity to send you a lot of pamphlets by a friend. But being disappointed, we now send one dollar's worth by mail, as you request, adding half a dozen more on account of the postage. At Conference, Br. Stephens ordered 100 copies. Would he have us send $1 worth by mail!

Two more letters from Morgantown, paid, 10 cts. each instead of 5 cts. postage. Rather a tax upon our correspondent.

DISSOLUTION.

THE partnership of GUTHRIES & LARGE is this day dissolved by mutual consent. All matters pertaining to the closing up of the business will be transacted at the old stand.

A. A. GUTHRIE.
W. P. LARGE.
GEO. N. GUTHRIE.

Putnam, O. January 1, 1847.

NEW FIRM.

A. A. GUTHRIE, G. BUCKINGHAM and G. N. GUTHRIE announce that they have formed a partnership for the transaction of Mercantile business under the firm of

GUTHRIE, BUCKINGHAM & CO.

They respectfully invite their friends and the public generally, to the old stand of A. A. GUTHRIE & Co., (recently GUTHRIE'S & LARGE,) where it is their purpose to keep a large assortment of the cheapest and best goods in the market.

Putnam, O. January 1, 1847.

Something New.
JUST PUBLISHED
By GEORGE CONCLIN, 39 Main st. Cincinnati,
A NEW HISTORY OF TEXAS.

INCLUDING an account of the late WAR WITH MEXICO, together with other interesting mattee relating to that country. This history is published in pamphlet form, 12 mo., containing 152 pages and will be sold cheap.

Also—A NEW HISTORY OF OREGON AND CALIFORNIA, (By Lansford Hastings) containing a minute description of the different routes to those countries—a description of the soil, products of the soil, Towns, Bays, Harbors, Rivers, Lakes, manners and customs of the inhabiants, &c. &c.

DISSOLUTION.

IT is nearly two years since the firm of A. A. Guthrie & Co., was dissolved, so far as the selling of Goods is concerned. It is this day fully dissolved by mutual consent, all debts due the concern are to be paid to A. A. Guthrie —who earnestly requests early payments & especially urges all who have suffered their accounts to stand open thus far, to come immediately and settle.

A. A. GUTHRIE.
G. N. GUTHRIE.

Putnam, Dec. 14th, 1846

JAMES K. LOGAN,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in
FOREIGN & DOMESTIC DRY GOODS
No. 83 Wood St., (One door from Diamond Alley,)
Pittsburgh, Pa.

PROSPECTUS OF THE
LITERARY ATHENÆUM,
A NEW AND SPLENDID MONTHLY MAGAZINE,
TO BE EDITED BY THE
Rev. Henry D. Moore, of Philadelphia,—and Rev. Andrew A. Lipscomb, Professor of English Literature and Belle Letters, in the city of Baltimore.

ON the first of January, 1847, the subscribers intend issuing the first number of a spendid Monthly Magazine, to be called the "Literary Athenæum," to be devoted to the interest and circulation of a mind-refining, soul-inspiring, spirit-stirring literature; such a literature, in a word, as the progressive taste of society seems to demand.

Between the magazines of the day, which are devoted almost exclusively to the circulation of Christian Literature, and those devoted to the light, and in too many instances, tasteless and corrupting literature—there is a wide and deep chasm, to fill which successfully and profitably, very few attempts have been made. To supply this void, to some extent at least, is the intention of the subscribers, in issuing the "Literary Athenæum."

The general cast and character of the contents of the proposed magazine will be fixed according to the standard of the most sterling intellect, and the most liberal appreciation of the wants of the common mind. Its pages will ever present a feast and a glow, to feed and illumine the loftiest and purest taste and spirit of the admirers and lovers of refining and exalting literary walks and research.

To secure this grand design, effectually and honorably, no pains or expenses will be spared.

The contents will be purely original; consisting of Lectures, Addresses, Essays, &c., on the most popular and exciting literary and scientific subjects, from the most able writers that can be secured—interspersed and relieved by beautiful poetic composition.

Science, Art, and government, in their almost infinite variety development and interest, will be liberay and honorably discussed in its pages.

Arrangements are in progress for an extensive and important European correspondence, which will be a feature of great interest in its varied connections.

In addition to such articles, there will be presented occasional tales of unexceptionable character and style, differing essentially from the weakish romances which fill the pages of the many magazines of the day. Writers in this connection, can be secured, whose productions are the embodiment of life, true to itself,—and which will kindle and glow with the loftiest and purest sentiment, and thrill with the beauties of morality and religion in their loveliest forms.

Each number of the Athenæum will contain four embellishments of the first artistical merit, One of them will be a portrait of some distinguished personage in this country or in Europe, accompanied with an interesting biograpical sketch. Another will be a view of the buildings and grounds, of some one of the popular Universities, in this or the old world, accompanied with a historical, biograpical and statisical sketch in this body of the work. The portraits will be fine mezzotint, and the college views, beautiful line engravings. Then will follow richly colored specimens of flowers and fruit; in connection with which, there will also be presented interesting notices—floral and botanical—of climate, habits, culture, &c. All of which cannot but secure interest and favor.

Each number will comprise sixty pages of letter-press, double column, beautifully stereotyped, and printed on fine white paper; the whole corresponding in all respects, with the character of the other departments of the work.

Such is to be the character of the work at its commencement. If it is succesful, as it ought to be, and as is hoped and believed it will be,—improvement will be made as far as possible in the different departments, as they are suggested in the progress of the work.

The subscribers take pleasure in announcing to the public, that they have concluded arrangements with the Rev. Henry D. Moore, of Philadelphia, and Rev. Andrew A Lipscomb, Professor of English Literature and Belle Letters, of Raltimore, who will co-operate as Editors the of new Magazine. Under the management of those gentleman, the subscribers flatter themselves, abundant success will be secured in behalf of the enterprise.

TO PUBLISHERS.

The subscribers would also give notice to Publishers, at home and abroad, that there will be in connection with the work, an extensive review department. This will be made a feature of excelling interest. The department will be conducted fairly and honorably, and all works sent to the office of the subscribers, will receive such notices as their character may demand.

The first number will be issued on the first of January, 1847. Its contents and the name of contributors, will be published shortly.

Terms—Three dollars per annum, in advance.

Editors of papers, copying this Prospectus, and sending a paper with it, to the office of the "Athenæum," shall receive the numbers of the work, and the thanks of the publishers.

All letters, containing orders for the work, post-paid, and enclosing the subscription price, will receive prompt attention. To be addressed to

F. C. WILSON & Co.
Philadelphia, Pa.

THE WEEKLY
CHRISTIAN WORLD;

An Independent, Comprehensive, and Impartial Newspaper; designed for welcome and useful circulation; Among all Friends of Christian Union, Christian Benevolence, and Christian Literature. To be published every Saturday, At the Reading-Room of the Christian Atheneum, over the Book-store of Mr. James Harmstead, Fourth St., between Market and Arch Sts., Philadelphia;

Price:—Two Dollors a-year invariably in advance.

T. H. Stockton,
J. G. Wilson,
Theophilus Stork. } Editors.
W. S. Stockton,—General Agent.

TO persons who are acquainted with the character and objects of the Christian World, as they have been developed during the last six years, it is only necessary to say, that as soon as one thousand paying subscribers are secured, the paper will be put to press. The Old Subscription List ought to supply this number at once.

To other persons, it is proper to remark, that the Christian World, in print, is intended to reflect the Christian World, in action—in a word, daguerreotype it: and then, for purposes of common advantage, to compare the organized and operature Religion of the Age with the Religion of the Bible.

The enlarged literary and business agencies of the Establishment, are deemed amply sufficient to assure the public of successful management. Its immediate connexion with the Christian Atheneum—an Institution which is to be furnished with many of the principal organs of Church and State, both in Europe and America,—will give its conductors early access to invaluable sources of universal intelligence.

DIRECTIONS.

1. On receipt of this Prospectus, let the Old subscribers at every Post-office, appoint one of their number, or some other suitable person, an Agent. Let him send us, at once, as many names and as much money as possible. In cases where substantial agents make themselves responsible for their subscribers, this responsibility will be regarded as equivalent to payment in advance—provided they settle their accounts within six months. Even in such cases, however, immediate payments are decidedly preferable; and, to encourage them, the commissions to agants are arranged thus:—On cash orders, 25 per cent.: on deferred remittances, 12½ per cent.

2. As the Prospectus will be widely distributed, let all persons who see it, and feel an interest in it, act promptly in the manner described above. It is thought that a little effort will be sufficient to procure a company, or club, at almost any Post-office in the Union. The times increasingly demand just such a publication as is proposed.

Address,—W. S. Stockton, General Agent, Philadelphia, Pa.: or either of the Associate Editors. All orders will be punctually attended to.

T. H. STOCKTON,
Editor and Proprietor.
Philadelphia, December, 1846.

Administrator's Notice.

NOTICE is hereby given that the succriber has been appointed and qualified as Administrator of the estate of Thomas Atkinson deceased, late of Springfield Township, Muskingum county. Z. M. Chandler, Putnam, O. Oct. 31, 1846. Administrator.

POETRY.

The Flight of Time.

BY DAVID WENTWORTH.

By the lone bedside of a dying year
We stand, and muse upon the flight of Time;
And as we stand, in fixed and silent thought,
And gaze upon the monster's crested brow,
And mark his silent, and yet swift approach,
And think how often to the length'ning list
He adds the period of a passing year,
In silent wonderment we still remain,
And think how few who know the worth of Time,
How few who know that Time's wheels never stop—
How he silently on his victims creeps,
Who heed not, hear not, feel not his approach,
But wait his coming with contented minds,
And know not, that each moment, as it flies,
But brings them nearer to their final doom.
And ere a few have thought their race begun,
Have felt his mark deep furrowed in their cheeks.
Again the Earth hath rolled her yearly round,
And as we look upon the brows of men,
We see no index, by which we can tell
The mind which marks the rapid course of Time,
Or that which studies daily to be rich.
The untaught savage of the wilderness
But to his history adds another snow,
And sitting down close by his wigwam fire,
Does to his listening sons and daughters round,
Rehearse again the story of his life.
Another year is gone, and each day echoes
With the joyous peals of schoolboys pleasures;
For schoolboys follow in the tracks of men,
And usher in the new-born year with shouts
And greetings too, of the rapturous kind.
While to the year that's gone, they turn in cold
Contempt, and speak of actions and events
Transpired, as things of worthless note; nor think
They that as each new year begins, its end
Will mark them with the stamp of Time,
And make one less among their numbered years.
'Tis all the same, none mark the flight of Time,
And as the year begins, it also ends.
Meanwhile the Earth hath roll'd her yearly round,
Nor stops she yet, but onward keeps—still on,
And bears with her the gentle Queen of Night.
Together wandering through the tiresome void,
They still pursue their trackless journey on.
Far off from others placed, by countless miles;
Alone they yearly circle round the sun,
Nor holds communion with the glittering worlds
Which far above, and far beneath them shine,
And all around, but still pursue their way;
While the Moon her double task performs,
And nightly waits upon her sister Earth,
And attends her through the trackless waste.
Thus hand in hand they plunge into the void,
And thus for centuries have they journeyed on,
Whirling and wheeling through the dark abyss.
And flinging far off in the gloomy waste,
Gigantic shadows of the passing worlds.
On, on they go, still hastening onward
To complete a year, and to complete it
To commence again.

Thus on and on, Time
Yearly flies; nor listens to the cries of Indolence and Sloth, who met him daily,
And with loud complaints, ask, but in vain,
For him to stay his flight. But time flies on,
And laughs and scorns them with a mocking grin,
And points to Industry, who sees him not,
But wears a countenance smiling with content.
Then on he flies, and their frenzied calls,
Nor waits he long, before with mighty hand
He cuts them off, and marks them for his own.
'Tis ever thus; Time never yet has stopped
For man, one moment never yet delayed;
But still keeps on, still on, forever on,
And leaves on all the impress of his flight.
List! even now a moment's being born,
And now is past, and never will return!
O Time, how thou dost trample upon man;
Who knows not even what thy presence is,
But makes himself an easy prey to thee!
O tyrant, wilt thou never have an end?
Will age itself have no effect on thee,
And sink thee down into the yawning tomb,
To moulder with the victims of thy reign,
Or blunt, at least, the sharpness of the scythe?
Or wilt thou always tyrannize o'er man
And on him feed thy fiendish thirst for blood?
Can He who conquers all ne'er conquer thee?
Ah yes, Time, thou wilt one day have an end;
There comes an hour when Sun and Moon shall cease,
And Earth become dismembered in her flight,
And never-ending-wide Duration, need
No tel-tale Time to mark his daily course.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Written for the Western Recorder.

CHURCH DIVISION.

THINGS TO BE CONSIDERED.
NO. III.

MR. EDITOR: In noticing some of the things demanding our considerate attention, connected with the question of seperation from the south, I maintain,

2. That we may calculate on a general decrease of members during the time of the struggle consequent upon such a change, and for a considerable period after the work of separation is completed.

It would be the wildest extravagance and folly in us, to think of retaining all of our present numbers at the north, through the vicissitudes of such an enterprise. To indulge the anticipation that all of our present membership at the north, can be led to the willing adoption of these measures, or any others, involving interests of equal magnitude, where the reasons for so acting are so liable to, and easy of misconstruction, and which may be made to appear of so little real consequence, or force, would be to seek encouragement where it cannot be found, and court for ourselves the bitterness of disappointment.

This movement will appear to many, uncalled for, and unjustifiable, in spite of every effort than can be put forth by us, under existing circumstances, and with our present facilities for spreading our views, and the motives actuating us, before the public mind. Such will be likely to regard the act as oppressive in its bearing; and an unwillingness to acquiesce in it, on that account, will lead them to discontinue their connection with us. Is it thought that such should be willling to concur with the decisions of the Majority? Then should we of the North, be willing to concur with the decision of the majority in the late General Conference, on the subject of slavery, and at once, abandon the project of division.

Others, looking at the object to be effected, will honestly conceive that other measures would be better adapted to accomplish the desired end, and conscientiously choosing, and determining to pursue what to them appears the "better way," will leave us for that purpose. Others, again, to avoid the agitation, controversy, and disquietude consequent upon the adoption and execution of these measures, will seek a home in the more quiet pales of some other church, or denomination. Prompted by the fear that such a movement will terminate in the final overthrow of this branch of the church, some will retire from among us, to seek their church relations in a denomination of more apparent stability and permanency.

And the enemies of the dearly cherished principles which constitute the distinguishing features of our church polity—The Mutual Rights of the Ministry and Laity—will devote themselves to awaken in the public mind, and in every portion of our membership, over which they can exert an influence, a deep distrustfulness in the competency of a representative form of Government, to meet, and provide for the exigencies of ecclesiastical associations. The effect of which, we may reasonably expect will be, to thin our ranks, and cripple our influence. Who of us in the Ministry, but what have experienced more or less of the embarrassments attendant upon labouring together in a church or society, comparatively new, and but little known? The promising fruits of our most arduous toils have frequently been decoyed from our Pastoral care, under the impression that we were not, as a church, permanently established. And after a movement of the character contemplated, this impression, so predjudicial to our success, will be strengthened; and multiplied years of the most arduous labor and sacrifice will be required to effect its removal.

The elements of change, when once introduced, will be likely to take a wide range. This should be guarded against in every way possible. And with every precaution that can be used, there will undoubtedly be much annoyance from this source. Already do we see in the North Illinois Conference, the way preparing for the introduction of Congregationalism.

Should changes of this character be insisted upon, it will lead to further divisions, weakening our strength and crippling our influence. If we cannot secure unanimity of thought and feeling, among ourselves, where we can converse face to face, how can we expect better success with those more remote, where we can have comparatively no direct intercourse? And to suppose that during the agitations consequent upon such a movement, there will be accessions to our numbers sufficient to make good these deductions, will be to calculate in opposition to the known laws of mind, and without the slightest encouragement from precedent. The attention of the Ministry and membership being necessarily much diverted, by means of it, from the great work of winning souls to Christ, we cannot reasonably expect that there will be as many conversions among us, for a time, as there otherwise might be. And as for accessions of individuals from other churches, who may sympathize with us in the undertaking, we can make no safe dependence. They may give us many kind and encouraging "intimations," and loudly shout onward,"—to us; But we shall find that most of them will stand aloof from us, until they see that the dangers of the conflict are past, and then if they cannot find any thing among us, with which to find fault, and should they happen to continue to feel as they now may, possibly some of them may join our numbers. And should an hour of peril ever after overtake us, they will, generally, be among the first to abandon the Brotherhood.

Who, that is familiar with the history of the ecclesiastical movements of our country, for a few years past, but what will readily perceive in it, the correctness of these statements abundantly corroborated. E. A. W.

Written for the Western Recorder.

MR. EDITOR: With your permission, Paul Pry, an old correspondent of the W. Recorder, begs leave to appear before your readers again, rather as an enquirer than in any other character; and by way of introducing myself before your numerous friends and readers, I shall use as a caption

NORTH AND SOUTH.

No. I.

In church and state, much is said about North and South. The interest of our common country is said to be geographically divided North and South. And so conflicting are the interests of the communities on either side of these two opposite points, that ultra's politically and ecclesiastically say, nothing but division will answer as a remedy, and hence in the church in some denominations it has been carried out, to wit: the M. E. Church, and as far as missionary operations are concerned the New School Baptists.

Well sir, my first enquiry is, what has been the cause of the late division in the M. E. Church?

My second enquiry is what good has resulted from the division?

And thirdly, judging the future from the past, what good is likely to result from the divided and distracted state of that ecclesiastical body?

The attitude I assume as a writer in your excellent periodical, is, that if mistaken in my views on the subjects under investigation, I honestly ask to be corrected. I am an earnest enquirer after truth. My object is to ascertain the position occupied by the churches of our land. And so far as I am competent to judge of the right or wrong of their ecclesiastical movements.

The history of the M. E. Church from its formation in these U. States, down to this day, has in a good degree, been involved in mystery. Hence one of the greatest men of our age, in writing a treatise on the government of said M. E. Church, has styled it the History and Mystery of Episcopacy; and a mystery truly it is. An attempt is made to hide the cause of the late division and involve it in mystery. If you soberly enquire into the nature of the cause or causes, that led to the geographical seperation, you will be informed it was slavery. And an attempt will be made to induce you to believe that the northern portion of the church is anti-slavery, or to use a hackneyed term, Abolitionists, than which, according to the judgment of your writer, nothing can be farther from the truth. This is a grave charge, but facts are stubborn things, they speak for themselves, and when properly brought out to public gaze, it will be found, on the subject of slavery, there is but little difference, North or South. But that the present division is on the subject of church government, as has been the other divisions of the M. E. Church. It is true there has been a great deal of fog and dust thrown around the case of Rev. Bishop Andrew, out of which grew the present division, and to take a slight or superficial view of the matter, it would appear indeed, that the morality or immorality of slavery had something to do in the case, but if the manouvering of the last General Conference be closely watched the discovery will be easily made, that slavery was lost sight of, and the bone of contention turned upon high and low church principles, or in other words, a contest took place on the powers of the Gen. Conference, and the powers of the episcopacy, (or Bishops.) Now to make this plain, we will take the facts in the case. Rev. Andrew married a lady having in her possession some slaves. the conference took cognizance of the case, not as an act of immorality on the part of a bishop, for had this been the case, and the conference had been disposed to have decided the morality or immorality of slavery, the bishop might have been arrested. The North having the majority, might have determined the connection of the bishop with the system of slavery sinful, and at once have expelled him, but nothing of this kind is attempted. A farce is gotten up, much time is spent, and a considerable amount of speechifying on the connection of the bishop with slavery, not as sinful, but as inexpedient. All at once the tables are turned, and the controversy is brought to bear on the power of the General Conference, to depose (or if you please) unmake a bishop. The North assumed the position that the General Conference could create or depose a bishop at pleasure, that a bishop was the creature of the Gen. Conference and consequently subject to its decisions and control. The South assumed a different attitude, they stated that the General Conference indeed had the power to create a bishop, but when created was beyond their reach, except in cases of immorality according to discipline; that a bishop was above the General Conference, and then the question naturally turned upon this point, whether the General Conference or the episcopacy, is the highest ecclesiastical court in the M. E. Church. The North said the General Conference —the South the board of episcopacy. And on this point the conference, without a single layman present, without consulting the church pro or con, in the heat of impassioned partyism, divided a million of brothers and sisters, and that too by Mason's and Dixon's line. "Tell it not in Gath, publish it not in Askelon." Now to show that it was not the immorality of slavery that divided the church; we recapitulate a little. What is done, in the bustle, with the Bishop? Hear. We recommend that he do not travel as a bishop, and why? lest in some places he should not be favorably received, but his name must be continued with the episcopacy. He must be acknowledged as a bishop, and more, travel or not, he must be paid as a bishop; and more, connected with a slave holding wife or not, he must be an episcopal dignitary. Pretty abolitionism, indeed, that expels the slaveholding preacher, (Harden) and retains the slaveholding bishop (Andrew.)

Once more if it was the morality or immorality of slavery that divided this mammoth body, how came it to pass that the Baltimore Conference went North with all her slaves and slaveholders? A strange kind of Anti Slavery Church, North, holding in her communion an entire conference that carries out in practice the toleration of American slavery.

Again. Along the line of this divided body, the ministers are "dumb dogs that will not bark". On the subject of abolitionism, little or nothing is said. On the slave side of the line all things remain as they were. The Northern preacher arrives on his field of labor, remains and departs. The slaveholder is continued in the church. and no judicial process put in operation against him. If this is anti slavery usage, it is pro slavery usage too; and is strong evidence that slavery has nothing to do in the matter. Mr. Editor, I have been waiting to hear of a Northern jubilee, at the emancipation of all the slaves of the slaveholders of the Baltimore Conference, or of the expulsion of all the incorrigible sinners who hold slaves within its bounds, and who will not emancipate them. This would be practical anti slaveryism, but profession without practice is empty as the whistling wind, and false as the smooth deceitful sea. According to the judgment of one who has pryed into these matters, the M. E. Church has never decided on the morality or immorality of American slavery. If I am wrong, when and where was the decision made, and what was the decision? Speak out, oh ye wise ones of the episcopal ranks. Give us day and date, place and decision. In vain may you tell us that your book of discipline says, "we are as much as ever opposed to slavery." How much are you opposed to it? Enough to induce you as a church, North, to say, that it is immoral, and that your membership shall be expelled for the holding of men, women and children in involuntary bondage. The world awaits your reply. The churches listen for your reply. Have we taken a correct view of the state of affairs, North? if not we ask correction. But if the view given be correct (which we doubt not) then slavery has nothing to do with the late division in the M. E. Church, at least so thinks one, that's been "peeping in, popping out," just to see what you'r about." PAUL PRY.

At Home, Dec. 8, 1846.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Writen for the Western Recorder.

MOVEMENTS OF SECEDERS.

ER. EDITOR: The following is the Constitution of our evangelical Association as written out and adopted Nov. 14, 1846, and the constitution of a church, as recommended by the convention of Seceders held at Buford Highland Co. Ohio, commencing Nov. 11, 1846.

It will be seen that we recommend a congregational system of church government, we do this because we think, 1st it is scriptural, 2nd best calculated to unite general and local interests, 3rd we can thus sustain ourselves in the midst of surrounding harm with the greatest ease. Be it by all understood that the cause of our present position is not that we love the M. P. Church less, but that we hate slavery more. We were Methodist Protestants and still would be were it not for the connexion of that church with Slavery. Congregationalism then is far from being the first cause of our secession. Will you Mr. Editor give publicity to the following, and oblige Yours, J. B. DUNN.

Committee of Publication.

Constitution of the Association.

Art. 1st. This body shall be called the Evangelical Association of South Western Ohio; and shall be composed of ministers and not more than two delegates from each church in connexion with it.

Art. 2nd. It shall be the object of this Association to maintain and assist the churches in connexion with it to maintain scripture doctrine and usages, to facilitate and promote christian intercourse and communion with one another, to support and aid each other in difficulties and trials and to unite their counsels and efforts for the welfare of the churches, the salvation of souls, and the general interests of Christ's kingdom.

Art. 3rd. Any minister of the gospel may become a member of this Association by presenting proper testimonials of his Christian character and standing in the ministry, and assenting to this constitution.

Art. 4th. Any contiguous congregational church may join this association by giving evidence that it is a church of Christ and assenting to this constitution.

Art. 5th. This association believes, that it is a Christian duty to offer communion and fellowship to all whom Christ receives. And we believe that it is for our works of faith and love we shall be justified and for the opposite we shall be condemned. With these convictions we offer communion to all who conform to bible morals as contained in the ten commandments and developed in the scriptures of truth.

Art. 6th. This association shall meet semi-annually, or oftener pursuant to adjournment, and the place and time of each meeting shall always be designated at the preceeding one.

Art. 7th. The officers of this association shall be a moderator scribe and treasurer.

Art. 8th. This association shall have power by a majority of two thirds of the members present at a regular meeting, to elect and ordain elders when thought necessary, or when advised to do so by two or more churches; to act as evangelists or missionaries.

Art. 9th. No member shall be expelled from this association but for immoral conduct.

Art. 10th. This constitution may be amended at any regular meeting by a vote of two thirds of the members present.

Signed Nov. 14, 1846, by,

BENSON GOLDSBURY; M. G.
DANIEL RILEY, M. G.
SANFORD H. FLOOD, M. G.
JONATHAN M. FLOOD, M. G.
THOMAS S. JOHNSON, M. G.
JACOB B. DUNN.

Delegates.
JOHN STOUT,
JOHN SLADE,
WM. TAGGART.

Constitution of an Individual Church.

Art. 1st. This church shall be called the Methodist Free Church at———.

Art. 2. Any Individual giving credible evidence of a change of heart and conforming to this constitution and discipline, shall upon application be admitted to membership. The evidence referred to, shall embrace the love of God manifested by a godly life, and the love of men manifested by doing them good. The following shall be considered a summary of prohibitions and duties. First, prohibitions. The taking the name of God in vain &c. General rules as found in the Wesleyan Methodist Discipline with slight alterations, which see.

Art. 3rd. The officers of this church shall consist of Deacons and Elders, whose duty it shall be to attend to all the business of the church.

Art. 4th. All members of the church over the age of twenty one years shall be entitled to vote in all cases. And all male members over the age of twenty one years shall be eligible to any office of this church.

Art. 5th. It shall be the duty of the Deacons to attend to all the financial interests of the church. They shall attend to the poor of the church, that none suffer. They shall be the treasurers of the church and also the trustees of the church property; they shall give a just and faithful account of their official proceedings as often as required. It shall be the duty of the Elders to restrain refractory members, to reprove rebuke exhort with all long suffering and patience. They shall receive and dispose of all charges against members. It shall also be the duty of the Elder to hold Society, bible class or prayer meetings, as thought advizable by the church. And it shall be the duty of the Elders and Deacons jointly to employ a pastor when directed to do so by the church.

Art. 6th. It shall be the duty of the minister of this church to devote his time and talent to the service of the church, by expounding Gods word; by visiting from house to house, by conversing freely with the people of his charge, upon the subject of religion. It shall be his duty further, to lecture on such subjects as the church may require; to administer Baptism the Lords Supper, and attend to all the duties of a minister in holy things.

Art. 7th. (1.) Charges against a member shall be preferred to the elders, by whom, the accused after due notice given him of twenty days or less at his discretion, shall be impartially tried. If he be found guilty and does not repent he shall be reported by the elders, to the church, which if he hear not, he shall be expelled. If he repent, he shall be continued with admonition, or for a time suspended, as the case may seem to require. If the accused confess, and persist he shall be expelled. Provided that if the accused does not attend his trial before the elders, or assign a sufficient reason of nonattendance he shall be treated as if guilty. Provided further that the accused shall have the right of appeal to the church or to a jury appointed by the church, consisting of three or more members over the age of twenty one years. The accused shall have the right of chalenging any member of the jury not exceeding the original number. The right of chalenge if used at all shall be used at the time of appointment. All appeals are final. 2. Charges against an elder shall be preferred to the minister by two or three witnesses. And if upon investigation by the Minister, Elders and Deacons, it be thought proper to suspend him from office, he shall then be dealt with as other members. Deacons shall be treated as Elders excepting that the charges may be preferred to the senior elder. Provided that for maladministration removal from office shall be the highest penalty. The accused Elder or Deacon shall have due notice twenty days or less at his option of the investigation. 3. Charges against a minister shall be preferred to the Senior Elder who with the remaining elders and deacons shall try him and shall have power to discharge him. Provided that he shall have the right of appeal to the church, and provided further that when a minister is discharged he shall be entitled to a copy of the proceedings of his trial. The elders and deacons shall not set on appeals.

Art. 8th. This church shall have (at least two) elders, (and two or more) deacons to be chosen by ballot.

Art. 9. When any member of this church shall think it his duty to preach the gospel or to exhort, he shall speak of the subject to the senior elder, who shall advise with the other elders and if they deem it expedient they shall recommend him to the church as a proper person to receive license. If the church elect him as a licenciate, the minister shall in the name of the church give him license.

Art. 10. A majority of two thirds of the members of this church present at a meeting called for the purpose, shall have power to elect a licenciate to the office of elder. In case, of election, the church shall call two or more elders who shall ordain the individual using the form used in the M. P. Church Discipline.

We also assume the following position viz. The Methodist Free Church at———stands pledged to meet Methodist Protestants and others on proper and honorable Anti-Slavery principles. All of which are duly recommended by the Buford convention. SANFORD H. FLOOD, Chair.

SAMUEL MOORE, Scribe.

From the Presbyterian of the West.

MEETING HOUSES.

MR. EDITOR: As many of our rising churches in the west are engaged, or are about to be engaged, in building houses for worship, it has occurred to me that our religious journals might be made the channel of communicating some useful hints on this subject. Thro' the lack of experienced architects, the house of God is constructed very awkward, and encumbered with many disadvantages. In what I have to say, I will begin with the pulpit.

The pulpit should be placed in the end of the house, never in the side. The speaker can be heard better from the end than from the side. The house should always be oblong. A square meeting house is not only in bad taste, but highly disadvantageous for seating, speaking and hearing. There should be no doors in the side of the house. The entrance should be at the end. Some place the pulpit at the entrance end of the house between the doors; others at the end. The latter, I think, attains mostly in recently built houses; and I think is decidedly the best for several reasons. The noise of those who come in late (there always will be some such troublers) does not so much annoy the ministers, nor divert the people's attention. When the congregation is dismissed they retire from the minister as he comes down from the pulpit. When the pulpit is situated between the doors he must remain in the desk until they are all out, or meet the mass and shake hands with every one. It ought to be known, that most ministers, however well pleased to salute the people of their charge at all other times, they feel, after the labors of the service, rather indisposed to speak to any body for an hour or two, and ought to be excused.

The door for the pulpit should never be higher than the backs of the seats which the people occupy. It is quite a mistake to suppose that a speaker should be exalted above his audience to be well heard. All the elevation needful, is to be seen by his hearers. Even this, though needful, on account of sight, is so much detriment to the hearing, for the speaker is best heard standing on the floor of his audience. The reason of this is manifest to every once acquainted with the elements of natural philosophy. Sound is more quickly and distinctly conveyed through a dense medium than through a rare one. The nearer the earth, the more dense the atmosphere, which is the medium of sound; hence if the speaker be lifted much above his audience, the sound of his voice is thrown off into the higher region of the air, which is very much rarified by the heat in the room, and is consequently not so distinctly heard. Hence in houses with high pulpits, those who are dull of hearing complain that they can't hear satisfactorily. The law of nature to which I have alluded, shows the impropriety of placing a choir of singers in a gallery. Singing sounds much better when it proceeds from the ground floor. The floor of the pulpit on which the speaker stands should be placed as low as the convenience of being seen by the audience will admit. And I will here add that the desk of the pulpit, book and all, should not be higher than the lower part of a standing man's vest—I mean a man of midling stature.

There should be no windows behind the pulpit, nor indeed in that end of the house, for the obvious reason that the glare of light upon the eyes of the auditory, whose faces are directed that way, produces uneasiness. If it seems necessary to have windows in the pulpit end of the house, on account of a proper external appearance, let them be closely blinded in the inside with green or blue material. On the wall, immediately behind the desk, there should be hangings of green or blue. These are the colors of nature—of the herbage and the sky. The all-wise Creator has adapted the eye to these. It never tires beholding them. All other colors produce weariness when looked at repeatedly, and long at a time. Our congregations are not aware how much it would aid them in giving attention to the minister, if their eyes were relieved from the glare of a white wall from behind him. Without this relief the hearer begins with the preacher and fixes his eyes on him, but soon a sensation of weariness is felt, and his eye seeks relief by moving around to other objects and this proves the occasion of wandering thoughts; or, he seeks relief by bowing his head on the pew before him, and this invites slumber. Let any congregation put up these hangings as I have suggested, and the Sabbath after, they will think their minister has improved in preaching—that is, they have given him attention with greater ease. I must here enter my protest against red hangings about a pulpit. It is unphilosophical and unprotestant. It is unphilosophical, because red is the most tiresome to the eye of all the colors. It is unprotestant, because red is the standing emblem of the church of Rome.

The windows in the south and west side of the house should always have blinds of some kind, for it is exceedingly anoying to the hearer to have the sun glancing on his face while he is trying to listen to the minister. These things for which I am contending, are not matters of taste merely. They are of much utility. And here, as in a thousand other instances, taste and utility are combined.

But to return to the pulpit, for I have not done with it yet. Let the ladies of every congregation see to it that the floor of the pulpit is covered with a carpet, be it ever so plain an article. I am aware that some people, in our plain congregations, would think their minister was getting proud if he should ask to have his pulpit carpeted. But I will speak a word for him here. If one of those good people were required to stand an hour on the bare floor of the pulpit, on one of the cold sabbaths in February, he would no doubt, think that a bit of carpet would be quite a relief. The floor of the pulpit is the last and least warmed spot in the house. I have had the soles of my feet become so insensible with the cold from standing in a naked pulpit, that they scarcely recovered their natural feeling that day. But I will drop the subject at this time.

Yours &c.

ZANESVILLE.

An Elegantly Illustrated Magazine for Christmas and New Year, containing a Pictorial Description of Ohio, &c. &c., which can be mailed to any part of the United States, for 4 cents postage.

THE January Number of our FAMILY MAGAZINE, for 1847, will be complete in itself, and contain an interesting Historical and Descriptive Account of the State of Ohio, together with a great variety of other literary and interesting matter; the whole illustrated with each one occupying an entire page of the Work. We expect to circulate many thousands of this elegant Periodical in the State of Ohio and elsewhere. The Plates are all executed in a peculiarly chaste and perfect manner; and any one of them is worth the price of the Work.

FIFTEEN ELEGANT ENGRAVINGS,

The following is a list of the principal Engravings that will be published in the January Number, viz:—

1. A splendid View of the City of Cincinnati, as it appears at the present time. This forms the Frontispiece, and is elegantly printed on the best and finest paper, accompanied with a particular account of the origin, rise, and progress, of the Queen of the West.

2. A View of Cincinnati, as it appeared in the year 1800; forming a striking contrast with its preset appearance.

3. A View of the Public Landing Place, at Cincinnati.

4. The New Catholic Cathedral at Cincinnati—a large plate.

5. A View of Lane Seminary, at Walnut Hills, two miles from Cincinnati.

6. Several Views of Kenyon College, &c., &c., at Gambier, Ohio.

10. Several Engravings illustrative of the Antiquities of Ohio. Together with—

13. Bears attacking a boat's crew in the polar seas—a spirited engraving.

14 Picture of the Deluge. This is, without question, the most valuable and interesting Engraving in the whole Wsrk. We have not the space neccessary to describe it, and do it justice.

15. A View of Mount Ararat, from the hills above Erivam. This is generally admitted to be the mountain on which the Ark rested after the Deluge.

☞The whole of these Plates are accompanied with interesting descriptions, making the Number invaluable as a Present to young People.

The price of "The Pictorial Description of Ohio," will be ONLY 12½ CENTS PER COPY, or Ten Copies will be sent by Mail for One Dollar.

Letters enclosing remittances must be post-paid in full. The silver change for a single copy, or for three or four copies, may be thus remitted, (Postage Paid,) at our risk; but when you send silver, please envelop it carefully in a half sheet of writing paper, so that it will be subject to only single postage.

All orders should specify distinctly the town, county, and state, where the Magazine is to be forwarded. and should be addressed (post paid) to

ROBERT SEARS,
128, Nassau Street New York.

ATTENTION!!
Look Here, All!!

I HAVE JUST received from New York, a fine assortment of Foreign and Domestic DRY GOODS consisting of, Cloths, Casimeres, Sattinets, Tweeds, and Jeans, Cashmeres, Mouslin de Lains, Alpaccas, Morenoes, and Cloakings, Flannels, Checks, Linseys, Brown and Bleach-Muslins, Shawls and Prints of every variety, Men's and Boys' Caps Boots and Shoes. Also Coffee, Sugar, Tea, &c. All of which I am offering to the public,

AT VERY REDUCED PRICES,

for cash, or in exchange for country produce of all kinds.

I would add, that those wishing to purchase cheap goods will find it to their advantage to give me a call, as I am determined TO SELL my goods. W. B. GUTHRIE.

Putnam Ohio, October 31, 1846.

SNETHEN'S SERMONS.—Rev. Ulysses Ward of Washington City, has just published a volume of Sermons by the late Rev. N. Snethen. It comprises 480 pages, and is elegantly bound in cloth. Price $1,00 per single copy. Ten copies or more at the rate of $4. And for 50 or more copies, 84 cents apiece. Cash in all cases to be remitted when the books are ordered. "He, being dead, yet speaketh."

NEW HISTORY OF TEXAS, pages 352, for 25 cents. A few copies to be had at the office of the Western Recorder. Published by G. Conclin Cincinnati.

NEW SERIES
OF THE
Congressional Globe and Appendix.

CONGRESS at it its last session, through the Joint Library Committee of the two Houses, having authorized a large subscription for the Congressional Globe and Appendix; and the Senate, by resolution, having directed the mode of preparing the reports of the proceedings, and authorized the Secretary of the Senate to contract with the undersigned, stipulating that the reports when written out shall be subject to the revision of the speakers, the Congressional Globe and Appendix is now offered to the public, not only as an authentic, but as an official report of the proceedings of Congress, made under the eye, and published by authority of the body.

The undersigned originated the mode of journalizing the proceedings of Congress, which, thus adopted, is to be perfected with the aid and under the supervision of Congress. Their publication was the first and only one that gave each successive step in every measure in both branches of Congress; a brief of all the debates; every important vote; and an Appendix, including at full length all the revised speeches delivered during the session.

The work, as it is now to be conducted by them, will be found a most perfect political history. The Senators from the States and the Representatives from every section of the Union bring with them into Congress a knowledge of the feelings, sentiments, and interests of their several constituencies. Public opinion and the public information, as it exists among those they represent, are embodied by them; and in the crucible of Congress the wisdom of our times is brought to its test, and is there concentrated, in directing the political movements of the whole country. The impulses thus given through Congress from every quarter react upon the nation as a whole, and all its component parts are made to move in co-operation. The press cannot be more usefully employed than in condensing and again spreading abroad the intelligence of our free country, tending to such happy results through our almost miraculously adjusted State and National institutions.

Having identified ourselves with the plan of advancing the usefulness of Congress by publishing full and impartial reports, and having a large mass of the Congressional Globe and Appendix, issued during the last twelve years, which would be impaired in value to us and utility to the public if the work were discontinued, we have a double motive to prompt us to extend it through a new series. We are resolved, if possible, to give it permanence, and hand it down to successors as a standard work worthy of being maintained and improved. We shall enter upon our new undertaking without being distracted or burdened by any associate labors of the press; and thus unencumbered, shall hope to make the new series a step in advance of the former in all points of execution. With a view to accomplish this, we shall be (one or the other) in attendance on Congress.

The reports will not be affected by our party bias. We believe every member of Congress will bear witness that our reports are full and fair.

The Congressional Globe is made up of the daily proceedings of the two Houses of Congress, and printed on superfine double royal paper, with small type, (brevier and nonpareil,) in quarto form, each number containing sixteen royal quarto pages. The speeches of the members in this first form are condensed—the full report of the prepared speeches being reserved for the Appendix. All resolutions, motions, and other proceedings, are given in the form of the Journals, with the yeas and nays on every important question.

The Appendix is made up of the President's Annual Message, the reports of the principal officers of the Government that accompany it, and all speeches of members of Congress, written out or revised by themselves. It is printed in the same form as the Congressional Globe, and usually makes about the same number of pages during a session.

During the first month or six weeks of a session, there is rarely more business done than will make two numbers a week—one of the Congressional Globe and one of the Appendix; but during the remainder of a session, there is usually sufficient matter for two or three numbers of each every week. The next session will be unusually interesting; therefore, we calculate that the Congressional Globe and Appendix together will make near 1500 large quarto pages, printed in small type—brevier and nonpareil. We furnish complete Indexes to both at the end of a session.

We have on hand the Congressional Globe and Appendix for the last fifteen sessions of Congress, making together fifteen large royal quarto volumes, which we will sell unbound, for $41; or bound with Russia backs and corners for $56. Those who want the back volumes should apply for them immediately, as they are in demand. Congress subscribed for 341 complete sets during the two last sessions. The proceedings of Congress for the last nine years cannot be procured from any other source—Gales & Seaton having stopped printing their Register of Debates in 1837.

We will endeavor to print a sufficient number of surplus copies to supply all that may be miscarried, or lost in the mails; but subscribers should be very particular to file their papers carefully, for fear that we should not be able to supply all lost numbers.

TERMS.

For one copy of the Congressional Globe, $1 00
For one copy of the Appendix, 1 00
For six copies of either, or part of both, 5 00

The money may be remitted by mail at our risk. The safest and best way to remit is, to pay the amount to the Postmaster where you reside, and take from him a receipt.

Our prices for these papers are so low that we cannot afford to credit them out; therefore, no person need consume his time in writing for them unless he sends the money. BLAIR & RIVES.

Washington, D. C. October 15, 1846.

GEORGE CONCLIN,
BOOKSELLER AND PUBLISHER,
Stationer, Binder, and
BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURER,
No. 39 Main Street, Cincinnati.

KEEPS on hand Books published by the Methodist Protestant Church—such as
CHURCH HYMN BOOKS,
REVIVAL " "
DISCIPLINES,
EVANS' QUESTIONS & ANSWERS, &c.

ALSO—Just received—A supply of the CHRISTIAN WORLD in 3 Vols. with Portraits of the Wesleys, &c., by REV. THOS. H. STOCKTON.

JACOB THORN,

WHOLESALE dealer in all kinds of NOTIONS, No. 91, Wilson's Row, the first store below the Court House, is now opening a new and complete assortment of

NOTIONS AND DRY GOODS,

which will be sold wholesale, at prices a little below what they have ever been sold in this place.—Country Merchants and Pedlers, visiting the city are respectfully invited to examine my stock before purchasing elsewhere, among which may be found the following articles:—

800 Packs American solid head Pins.
200,000 Drilled Ey'd Needles, Sharps and Betweens.
2000 Doz Spool Thread.
500 Lbs. Patent do.
800 do. Cotton do.
3000 Doz. Side Combs.
600 do. Fine Ivory do.
500 do. Dressing do.
100 do. Woolen Comforters.
100 Brass Clocks.
1500 Prints (Engravings,) high col'd.
100 Doz. Chapman Strops.
5000 Almanacks.
300 Shawls, different patterns.
100 Gross Kitting Pins.
4 Bbls. Blacking.
30 Doz. slates.
50 Gt. Gro. Agate Shirt Buttons
500 Coils Bonnet Wire.
50 Gross Boot Laces.
500 do. Hooks and Eyes on Cards
100 do. Wood Combs.
200 do. Sherred and G. E. Suspenders.
12 Boxes Fire Crackers
12 Doz. Looking-Glasses.
100 Gross Pearl Shirt Buttons.
6 Bales Brown Muslin.
200 Doz. Mitts.

Combs of every description, Buttons, Penknives, Razors, Table and Tea Spoons, Tapes, Eyeletts, Jewsharps, Pencils, Shaving Boxes, Gloves, Ladies cotton Hose, Matches, Dress Handkfs., Laces and Edgings, Spectacles, Thimbles, Beads, Candle Wicking, Night caps, Primers, Calicoes, bleached Muslins, Wafers, &c.

WANTED in exchange for goods at wholesale prices, Feathers, Beeswax, Ginsang, Rags and Hogs Bristles tied up in small bunches, for which will be given twenty-five cents a pound for all that can be brought in good order

Zanesville, O. Nov. 7, 1846.

PUTNAM BOARDING HOUSE.

THE SUBSCRIBER having been for the last sixteen years keeping Tavern and Boarding House, would respectfully acquaint the public—that he has established a Bording House in Putnam, and hopes by strict attention to business he will merit a share of public patronage. His accommodations shall be good, and his table, for variety not surpassed by any Hotel or Boarding House in the West. R. PUTNAM.

October 31st, 1846.

N. B. Application for boarding should be made soon.
R. P.

THE WESTERN RECORDER.

VOL. VIII---NO. 14. PUTNAM, MUSKINGUM COUNTY, OHIO, JANUARY 9, 1847. WHOLE NO. 378.

The Western Recorder,

Is Published every Saturday,

AT PUTNAM, OPPOSITE ZANESVILLE, OHIO.

OFFICE ON MAIN STREET.

A. H. BASSETT, Editor and Proprietor.

C. ALLEN, PRINTER.

TERMS.—Two Dollars per annum, in advance. Two fifty at the close of the year. Payments within three months will be considered in advance.

All letters and communications must be addressed, to the Editor, post paid, except such as contain funds, and directed to Zanesville, Ohio.

Itinerant Ministers and others, who collect from subscribers and remit to us as much as ten dollars within the year, shall receive a copy of the paper free.

Itinerant ministers and preachers, not acting as agents, can have the paper at one dollar.

Clubs of ten or more, paying at the time of subscribing, shall have the paper for $15, i. e. one dollar fifty, each.

COLPORTAGE.

From the Watchman of the Valley.

Mr. RITTY THE COLPORTEUR.

Lane Seminary Dec. 17, 1846.

Messrs Editors:—We enjoyed a rare treat at the Seminary on Thursday evening last. It was the simple narrtive of the conviction, conversion, and subsequent labors of Ledger Ritty, a converted German Catholic, who has labored several years with great success as a colporteur under the auspices of the American Tract Society. I shall attempt to give the language and dialect of the colporteur as far possible. You must forego, in reading the following imperfect sketch, all the effect and interest produced by the manly appearance of a large well built symmetraical converted Dutchman; with a full, open, serene, quiet countenance; a large sparkling dark eye, bespeaking at once intelligence and honesty; and best of all, a heart glowing with Christian benevolence and love.

Mr. Ritty commenced his address with a slight allusion to his life and habits in France,* before he came to America. He said,

"Me comes from de France counthry to dis counthry. Ven me vas in de France counthry, me vas very great sinner, me drink much vine; me drink vine all do gedder. O me vas very fine sinner, in French land, me go vell along mit de beobles; dey all dink much of me. Vell, ven me come to dis counthry, me leafe in Bitsburg, and me drink visky and somedimes brandy. Me not can drink vine, me not can get it; it dastes doo saltish (that is) it cost doo much money: and ven me do dis not gute vine, and so me drinks mos all viskey, some brandy.

Vell me come to dis counthry to make rich, and me vork hart, and me drink blendy of visky and den me git sick, and have do lay down on de bet, and me drink blendy of visky den, and me send for de docter and de docter give me some metsin, and me drink visky all de dime. And den me send for de preas, and de preas come and me confess'm de sins, and de preas tell me he forgive me de sin. Den de docter metsin not git me better, and de preas come agin, and me tell de preas, y you dont forgive me my sin? You tell me you do, bud you dont. Den me comes very sick and de docter cant kure me mit metsin; and de docter tell my vife she may give me vat me vant: visky and any ding, me not can come up any more from dis bet. Den my vife come and stan before my bet, and my boor vife cry, and dell me vat de docter say. Den I cant drink any mor visky, kos me do sick. Den me git frait, and me begin to bray do Got, and me send for de preas, and ven de preas come me tell him. vy you not orgive my sin? And de preas say, vell now tell me all your sin, and me vill forgive em. But me tell de preas, me not can dink of me sins since me ittle boy. Vell den dell me all vat you can—and den me begins, and ven me git don, den de preas dont forgive me. And den me begin do dink may yon cant. And den me dell de preas agin, vy you dont forgive me? And de preas dont say notin. Den me dell de preas, maby you not can pardon my sin. And den de preas go right out de door, and go home.

Den be bray to Got for his sperrits, and me fealt better, and den de docter not come any more, and de preas not come any more, and dey leave me mit out docter and mit out preas, den me begin to git better. Bud, O me, sich a bat sinner, and de preas dont come any more. Vell den me git better every day, and ven me get mos vell, me go do see de preas. And me ask de preas, vat book eas dat big book vat you preach from in de pulbit? and he say de bible. Den me tell him me want one. But he say, O no de bible cas for de preas, not for de beoble. But me dell him me want one and me mus have one, and me tell de preas, me vill give him 10 dollar for one but he say no: den me say, vell me vill give you 20 dollar for one, but de preas tell me, you must not have one, come to de shurch every Sunday and hear the vords from my lips. But me tell de preas, me hear de vord from your lips dirdy-dree years, and me confess em and you none can pardon sin. Den de preas say, vell, pray to Shesus Christ and he vill forgive you. Den me tell him, or vat you dunt tell me dis before? And den me tell dis preas, me mus have a bible do reat for mine self. And if you dont sell me one me get he Lutern bible. But de preas say de Lutern bible, heratic bible. Vell me, tell him me mus have de bible, and me vill have de bible. Den e preas open de door and take hol me and poosh he out; down doo or dree steps, and me fall down n de groun, but me very veak or me not let de reas done dat. Me vould dake de preas by de ollar and come him down along mit me on de roun. But dis not would be right. Den me go ome and me dink all de time, all de time about at a big sinner me be. And me bray do Got do ell me vat is deright bible; and me bray do Got o give me de right bible. And de nex morning he start do go all over de city do find a bible: and urty soon me meet an Irish voman mit a bible nder her arm. She be an Irish Catolik, and me ell her, vat book you got? And she tell me de ible, and me tell her, vill you sell him? and she ell me yes, for fifty cent. But he is a Lutern bible, mit de Luter cut out mit de shears.

[Here Prof. Stowe interrupted the speaker and remarked that, on account of the prejudice against him, the colporteurs are in the habit of cutting out the name of "Luther" from the title page, of Luthers (German) translation of the bible, before distributing it among the German Catholics.—The bible was given the Irish woman by a Colporteur. She wanted to sell it for bread.)]

Mr. R. proceeded. "Vell den me dake dis bible, and look at him inside, and den me ask, eas e all here? and she dell me yes, and den me uyt him right off; me dink heradick bible wort fty cent any how. And den me dake him home nd me reat him. But my vife dell me you got heradick bible. Vell me tell my vife, me reat him, and if he not dell de trute me sell him. But if de preas lie, me not can sell him. Den my frens come and tell me, you got heradick bible, and you vill go to Purgatory. But me not care, me reat every day and me bray do Got for de sperits. And by and by me come to de new testiment and me reat about Chris, and den me bray to Chris for his sperits, ond dis make me feel better. Den me move do Cincinnati. Here me vork hart day dime, and reat hart night, and me bray do Got all de dime for heas sperits, and den get little meetin in mine house, and reat de bible do em, and den me begin do bray mit em. Den my vife not lik dis. She say do me, you heradick, and you got heradick bible. And den my vife hurt me mit de preas, and den de preas dell me you heratick, and you mus be cut off from de shurch, and den you go to burgatory. But my vife dell me, you not can stop at burgatory, dis is doo goot for you, you mus go on do hell. But me tell my vife, mit her and de preas, and my oder frens, me not have do go do hell, hell come do me. Me have hell all de dime in mine house for six year. Den me dell my vife for vat you dont like me? Me don't drink visky, me dont swear like me dit, me dont leave you alone mit de childer, me stay mit you me only reat de bible, and bray; for vat you dont like dis? But my vife dont vant do leafe de Catolick fait. But after long dime my vife begin do dink and dink and reat de bible do: den coms big lode on her hort dis is sin, and she confess him do de preas, but de loat get bigger not litler. Den my vife begin do bray do Got, and purty soon de loat fall off, and my vife come convert, and my childer come convert, Den me hold blenty meetin, and me reat in de bible, and me bray mit em, and some git convert, and den dey bray do. And den poorty soon de brick-bat and de stone come in do de window; but Got dont let em hurt. And me holt meetin all de dime. Vell, den dey call me convert Catolick. But me not convert Catolick, me convict Catolick, and me bray much every day. O me got a bick loat on my hort, and me bray all de dime do Got for heas sperits, and den Lort fall off de loat of sin, and me fealt happy, and me fealt glat. Den me go out in de counthry and me buy a dary dare, and me live dare, and me make money dare fas.

But me dink all de dime me mus breach de gospel do de Catolick, and me not can git dis out my min. And den me dink me vill go out in de woods on a farm, and den me not dink dis so much. And me go down de river and buy a farm and me leaf dare; bat me dink shus so much as ever. Shus so much as me dinked on de dary. And me see my children grow mit out any school-in ignorant. Den me go back near do Cincinnati, and buy a small dary, but me not make much money here and me dink all de dime me mus breach to de Catolick, and me not stay long at dis dary.—Den me go to Sharmantown. Here me keep store, and me begin do holt meetin agin among de Catolik and me have goot time. Some git convert, and all de dime me dink me mus go breach, and me don't vant dis, but me dink about dis all de dime, and me dink me not can breach. Den me go and dalk mit a Universalian, and me bray mit em and mit heas family. And so soon as me leave de house dis universal man, talk and bray mit heas own family, and poorty soon he and his family come convert. Den me all de dime dink me mus breach dis gospel to de Sherman Catolik Den me see a man in de roat, and dis man be Catolik, den me tell de Lort now you convert dis man and dat vil be de sign den me vill know my duty to breach de gosple.* Den me go and talk mit dis man, but dis man not much feel. Den me talk mit him again, and he come some convict; den me give him a bible and bray mit him, and he git big loat on his hort, and he go to de preas, and tell de preas vat a big sinner he is, but de preas not can pardon deas kind: kos deas is Got vat convict; den me bray mit him and poorty soon he loose him heas loat and come convert. Den me tell de Lort now me vill go and breach ven you open de door. Den me begin do look for de feel where do go do labor for de Lort. Aboud dis dime a man from de eas, Mr. Cook* come do Cincinnati and vant do find some convert catolik do labor among de Sherman Catolic. An somebody tell him maby he can git me, and me be shest in de city at dis time on bisness, and dey call me do see Mr. Cook, and he dell me me vant doo hire you do be a colporteur among de Sherman. But me dell him me not can hire, But me dell him me vill go and dry of me can do dis and me not take any pay.

Den me take some books and some dracks mit me home, and me dake a gal (a young woman) mit me in my carriage do Sharmantown do see her brodder who leaf in Sharmantown. Vell me dinkdis is good dime for me do begin, & den me dalk mit dis gal all long de roat, and me dells her about Got and about Chris, and she dinks much on dis and me give her de Bible and she read him much, and den she come convict, and me dalk mit her after dis, and bray mit her.

Vel now me stay heme doo or dree days, and me bray do Got, and me tell de Lort now me vill go and dry dis virk dree mont, and if you go mit me and convert de beoble, den dis vill be de sign. Den me vill know my duty. Vel den me go do Cincinnati, and me dell em dis do Mr. Cook dat me vill go dree mont and dry of me can do dis and me not sharge notin. Den me begin and me go among the Sharman, me go do a house, and me, dalk do em and me bray mit em, and me give em book and drack and de Bible. Den me go do anoder, and me do dem jus de same.

And poorty soon de wort of Got begin do work and make em de beeple feelt bat. Kos de Bible tell em vot great sinners dey be, and me holt meetin mit em every night, and me dalk mit em and me bray mit em.

Me dont dalk about Catolick shurch. Me not tell em dis bat shurch, me let de bible do dis. Me tell em you can stay in de Catolick shurch if you vant do. Me know all de dime dis vont do it do, ven convert. Den dis gal, vat me dake do Sharmantown come back to Cincinnati, and she come right avay do de prayer meetin and in doo or dree days she comes rejoicen in de Lort. And in doo or dree weeks seven family most all git christian; and den dis is happy family. And dis is de seven fus famillies vat me visit since me ben corporteur.

Dis make incourage, and me virk dis vay five week and many git convert. Me gif one man de New Testament and he lay him on he shelf for weeks, den he dink, vell, me read dis book vat Ritty gif me and see vat de is in em, and den he dake em down from de shelf and brush off de duss and begin to read, and read and read, and de bible soon show him vat he vas, and den me talk mit him and bray mit em, and den soon he git a light hart. He come convert.

Now me leaves Cincinnati, and me go to Columbus, (capital of Ohio) dis is hard place. Me look at de city and me look at de beoples and me dont know vat to do, den me go and bray, and den dis passage come do me. "Dis beoble can kill de body but dey cant kill de soul. You know vat dis passage is, me dont can tell you all: den me begin to go to de houses, and me dalk mit em, and me sell em books, and me give em books, and me give em bibles, and me bray mit em; den by and by one voman coue under conviction, and me bray mit her, and den she git de loat off her hart and de light comein, and den anoder one git convict, and poorty soon many come convict and dey go to de Preas and de preas, try hart do forgive em, but he not can pardon dis kind. Den day come to de prayer meetin, and den git poorty soon convert. Me virk very hart here. Me virk all day, distribute books and dracks and de bible, and me hold meetin every night and den by an by me git sick. Me bleat at de lungs, and den me mus go home and git kured, and anoder man go do Columbus and make one shurch out of dis beople vat come convert dare and dis very good shurch now.

And ven me git vell den me go do Lancaster, and me labour here and in dis mycinity mos one year, and me see much good dime in dis place Me see many convert, me not can dell you all vat de Lort do among de beoble, but me can dell you some. Vel firs ven me come here me begin do give em blendy books and draks and Baxter Call, and Bilgrims' brogress and de Bible and me talk mit em and bray mit em in de family, and hold meeetin in de brivate house, and de house git more beoble dan he can hold em. And den de minister dell me come in do my shurch.

But not all de minister dell me dis. O, no. Some dis minister not vant me dare and dell de beoble dis man metodis, and dis be not de virk of Got: but de virk of de Debil. Den me go in de shurch and dalk do de beoble, vat come in and day stan at de vindow outsite, and me dalk to em and me dell em aboud em aboud Shesus Chris, and me dont dell em nottin else, and me dell em all dis vat me dell you, you fine em in dis bible vat me give you. Me gif em all dare (to the audience) and me do git em all dare: kos me know nottin only vat me fine dare. Great many beoble come convert and comes good beoble in dis blace.

Den me go out of de city vare de big steal (Distillery) stand right in de middle of de beoble; doo or dree dundred beobles leafe here. And me begin to dalk mit em and dell em aboud Chris, and me give em bible and me dalk aad dalk, and den me hold Meetin, and in de fuss meetin one voman stan up and dell de beoble, dis be de right kine of religion, and de next meetin two vomen fall right down on de floor, and de beoble come all frait it, and me not can dell vat de matter mit em, kos me dont never see em do dis afore. But me dink de Lort vont let em hurt. And de beoble run and git vatter and dro dis in em face, and run after de doctor do bleat em. But by and by, day begin do brase Got, and da dont vant any vater and da dont vant de doctur, da git vell mit out. After dis da call me metodis, and da curse me and da call me schwamer, (translated by Pro. Stowe, lunatic,) but da come do de meetin all de time, and de spirits of Got come down mit bower, and day mos all stop drink em visky. And ven me go dare fus, da all drink visky. De vomen shus like de men, all drink em. Me stay here five mont. And ven me go vay from dis blace, de beoble mos all not sware, not drink visk ey, and 160 convert.

Den de beoble in a litle blace seven miles from Lancaster send for me. But one man in dis blace swear if me come dare he vill git me kilt, and dis man be Deast (Deist)

But me dink Got vill dake care of me and me vill go. Den me git some book and bibles and dings: and me go. And me go right of and see dis man and me dalk do him in Spirit of Shesus Chris and me dell him me dont hurt you. You can be Deast if you rudder, and after dis he dont hurt me, and me begin do hold meetin and de spirit of Got come down and de beoble some git convert, and den dis Deast come to de meetin, and den me go and dalk mit him. And me dont dalk mit em about de bad Deast and de bad infidel: but me dalk mit him bout Shesus Chris, all de dime. And soon he ax me do bray mit em, and me do and in doo dree days he git de light hort, and O how he bray den, and help me; and 26 come convert in dis place. Mr. R. then alluded to his labours in Dayton and Pickaway, Ohio, and in New Elsis, and other places in Indiana, which he visited in the course of this Paul like perambulation.

And now (continued the speaker) me com back to Cincinnati and begin do labour mit de Sherman in dis blace some more. And now me fint great many Sherman in dis city vat vant to know de right vay. O Brudern, his beobles all in de dark. You dont can know how dis beoble feel. You got em de bible, and always have em and you know de right vay. But dis boor beoble got none bible and got no body do dell em de right vay. De preas dell em you mus come and hear de vird from my lips, and me forgive you sins.

But ven he do he dont, and da shus de same kind of sinner like da be before. One voman vat me visit dree year go come convict den, but dont tell me, and she keep convict all de dime dis dree year, and she confess and confess to de preas seven dime, but de loat stay on de hort all de dime. Den dis voman dink maby dis city dreas do young, day not learn yet how to forgif dis kind. And den she valk fifiy miles out in de coonthry do see an old preas, vat have a vite heat shus like dis man, (pointing to Dr. Beecher, who sat near him, and whose moistened eye betrayed the secret emotion of his heart,) and ven she come dare dis old preas dry and dry, but he not can forgive dis kind nudder. Den she come home and cry all along de roat. Den me go and see her and dalk mit her bout Shesus Chris. And den she dell me, me feel like dis all de dime for dree years since you dalk mit me. Den me bray mit her and she come rejoicin in Got*. Mr. Ritty, then concluded his address with a most pathetic exhortation to his audience to faith and faithfulness in the cause of Christ.

R. H. LEONABD.

*Bro. R. tells me he selected the wickedest man in town that there might be the less prospect of his conversion.

†Rev. R. S. Cook, Cor. Sec'ry. of A. M. T. Society.

‖Mr. R. told me yesterday that the husband of this woman is now under deep conviction.

*Mr. R. is from Elsis in the north of France.

John Wesley the Great fonnder of Methodism was in many respects a most remarkable man. He was greatly in advance of his generation. While the world was profoundly asleep on the subject of Temperance, he was a thorough going temperance man. He said he never knew an instance where wealth, amassed by the sale of intoxicating liquors, descended to the fourth generation.

SCIENTIFIC

From the New York National Press.

MAGNETIC TELEGRAPH.

The generator of the galvanic fluid consists of 50 glass tumblers of the size in common use, in each of which is a zinc hollow cylinder reaching from the top to the bottom of the glass, and almost filling it up. From the top of the zinc cylinder projects a horizontal arm of the same metal, extending two inches beyond, to which is soldered platina full 3 1-2 inches long and half an inch wide, and hangs vertically from the end of the arm. In the hollow of the zinc cylinder is placed a small porous cup three inches long and 1 1-4 inch in diameter. The glass tumbler is then filled with diluted sulphuric acid, and then the small cup filled with the pure nitric acid. Being thus prepared the platinum of one glass is put into the small porus cup of the other, and so on through the whole series. The last glass at one end of the row has its platinum soldered to a strip of copper which terminates in a cup of mercury in a platform upon which the glasses stand. At the other end, the projecting arm has also a copper strip soldered to it, and terminates in a cup of mercury, in the same manner as the other end. These two ends constitute the negative and possitive poles of the battery, which is at Washington.

From one of those cups of the mercury proceeds a copper wire, of the size of common bell wire, extending to Baltimore, upon poles 25 feet high, and 225 feet apart. Here it enters the Telegraph office, and passes around first one prong of a bar iron, bent in the form of a horse-shoe, and from that around the other prong, and then the wire returns to Washington upon the same poles as the other. At Washington the return wire is soldered to a slim slip of brass, one end of which is fastened upon a pedestal, and the other end, with an ivory button upon it, stands over a brass plate of the size of a five cent piece, without touching it. To the under part of the brass plate is soldered a wire which extends to the other pole of the battery.—The battery being now ready for action, you hat but to place your finger upon the key and press it until it touches the brass plate below, and instanily the galvanic fluid flies its 30 miles. Take off the pressure of your finger, and instantly the fluid has ceased to flow.

We have alluded to the bar of iron bent to the form of a horse-shoe a Baltimore, around which the main wires are coiled. It is not generally known that if a bar of soft iron is encircled with copper wire wound with some insulating substance like bonnet wire, and a current of galvanic fluid passes through the wires thus surrounding the iron, it becomes instantly a magnet. If the current is made to cease, the magnetism of the iron is gone. If, over the end of the two prongs of the bar of iron where it projects beyond the coils of wire around it, a small flattened straight bar of similar soft iron is placed, being hung upon one end of a lever, and the lever supported delicately upon pivots, so as to rise and fall—it is clear that whenever the bent iron is made a magnet, the iron directly over it, upon the lever, will be attracted down with considerable force. The lever recedes when the magnitism is destroyed by means of a spring. On the other end of this lever are three steel points pointing upwards, and directly over them is a steel roller with grooves turned in it. corresponding to the 3 points, so that when they strike the roller by the power of the magnet, each of them falls into its own groove.

Between the three points and the steel roller, the paper passes at an uniform rate being drawn along by two rollers, connected with the clock work, which is driven by a weight. The paper is in rolls 14 inches in diameter, and 1 1-2 inch wide, forming a ribbon of continuous length. This roll is placed upon a spool which turns easily upon its ex is in front of the pen, as the paper is drawn of by the movement of the clock work. The alphabet is as follows:

A	B	C	D	E	F	GJ	H
·—	—···	—·—·	—··	·	··—·	——·	····
IY	K	L	M	N	O	P	Q
··	-·—	·—··	——	—·	———	·——·	——·—
R	SZ	T	U	V	W	X
·—·	···	—	··—	···—	·——	—··—

NUMERALS.

1	2	3	4	5
·————	··———	···——	····—	·····
6	7	8	9	0
—····	——···	———··	————·	—————

We have now the battery and key at Washington. The wires from Washington to Baltimore, and the magnet and writing apparatus a Baltimore. At every touch of the key at Washington upon the plate below, however rapid, the fluid passes and ceases to pass, to Baltimore and back. At every passage of the fluid, the pen by the attraction of the iron bars to the end of the magnet, is brought up against the paper with such force as to indent it, and instantly recedes—so that the paper moving over the pen receives a succession of dots, and an intermediate space. By holding the key down a little longer, a line is marked upon the paper. By this means, at the option of the operator at Washington, dots, spaces and lines of any combination, are made upon the paper at Batimore with perfect ease.

At Washington the operator desires to inform his correspondent in Baltimore, that the 'Senate is in Executive Session., Express thus: Sen Ex. Sess. With the key he makes first eight rapid touches upon the brass plate, which at Baltimore notifies the attendant that the message is about to be sent, by ringing of a bell, which motion is produced in the same way as that of moving the pen. He then goes on to make . . . . dots in rapid succession, with spaces between them, a longer space, a dot ., a longer space, a line, space and dots thus is written. . . . . —Sen., then follow, by the same mode, the dots, spaces, longer spaces and lines to finish the sentence, . .—. Ex., ... Sess.——After the sentence is completed, the rapid succession of eight dots are made to signify that it is finished.

The clock work, which moves the paper, is started by the writer at Washington, by his removing, through the agency of a lever moved by the magnet, a break falling upon a smooth roller on the little fly wheel of the clock train—and stopped after the end of the message has run three inches from the pen, by the break's falling upon the roller through the action of the clock work itself.

We have now described how messages may be sent from Washington to Baltimore, and it may be asked how is an answer returned? Imagine the same machinery, as has now been described, reversed, with the exception that there is no battery in Baltimore, and the whole is complete for sending or receiving communications, either way.

We have said that from one of the poles of the battery in Washinging a wire extends to Baltimore, and there encircling the iron bar, rcturns to Washington. The return wire is not absolutely necessary.

From the first commencement of the working of the Telegraph at Baltimore, but one of the wires upon the poles has been used. The wire, instead of going back to Washington after it leaves the coils; descends to the ground, and is soldered to a copper plate buried in the earth in Baltimore. At Washington, a copper plate of the same dimensions is buried in the cellar of the Capital, from which a wire is taken and soldered to the key. So that the fluid travels upon one wire from Washington to Baltimore, and returns to Washington through the earth as its conductor.

Professor Morse has his alphabet so arranged upon a square board, that by drawing a side, one letter is substituted for another, thus changing throughout the common alphabet. By this means a merchant in New York may write to his correspondent in Philadelphia, without the possibility of its being intelligible to any one except the individual to whom it is addressed. Not even the writer upon the instrument in New York, or the attendaat in Philadelphia, can decipher it.

MISSIONARY INTELLIGENCE.

From the Missionary Herald.

Constantinople.—Two members of the church at Constantinople have died recently, both in the triumph of faith. A notice of this event will appear in the next Herald. Mr. Dwight says, under date of October 5, "From Nicomeda and Ada Bazer we have encouraging accounts. The brethren in those places are enjoying more freedom than heretofore. In Nicomedia they have themselves fitted up a room temporarily for public worship; and on the Sabbath about thirty persons regularly come together."

Broosa.—Mr. Ladd reports, August 19, the spirit of hostility to evangelical truth at this station as not having essentially abated. "The two excommunicated brethren and one sister appear well, and endure the reproach and injuries brought upon them by the persecutors with a Christian spirit." Others, however, have been driven away from the influence of the missionaries, and continue to stand aloof from them.

Trebizond.—The brethren at this station are in greater quietness than they were a few weeks ago. In the latter part of September they were able to hold their Sabbath services without the presence of policemen; and females had begun again to attend. Two persons stood propounded for admission to the infant church of Trebizond on the first Sabbath in October.

Madura.—The prosperity of this mission still continues. From a letter of Mr. Muzzy, dated September 2, it appears that our brethren are receiving fresh applications from different villages for Christian instruction. "In other villages," he says, "we are opposed. The people in a place which is five miles from Madura, have united together to prevent us from building a school-house; and they have threatened the man with whom the catechist stays, that if he does not expel the chatechist he shall be expelled himself. A report has been spread by some evil-minded person, that the missionaries are looking for treasure, and that they offer human sacrifices to the devil, so that they may be successful. This rumor is widely spread, and in some cases it operates to our prejudice."

Madras.—The brethren of this mission have been recently encouraged by the admission of four persons to their communion, three of them being females. Some further difficulty has been occasioned by caste; a few communicants have been drawn away, and will probably be cut off from the church. A meeting was held by the mission simultaneously with the annual meeting of the Board, which is represented as having been very interesting.

Ceylon.—Under date of September 19, Mr. Hoisington says, "There have been a few cases of interest among the students at Batticotta, and perhaps of conversion, within the last month. But we need the gre at and latter rain, and are trying to ask for it."

Amoy.—Mr. Pohlman was at Canton, Aug. 26, on account of a disease of the eyes. He has heard, however, that there were nine girls in the female school at Amoy, taught by his teacher. The two old men who had been admitted to the church, continued to "run well." Rev. J. Stronach, of the London Missionary, Society, and Dr. Cumming, were kindly performing missionary work for Mr. Pohlman.

Borneo.—Letters have been received from Messrs. Youngblood and Thomson, both of whom were at Karangan. Mr. Youngblood has been dangerously ill; but he had nearly recovered at the date of his letter, July 20. The other members of the mission were in good health. The climate is regarded as excellent. Mr. Youngblood expresses the hope that the truth is making some impression upon the minds of a few. Mr. Thomson, under date of July 6, states that the Panumbahan at landac recently gave him a written assurance that the Dyaks should be involved in no difficulty, though they might labor for the missionaries, receive instruction from them, or embrace and practise their religion.

EMBARKATION OF MISSIONARIES.

On the fifth of November, Rev. Eli Smith, of the Syria mission, and Mrs. Smith, late of Northampton, Massachusetts, sailed from New York for Beirut.

On the 18th of November, the following persons embarked at Boston for Madras, in the ship Flavio, Captain Crocker: Rev. Levi Spaulding and Mrs. Spaulding, of the Ceylon mission; Rev. John Scudder, M. D. and Mrs. Soudder, of the Madras mission; Rev. John E. Chandler, of Woodstock, Connecticut, and Mrs. Chandler, of Cincinnati, Ohio; Rev. Geo. Ford, of Groton, Mass. and Mrs. Ford, of Patchogue, Long Island; Rev. William W. Scudder. (son of Dr. Scudder,) and Mrs. Scudder, both of New York city; and Rev. Eurotas P. Hastings, of Clinton, New York. Mr. Chandler received his theological education at Lane Seminary, Mr. Ford at Andover, Mr. Scudder at Princeton, and Mr. Hastings in the Union Theological Seminary of New York city. Messrs. Chandler and Ford are expecting to join the Madura mission, and Messrs. Scudder and Hastings the Ceylon mission. Dr. Scudder will be obliged to labor with the Madura mission, for some months at least, inasmuch as the committee have not been able to obtain a physician, for that field. The missionaries received their instructions from one of the Secretaries, November 3, in Dr. Hutton's church, New York city.

On the same day Mr. Levi Chamberlain, of the Sandwich Islands mission, sailed from Boston for Honolulu, in the ship Montreal, Captain Doane.

Religious Intelligence.

PITTSBURGH DISTRICT.

Harrisville Ct. Va. December 24, 1846.

Br. Bassett: I would inform the friends of Zion through the Recorder that I reached my appointment the 26th September, and commenced my labors on the 27th in Harrisville.

We held our first quarterly meeting at the oil spring meeeting house on the 24, 25 and 26th, of October. The weather was favorable, and the congregations interesting and we had a very good meeting.

Since I came to this circuit, have organized one new society of thirteen or fourteen members which promises well, it is commenced of good materials. Our prospects in this part of the country are encouraging. We have received 18 members since conference. Some of which promise effective usefulness in the church. And we think the prospect good for a good many more. May the good Lord in his infinite mercy send his good spirit among the people, that sinners may flee from the camp of darkness, to lay hold upon the hope set forth in the gospel. Pray for us that the flag of calvary may may wave in triumph here. Isaac Holland, Sup't.

MUSKINGUM DISTRICT.

Mt. Pleasant. O. Jan. 1, 1847.

Mr. Editor. We have just closed a very interesting meeting at Wesley Chapel, of a week's continuance. The Society much revived, and twelve accessions. Br. Andrew rendered us good service at the above meeting.

Also, my colleague, Br. Hoagland, with the assistance of Brs. Linder, Scott and Lewis, have held a very profitable meeting in this place, of the same length. Eight were received on probation.

John Burns.

OHIO DISTRICT.

Mad River Mission, Dec. 28, 1846.

Dear Brother: We have just closed our Christmas meeting, which was held at Russellvanta, and continued four days. Our congregations were large and attentive. Brethren of every order joined with us to praise God. Many of us found the Savior precious, on the occasion, and we hope much good was done. Two united with us in church fellowship. Let us have your prayers.

L. Ensminger.

MICHIGAN DISTRICT.

Livingston Ct. Mich. Dec. 16, 1846.

Dear Br: I wish to drop a note relative to the state of this Circuit. The present prospect bids fair for a glorious work this Conference year. Our brethren and sisters are endeavoring to humble themselves before God. Love and Union seem to prevail. We are trying to burnish up the whole armor, that we may fight the battles of the Lord. Already some of the unconverted are beginning to give heed. Some accessions to the church have been received, and there is a fair prospect for more. The dawn of better days begins to shine upon old Livingston, and the Lord is reviving his work in many places. Pray for us, that our faith fail not, but that we may overcome through the blood of the Lamb, and the word of his testimony. J. B. Jewel.

Bush Amusement in Austrialia.

THE KANGAROO.

The Kangaroo is an extraordinary animal.—There are several kinds of them, and they are of various sizes. The Kangaroo forester is about five feet high, and when pursued by dogs it leaps or bounds from fifteen to twenty paces. The animal goes on his hind legs. He is generally of the same color as the English hare, and his flesh greatly resembles in taste and appearance that of the hare. The tail, which sometimes weighs twenty pounds, is considered the best part of him. It makes excellent soup—indeed, equal to any ox-tail soup I ever tasted, His movements in his native wilds are extremely graceful. Seldom rapid, until he sees you and your dogs in full chase after him—then he hits out in right earnest, hops, skips, bounds, and if you have not fleet dogs before you, and a fleet-horse under you he is soon out of sight. In some parts of the colony they are seen in droves, but I never saw more than five or six of them together. I have often seen them quietly feeding among my cattle, with which they seemed to live on peacable terms.

When hard pressed, they turn about put their backs to a tree, and for a time successfully fight the dogs, which they often rip up and disable for life. They have been known not only to drown dogs, but also to take a man in their arms, and carry him towards a lagoon or deep pond, and there attempt to drown him as they commonly drown a dog, viz. by pressing his head under water. A friend of mine a Mr, James Aitken, settler on the Clarence river, lately received in a battle with a Kangaroo, a mark which he will necessarrily carry with him to the grave. He was in chase after a Kangaroo, which at last his dogs caught, when my friend inconsiderately dismounted from his horse for the purpose of assisting his dogs. The Kangaroo now left them, and attacking Mr. Aitken, whose lip he completely tore. The Kangaroo is naturally timid, and is easily tamed. He lives entirely on grass; and the female has only two young ones at a time, which she carries in a pouch or bag under her belly.—When hard pressed in the chase, she drops them one by one; you can then be certain that she is nearly beat. The skin is remarkably tough, and is converted into stock whips, and sometimes used as a substitute for a blanket in traveling through the bush. With half a dozen of these skins sewed together, a man could comfortably sleep out all night on a bleak, snowy mountain.

[McKenzie's Ten Years in Australia.

The Supreme Court of Virginia has given a decision on the case of Rev. Mr. Plummer. The Rev. gentleman claimed exemption for his salary as Clergyman from the State tax on salaries, and was fined for refusing to make return of his salary to the Assessor. The Court has decided in favor of his claim.

The Prussian government has published a decree, directing that. for the future, a person, in order to become a druggist, must pass two years in studying in a university.

It is stated that the printers in Lowell intend to celebrate the birth of Franklin, on the 18th of January. It will doubtless be done in ample form.

Conference Proceedings.

From the Monthly Reporter.

PHILADELPHIA CONFERENCE.

Minutes of the First Session of the Philadelphia Annual Conference of the Meth. Prot. Church, held in the First Meth. Prot. Church, (Phila.) on the 31 of November, 1846.

T. H. Stockton was appointed Chairman, pro tem.

W. S. Stockton was appointed Secretary, pro tem.

Religious services by J. R. Nichols.

On motion of Br. Wilson, ministers from other Conferences and churches, were invited to take seats with the conference. Br. S. B. Southerland, of the Maryland Conference, and Rev. Mr. Porter of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, accepted the invitation.

Br. Jacob H. Nichols, of the New Jersey Conference, presented the following, "Extract from the Minutes of the Fourth Session of the New Jersey Conference of the M. P. Church, March 10, 1846.

"1. Resolved, That the New Jersey Annual Conference of the M. P. Church, do hereby cheerfully agree to a union with the contemplated division from the Maryland District, eastern Division,

"2. Resolved, That Jacob H. Nichols be empowered to communicate the action of this Conference to said division, when organized.

(Signed,) Wm. M. H. Smith, Sec'ry N. J. An. Conference."

The election for permanent officers was now had, which resulted as follows:

President, John G. Wilson.
Secretary, Wm. S. Stockton.
Finance Committee, J. R. Nichols, G. S. Cox.
Committee on Minutes, Wm. S. Stockton.
Conference Steward, T. H. Stockton.
District Committee, T. H. Stockton, J. R. Nichols, Dr. Matchett, J. Galliard, G. S. Cox, J. G. Ginodo.

The Committee to whom was referred the action of the New Jersey Conference in relation to union with this Conference, beg leave to report, That they deem the union inexpedient at this time, and recommend that any definite action on that subject be deferred until next session.

Resolved, on motion of T. H. Stockton, That the appointments of the last Maryland Conference in relation to the Kensington and Brickmakers Stations, and the arrangements between the First M. P. Church, and the Bethlehem Station, with their pastors, be confirmed. Adopted.

On motion of T. H. Stockton, Dr. Matchett, is placed at the disposal of the President.

Resolved, That the next session of this Conference be held in this Chapel, on the 3d Wednesday of March, 1847.

W. Turner, a member of the Colored Association, or Conference, made certain statements—which was referred to the President.

Members in the several churches, represented in this Conference—1st M. P. Chapel, T. H. Stockton, pastor, 134 mem. Kensington, J. G. Wilson, pastor, 200 mem. Brickmakers', J. R. Nichols, pastor, 140 mem. Bethlehem, H. D. Moore, pastor, 52 mem. Total, 526.

MEMBERS OF THE CONFERENCE.

Ministers.	Delegates,
T. H. Stockton,	W. S. Stockton,
J. G. Wilson,	G. S. Cox,
J. R. Nichols,	Jas. Galliard,
H. D. Moore,	John Porter.
Dr. Matchett,

Adjourned sine die.

W. S. STOCKTON, Sec.

November 3, 1846.

EFFECT OF THE ABSENCE OF SUN AND AIR.—Dr. Moore, the eloquent and amiable author of "The Use of the Body in relation to the Mind." says—"A tadpole confined in darkness would never become a frog, and an infant being deprived of heaven's free light, will only grow into a shapeless idiot, instead of a beauteous and reasonable thing. Hence, in the deep dark gorges and ravines of the Swiss Valais, where the direct sunshine never reaches, the hideous prevalence of idocy startles, the traveler. It is a strange, melancholy idiocy. Many citizens are incapable of any articulate speech; some are deaf, some are blind, some labor under all these privations and all are misshapen in almost every part of the body. I believe there is, in all places, a marked difference in the healthiness of houses, according to their aspect with regard to the sun, and that those are decidedly the healthiest cæteris paribus, in which all the rooms are, during some part of the day, fully exposed to direct light. It is a well known fact that epidemics attack the inhabitants on the shady side of a street, and totally except those of the other side; and even in epidemics, such as ague, the morbid influence is often thus partial in its action." [Mechanics' Jour.

MORAL EFFECTS OF LIGHT.—Dark and sombre dwelling and streets are the well-known resort of the most depraved classes in all cities and towns. This may be said to be a universal law of our social economy, and hence it becomes a matter of some importance to consider whether it would not be advisable, on moral grounds also, to attend with greater care to the construction and improvement of the residence of our laboring population. Darkness produces carelessness, and depression of mind, and of the whole nervous system, especially if it be conjoined with idleness, its almost necessary companion. A dark house is generally a dirty house; and it is in dark corners that the poor accumulate filth, which they are too idle to throw out of doors. If such dwelling were exposed to the light of day, a sense of shame would often induce a superior degree of cleanliness; and the cheerfulness of mind which a light house tends to foster would be productive of still greater advantages. Mr. Clay, in his report on Preston, has well said, that "something may be hoped for a people who can feel 'a joy in flowers;'" but the poor can seldom possess even this small advantage in the miserable residence provided for them.

RENUNCIATION OF UNIVERSALISM.—We were present last Sabbath evening at Rev. Mr. Hatfield's church, and listened to an address by a converted Universalist, Rev. Charles S. Bailey. He was for a year and a half, pastor of the Universalist church in Westport, Ct., and for the last two or three years he has been pastor of the First Universalist Church in Philadelphia. He recently became convicted of the errors of that system, and as a penitent sinner sought mercy at the feet of Jesus. His address was a public renunciation of the doctrines which he had preached, and an open and fearless exposure of the wickedness and hypocricy of that delusive faith. The house was densely crowded, and his remarks were listened to with profound attention, giving evidence of a true work of grace in his heart, and exemplifying the truth that he is saved as a brand pluked from the burning.—N. Y. Evangelist

TWO HARD THINGS.—1. To talk of yourself without being vain.

2. To talk of others without uttering slander.

Therefore talk not of yourself or others unless it is necessary to effect some good purpose.

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 9, 1847.

☞Our thanks are due to Gen. Goddard for a a copy the Report of the Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb.

CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE. The publishers will oblige us by forwarding No. 3 of the Globe, as we failed to receive it.

OHIO LUNATIC ASYLUM.

Copies of the Annual Report of this Institution have been sent us by Gen. Goddard of the Senate, and Dr. Awl, the Superintendant. The Report comprises about 75 pages, and is very interesting. The Directors announce that this great enterprize of benevolence is completed. The east wing has been finished. The main building is 296 feet in length, ond 46 in depth. The wings project beyond it 11 feet, and extend back 218 feet, forming a large court in its rear. The wings are 39 feet in width. The court is divided by the building designed for a wash house &c. A small steam engine is to be placed at its extremity, which will subserve important purposes, not the least of which is that of supplying an abundance of water to all parts of the building, and affording protection against destruction by fire. All the roofs are of tin. The buildings, (which were commenced in 1836) contain upwards of five million bricks, and have cost upwards of $150,000. They cover an acre of ground, and 440 rooms. They are capable of accommodating (besides the officers, assistants, attendants &c,) 350 patients. The Institution went into operation in Nov. 1838. Since that time there have been in it 866 patients; 461 males, and 405 females; 249 pay patients, 649 supported by the state; 358 have been discharged cured, 92 have died.

During the past year 175 patients have been admitted, 88 males, 87 females, 71 have been discharged cured, 18 have died. A number are still improving. The number of patients in the Institution at the end of the fiscal year was 291. The Directors say, that "the patients have received constantly both from physicians and nurses all the care and kindness, which would have been extended to them in the best ordered private families of friends and relatives. All has been done for them that medical skill and experience combined with indefatigable attention could accomplish. Much praise is due to the Superintendent under whose care the Institution, has grown up from infancy to its present magnitude."

The Superintendent states in his Report, that the Institution has a handsome library of 600 volumes—that the books are greatly prized by a large number of patients of both sexes. A list is also given of newspapers, more than 70 in number, which are gratuitously sent to the Institution. Amongst these, of course, is the Western Recorder.

An interesting circumstance is related in the appendix of the Report. An annual election is held in the Assylum for State and county officers, on the day of election. At the last election (Oct,) the struggle between the parties was sharp. The Democrats were confident of success, and the liberty men stood firm. But on counting the votes, all were surprised to find that the poll for Democrats and Whigs stood exactly even. At last however, one of the honorable judges concluded to demand his rights. After a long pause, which was a time of deep and universal anxiety, he gave the casting vote for the whig cause. But a still more interesting case is given in this connexion. On the morning of the election, a lunatic was discovered making a strong stump speech from one of the Asylum windows. The idea was at once suggested that he would be an excellent hand to assist in conducting the election. He was accordingly nominated, and without opposition appointed one of the judges of the election. He took his seat, and conducted himself with uncommon gravity and politeness, during the whole time of receiving the votes. And since this event, he is in every respect a different man, makes no noise, reads the newspapers daily, and is steady. And it is hoped that this circumstance will result in his entire cure.

The fourth of July was celebrated in the Asylum in an appropriate manner. An oration was delivered by one of the inmates, H. L. K. a copy of which is published with the Report. It contains some very ingenious and correct thoughts, but some very wild ones. On the occasion, the Superintendent, teachers, and pupils of the Institution for the blind, attended, bringing all their instruments of music. The music was finely performed, both instrumental and vocal. A splendid dinner closed the interesting scene.

PHILADELPHIA SATURDAY GLEANER.—This is the title of the new weekly issue, which takes the place of the Saturday Enquirer. This last, we have ever esteemed one our best exchanges, a mammouth sheet, well filled and its matter well arranged. The 'Gleaner' is a sheet of the same size (but the type not so small) and to be published at one dollar per annum in advance. That such a paper should be furnished at such a price, is truly marvellous. That it can at all be afforded at such a price is accounted for only by its immense circulation. Give us 50,000 subscribers, all paying, and all in advance, and perhaps we can conform our terms to those of the 'Gleaner.'

The first number of the Gleaner, dated Jan. 2, 1847, has reached us. It is a very handsome sheet and contains a great variety of general reading, domestic and foreign news, &c. It promises well for 'a Home Journal, and Parlor Companion, neutral in Politics and Religion.' To which the publisher adds, 'the cheapest and best.' Terms, $1, per year, for a single copy. Six for $5. Thirteen copies for $10. Payments always in advance and post paid. Handsome premiums are promised to those who procure clubs of new subscribers. Address, Jasper Harding, 57, South St. Philadelphia.

MR. RITTY, THE COLPORTEUR.—The narrative of the converted Catholic Dutchman, which we take from the Watchman of the Valley, will be found very interesting. Some of our readers may not be aware that the American Tract Society have, in the providence of God, struck upon one of the most effective and useful divices of benevolence for which the present age is distinguished. We refer to the employment of Colporteurs, to traverse the country, and not passing by the cities and towns, to distribute books and tracts. They however, not only distribute the publications, but converse with the people about the salvation of their souls, and as it appears from the account of Mr. Rity, they sometimes get up religious, meetings and establish churches. We are happy to learn by the "American Messenger" that there are now in the employ of the American Tract Society, 157 Colporteurs in 27 states of the Union. And we see also that pious students in many collegiate institutions, volunteer to spend the time of their vacation in this very useful employ. But the most interesting field of colportage labor, is among the German Catholic population, as our readers may judge from reading the address on our first page. An immense amount of good has been done amongst that class. Let every one who wishes to be instrumental in promoting the conversion of the world, every one who is willing to part with some expensive indulgence or superfluity, for the Kingdom of Heaven's sake, and spare a dollar, or ten, or an hundred dollars to advance the interests of the best of causes, let every such one aid liberally the American Tract Society in its blessed work.

MAGNETIC TELEGRAPH—THROUGH TO PITTSBURGH.—Just as our last paper was nearly out of press, we received an extra of the Pittsburgh Gazette of 30th ult. announcing that the magnetic line from Philadelphia to that city was completed, and had gone into beautiful operation! The connection with Philadelphia was formed on the afternoon of Tuesday, 29th ult. The first communication transmitted, was one from Maj. Gen. Bowman to the President of the United States. Afterwards was communicated the greeting of the Pittsburgh press to the Philadelphia press. Numerous other communications were made, whilst the Telegraphic room was crowded during the afternoon and evening. Important congressional intelligence from Washington, and commercial intelligence from eastern cities was also received. The Gazette of 1st. inst. gives the proceedings of Congress for the day previous, and the state of the markets in the principal cities, east. The completion, and successful operation of this most stupendous and most marvellous work, will give an increased importance and value to the Pittsburgh press. The Pittsburgh Gazette is one of the best of newspapers, of the secular character, whilst it uniformly shows respect to religion and benevolence. $2 a year for the weekly paper.

SABBATH SCHOOLS IN CINCINNATI.—The last number of the Watchman of the Valley contains a Statistical Table of the Sabbath Schools of Cincinnati, prepared by a Committee of the S. S. Teacher's Association. They give the names and statistics of 57 Protestant Schools, being an increase of 6 within last year. These 57 schools contain 1153 teachers, 6629 pupils, and have 14,137 volumes in their libraries. Increase of teachers 134, of pupils 954. There are 254 pupils reported as prefessing religion. The account given by our Cincinnati correspondent, in another column, has reference to one of the new schools, raisrd within the past year, under the care of the Elm St, Mission of the M, P. Church.

SECRET SOCIETIES.—We have on hand a communication from Br. W. A. Porter, in reply to the resolution published with the Minutes of the Onondaga Conference, some weeks ago, denouncing secret Societies. We were about publishing the article together with one from another correspondent on the other side of the question. But we see that the President of the Onondaga Conference, has just published a note in the Methodist Protestant, representing that no such resolution was officially passed by the Conference, and that these must be some mistake in the matter. Br. P. will therefore see the propriety of our laying his paper aside. He considers such a resolution 'incongenial with the Discipline and government of the M. P. Church.'

AMERICAN BOOKS FOR QUEEN VICTORIA.—We learn by the N. Y. Sun, that Robert Sears sends out by the Steamer Cambria Jan. 1st, a set of his pictorial works, thirteen volumes, elegantly bound in morocco, designed as a present to the Queen of Great Britain. A very fine, and valuable New Year's Gift, that.

U. S. CONGRESS.

Dec. 15. Senate.—Mr. Semple introduced a bill for extending the National road to Alton, Illinois.

House.—A joint resolution was adopted, providing for the election of Chaplains, from different religious denominations.

Dec. 16. Senate.—Mr. Crittenden introduced a bill to improve the navigation of the Western rivers. The Senate proceeded to the election of Chaplain. And on the second balloting, Rev. Mr. Slicer (Methodist) was elected.

The House.—was occupied with a debate about the Message and the war.

Dec. 17. Senate.—A memorial from the Society of Friends, of N. England, was presented, for the adoption of measures to bring to a close the war. Referred to Committee to be printed. A bill was introduced, and twice read to provide for the establishment of a branch mint at Charleston. Adjourned till Monday next.

House.—The election of Chaplain was had viva voce. The third process of voting resulted in the election of the Rev. Mr. Sprole (Presbyterian.)

Dec. 18. House.—A bill was passed, ordering payment for services and expenses of three men, in removing the Copper rock from Lake Superior. Numerous other bills in private calender received attention.

Dec. 19. House.—Mr. King asked leave to present a memorial from citizens of Savannah, asking an appropriation for removal of certain wrecks sunk in that harbor during the Revolution. A suspension of the rules was moved, but not concurred in, and the memorial was not received.

Mon. 21. Senate.—Messrs. Houston and Rusk, from the State of Texas, appeared in their seats, to-day. Also, Mr. Butler, of S. Carolina, vice Mr. M'Duffie, resigned, took the oath of office, and took his seat.

House.—Bills were introduced by Mr. Tiffatts, making appropriation for the improvement of western rivers, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce. The bill for the admission of Iowa into the Union was read a third time, and passed.

Tues. 22. Senate.—The following resolution, offered by Mr. Simple, was unanimously agreed to.

Resolved, That the Committee on Roads and Canals be instructed to enquire into the expediancy of incorporating a company, to construct a Rail Road from some point on the Missouri River, west of the limits of the state of Missouri, to the mouth of the Columbia river.

House.—Resolutions were considered apportioning and referring the Presidents Message to various standing Committees. The Message and war, came under severe scrutiny.

Wed. 23. Senate.—Mr. Semple, from Committee on Roads and Canals introduced a bill to provide for completing the Cumberland Road in and ceding the same to the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Missouri; which was read and passed to a second reading. Mr. Atherton of Committee on Printing, reported against printing the Memorial of Friends in New England praying measures to terminate the existing war. Mr. Davis moved to strike out the word "not" from the report, so that it read "that it be printed." After some discussion the vote was taken by ayes and nays. The President announced the result thus: Yeas, 21, Nays 21—the Presiding officer votes in the negative. So, the motion was negatived, and the report was laid on the table.

House.—Mr. Mastin introduced a bill establishing the Territorial Government of Minesota; which was read twice, and referred to Committee on the Territories Mr. Douglass, from Committee on the Territories, reported a Bill to establish a Territorial Government in Oregon; which was twice read, and referred to Committee of the Whole, and made special order of the day for Jan. 5th. The debate was resumed and continued on the Message and the War.

Thurs. 24. Senate.—Mr. Ashley, from Committee on the Judiciary, to whom had been referred the House bill for the admission of the State of Iowa into the Union, reported the same without amendment, and asked the immediate action of the Senate upon it. An amendment was offered and discussed, but was disagreed to and the bill finally passed. The Senate adjourned over till Monday.

House. Personal explanations, and further debate upon the Message and the war, occupied most of the day. And the House adjourned over till Monday next.

OHIO LEGISLATURE.

Mon. Dec. 18. Senate, Numerous memorials were presented on a variety of topics. Much time was occupied by the case of the contested election in Wayne county.

House.—Mr. Trimble from committee on Federal Relations reported upon a petition from Ashtabula county, declaring the Union dissolved, that the petitioners have leave to withdraw their petition. Agreed to.

Tue. 30. Senate. Sundry amendments to the tax law were considered and agreed to.

Thu. 31. The death of Gen. T. L. Hamer in Mexico, being announced in both houses, resolutions of respect were passed by both houses, one of which provides that the remains of Gen H. be brought home at the expense of the State, to repose in the soil of Ohio. And both houses adjourned over till Saturday.

Sat. Jan. 2, 1847. Afternoon. A joint session of both houses was held for the election of officers. The following is the result.

Secretary of State, Samuel Galloway.

Member of Board of Public works, Jacob Blickensderfer, Jr.

Judge of Superior Court of Cincinnati, Wm. Johnson.

Associate Judges. Trumbull County, John Ratliff; Jackson Co. Robert Minns; Tuscarawas Morris Cretor; Green Co. John Fudge; Harden Co, Alexander Thompson; Athens Co. Samuel H. Brown.

THE AMERICAN MESSENGER, a Monthly publication of the Americah Tract Society, has just entered upon a new volume with new type, and improved appearance. Six copies are sent to one address for a year for one dollar, twenty copies for $3. Address, American Messenger, 150, Nassau St, N. York.

METEOROLOGICAL TABLE.

Jan.	1,	Mercury,	60°—Rain.
"	2,	"	40—Cloudy.
"	3,	"	34—Clear.
"	4,	"	38—Rain.
"	5,	"	37—Clear.
"	6,	"	32—Clear.
"	7,	"	10—Snow.

The Markets.

Zanesville and Putnam.—No change since last week. Wheat, 50. Flour, $3 25. Pork, 2 25 @ 2 37.

Cincinnati, Jan. 4.—Flour, $3 60. Pork, $3 25.

NEW POLAR EXPEDITION.—At a late meeting of the Royal Geographical Society, it was announced that the Hudson's Bay Company had fitted out an expedition to survey the unexplored portion of the coast on the northeast angle of the American continent. It consist of eleven persons, two of whom are Esquimaux guides. They started in boats on the 5th of July, under favorable circumstances, the ice having broken up earlier than usual.

Cincinnati Correspondence.

Cincinnati, Dec. 26, 1846.

DEAR RECORDER: Christmas was a happy day to the little people of Elm st. Mission Sunday School, and as the source of their happiness was rational and commendable, I propose telling you and your readers, especially the younger ones, something about it. This I can more readily do from the fact, that I received a hint to be present upon the occasion. Well then first, I entered a plain but neat frame church in the North part of the city capable of holding some hundreds of people. It was rapidly filling up, with young people, whose bright eyes and smiling faces—plainly said happiness—and older people who to say the least looked very much contented. In looking at the farther end of the church my attention was attracted by two beautiful cedars springing up from each side of the altar and reaching to the ceiling—while over the pulpit an arch of the same material surmounted by rosettes, presented a very graceful appearance. In the altar was a carpeted platform. In a word the anniversary of the birth of the Saviour was to be commemorated, and this too by little children. How appropriate. The hour for the commencement of the exercises having arrived, I looked roun d for the speakers who did not appear to be present, when my attention was directed to the door and behold some 12 or 15 little lady orators, all arrayed in white and decorated with cedar branches, walked in procession to the platform, upon which they were seated. It was a beautiful spectacle, reminding us forcibly of the strewed pathway of the Saviour, when the people shouted "Hosanna to the son of David. Blessed is he that cometh in the same of the Lord, Hosanna in the highest." A number of male scholars completed the list of speakers. Nearly all upon the platform wore a blue scarf upon which were seen the word mission in gilt letters. The services were opened by singing. "From all that dwell below the skies," and prayer by Rev. O. Warrington after which the school sang that beautiful Christmas hymn in our S. S. Book commencing "High let us swell our tuneful notes." The opening address was then made by a young lady of the school, upon the flight of time. It was pronounced in a sweet and impressive voice that met with a response in every heart. "We are passing away, we are passing away." Then followed 15 or 20 addresses upon subject, appropriately connected with the great anniversary we had met to celebrate such as Yielding to Christ, Star of Bethlehem, Christmas Addresses, The Better Land, Obeying God, Dialogue, The Sabbath School, Mary's Grave, Missionary Ships, &c., and were delivered by representatives from every department of the school, from the little lisper of six to the more mature pupil of sixteen and interspersed with suitable hymns and Choruses. To present an adequate idea of the deep interest maifested upon the occasion is impossible. The joyful tear that coursed down the cheek of the Father and warm "God bless the children," from the heart of the mother—the approving smile of manhood, and the happy warblings of infancy all seemed to say in the language of one of the speakers, "Glory to God in the highest—on earth peace and good will to men." Mary's Grave spoken in memory of a classmate who had died happy in the Saviour, by three of her school-mates was very affecting. Her Christmas was spent in heaven. The concluding part of the inquiry, "Tell me sweet teacher where is that better land," was responded to by one of the young ladies of the first class in the thrilling language of Mrs. Hemans:

> "Eye hath not seen it, my gentle girl!
> Ear hath not heard its deep resounds of joy;
> Dreams cannot picture a world so fair;
> Sorrow and death may not enter there;
> Time doth not breathe on its fadeless bloom,
> Beyond the clouds beyond the tomb;
> It is there, it is there, my child.

An appeal was made in behalf of Sabbath Schools by Master A. Kendall, aged 6 years, that will not soon be forgotten by that crowded audience—cannot be forgotten by the parents present. There were evidences that it found way to many hearts in the assembly. The parallel drawn between Sparta and her youth and America, was striking and instructive. After describing the victories and renown of Sparta the speaker well exclaims, What was Sparta in the days of her proudest splendor, but the image of war and her people a nation of soldiers. The infant that did not promise the vigor of the strong armed warrior was exposed to a lingering death, and the youth who could most adroitly steal from the public tables was loaded with praises and commendations. Turn we to our own happy country, From Atlantic's side to the boundless prairies of the West, her Sabbath bells sweetly chiming over a thousand valleys weekly call her obedient population to listen to the sublime truths of christianity. And what is the condition of her youth. Let the musical ding dong, of her morning bells answered by the trampling of a thousand tiny feet to the place of prayer and praise give the answer. Let the hundreds of thousands congregated in the Sabbath School speak silently but eloquently. And what is their song?

> "Soon as my infant lips can speak
> Their feeble prayer to thee,
> O let my heart thy favor seek
> Dear Lord remember me."

But I cannot give, even a short extract from the different addresses without extending too long this notice. One more I will mention. "The Missionary Ship by Miss Sarah Kennet. It was spoken with the eloquence and zeal of a Missionary. "The axe of the workman and the hum of industry is heard, and upon the beautiful bay of New York there gracefully floats another vessel. Her tapering masts point to the blue above as if to remind us of heaven. Her white sails gently waving in the breeze are emblems of purity, and love. And mark that group upon her deck. A volume is opened; and from its inspired pages, we hear read; "And the heathen shall be given to him for an inheritance and the uttermost part of the earth for a possession. And then from that lovely band we hear sung in Holy rapture:

> Shall we whose souls are lighted
> By wisdom from on high,
> Shall we to men benighted
> The lamp of life deny?
>
> Waft, waft, ye winds, his story,
> And you, ye waters, roll,
> Till, like a sea of glory,
> It spreads from pole to pole.

The Missionary leaves friends home kindred and country, to be messenger of glad tidings to to distant nations. The snow white sails are unfurled to the breeze—and as the good ship starts upon her distant voyage freighted with love and mercy, we see the motto gently waiving from her top-masts, "Glory to God in the highest—peace on earth and good will to men." * * * *

God bless the noble missionary of the cross who amid toil, danger, and death, goes forth to proclaim the unsearchable riches of Christ to heathen fathers and mothers and to teach their children to lisp the name of Jesus. Again we say on this happy Christmas anniversary God bless the noble missionary of the cross, parents, teachers, class mates, we may not be able to go out as missionaries ourselves, but we can aid them in their glorious enterprise we can implore Gods blessing to rest upon them, we can ask God's Holy "Spirit to be with them." * * *

"Then will the missionary ship be seen sailing on every ocean, cleaving the blue waters of every sea, casting an anchor of hope in every Green Isle until from the inhabitant of the plain and the dweller in the mountain from the golden east and the youthful West shall arise from melodious hearts the universal anthem Glory to God in the highest peace on earth and good will to men."

But I must close this notice of the celebration, by saying again, Christmas anniversary was a happy day to the parents, teachers, and children, of of the Mission Sunday School. I understand the School now has 140 scholars enrolled, 19 teachers, and 275 volumes in the library and is in a prosperous condition.

Yours truly, IOTA.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

From the O. Statesman, Jan. 2.

GREAT FLOOD.—This morning the Sciota river was 22 inches higher than at the time of the great flood in 1832. At that time it was higher than ever known before, except in 1806, when, it is thought by our oldest citizens, it was somewhat higher than in 1832. The National road between this city and Franklinton, and from Franklinton to Sullivant's mill is covered with water. The largest sized trees, rails, and shocks of corn are drifting in abundance. The loss to the people in the Sciota valley is incalculable. Nearly all the corn left in shock in the field, and the quantity is immense, has been swept away. The fences in the valley are well nigh gone. The National Road between this city and the hill, three miles west, must be considerably injured. The railroad from the prison to the stone quarry is considerably damaged; a part of one of the bridges of the road has settled in one place some 18 or 20 inches, and may yet fall. The embankmen between the bridges is also much damaged.

Since the above was in type, a part of the railroad bridge has fallen. The water has made its way into the lower rooms of all the pork houses and much damage has been done.

The dwelling house and mill of Rolin Moler two miles below the city, are completely surrounded by water four feet deep. Some of our citizens went to the family in a boat and rescued them. Many caule stood in the water up to their mid-sides.

The river has broken through the banks of the Columbus feeder in several places. The amount of property destroyed is immense.

The pork house of Col. John McElvain has been swept away, which contained about $25,000 worth of pork. It is thought that a great portion of it will be lost. It belonged to Mr. Bryant.

From the Ohio Statesman. Jan. 4.

THE FLOOD.

Our river commenced falling on Saturday night and up to this time (Monday evening) has fallen some three feet.

We hear of losses from all parts. Some of the bridges north of this have been carried off, and some much injured. The fences in the valley have nearly all been swept away.

We mentioned in Saturday's paper the fact that the pork house of Col. McElvain had been swept away, which contained a large amount of pork belonging to Isaac Bryant. We understand that Mr. Byrant's loss is between six and eight thousand dollars, as near as it can be estimated at present. On Yesterday (Sunday) the slaughter house of Messrs. Buttles & Comstock was swept off; no loss other than the house. They have however lost considerable by damages done by the water in the lower story of their warehouse. The pork house of D. Mitchell was surrounded by water some five feet deep. The loss to Mr. Mitchell is inconsiderable, he having removed much of his pork into the second story before the water had reached its highest point.

The pork house on the canal, owned by M. Jackson, was visited by a flow of water, but no damages worth mentioning have been sustained by him.

We learn from the West that Dayton was nearly all under water. The canal and road from Dayton to Franklin, about 20 miles, are covered with water. The stages to and from that place have been stopped on account of the flood. We have no news direct from Dayton by this morning's mail. We fear that Dayton has suffered much by this flood. The loss of fences and corn in the Miami and Scioto valleys is very great.

So high has been the water, and so great the destruction of the bridges, that we are almost destitute of the news of the terrific flood. The bridges below Delaware, at the paper mills, is either injured, or the approaches to it. Report said it was swept away, but this we believe, is not so. Report also says the bridge over the Wheatstone at Worthington, is gone. Also, that over the Scioto at Bellpoint, Delaware county, at Dublin has lost one of its centre piers. Hutchins' flouring mill, this side of Dublin, is moved round from its foundation, and on yesterday rested against a tree. The national road between this city and Franklinton, and beyond Franklinton, is much injured by the rush of waters over it. In addition to the injury of the rail road bridge, mentioned on Saturday, the embankments beyond Franklinton are broken in three places, and iron and timbers all carried away. On the opposite side of the river below town there were 350 sheep swept off; part of them belonged to Mr. Minor. The dam that supplies the Columbus feeder and the main canal has been in great danger, and every possible exertion has been used to-day to secure the abutment on the west side of the Scioto. T estruction of corn and fencing is incalculable. ne person has estimated the amount of fencing rried away on the Scioto alone at a thousand iles in length. We have heard the probable mount of corn lost, if the flood was as severe low as above, estimated at from one to three illions of bushels. Yesterday was bright and arm—as beautiful over head as a May day—st night it commenced raining again, and it has en raining pretty much all day up to the time our paper going to press, and the river has ased and perceptibly falling for the last few urs. By a mark made by Mr. Ridgway in the re house at the west end of the bridge, at the eat February flood of 1832, the present flood as just 19 inches higher than that, and perhaps e highest known since the settlement of the untry.

From the Ohio Statesman.

DESTRUCTION BY THE FLOOD.

The news from the West is of the most serious aracter. The rains were so heavy in the upper iami Valley as to cause the Miami river to rise a height unknown by the oldest citzens. Day-n, on Saturday morning, was well nigh covered th water, and the loss in that town is estimated over $100,000. All the canal bridges about ayton are carried off; hogs for slaughter, pork, ur, and board-yards, all gone; mills and facto-s full of water to the first story.

D. Brecount, Esq., stage agent at Dayton, who s in Cincinnati on Sunday, and started home in e 2 o'clock line, writes from Franklin that the ach could go no farther, as the canal, turnpike, d river, were blended in one from there to Day-n. Persons acquainted with the localities, can m some idea from this of the extent of the od.

From Hamilton, Butler county, the news is of same distressing character. Rossville was tly under water, and the Hamilton hydraulic rks entirely destroyed.

The Cincinnati Commercial says:

'WHITE WATER CANAL SWEPT AWAY AND DE-STROYED FROM HARRISON TO THE JUNCTION.—We rn from Mr. Seaman, collector of tolls on the nal, that White Water river, has been flooded ate, to such ad extent as to destroy the White ater Canal and stop navigation for months.—e lock at Godley's Mills is carried away, the in at Harrison is broken, the tow-path and em-kments destroyed for miles, the embarkment ween the feeder dam and lock is washed away ll the bridges, culverts, &c. &c., are destroyed l the canal all the way above Harrison, is in-dated, and it is believed is destroyed by sand and ating substances.

'There is no way of learning, at present the a-unt of damage private property has sustained this State and in Indiana adjacent to the Canal, from accounts it must be very great. Hogs, tle, saw-mills, buildings, fences, corn, and all nds of property have been swept away for miles, il the greatest distress prevails. It rained ter-le all north of us last week, and we fear the amity has not yet been mere than faced.

Mr. Wm. Morris, who arrived in Cincinnati n Dayton on Saturday last, says:

'The Hydraulic Company had built a dam across river above the city, and dug a canal from nce to a reservoir which was in the immediate inity, the bottom of which was some ten feet her. The great rains and flood in the Miami sed the Reservoir to break, and pour itself out n the city, which was immediately deluged eral feet deep. The destruction of property in yton is awful to tell; the loss is put at over 00,000, some say as high as $200,000. It is ed that the small towns below Dayton have n seriously injured. At last account the water s still running through the streets of Dayton, Engineers not being able to turn it off. It ap-rs that Mad River, Still-water and the Miami, e all flooded. We shall give further particu-as they reach us.'

ome allowance must doubtless be made for ggerated rumors in such an excited time.

Butler county seems to have suffered also from structive tornado, which paesed over Middle-n on the night of the 29th. The following act from a letter from that town, is published he Times of Saturday afternoon:

t commenced about nine o'clock P. M. about miles from this place, and the extent of its op-ions was about half a mile in width and four es in length—how much farther I have not rd—and has spread the most awful destruction r that space. Its first attack was upon a large belonging to Mr. Long, which was carried pletely off its foundation and shattered to pie-destroying or rather carrying off a large a-unt of grain—(some that was in the sheaf was ried about two miles before it fell)—and in the untime tore down all the fences and trees with-s grasp. It then struck a well curb and car-it to the top of a house when it fell.

then coursed a meadow completely demolish-the fences, until it struck a saw and grist mill house belonging to Messrs. Lightfoot & hmond—carrying off the roof of the former, damaging the machinery to a considerable nt. It entered the house which was occupied he owner of the mill, through the two front dows, until the house was filled with wind, and burst out on the south and east parts of the e house, carrying with it beds and bedding, out the loss of a single life. It then burst out front part of the lock-house and bridge, carry-the latter about fifty yards, and again resumed ccupation of tearing down trees and fences, so far as heard from, continued to destroy, all ls of moveable matter. The whole was com-ed by this great Simeon, for such it may be d, in the space of about thirty seconds.'

SETTLEMENTS IN TEXAS.—Emigrants of the best racter are pouring in from Holland, Belgium parts of Germany. Two or three vessels, if more, will be engaged in the direct trade to e countries, bringing back passengers. us take one settlement, that of Castroville, as ecimen of future enterprises. Not many s ago there was a firm in this city, of Castro, Henriques which was dissolved by the death of latter. Henry Castro went to Texas, pur-ed a tract of land on the Medina river, twen-ve miles west of San Antonio, and in 1844 blished a settlement on that spot, containing y description of open prairie, rich bottoms, ng hill, ample pasturage, pure water, thick ds, and a fine climate. In less than two years emigrant population of Castroville a mounts 00 persons, who have good habitations, 200 s under cultivation, producing small grain of nds, cotton, sugar, tobacco, sweet potatoes, mel-vegetables of all kinds, peaches, figs, quinces, es, pears, and European grape vines. The grape is abundant, and wine and brandy of a l quality have already been made. They stores of all kinds of goods, mechanics, olmasters, physicians, churches, with meat at cents a pound, and fish and game in abun-e for nothing. A post office is to be estab-d; and Mr. Castro and his family reside in midst of the establishment, where every emi-t, if he has provisions and clothing for one can become independent.—N. Y. Sun.

LOSED.—Yesterday morning the Hudson r was closed from Poughkeepsie to Albany.

From the N. Y. Sun.

LOSS OF THE BRIG OF WAR SOMERS.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 29—7 o'clock, P. M.

The barque Morgan Dix, arrived at New Orleans Dec. 21, brings dates from the Squadron off Anton Lizardo to the 13th inst.

Full particulars have been received of the total wreck of the U S. brig Somers and the great loss of life which accompanied it. The Somers was maintaining the blockade off the harbor of Vera Cruz. On the evening of the 6th, she had taken shelter under Green Island, there being every indication of an approaching northerly gale.

On the morning of the 8th, a sail being reported from aloft, she was got under way and stood out for several miles, when the approaching vessel was ascertained to be the John Adams, on her return from Tampico.—Her apperance caused great satisfaction to the officers of the Somers, as Com. Perry had informed them that she was to relieve them from maintaining the blockade as soon as she came in.

As the Somers was approaching his anchorage on her return, another sail was discovered standing for Vera Cruz apparently with the intention of running the blockade in. She immediately made all sail to intercept her, and in the effort to avoid falling on the reefs to the leeward she was struck by the norther and thrown upon her beamends. The strange vessel came rapidly down, but showed no colors and tacked when near Pajordas reef. Lieut. Parker had reported the appearance of squalls, and the particulars are fully detailed in the New Orleans papers.

The Somers continued careening over with great rapidity, and in about half an hour afterwards sunk. The following is a list of the officers and men carried down with her. Henry A. Clemsen, acting master, John Ringgold Hynson, passed midshipman; Wm. G. Brazier. Ebenezer Terrell, Charles H. Haven, James Ryder, Jas. Thompson, Chas. Lowe, Thomas Young, Wm. Gillan, Matthias Gavel, Major Cain, Dennis Kelly, Alexander Anker, Chas. McFarland, Jas. Fennol, Chas. True, Jno. Day, Wm. Purdy, Edward McCormick, Wm. Elmsley, Wm. Quest, Jno. Hargrave, Wm. McCardy, Jno. Christopher Myers, Clement C. Willen, Thos. McGowan, Jos. Antonio, Adolphe Belmente, Manuel Howard, Wm. W. Powers, Henry W. Spear, Jas. Chapman, Lewis Johnson, Ignatius Leopold, Thos. Jefferson, Wm. H. Rose, and Peter Hernandez.

A letter received from on board this Raritand, dated the 13th, states that eight men belonging to the Somers had been picked up by the Mexicans on the beach near Anton Lizardo, whither they had been driven by the gale clinging to hen-coops. They were held at Vera Cruz as prisoners of war: one had since died.

This makes 44 saved out of the 80 souls on board.

Many of the officers and men of the Somers refused to go in the first boat that put off from the wreck, preferring to give their chance to those who could not swim. Midshipman Hynson, Capt. Semmes, Lieut. Parker, Lieut. Claiborne, and acting master Clemsen, refused to go in the first boat. Seymour, the cook, being a large man, was requested to return and make room for two. He complied, but as he could not swim, he was permitted to go in the boat. A boy named Nutten offered his place to Hynson. Soon after the boat got off the Somers commenced sinking. Capt. Semmes ordered all hands to save themselves, and all simultaneously plunged into the water, and grasped the posts, gratings, spars, coops and other floating objects at hand. Many must have gone down from the want of any support whatever; others struggled on frail floats to be finally drifted on the reefs and dashed in pieces. Some were driven to sea to be heard of no more, and others encounterd the worst fate that could be apprehended, in being devoured by sharks. Of near sixty who plunged from the wreck, only seventeen escaped.

Through all this appalling scene the greatest composure was observed by men and officers. There was no appearance of panic, no exhibition of selfishness. Those who could not swim were particularly enjoined to go in the boat. Capt. Semmes and Lieut. Parker were picked up by Mr. Clake from a grating, and Jacob Hazard, yeoman, was rescued swimming near them. Those who survived have told of many instances of heroic self-devotion. The acting master, Henry A. Clemsen, was struggling on a small steering sail boom with five others, two of whom could not swim. He found that all could not be supported and he left and struck out alone and unsupported. He was seen for the last time upon a sky-light and probably perished in the surf. The five men he left were saved, the two who could not swim being supported by their comrades, Amos Colson, and John Williams. The daring and devoted exertions of the foreign men-of-war, command admiration and gratitude from all. There were lying at Sacrificios, about two miles to leeward of the wreck, H. B. M. ships Endymion and Alarm, and the brig Daring, commanded respectively by Capts. Lambert, Franklin and Matson; the French brigs Pylade and Mercure, Capts. Dubut and La-Voyaire; and the Spanish corvette Louisa Fernanda, Capt. Puente. The crew of the Endymion, to the number of two hundred, came aft and volunteered. There was the most noble emulation as to which vessel should use the greatest expedition, and perseverance in the most strenuous exertions. The violence of the gale was such at that time, that none of the boats could pull against it, and it was with the deepest regret that Capt. Lambert and others in authority, felt it to be their duty to make signals recalling their boats. An hour or two afterwards, when there was a slight abatement of the gale, they again put forth at the peril of their lives, and succeeded in saving fourteen persons, and bringing from Green Island those who had landed there. The first lieutenant of the Endymion, Mr. Tarleton, rescued the 1st lieutenant of the Somers from Pajaroe reef, which he succeeded by a miracle in reaching safely, but where his situation was most critical. The most gallant and well directed efforts were made by the officers and crew in the boat of the Mercure. She rescued ten men at sea to leeward, on a spar. One hardly knows which to admire most, the forethought or daring of this noble adventure The risk was incalculable. Five boats, representing each of the foreign vessels, reached the island, and took off 23 persons to their respective vessels, where they were received with inexpressible kindness and delicate consideration. Refreshments and clothes were supplied.—Lt. Wood and the gunner of the Endymion, and Midshipman Saliz, of the Palyde are mentioned for their conspicious exertions. The strange vessel proved to be the Abrasia, bound for the squadron at Anton Lizardo. She passed very near the Somers, but the catastrophe was so sudden that she failed to discover it.

IRON FRIGATE.—The new iron steam frigate Alleghany, now completing in Pittsburg, will be ready for launching in February, and at the same time a new iron revenue steam cutter will be completed of 350 tons, 126 feet on deck and 26 feet beam, to be called the Robert Walker

The Pons' Crew have applied for a new trial at Philadelphia.

INTOXICATION IN STEAMBOATS.—We praise temperate Sailors, temperate Captains and temperance Ships, and every judicious man going on the Ocean, prefers them. But why do we patronize intoxication on board Steamboats? Why do the public encourage boats in which there is a "bar" for rendering men insensible? The evil is a serious one. Passengers having considerable unemployed time on board, are apt upon the invitation of a friend, to take a drink at the bar. Another and another invitation is accepted, and the result is that the passenger soon begins to feel the effect of these drinks, and in attempting to land falls overboard in the dock, leaving probably behind him an anxious wife and distressed children. But the evil does not end here: with all the precaution of owners and Captain, the hands employed about the machinery, the fires, or the deck, may obtain an occasional supply of liquor, and the safety of the boat and the passengers may be thereby endangered. Liquor is like gun powder, fully as destructive when not guarded against. An inveterate drinker may live one day, and go on one passage without liquor, but there is no knowing when he may take to his cups and loose his reason. It is not the general cause of temperance alone which calls for the withdrawal of these "bars" from steamboats. It is the danger to the boat and to the passengers arising from the influence---even the imperceptible influence. A cool, cautious man, may take a glass too much. He may become bold, adventurous and experimental, and if at the helm, what may not be the disastrous result? We hope that proprietors of steamboats generally, and the owners of Ocean steamers particularly, will come to the resolution to give up selling liquor on board, and in doing so, they will have strong claims to public patronage. —N. Y. Sun.

DEATH OF A SELF MADE MAN.—Thomas Gough, Esq., one of the oldest citizens of Albany, died on Chrismas day, at the advanced age of eighty years. He came to this country from Ireland at the age of eighteen. By industry and upright deportment he won the respect of his employer, and for many years was steward to the Governor of the State. Having saved a handsome sum from his earnings, in the decline of life he commenced the business of a money and exchange broker, in which he was very successful. He was at his counter, well as usual, the day before his death. The first Roman Catholic Church, and the benevolent societies of that persuasion in Albany, were founded mainly through his influence and exertions. He was a friend to the poor, and greatly esteemed by his fellow citizens. He leaves a large estate.

THE TRACK OF DEATH.—As an individual was passing along a railroad track one evening the last summer shortly after sunset, he espied the figure of a man directly across one of the rails! Just then hearing the shrill whistle of the engine in the distance, he quickened his pace, and was soon standing beside him. He proved yet to be under the influence of strong drink, and his efforts to arouse him were not at once successful; but in a few moments he was in a place of safety, and the engine thundering furiously by, was soon lost in the dim distance. The rescued man trembling with agitation, loaded his deliverer with thanks at his timdly rescue, and resolved that his hair breadth escape from certain destruction should exert his salutary influence on his future life.

Christian! you are walking along a track, where, slumbering in sin, are many poor unconscious souls, only awaiting the passage of the engine to make their eternal ruin sure! From your position (for there may be those of your own house,) none but you can rescue some of them. Other Christians would willingly save them, but they are too far off to come to the rescue. You are a sentinel posted upon a particular section of the track, and you and no other one is expected to guard the limits assigned you. The whistle will soon sound —the slumberers must be aroused or perish. Eternal death awaits the victim. Christian sentinel sleep not at your post, but watch the track!

THE MISSIONARY SHIP "JOHN WESLEY."—This beautiful vessel sailed from Southampton on Monday, the 21st Nov. having on board 8 missionaries with their families, in all twenty persons, and a crew of of fifteen, Captain Buck, commander. She carries upward of 1200 reams of printing paper for the use of missions in New Zealand, the Friendly Islands and Fejee, together with Manchester goods, ironmongery, school apparatus and other stores. In the channel she met with contrary winds; but after having been at anchor some days in Portland roads, she finally sailed on Friday last, the 27th. The missionaries and their destination as follows:—Mr. and Mrs. Harris, for Sydney; Mr. Kirk, for New Zealand; Mr. and Mrs. Daniels, Mr. and Mrs. Davies, Mr. and Mrs. Adams, with Mr. and Mrs. Amos, for the Friendly Islands; and Mr. and Mrs. Ford, with Mr. and Mrs. Malvern for the Fejee Islands.—London Watchman.

FIRES.—The Saratoga Lake House, a popular resort on Saratoga Lake, about four miles from the Springs, was consumed by fire on Sunday evening week. It was owned by Geo. C. Loomis. Another.—The house of Andrew Robinson Jr., in Fall River, was destroyed by fire on Thursday morning with the furniture. It was an expensive and elegant house. Another.—The dwelling house, barn and out buildings attached, belonging to Jonathan Getchell of Wells, Me., were destroyed by fire Thursday morning, at 6 o'clock, and the unfortunate owner lost his life in attempting to save his property.

A SAD MISTAKE.—A melancholy result of a false accusation of crime is related by the Dayton, Ohio, Transcript of the 23d inst. V. B. Howard, a clerk in the post office there, was accused of purloining a draft for $200. He protested his innocence, but as public opinion fastened it on him, he volunteered for the war, and died on the march from Matamoras to Camargo, far from home and friends. On the 22d instant the letter and the draft were received from the dead letter office at Washington, having been misdirected by the persons who were instrumental in the disgrace of young Howard.

DAMAGES FOR EXPLOSION.—At Pittsburg on Thursday week, the District Court gave a verdict of $1,500 against the owners of the steamboat Cutter, in favor of Mrs Collins, one of those wounded by an explosion on board of that vessel two years ago.

A DREADFUL RAILROAD ACCIDENT occurred on the Louisa Railroad, near Richmond, last Tuesday, by which Mr. Phillips, the Mail Agent on that route, has probably lost his life. Just as the cars left Louisa Court House Mr. P., attempted to jump off, fell, and the wheels of the cars passed over his prostrate body, cutting off the right leg about the knee, and the left near the ankle. He was conveyed immediately to Beaver Dam depot, alive, but with very faint hope of recovery, being cold and pulseless. No blame whatever is attached to the conductors.

THE LICENSE LAW OF VERMONT was so altered at the last session of the legislatue, as to provide for submittiug to the people of the State at large, the first Tuesday of March next, the question of license or no license.

The rope walk of Thomas Hammond, in Washinton street, Portland, was entirely destroyed by fire, last Sunday evening.

William Garner & Co's. store at Middletown, Md., was destroyed by an incendiary on the 16th instant, with its contents, and a barn adjoining, filled with tobacco. Loss $8,000.

TURPENTINE FACTORY DESTROYED.—On Thursday the turpentine factory of Mr. J. P. Copple, located in Front st. above Maiden st., Philadelphia, was, with its contents, entirely destroyed by fire.

The gales on the coast of Great Britain have been very severe. Several vessels with their crews, have been lost. A large three-mast ship, with Indian corn, was wrecked at Ballycotton, name unknown. Crew saved.

MARBLE HALLS IN IOWA.—The new State House at the capital of Iowa, is built of marble, at a cost of $80,000, and $20,000 will be needed to finish it.

CASUALTY.—On Saturday morning Elijah Allen about 35 years of age, in attempting to skate from the head of Acushnet river to the bridge, unfortunately broke through the ice near the head of Belleville wharf and was drowned.—New Bedford Mercury.

HAYTI.—The new constitution is partly monarchical and partly republican—it was probably the work of France. The President is elected for life; the Legislature for nine years; the Catholic religion the religion of the country; and no white man to become a citizen, hold office, or own real estate.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—Mr. George Ritner of Cumberland, Md., was killed on Monday last, by a tree falling on him. He was out hunting and was cutting down the tree to secure his game.

Why is a drunkard hesitating to sign the pledge like a skeptical Hindoo? Because he is in doubt whether to give up the worship of the jug-or-not.

NOBLE SENTIMENT.—When Sir Walter Scott was urged not to prop the falling credit of an acquaintance, he repled—

"The man was my friend when friends were few: and I will be his, now that his enemies are many."

Confirmation. The Senate has, notwithstanding opinions to the contrary, confirmed Mr. Bancroft as our Minister at the Court of St. James, and Mr. Clifford as Attorney General of the United States.

A SNAKE STORY.—Some half dozen of the Pons captives, liberated at Liberia, saw a huge snake, and being determined to have some snake meat, a race ensued. One of them caught hold of the snake's tail as it was disappearing in its hole. The negro had as much as he could do to keep the snaked stationary, when another came up and severed it in two with a cutlass. It was of the boa species, and measured 14 feet. With it were found 150 eggs—a bushel and a half. The Congoes had a great feast.

IS IT CONSTITUTIONAL?—Several free blacks, male and female, have been publicly flogged and sent out of the city of St. Louis, in accordance with a decision of Judge Krum that the law forbidding free blacks and mulattoes to live in Missouri is constitutional. We have our doubts, however, whether any law expelling a free citizen from a State, without charge of crime, can be constitutional. If it is, we have only to say that it is unjust, tyrannical, and unworthy the intelligent freemen of Missouri.—N. Y. Sun.

FROZEN. The schooner Committee, of Virginia, was beached during the late storm, and the captain and two white men, with three colored men, were all frozen to death.

FIDELITY.—When Constantine was chosen Emperor, he found several Christians in office, and he issued an edict repuiring them to anounce their faith, or quit their places. Most of them gave up their offices to preseve their conscience—but some cringed and renounced Christianity. When the Emperor had thus made full proof of their disposition and character, he removed all who thus basely complied with his supposed wishes, and retained the others, saying, "that those who would desert or deny their divine master, would desert him, and were not worthy of his confidence."

RICH AND WAGES.—Two neighbors met: one of them was exceedingly rich, the other in moderate circumstances. The latter began to congratulate the former on his great possessions, ond the happiness he must enjoy, and ended by contrasting it with his own condition.

"My friend," said the rich man, "will you allow me to ask you one question?"

"Certainly, sir."

"Would you be willing to take my property, and take the whole care of it for your boarding and clothing?"

"No indeed."

"Well, that's all I get."

Evils in the journey of life, are like the hills which alarm travelers upon their road, they both appear great at a distance, but when we approach them we find them far less insurmountable than we had imagined.

NOTICES.

COLUMBIA CIRCUIT.—Our second quarterly meeting wil be held on the 20th and 21st of February, at Pleasant Hill meeting house, 7 miles west of the town of Athens. We invite Brs. M. Scott, W. W. Tipton, C. J. Sears, and we promise our aid on any occasion, when timely notice shall have been given. We ask an interest in the prayers of all, that we may on that occasion have the presence of the Great Head of the Church.

S. ELLIOTT.

BUCYRUS CIRCUIT, MUS. CON.—Our second quarterly meeting will commence Jan. 23d. We invite Brethren P. Inskeep, J. Atherston, W. Hatfield, A. K. Earl, J. Jack, I. Thrap, and G. M. Scott. Come brethren, and help us, disappoint us not. Our meeting is to be at Bucyrus. Br. Hatfield is informed that another meeting on hand prevents me from attending his. Let not this hinder you from attending ours.

A. S. ROBINSON

LAUGHREY MISSION—IA. CON.—I would inform the President, Br. Shipp, that this Mission has not been attended to this year—and the preacher appointed has not been heard from. Could the Pres. make arrangement for us to be supplied from adjoining circuits? Cannot Br. Paul attend at Outer village, and Br. Williams at Rossburg?

STEPHEN ANDREWS

FROM PRESIDENT OF MUSKINGUM CONFERENCE.

BR. BASSETT: You will please announce, that if able, I will visit Steubenville station the last Sunday in January; and Wellsville circuit the first Sunday of February.

Two reasons have operated in causing my delay in responding to the call of the quarterly conference of the Newark circuit. One of these has caused the greater delay, viz: I could not learn the address of Br. Kinney, nor Maynard, nor of any member of the circuit. I preferred addressing Br. K. by private letter, but that any further delay may be prevented, I take this method of saying to Br. Kinney and all concerned, that I consent to the arrangement between said K. and said quarterly conference to travel as assistant preacher on Newark circuit untill next annual conference.

It appears remarkable that D. White has given no account of himself since conference. Br. Kingsbury has not arrived at his field of labor on Columbia circuit. His horse &c are at Br. Pattersons, hard by this place; and I understand that letters from himself state the reason of his delay and his purpose to return in the spring. At his own request, Br. Channel was released from Summerfield circuit, and that circuit is unsupplied yet. Otsego circuit is yet unsupplied with an assistant. I am glad that Br. M. Scott has agreed to supply Salt creek circuit, and if he is agreed I hereby appoint him superintendent of that Circuit.

Will Br. Simon Elliott please inform me of the place fixed for my meeting on Columbia Ct.? Is it on the Ohio river, if not on it, how many miles distant? I desire when I visit Columbia and Portsmouth circuits to go by water.

My health is very poor. I have experienced a return of chills and fever.

GEO. CLANCY, Pres.

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT.

LETTERS RECEIVED.

J. Burton, S. Halm, J. Holland, 1 sub. A.S. Robinson, G. Clancy, R. T. Boyd, D. Gibbons, L. Ensminger, J. D. Wright, Jos. White, John Burns, 2, one sub. J. G. Evans, S. Andrews, W. S. Stockton, T. Hanna, P. M. Roscoe, H. Heberling. E. Shirts, P. M.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

From.	For.	Pays to Vol.	No.	$ cts.
John Burton, Ia.		8	52	2 00
W. H. Marshall,	J. Swern,	8	52	2 00
B. H. Buckingham, Putnam,		8	52	2 00
L. Ensminger,	T. Dill,	8	31	1 00
J. White,	S. Hale,	9	6	2 00
John Burns,	Mrs. E. Bolknap,	9	23	2 00
"	John Parr,	7	52	4 00
"	N. Hayne, (old account,)			2 00
C. S. Callihan,	N. Lake,	7	52	2 00
	Jeremiah Springer,	8	52	2 00
S. Andrews, Ia.		7	52	3 00
H. Heberling,		8	52	2 00
John Burns (again.)	D. N. Milner,	8	52	2 00
"	James Elliott,	9	3	2 00
O. White,	D. Edwards,	8	21	2 00
E. Shirts, N. Y.	E. Reynolds,	9	12	2 00

New Subscribers this week, 3. Discontinuances, 8.

Br. J. Burns will please receive 50cts. from J. P. for the fourth of a volume already sent him, and we will dis. as he desires.

Br. J. Burton, as you request, we state that your last remittance of $2, mak es you square with Br. Springer and with us to end of 8th vol. One dollar was heretofore due to him on 6th vol. The 50 pamphlets will be $2, when you get them.

Br. S. Halm, we regret the blunder made in publishing the notice of your meeting, and it is too late to correct it. It was not your fault.

The Post Office address of Br. Simeon W. Laishley is Morristown, Belmont Co. Ohio.

ANNUAL REGISTER 1847.—Our edition of 5,200 copies is running short. But like the Razor Strop Man, we have 'a few more left' which we will be pleased to send out to those who order them. G. Conclin, Cincinnati, and C. Craig, Pittsburgh, have each also a small lot to dispose of.

By the by, this little publication cost us considerably more than one hundred dollars, cash, notwithstanding the job was executed at our own office. Those therefore who have received their pamphlets as ordered, will greatly oblige us by forking over the dimes. We are anxious to be out of debt. Much obliged to those who have been prompt in paying.

Br. S. Andrews, heretofore Br. Springer's books had you credited to middle of vol. 6. The present remittance makes you square with him, $1, and pays us $2 to end of vol. 7.

The P. M. at Roscoe, O. informs us that the paper sent to John Smith is not taken out of the office. He owes for about one volume and three quarters, of our paper. Will our agent up that way please request this subscriber, for the credit of that renowned family, to pay up. We have lots of that name on our book who pay first rate.

LIST OF LETTERS

Remaining in the Post Office at Putnam, Muskingum Co. Ohio, on the first of January, 1847.

A
Armstrong Thomas

B
Butler Abram — Baire John
Browne C M — Brown Ann D
Bradshaw Robert

C
Chase W D — Caton G W
Cassiday Hugh

D
Dutton Isaac — Dazer George
Dixon Permelia

F
Frantom Jane — Fletcher Andrew
Fulton Dennis — Fountain Harriet

G
Guy Henrietta — Graham N W

H
Hatter John — Hosmer S R
Hart Elizabeth — Hammond James
Harris Edward — Hough J John

J
Jones Catharine

K
Kitchens John

L
Lumb Abram

M
Morgan George

P
Pennine Cannah — Putnam Douglass
Pensinger Susan — Pierce Elizabeth
Pain John

R
Rambo Peter — Russel James
Ripley Wm — Rees I N

S
Slack Rachael — Stockdale John Jr
Searl C W

W
Welch Katharine — Wharton Elibabeth

J. ELDER, P. M.

COME AND SEE!!

THE SUBSCSIBERS offer very low for CASH, STONE WARE or COUNTRY PRODUCE,

35 pieces assorted Cloths, very low,
20 " Jeans,
300 " Prints, cheaper than ever,
100 " Merinos, Alpaccas, De Laines, &c.,
50 " Tweeds and Cassinets,
25 " Flannels,
22 " Check.

Boots, Shoes, Queensware, Groceries, and a great variety of goods not mentioned.

In a word, they have on hand a LARGE STOCK of goods, which they

WISH TO SELL.

To sell them, they must be sold CHEAP, this they will do.

J. C. GUTHRIE & SONS,
successors to
GUTHRIE'S & BUCKINGHAM.

P.S. We will say to Potters engage not your ware before calling on us. We are dealing EXTENSIVELY in that article, and are determined to buy it on such terms as will prove satisfactory. J. C. G. & S's.

THE CHEAPEST AND BEST.

New Prospectus for the Year 1847.

FORTY-EIGHT large octavo Pages, and Fifteen Engravings in each No. Published on the first of every month.

Fourth Volume commences in January, 1847.

The No. for Jan. contains a "Pictorial Description of the State of Ohio," elegantly Illustrated with American views, &c. &c.

Other States will appear in subsequent Nos. of the Work.

Robert Sears, 158 Nassau-street, New York, will hereafter furnish his new

Pictorial and Illustrated Family Magazine for 1847, in all respects equal to the Three-Dollar Magazines, at the low price of only one dollar and a half per annum.

Any person sending Five Dollars, shall receive five copies of the magazine for one year, as he shall direct.

All subjects which will admit of it, will be illustrated with engravings. The whole number of the engravings at the conclusion of the volume will amount to several hundred.

Great inducement to subscribe.

We offer to all persons becoming subscribers, a copy of our new work, just published, entitled the Pictorial Description of Great Britain and Ireland.

Containing 262 Views of the Principal Cities, Towns, Castles, Abeys, Costumes, &c. &c., of the Fatherland: a larger number of Engravings than can be found in any book of double the price—or to those who prefer it, the

Pictorial History of the American Revolution,

(Embellished with an original portrait of Washington, by Chapman, and more than 160 other engravings, 430 pp. 8vo.) for every new subscriber, with two dollars enclosed, free of postage.

Any person procuring ten subscribers, and sending [illegible] and any one of the above popular works, sent us he shall direct.

We have authority, under the new Post-office law, to send any one of the above works, bound. The postage will not exceed twenty-five cents to any part of the United States.

M. P. DISCIPLINES—NEW EDITION.

WE have on hand a supply, lately received from the Book Agent, Baltimore, which we will be pleased to furnish to brethren of surrounding Circuits, at wholesale or retail prices. For sale at the office of this paper.

SACRED MELODEON.

WE have received from the publishers, 50 copies of this excellent collection of Spiritual Songs, compiled by Brs. Joel Dalbey and J. B. Peat of the Ohio Conference, and lately published at Cincinnati. For sale at the office of the Western Recorder, by the dozen or single.

Admistrator's Notice.

NOTICE is hereby given that the suscriber has been appointed and qualified as Administrator of the estate of Thomas Atkinson deceased, late of Springfield Township, Muskingum county. Z. M. CHANDLER,
Putnam, O. Oct. 31, 1846. Admistrator.

DISSOLUTION.

THE partnership of GUTHRIES & LARGE is this day dissolved by mutual consent. All matters pertaining to the closing up of the business will be transacted at the old stand.

A. A. GUTHRIE.
W. P. LARGE.
GEO. N. GUTHRIE.

Putnam, O. January 1, 1847.

NEW FIRM.

A. A. GUTHRIE, G. BUCKINGHAM and G. N. GUTHRIE announce that they have formed a partnership for the transaction of MERCANTILE BUSINESS under the firm of

GUTHRIE, BUCKINGHAM & CO.

They respectfully invite their friends and the public generally, to the old stand of A. A. GUTHRIE & Co., (recently GUTHRIE'S & LARGE,) where it is their purpose to keep a large assortment of the CHEAPEST and BEST goods in the market.

Putnam, O. January 1, 1847.

Something New.

JUST PUBLISHED

By GEORGE CONCLIN, 39 Main st. Cincinnati,

A NEW HISTORY OF TEXAS.

INCLUDING an account of the late WAR WITH MEXICO, together with other interesting matter relating to that country. This history is published in pamphlet form, 12 mo., containing 152 pages and will be sold cheap.

ALSO—A NEW HISTORY OF OREGON AND CALIFORNIA, (BY LANSFORD HASTINGS) containing a minute description of the different routes to those countries—a description of the soil, products of the soil, Towns, Bays, Harbors, Rivers, Lakes, manners and customs of the inhabiants, &c. &c.

DISSOLUTION.

IT is nearly two years since the firm of A. A. GUTHRIE & Co., was dissolved, so far as the selling of Goods is concerned. It is this day fully dissolved by mutual consent, all debts due the concern are to be paid to A. A. Guthrie —who earnestly requests early payments & especially urges all wo have suffered their accounts to stand open thus far, to come immediately and settle.

A. A. GUTHRIE,
G. N. GUTHRIE.

Putnam, Dec. 14th, 1846

JAMES K. LOGAN,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

FOREIGN & DOMESTIC DRY GOODS

No. 83 Wood St., (One door from Diamond Alley,) Pittsburgh, Pa.

THE WEEKLY

CHRISTIAN WORLD;

An Independent, Comprehensive, and Impartial Newspaper; designed for welcome and useful circulation; Among all Friends of Christian Union, Christian Benevoleuce, and Christian Literature. To be published every Saturday, At the Reading-Room of the Christian Atheneum, over the Book-store of Mr. James Harmstead, Fourth St., between Market and Arch Sts., Philadelphia;

Price:—Two Dollors a-year invariably in advance.

T. H. STOCKTON,
J. G. WILSON,
THEOPHILUS STORK, } Editors.

W. S. STOCKTON,—General Agent.

TO persons who are acquainted with the character and objects of the CHRISTIAN WORLD, as they have been developed during the last six years, it is only necessary to say, that as soon as one thousand paying subscribers are secured, the paper will be put to press. The Old Subscription List ought to supply this number at once.

To other persons, it is proper to remark, that the Christian World, in print, is intended to reflect the Christian World, in action—in a word, daguerreotype it: and then, for purposes of common advantage, to compare the organized and operature Religion of the Age with the Religion of the Bible.

The enlarged literary and business agencies of the Establishment, are deemed amply sufficient to assure the public of successful management. Its immediate connexion with the CHRISTIAN ATHENEUM—an Institution which is to be furnished with many of the principal organs of Church and State, both in Europe and America,—will give its conductors early access to invaluable sources of universal intelligence.

DIRECTIONS.

1. On receipt of this Prospectus, let the Old subscribers at every Post-office, appoint one of their number, or some other suitable person, an Agent. Let him send us, at once, as many names and as much money as possible. In cases where substantial agents make themselves responsible for their subscribers, this responsibility will be regarded as equivalent to payment in advance—provided they settle their accounts within six months. Even in such cases, however, immediate payments are decidedly preferable; and, to encourage them, the commissions to agents are arranged thus:—On cash orders, 25 per cent.: on deferred remittances, 12½ per cent.

2. As the Prospectus will be widely distributed, let all persons who see it, and feel an interest in it, act promptly in the manner described above. It is thought that a little effort will be sufficient to procure a company, or club, at almost any Post-office in the Union. The times increasingly demand just such a publication as is proposed.

Address,—W. S. STOCKTON, General Agent, Philadelphia, Pa.: or either of the Associate Editors. All orders will be punctually attended to.

T. H. STOCKTON,
Editor and Proprietor.

Philadelphia, December, 1846.

NEW HISTORY OF TEXAS, pages 352, for 25 cents. A few copies to be had at the office of the Western Recorder. Published by G. Conclin, Cincinnati.

POETRY.

A HOME IN HEAVEN.

A home in heaven, what a joyful thought,
As the poor man toils in his weary lot;
His heart oppressed and with anguish driven
From his home below to his home in heaven.

A home in heaven—as the sufferer lies
On his bed of pain, and uplifts his eyes
To that bright home what a joy is given,
With the blessed thought of his home in heaven.

A home in heaven, when our pleasures fade,
And our wealth and fame in the dust are laid;
And strength decays and our health is driven,
We are happy still with our home in heaven.

A home in heaven, when the faint heart bleeds
By the spirits stroke for its evil deeds,
Oh then what bliss in that heart forgiven,
Does the hope inspire of a home in heaven

A home in heaven when our friends are fled
To the cheerless gloom of the mouldering dead;
We wait in hope on the promise given,
We will meet up there, in our home in heaven.

A home in heaven—when the wheel is broke,
And the golden bowl by the terror stroke,
When life's bright sun sinks in deaths dark even
We will then fly up to our home in heaven.

Our home in heaven—Oh the glorious home;
And the spirit joined with the bride says come;
Come seek his face and your sins forgiven,
And rejoice in hope of your home in heaven.

The Life Clock.

[illegible] mystic clock
No human eye hath seen;
That beateth on, and beateth on,
From morning until ev'n.

And when the soul is wrapped in sleep,
And heareth not a sound,
It ticks and ticks the livelong night,
And never runneth down.

O, wonderous is that word of art
Which knells the passing hour,
But art ne'er formed, nor mind conceived
The life clock's magic power.

Not set in gold, nor decked with gems,
By wealth and pride possessed,
But rich or poor, or high or low,
Each bears it in his breast.

When life's deep stream, mid beds of flowers,
All still and softly glides,
Like the wavelet's step with a gentle beat,
It warns of passing tides.

When passion nerves the warrior's arm
For deeds of hate and wrong,
Though heeded not the fearful sound,
The knell is deep and strong.

When eyes to eyes are gazing soft,
And tender words are spoken,
Then fast and wild it rattles on,
As if with love 'twere broken.

Such is the clock that measures life,
Of flesh and spirit blended;
And thus 'twill run within the breast,
Till that strange life is ended.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Written for the Western Recorder.

NORTH AND SOUTH.

No. II.

Mr. Editor: I proceed agreeably to my 2nd query, what good has resulted from the geographical division of the M. E. Church? You know Mr. Editor that I appear before your numerous readers, and the American public generally, in the character of an enquirer after truth, and if from the premises I should draw wrong conclusions, my great desire is to be set right; therefore I hope some person who has taken passage on the old ship, and who understands the "History and Mystery" of the whole concern, will be so kind as to favor us with an account of the beneficial results of the division either politically or ecclesiastically, or both. I have contended in No. 1, that the subject of slavery was not the true cause of the seperation N. and S. in the M. E. Church. Yet notwithstanding this is my judgment, great pains have been taken by the ministry of said church, to induce the membership to believe that the system of slavery was the true or genuine cause of the unhappy division. Taking it for granted then, that this is generally believed, what has been the effect on the public mind? One great result has been, to keep up and fan the flame of political abolitionism, and to lend the influence of the church, so far as a half a million of members with its ministers are concerned to divide and rend asunder the fair fabric of our Republic. Be it known unto you sir, that the States may do with impunity what the church in its highest ecclesiastical tribunal has done. Is there not some likeness between church and State, so far as the original bond of union between the N. and S. is concerned? Was not the southern membership—taken into the union of the church, master and slave together and in their reception into the great Methodist body no obstacles were thrown in their way, but after Methodism has celebrated its centenary, behold! the North dismembers the entire southern church and the South is driven to the necessity of setting up an Independent Church; and for what? Because forsooth, bishop Andrew stands connected with slavery, so says the M. E. clergy. If this be right, may not the compact or bond of union of the states be broken in the same way? Did not the North agree in our original confederation, to unite with the South, connected as it was, with the cruel system of slavery, and may they not now follow the example of the church, and dismember the entire South, and cause the southern states to set up an Independent government for itself; for Mr. Editor I go on the principle, of what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander; and what is right in church is right in State.* The great motto of Methodism is "to spread scriptural holiness over these lands;" and who could be wrong in imitating the example of a people, who on their banner, hang out to the breezes of heaven "scriptural holiness." Are they not pioneers in the great work of division? And does not their act speak volumes in favor of a division of this union? May not their example be plead? may not the wisdom of their General Conference be plead? May not the piety of the Methodist community be plead? And may not the great amount of membership in the North be plead as arguments in favor of a political division? As ultraism both in church and state, aims at and intends finally to accomplish the destructive work of division. And along Masons and Dixons line it intends rearing up fortifications, placing the instruments of death and announcing to the world, that this once happy union is forever rent asunder and upon the ramparts dividing these states will be written in legible characters "Ichabod." "Where is the glory of God?" Those opposed to every thing ultra should meet it in the spirit and temper of christianity and by "letting their moderation be known unto all men," in the spirit of meekness and love endeavor to persuade, and gain over those that may be considered to be in the wrong. Paul says "charity beareth long and is kind," and the same apostle says "mark those who cause divisions." Now if the spirit of division is in accordance with the gospel, great good has resulted from the action of the last General Conference in the division of the M. E. Church; as it has completely effected it, and strengthened the hopes of political abolitionists, that finally by the example and precepts of that great religious community they will be enabled to bring about the dismemberment of the southern portion of this Commonwealth, and thus hold up to the rotten monarchies of the eastern world, the specimen of the failure of a great nation attempting the experiment of self government. If this result be a good one, the division has nobly answered its purpose so far. But again Mr. Editor, if to inculcate the spirit of detraction and slander, be a good result, then the action of the General Conference has brought that about. Who can take up the New York Chris. Adv., edited by Dr. Bond; and the Chris. Adv. published in Richmond, and edited by a worthy minister of the Southern Confederacy, (I say worthy because continued in the ministry and editorship,) and read the editorials of these two divines, and not say if slander be in accordance with the gospel, here we have enough of it. Epithets of the most uncourteous, ungentlemanly and unchristian character are coarsely and vulgarly applied to each other, and the professed followers of the sainted Wesley, are brought N. and S. in battle array against each other. The best motives of either party are held up to censure and sometimes to ridicule. The N. as with one common voice unite in the cry that the S. is guilty of the crime of the sum of all villainies; and that Methodist slaveholders are the worst of human beings, unworthy a place in the church, and consequently unfit for the kingdom of heaven. Whilst the S. in their turn, charge the N. with motives the most unworthy, & designs the most unchristian. Oh! what a specimen of christian holiness do these churches hold up to the world, taking the records of the advocates for testimony. The leaders of the parties are carried away by the excitement caused by the division, and under existing circumstances, are not prepared to do justice to each other. After a few years shall have passed away, and the circumstances now transpiring shall have been recorded upon the pages of history, then in the calm deliberations of old age, shall the zealots for division look back and regret that so little of the quiet spirit of christianity has manifested itself throughout the whole of the divided and distracted state of the M. E. Church. Then shall they coolly conclude that "soft words turn away anger, but grievous words stir up strife," and that hard words and soft arguments seldom settle difficulties. If setting a community together by the ears be a good result, then indeed did they effect it by the action of the last General Conference in the decision of the church. But again, sir, if the getting up a difficulty on the division of the loaves and fishes be a good result, then has the General Conference effected it. "Witness the Maysville suit." "This is only the beginning of sorrows." The property along the line of division where the parties are divided, must of necessity create vexatious law suits. And what religious community divided like the M, E. Church, can law with each other to the Glory of God? As Paul says, "whatever we do, we are to do it to the glory of God." Take away the property of the south to the glory of God. Shut the North out of our places of public worship to the glory of God. Fee the the lawyers to the glory of God. Swear the witnesses and invalidate their testimony, if possible, to the glory of God. Right or wrong, carry your point on property affairs, and money matters, and more especially as the S. needs all its means, because the N. kept back from them their honest portion of the proceeds of the funds of the church, until the next General Conference, North, shall decide whether they will divide with the South or not. Of course that matter remains in the unseen events of the future. Again, if the creation of bishops be a good result, then did the General Conference effect it, for by the division of the church N. and S. it became necessary in the judgment of the General Conference, South, to create two bishops. Now if the bishops of the M. E. Church sustained the same relation to the church, that bishops sustained in the Apostolic ages, we would be glad to see them multiplied. But these Methodist bishops are super extra officers, not known in New Testament times, as their third ordination will prove. For in the New Testament there is no such thing as a third ordination officer. It is the relics of the man of sin, and savors strongly of popery. When we take into the account, that all the difficulties of the present division in the church grew out of the marriage of a bishop. We conclude it would have been much better, if Coke and Asbury, had contented themselves with the titles of General Superintendents, according to the appointment and express wishes of the venerable Wesley. All the mischiefs growing out of divisions in every stage of Methodism, may be traced to the bishops. A tenacious holding on and grasping after power, has marked their history, from the time of assuming the title, even to this day; and the march of power is ever onward. The great bone of contention now is that the board of bishops is authority above the General Conference. On this principle the aristocratic church of the South is now operating. And your correspondent believes that the American people should set their faces against a government so antagonistical to the government of these U. S. and act upon the principle, united we stand, divided we fall. A house divided against itself cannot stand, so says the Savior, and so believes

Paul Pry.

At Home, Dec. 17, 1846.

*Footnote: *So far as moral principle is concerned.

Written for the Western Recorder.

CHURCH DIVISION.

"Things to be Considered.

NO. IV.

Mr. Editor: In asking attention to the things that will have to be encountered in prosecuting the work of separating from the South, we cannot overlook the fact that,

3. It will require an increase of funds to be expended in sustaining and carrying forward the work. While our numbers will be de-creasing, our expences will be in-creasing. It would be perhaps impossible to point out all of the various items of additional expense, but some of them are very obvious.

Exchanging communications with different parts of the movement cannot be done without expense to some body.—Ministers or Members must "foot the bill." The time, and expenses of delegates, to meet in Conventions for deliberating, arranging and establishing matters upon a basis with which all may be satisfied, will be found a no very inconsiderable sum. And it will then become necessary to establish and sustain a Periodical of respectable dimensions, and of such character as shall give it a creditable standing in community, whether its net proceeds should be found adequate to its support or not. To think of holding a place among our sister churches, without such a periodical, would be visionary and delusive in the extreme.

A respectable circulating medium we then must have, or abondon the hope of retaining an honorable existence as a religious denomination. The Papers now in existence among us at the North are the results of Individual or Local enterprise: And to be rendered available as an unexceptionable denominational medium, would need to be placed upon a different foundation, and subjected to a different supervision. Not that I would intimate that those papers now existing among us at the North, are wanting in respectability, or that they afford any evidence of deficiency on the part of those by whom they are conducted. They are certainly ably conducted, valuable, and well adapted to answer the design of their establishment. But a sheet to promote general interest must be adapted to its work, or it cannot long sustain the character of generality. And while attempting to serve general interests, it should be responsible to the general body; otherwise it might become the most dangerous instrument of sectional predjudices, leaving the body without any means of defence, or redress.

And last, though not least, a Book concern, competent to supply ourselves with all necessary books, Theological, Devotional and Governmental would then be required. To say that for these we might safely depend on the Book Rooms of other denominations, after taking the step of division, would be to place ourselves in a position of dependence, illy comporting with the claimed importance of a people making our pretensions. Should we then purchase of the South, we should give our patronage to what we condemn by the division; and we should be found doing, what we would solemnly declare by such an act, to be so far from right that we cannot, and will not do. And should we purchase of the M. E. Book Rooms, we should be liable to the same charge of inconsistency, so long as the monied interests of the North and South are there blended. To act worthy of our pretentions, and consistent with our professions, we must secure financial means adequate to these demands, and then we may possibly hope to move forward in this enterprise, with a reasonable prospect of honorable success.

E. A. W.

Written for the Western Recorder.

THE DEVIL A SLAVEHOLDER.

Br. Editor: This being a very rainy day, and whilst warmly, and comfortably, seated around my own fire, I thought of the situation of the poor slave, dwelling in his unfavorable hut, and under the will, and dominion of his master, perhaps exposed to all the rain, and wrath of an unfeeling overseerer, and while thus thinking, I concluded to write, a hasty communication for the free, and ever welcome Recorder, showing that the Devil is a Slaveholder, and Jesus Christ an Abolitionist. I. The Devil is a slaveholder. 1. What is Slavery? According to the Laws of the Southern States, it is, the reducing or reduction of persons to things, goods, chattles, real estate, &c. The code of Louisiana, Art. 35 says: "A slave, is one who is in the power of a master, to whom he belongs. The master may sell him, dispose of his person, his industry, and his labor, he can do nothing, possess nothing. nor acquire any thing, but what must belong to his master." And South Carolina says: "Slaves are personal in the hands of their owners, and possessors, and their executors, administrators, and assignes to all interests, construction, and purposes, whatsoever." 2 Brevard's Digest 229. And in Kentucky by the law of Descents Slaves are considered "real estate." 2. Litt. and Sui. Digest 1155. The above laws show who may be held as slaves; S. C. is as follows, "All Negroes, Indians (free Indians, in amity with this government, and Negroes, Mulattoes, Mestizoes, who are now free excepted) Mulattoes, and Mestizoes, who now are, or shall hereafter be in this province, and all their issue, and offspring born or to be born shall be, and they are hereby declared to be, and remain forever, hereafter, absolute slaves and shall follow the condition of the mother." 2. Brevard's Digest 229. Then a slave holder is one who has the possession of a slave—a person created in the image of God, holding him as a thing to be bought and sold as he things proper and best. Or in other words slave holding is undoing what God has done—annihilating the image of God in man, and removing him from the class of rational and accountable beings and placing him among irrational and worthless beings or things.

2. That the Devil is a slave holder in principal may be infered from his character given him in the sacred scriptures. He is said to be a liar, devourer, oppressor, &c. &c.

A moment's attention to this arguments, will show the impartial inquirer, that the Devil possesses every characteristic, or qualification of a down right slave holder.

2. That he is a slave holder, is evident from the fact, that he is the Father of all unrighteousness, and of all who are engaged in a course of rebellion against God, and his holy laws. Jesus said to the Jews—John 8, 44. "Ye are of your father the devil and the lusts of your father ye will do, he was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth." And John says, "In this the children of God are manifested, and the children of the devil, whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God; neither he that loveth not his brother" I. John 3, 10. Then all engaged in sin, or who do not righteousness are not of God, and as slaveholding is at war with the works, and laws of God, and the best interests of man can those who voluntarily practise it be of God? Dr. A. Clarke gives the following note on this passage.—"Here is a fearful text. Who is a child of the devil? He that commits sin. Who is a child of God? He that works righteousness. By this text we shall stand or fall before God.—No man is of God who is not ready on all emergencies to do any act of kindness for the comfort, relief and support of any human being. For as God made of one blood all nations of men to dwell upon the face of the whole earth: So all are of one family, and consequently, all are brethren, and should love as brethren." Hence as the Devil is at the head of all sin, and oppressing those who are brethren he must be emphatically a slave holder.

3d. We would prove the Devil a slave holder from the nature of his works among the children of men.

(1.) One peculiarity of his work, is to take full possession of those who were created for the temple of the living God that they might honor, and glorify their maker, and make them toil forever in his service as though he were the sole, and rightful disposer of soul and body, in time and eternity. And a slave holder according to law who possesses a slave, may sell him, dispose of his person, his industry, labor &c.

(2.) Another work of the Devil, is to ensnare individuals, who are entitled to their liberty. Hence Paul speaks of recovering "out of the snare of the Devil." He has many snares set for the purpose of taking captive all classes, sexes and ages (except infants) but we presume he has none more unjust or more fatal than those laid by the slave holders of Virginia, and South Carolinia. In Va. "If any emancipated slave (infants excepted) shall remain within the state, more than twelve months, after his or her right to freedom shall have accrued he or she shall forfeit all such right, and may be apprehended, and sold by the overseers of the poor, &c. for the benefit of the literary fund." 1 Rev. Code 436. In S. C. "In case any slave, shall be emancipated or set free, otherwise than according to the act of 1800 regulating emancipation, it shall be lawful for any person whosoever, to seize and convert to his or her own use, and to keep as his or her property, the said slave or slaves, so illegally emancipated, or set free." 2 Brevard's Digest 256. Would it be out of place, Br. Editor, to think, aloud if we should think the children had got a head of the Father in the above snares?

(3) It is the peculiar work of the Devil to take and hold his victims in captivity. See 2 Tim. 2. 26, and now, and then cast them into prison. Rev. 2, 10. Slave holders have it so arranged, at the South, and in the District of Columbia, that a free person suspected of being a slave, may be taken up, and thrown into prison. and if he cannot prove his freedom he may be sold, into perpetual captivity to pay the Jail fees.

4. Another proof in favor of the Devil being a slave holder is drawn from the manner in which he treats his slaves or servants. He works them hard feeds them on vanity or husks, and gives them a poor supply at that, and he clothes them in rags, and shame, See Prodigal Luke 15. Slave holders at the South, may according to law work their slaves 14 and 15 hours in 24 and then require them to prepare their own food in the bargain, and in Louisana the owner is required to give his working slave one barrel of Indian corn per month, and a pint of salt—but it its equivalent can never be given in money under penalty of a fine of 10 dollars for every offence. 1 Martin's Digest. 610.

And in North Carolina the allowance of a slave is a quart of corn per day. Haywood's Manuel 524–5. In Louisana the clothing of a slave, is one linen shirt, and pantaloons for the summer, and a linen shirt, and woolen great coat and pantaloons for the winter. 1 Martin's Digest 6, 10. The report of the gradual emancipation society of North Carolinia 1826 signed Moses Swain, President says: "The master puts the unfortunate wretches, upon short allowances, scarcely sufficient for their sustenance so that a great part of them go half starved much of the time." The cruelty of slave holders in neglecting, or refusing to give their slaves what is just and equal, is no new thing among men, or Devils.

5. The Devil is evidently a slave holder, from the fact, that he rewards his most devoted servants, with nothing better than misery, agony, and death, here, and hereafter. See Matt. 25–41. Rev. 20–10–15. And the only reward that awaits a southern slave from his master, is poverty, misery, sufferings, and death. In N. C. an act, was passed as early as 1779, taking from the slave what he seemed to have—"All horses, cattle, hogs, or sheep, that one month after the passing of this act, shall belong to any slave, or be of any slave's mark, in this state, shall be seized, and sold by the county wardens, and by them applied the one half to the support of the poor of the county, and the other half to the informer." Haywood's Manual 526. The poor slave can possess nothing, but what belongs to his master—wife, children, and all things else, but poverty stripes, imprisonment, and death, and all these await them continually. My sheet is nearly full, and I will have to defer the other part of my contemplations i. e. Jesus Christ is an abolitionist until another communication. A few inquiries, and then we are done with this part of our investigations.

1. Which kind of Slavery, is to be the most dreaded, that which results from the full possession of the Devil, or that practiced by man in this gospel land of boasted freedom?

2. Which of these oppressors can slaves escape the easiest from, and which is the most merciful when they retake a runaway slave? 3. Which of all these oppressors will stand at the head at the judgment seat of the judge of all the Earth?

One who wishes to be like Jesus Christ.

An Abolitionist.

December 1, 1846.

OBITUARY.

Written for the Western Recorder.

VIRGINIA ELIZABETH BOYD.

Br. Bassett: I desire to say through the columns of the Recorder, that myself and family have been overwhelmed in sorrow at the sudden and and unexpected death of our dear little daughter Virginia Elizabeth. She was confined to her room only one day previous to her dissolution! The disease which terminated her brief life in this world, was said to be, spasmodic croop. Although the loss of such an interesting child, just at a time when mind began to develope itself, has inflicted the most poignant grief; in the bosoms of the bereaved parents. Yet it behooves us to bow submissively to the mandate; although the stroke be severe. The evening before her death, notwithstanding she was only a child of 6 years. She told us she could not live until morning, and then kissed her parents and little brothers and bade us a final farewell. Her mother asked her if she was afraid to die, she replied, No Ma'am, and maintained her child like dignity until she expired. We informed her that when she died, she would go to the blessed Jesus that good being that we prayed to, night and morning and that by and by, we would come where she was; and she seemed to yield a pleasing assent. She was a tender plant, too fragile for this world, and her Redeemer has seen proper to remove her spirit, to some other clime; more congenial to its nature, and conclusive to his own glory! For he has said suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven. Sing on, sing on, my little cherub, in thy new bright and celestial habitation! Thou art gone to join thy sister spirits, to chaunt thy Redeemers praise forever! Thou art gone from thy poor disconsolate parents on earth, to thy heavenly father. Thy parents on earth shall no more hear thy innocent prating tongue, nor receive thy affectionate embrace. Fare thee well, daughter! Thou wast pleasant in life and lovely in death. Thou hast escaped the sufferings, snares and pollutions of this vain world, and thy redeemed spirit is gone to the Paradise of God's love to be happy forever. Virginia Elizabeth, was born in Carrolton, Green Co. Illinois July 5th 1840. And died in Paintersville, Green Co., Ohio, October 8th 1846. R. T. Boyd.

A Remarkable Case.—A remarkable lawsuit, which has been pending two years in Russia, has been decided by the Emperor. A wealthy Russian General was betrothed to the beautiful daughter of a Polish nobleman, near Warsaw, and obtained his consent to the marriage. On the day fixed for the ceremony, the bridegroom appeared, attended by a captain and two officers, the first disguised as a priest, and the latter as his witnesses, and the unsuspecting bride was married to her Russian lover by this false priest. Two years after, the General became tired of his wife, and desired her to return to her father's house, at the same time informing her how she had been deceived. She at first thought he was jesting, but her cruel husband soon convinced her of the fatal truth, and shut the door of his house upon her. Her indignant father immediately brought an action against the General; but of course, lost it in all the courts against the Russian General, till at length, the sentence came before the Emperor who decided as follows:—As the General is not married to his wife, the marriage is null and void: but as the wife had been most scandalously imposed upon, he is dismissed with the loss of his salary and his office, without having claim to another appointment. His whole property is given to the lady whom he has so wantonly deceived, and he is not permitted to marry again.

The annual crop of hay raised in the United States is estimated at 15,000,000 tons, which, at $8 per ton, and the average home value, is worth $120,000,000.

New History of Texas, pages 352, for 25 cents. A few copies to be had at the office of the Western Recorder. Published by G. Conclin Cincinnati.

PROSPECTUS OF THE

LITERARY ATHENÆUM,

A NEW AND SPLENDID MONTHLY MAGAZINE,

TO BE EDITED BY THE

Rev. Henry D. Moore, of Philadelphia,—and Rev. Andrew A. Lipscowb, Professor of English Literature and Belle Letters, in the city of Baltimore.

On the first of January, 1847, the subscribers intend issuing the first number of a spendid Monthly Magazine, to be called the "Literary Athenæum," to be devoted to the interest and circulation of a mind-refining, soul-inspiring, spirit-stirring literature; such a literature, in a word, as the progressive taste of society seems to demand.

Between the magazines of the day, which are devoted almost exclusively to the circulation of Christian Literature, and those devoted to the light, and in too many instances, tasteless and corrupting literature—there is a wide and deep chasm, to fill which successfully and profitably, very few attempts have been made. To supply this void, to some extent at least, is the intention of the subscribers, in issuing the "Literary Athenæum."

The general cast and character of the contents of the proposed magazine will be fixed according to the standard of the most sterling intellect, and the most liberal appreciation of the wants of the common mind. Its pages will ever present a feast and a glow, to feed and illumine the loftiest and purest taste and spirit of the admirers and lovers of refining and exalting literary walks and research.

To secure this grand design, effectually and honorably, no pains or expenses will be spared.

The contents will be purely original; consisting of Lectures, Addresses, Essays, &c., on the most popular and exciting literary and scientific subjects, from the most able writers that can be secured—interspersed and relieved by beautiful poetic composition.

Science, Art, and government, in their almost infinite variety development and interest, will be liberay and honorably discussed in its pages.

Arrangements are in progress for an extensive and important European correspondence, which will be a feature of great interest in its varied connections.

In addition to such articles, there will be presented occasional tales of unexceptionable character and style, differing essentially from the weakish romances which fill the pages of the many magazines of the day. Writers in this connection, can be secured, whose productions are the embodiment of life, true to itself,—and which will kindle and glow with the loftiest and purest sentiment, and thrill with the beauties of morality and religion in their loveliest forms.

Each number of the Athenæum will contain four embellishments of the first artistical merit, One of them will be a portrait of some distinguished personage in this country or in Europe, accompanied with an interesting biograpical sketch. Another will be a view of the buildings and grounds, of some one of the popular Universities, in this or the old world, accompanied with a historical, biograpical and statisical sketch in this body of the work. The portraits will be fine mezzotint, and the college views, beautiful line engravings. Then will follow richly colored specimens of flowers and fruit; in connection with which, there will also be presented interesting notices—floral and botanical—of climate, habits, culture, &c. All of which cannot but secure interest and favor.

Each number will comprise sixty pages of letter-press, double column, beautifully stereotyped, and printed on fine white paper; the whole corresponding in all respects, with the character of the other departments of the work.

Such is to be the character of the work at its commencement. If it is succersful, as it ought to be, and as is hoped and believed it will be,—improvement will be made as far as possible in the different departments, as they are suggested in the progress of the work.

The subscribers take pleasure in announcing to the public, that they have concluded arrangements with the Rev. Henry D. Moore, of Philadelphia, and Rev. Andrew A Lipscomb, Professor of English Literature and Belle Letters, of Raltimore, who will co-operate as Editors the of new Magazine. Under the management of those gentleman, the subscribers flatter themselves, abundant success will be secured in behalf of the enterprise.

TO PUBLISHERS.

The subscribers would also give notice to Publishers, at home and abroad, that there will be in connection with the work, an extensive review department. This will be made a feature of excelling interest. The department will be conducted fairly aud honorably, and all works sent to the office of the subscribers, will receive such notices as their character may demand.

The first number will be issued on the first of January, 1847. Its contents and the name of contributors, will be published shortly.

Terms—Three dollars per annum, in advance.

Editors of papers, copying this Prospectus, and sending a paper with it, to the office of the "Athenæum," shall receive the numbers of the work, and the thanks of the publishers.

All letters, containing orders for the work, post-paid, and enclosing the subscription price, will receive prompt attention. To be addressed to

F. C. WILSON & Co.

Philadelphio, Pa.

An Elegantly Illustrated Magazine for Christmas and New Year, containing a Pictorial Description of Ohio, &c. &c., which can be mailed to any part of the United States, for 4 cents postage.

The January Number of our Family Magazine, for 1847, will be complete in itself, and contain an interesting Historical and Descriptive Account of the State of Ohio, together with a great variety of other literary and interesting matter; the whole illustrated with each one occupying an entire page of the Work. We expect to circulate many thousands of this elegant Periodical in the State of Ohio and elsewhere. The Plates are all executed in a peculiarly chaste and perfect manner; and any one of them is worth the price of the Work.

FIFTEEN ELEGANT ENGRAVINGS,

The following is a list of the principal Engravings that will be published in the January Number, viz:—

1. A splendid View of the City of Cincinnati, as it appears at the present time. This forms the Frontispiece, and is elegantly printed on the best and finest paper, accompanied with a particular account of the origin, rise, and progress, of the Queen of the West.

2. A View of Cincinnati, as it appeared in the year 1800; forming a striking contrast with its preset appearance.

3. A View of the Public Landing Place, at Cincinnati.

4. The New Catholic Cathedral at Cincinnati—a large plate.

5. A View of Lane Seminary, at Walnut Hills, two miles from Cincinnati.

6. Several Views of Kenyon College, &c., &c., at Gambier, Ohio.

10. Several Engravings illustrative of the Antiquities of Ohio. Together with—

13. Bears attacking a boat's crew in the polar seas—a spirited engraving.

14 Picture of the Deluge. This is, without question, the most valuable and interesting Engraving in the whole Wsrk. We have not the space neccessary to describe it, and do it justice.

15. A View of Mount Ararat, from the hills above Erivam. This is generally admitted to be the mountain on which the Ark rested after the Deluge.

☞The whole of these Plates are accompanied with interesting descriptions, making the Number invaluable as a Present to young People.

The price of "The Pictorial Description of Ohio," will be ONLY 12½ CENTS PER COPY, or Ten Copies will be sent by Mail for One Dollar.

Letters enclosing remittances must be post-paid in full. The silver change for a single copy, or for three or four copies, may be thus remitted, (Postage Paid,) at our risk; but when you send silver, please envelop it carefully in a half sheet of writing paper, so that it will be subject to only single postage.

All orders should specify distinctly the town, county, and state, where the Magazine is to be forwarded. and should be addressed (post paid) to

ROBERT SEARS,
128, Nassau Street New York.

ATTENTION!!

Look Here, All!!

I HAVE JUST received from New York, a fine assortment of Foreign and Domestic DRY GOODS consisting of, Cloths, Casimeres, Sattinents, Tweeds, and Jeans, Cashmeres, Mouslin de Lains, Alpaccas, Morenoes, and Cloakings, Flannels, Checks, Linseys, Brown and Bleach-Muslins, Shawls and Prints of every variety, Men's and Boys' Caps Boots and Shoes. Also Coffee, Sugar, Tea, &c. All of which I am offering to the public,

AT VERY REDUCED PRICES,

for cash, or in exchange for country produce of all kinds.

I would add, that those wishing to purchase cheap goods will find it to their advantage to give me a call, as I am determined to sell my goods, W. B. Guthrie.

Putnam Ohio, October 31, 1846.

Snethen's Sermons.—Rev. Ulysses Ward of Washington City, has just published a volume of Sermons by the late Rev. N. Snethen. It comprises 480 pages, and is elegantly bound in cloth. Price $1,00 per single copy. Ten copies or more at the rate of $4. And for 50 or more copies, 84 cents apiece. Cash in all cases to be remitted when the books are ordered. "He, being dead, yet speaketh."

NEW SERIES

OF THE

Congressional Globe and Appendix.

Congress at it its last session, through the Joint Library Committee of the two Houses, having authorized a large subscription for the Congressional Globe and Appendix; and the Senate, by resolution, having directed the mode of preparing the reports of the proceedings, and authorized the Secretary of the Senate to contract with the undersigned, stipulating that the reports when written out shall be subject to the revision of the speakers, the Congressional Globe and Appendix is now offered to the public, not only as an authentic, but as an official report of the proceedings of Congress, made under the eye, and published by authority of the body.

The undersigned originated the mode of journalizing the proceedings of Congress, which, thus adopted, is to be perfected with the aid and under the supervision of Congress. Their publication was the first and only one that gave each successive step in every measure in both branches of Congress; a brief of all the debates; every important vote; and an Appendix, including at full length all the revised speeches delivered during the session.

The work, as it is now to be conducted by them, will be found a most perfect political history. The Senators from the States and the Representatives from every section of the Union bring with them into Congress a knowledge of the feelings, sentiments, and interests of their several constituencies. Public opinion and the public information, as it exists among those they represent, are embodied by them; and in the crucible of Congress the wisdom of our times is brought to its test, and is there concentrated, in directing the political movements of the whole country. The impulses thus given through Congress from every quarter react upon the nation as a whole, and all its component parts are made to move in co-operation. The press cannot be more usefully employed than in condensing and again spreading abroad the intelligence of our free country, tending to such happy results through our almost miraculously adjusted State and National institutions.

Having identified ourselves with the plan of advancing the usefulness of Congress by publishing full and impartial reports, and having a large mass of the Congressional Globe and Appendix, issued during the last twelve years which would be impaired in value to us and utility to the public if the work were discontinued, we have a double motive to prompt us to extend it through a new series. We are resolved, if possible, to give it permanence, and hand it down to successors as a standard work worthy of being maintained and improved. We shall enter upon our new undertaking without being distracted or burdened by any associate labors of the press; and thus unencumbered, shall hope to make the new series a step in advance of the former in all points of execution. With a view to accomplish this, we shall be (one or the other) in attendance on Congress.

The reports will not be affected by our party bias. We believe every member of Congress will bear witness that our reports are full and fair.

The Congressional Globe is made up of the daily proceedings of the two Houses of Congress, and printed on superfine double royal paper, with small type, (brevier and nonpareil,) in quarto form, each number containing sixteen royal quarto pages. The speeches of the members in this first form are condensed—the full report of the prepared speeches being reserved for the Appendix. All resolutions, motions, and other proceedings, are given in the form of the Journals, with the yeas and nays on every important question.

The Appendix is made up of the President's Annual Message, the reports of the principal officers of the Government that accompany it, and all speeches of members of Congress, written out or revised by themselves. It is printed in the same form as the Congressional Globe, and usually makes about the same number of pages during a session.

During the first month or six weeks of a session, there is rarely more business done than will make two numbers a week—one of the Congressional Globe and one of the Appendix; but during the remainder of a session, there is usually sufficient matter for two or three numbers of each every week. The next session will be unusually interesting; therefore, we calculate that the Congressional Globe and Appendix together will make near 1500 large quarto pages, printed in small type—brevier and nonpareil. We furnish complete Indexes to both at the end of a session.

We have on hand the Congressional Globe and Appendix for the last fifteen sessions of Congress, making together fifteen large royal quarto volumes, which we will sell unbound, for $41; or bound with Russia backs and corners for $56. Those who want the back volumes should apply for them immediately, as they are in demand. Congress subscribed for 341 complete sets during the two last sessions. The proceedings of Congress for the last nine years cannot be procured from any other source—Gales & Seaton having stopped printing their Register of Debates in 1837.

We will endeavor to print a sufficient number of surplus copies to supply all that may be miscarried, or lost in the mails; but subscribers should be very particular to file their papers carefully, for fear that we should not be able to supply all lost numbers.

TERMS.

For one copy of the Congressional Globe,	$1 00
For one copy of the Appendix,	1 00
For six copies of either, or part of both,	5 00

The money may be remitted by mail at our risk. The safest and best way to remit is, to pay the amount to the Postmaster where you reside, and take from him a receipt.

Our prices for these papers are so low that we cannot afford to credit them out; therefore, no person need consume his time in writing for them unless he sends the money. BLAIR & RIVES.

Washington, D. C. October 15, 1846.

GEORGE CONCLIN,

BOOKSELLER AND PUBLISHER,

Stationer, Binder, and

BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURER,

No. 39 Main Street, Cincinnati.

Keeps on hand Books published by the Methodist Protestant Church—such as

CHURCH HYMN BOOKS,
REVIVAL " "
DISCIPLINES,
EVANS' QUESTIONS & ANSWERS, &c.

Also—Just received—A supply of the Christian World in 3 Vols. with Portraits of the Wesleys, &c., by Rev. Thos. H. Stockton.

JACOB THORN,

Wholesale dealer in all kinds of NOTIONS, No. 91, Wilson's Row, the first store below the Court House, is now opening a new and complete assortment of

NOTIONS AND DRY GOODS,

which will be sold wholesale, at prices a little below what they have ever been sold in this place.—Country Merchants and Pedlers, visiting the city are respectfully invited to examine my stock before purchasing elsewhere among which may be found the following articles:—

800	Packs American solid head Pins.
200,000	Drilled Ey'd Needles, Sharps and Betweens.
2000	Doz Spool Thread.
500	Lbs. Patent do.
800	do. Cotton do.
3000	Doz. Side Combs.
600	do. Fine Ivory do.
500	do. Dressing do.
100	do. Woolen Comforters.
100	Brass Clocks.
1500	Prints (Engravings,) high col'd.
100	Doz. Chapman Strops.
5000	Almanacks.
300	Shawls, different patterns.
100	Gross Kitting Pins.
4	Bbls. Blacking.
30	Doz. slates.
50	Gt. Gro. Agate Shirt Buttons
500	Coils Bonnet Wire.
50	Gross Boot Laces.
500	do. Hooks and Eyes on Cards
100	do. Wood Combs.
200	do. Sherred and G. E. Suspenders.
12	Boxes Fire Crackers
12	Doz. Looking-Glasses.
100	Gross Pearl Shirt Buttons.
6	Bales Brown Muslin.
200	Doz. Mitts.

Combs of every description, Buttons, Penknives, Razors, Table and Tea Spoons, Tapes, Eyeletts, Jewsharp, Pencils, Shaving Boxes, Gloves, Ladies cotton Hose, Matches, Dress Handkfs., Laces and Edgings, Spectacles, Thimbles, Beads, Candle Wicking, Night caps, Primers, Calicoes, bleached Muslins, Wafers, &c.

WANTED in exchange for goods at wholesale prices, Feathers, Beeswax, Ginsang, Rags and Hogs Bristles tied up in small bunches, for which will be given twenty-five cents a pound for all that can be brought in good order

Zanesville, O. Nov. 7, 1846.

PUTNAM BOARDING HOUSE.

The SUBSCRIBER having been for the last sixteen years keeping Tavern and Boarding House, would respectfully acquaint the public—that he has established a Bording House in Putnam, and hopes by strict attention to business he will merit a share of public patronage. If accommodations shall be good, and his table, for variety not surpassed by any Hotel or Boarding House in the West. R. Putnam.

October 31st, 1846.

N. B. Application for boarding should be made soon. R. P.

THE WESTERN RECORDER.

VOL. VIII---NO. 15. PUTNAM, MUSKINGUM COUNTY, OHIO, JANUARY 16, 1847. WHOLE NO. 379.

The Western Recorder,

Is Published every Saturday,

AT PUTNAM, OPPOSITE ZANESVILLE, OHIO.

OFFICE ON MAIN STREET.

A. H. BASSETT, Editor and Proprietor.

C. ALLEN, PRINTER.

TERMS.—Two Dollars per annum, in advance. Two fifty at the close of the year. Payments within three months will be considered in advance.

All letters and communications must be addressed, to the Editor, post paid, except such as contain funds, and directed to Putnam Muskingum Co. Ohio.

Itinerant Ministers and others, who collect from subscribers and remit to us as much as ten dollars within a year, shall receive a copy of the paper free.

Itinerant ministers and preachers, not acting as agents, shall have the paper at one dollar.

Clubs of ten or more, paying at the time of subscribing, shall have the paper for $1.5, i. e. one dollar fifty, each.

THEOLOGICAL.

Written for the Western Recorder.

GOD IS LOVE.

No. 1.

BY DR. D. GIBBONS.

The love of God is a deep so profound that we can never fathom it. So high that we can never reach it. So wide that we can never see its final extent. But still we can understand its sublime reality, and feel its mysterious influences upon the hearts. Although boundless in extent, its sacred operations in the human breast, are cherished with emotions of unutterable delight. Although high as heaven, we still understand and appreciate its angel-qualities, as we experience it in our own bosoms, and know with absolute certainty, that we are under its benign & enchanting control. And although so profound that we can never plunge its full depth, yet we can enjoy its reality and, taste its sweetness, and happily live under its energy! But still we wish to know how GOD is live. We know what it is to love, and what love is. But how it is that God is love? God is the Almighty Creator of the Universe, and upholds all things by the word of his power, governing the Universe he made with infinite skill, and the most consumate wisdom. But more still. He punishes men for their crimes, thereby inflicting, very frequently, the severest pain and suffering. Still 'God is love.' How can this be reconciled? God being love; "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor; therefore love is the fulfilling of the law." Love is kindness or good—will. The punishments referred to are as absolutely necessary to demonstrate that God is love as the free reward and commendation of Virtue is proof of benevolence is the mainspring of the reward and commendation. Love is in favor of good or-der. Good order is the production of Love There cannot be pure love without good government. Love would be blind with our judgment Justice, and right, without a regulation by a judicious government.

Who does not know, for instance, that reproof occasions pain, and sometimes the most severe and burning pain, and yet do not all good Parents, at times, most sharply and keenly reprimand their children; objects too of their highest affection, and through the kindest, and most endearing regard, in order that their children may be benefited by this severe mode of reprehension. And all further, do not good, sensible Parents, very justly, chastise, their children, as with a rod of scorpions, through good will and tender concern, often with tears too, for their crimes and faults, which no other purpose, but their especial benefit? And when the reproof, and chastisements, are administered with deliberate judgement, and settled affection, where is the rational citizen, in any intelligent community, who would, even for a single moment, dare indulge the thought, that there parents were cruel or malicious? Such a rational citizen cannot be found. The whole community appreciate, and warmly approve the judgement of the parents, the discriminating prudence, and correct sense in the infliction of punishment, where in wisdom and in love, it is justly needed. We love such Parents for the sublime display of moral goodness, in the benevolent government of their loved offspring. And is it not strange that GOD cannot reprove, threaten, and punish corrupt and incorrigible criminals, for crimes of heaven-daring atrocity, and hell-deserving punishment, without being frownded as cruel and vindictive? Is it not astonishing, beyond expression, that GOD cannot reprove and threaten punishments, for crimes of the deepest age, and most aggravating quality, without being wickedly charged, by the wits of the world, as malicious and bloodthirsty? These self-same-confident-wits very strongly and warmly applaud the conduct of the parents referred to, and yet in the very next breath, with a strange and infatuated inconsistency declaim against God, for the very thing, which in other cases they pretend to admire. The whole Bible from the beginning to the end proclaims the motive of the Almighty in all HIS reproof, threatenings, and punishments of malignant criminals, is for the especial benefit of these guilty sufferers, flowing from the purest desire for their happiness and well-being, in the world's intelligent and moral society. It will not do for a benevolent man to give a fatal dose of poison, to me of his children, when it is warmly called for to prove how benevolent he is——so much so, that he in the kindness of his heart cannot refuse any thing in his power, when earnestly sought. Such a grant, such a gift, would even demonstrate that such a man is an entire stranger to every first principle of pure rational love. Discrimination is absolutely necessary to the full exhibition of love. If I love a man in truth I cannot do any thing to injure him, while under the influence of this love. Hence I must refuse the poison with firmness, and determination. The benevolence of GOD is as a mighty, boundless ocean, inexhaustible. It is applied by the hand of unerring wisdom and infallible justice, in its diffusion through the world's innumerable population. Like the sun it shines upon all, spreading heat & light upon the whole creation; equally, here, upon the good and evil, the just and unjust. The love of God is seen in the impregnable protection of saints and angels in heaven, and on earth, from the daring and violent incursions, of the cruel and malicious monsters, in human form, who act from the influence of the Devil, the great adversary of God and man. And it is seen in the almighty and eternal protection of holy men and angels in heaven. And is it not right, and just, and good; and according to the wise ends of intelligent love, to protect saints and angels from the broilings contentions, and malicious disturbances, of fiends incarnate, when even these fiends would be bettered in their condition by this protection? It seems to me the whole intelligent universe would answer in the affimative, with feelings of highest admiration. If these incarnate fiends were suffered to enter the purified abode of the celestial citizens, it would augment their many more than their confinement even in the penitentiary of Hell. Heaven in the very nature of things would prove a most dreadful Hell to all haters of God. They hate every thing of divine quality on earth. How then could they enjoy the perfection of holiness and benevolence in heaven? Impossible. Because they hate purity and goodness, here the elements of heaven's enjoyment. Wisdom, justice, holiness and love pronounce the sentence of their confinement just, and as richly merited, by their cruel doings, and malignant opposition, to all that's good, noble, and right on earth. The God of justice will vindicate the God of love, from all the changes, that the black adversary of love, has brought against the Bible's God of love: and wisdom thus be justified of all her children on earth and in heaven.

PARENTAL.

FAMILY WORSHIP.

We commend to our readers the following extract from a discourse on family Worship by Rev. J. H. Merle D'Aubigne, author of the History of the Reformation. It is taken from a volume of Discourses and Essays recently published.

Parents! if your children do not meet with a spirit of piety in your houses,—if, on the contrary your pride consists in surrounding them with external gifts, introducing them into worldly society, indulging all their whims, letting them follow their own course, you will see them grow vain, proud, idle, disobedient, impudent, and extravagant. They will treat you with contempt; and the more your hearts are wrapped up in them, the less they will think of you. This is seen but too often to be the case; but ask yourselves if you are not responsible for their bad habits and practices, and your consciences will reply that you are; that you are now eating the bread of bitterness which you have prepared for yourselves. May you learn thereby how great is your sin against God, in neglecting the means which were in your power for influencing their hearts; and may others take warning from your misfortune, and bring up their children in the Lord! Nothing is more effectual in doing this than an example of domestic piety. Public worship is often too vague and general for children, and does not sufficiently interest them; as to the worship of the closet, they do not yet understand it. A lesson learned by rote, if unaccompanied by any thing else, may lead them to look upon religion as a study, like those of foreign languages or history. Here, as every where, and more than elsewhere, example is more effectual than precept. They are not merely to be taught out of some elementary book that they must love God, but you must show them that God is loved. If they observe that oo worship is paid to the God of whom they hear, the very best instruction will prove useless: but by means of Family Worship, these young plants will grow "like a tree planted by the rivers of water that bringeth forth his fruit in season; his leaf also shall not wither." Your children may leave the parental roof, and those prayers will protect them. "If any," says the Scripture, "have children or nephews, let them learn first to show piety at home. But if any provide not for his own, and especially for those of his own house he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel."

And what delight, what peace, what real happiness a Christian will find in erecting a family altar in their midst, and in uniting to offer up a sacrifice to the Lord! Such is the occupation of angels in heaven; and blessed are those who anticipate these pure and immortal joys! "Behold, how good and pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." It is like the precious ointment upon the head, that ran down upon the beard, even Aaron's beard: that went down to the skirts of his garment; as the dew of Hermon, and as the dew that descended upon the mountains of Zion: for there the Lord commanded the blessing, even of life evermore." O, what new grace and life, piety gives to a family! In a house where God is forgotten, there is rudeness, ill-humor, and vexation of spirit. Without the knowledge and love of God, a family is but a collection of individuals who may have more or less natural affection for one another, but the real bond, the love of God our Father to Jesus Christ our Lord, is wanting. The poets are full of beautiful descriptions of domestic life; but alas! how different the pictures are from reality! Sometimes there is a want of confidence in the Providence of God; sometimes there is a love of riches; at others, an opposition of principle. Oh, how many troubles, how many cares there are in the bosom of families!

Domestic piety will prevent all these evils; it will give perfect confidence in that God who gives food to the birds of the air; it will give true love towards those with whom we have to live; not an exacting, sensitive love; but a merciful love, which excuses and forgives, like that of God himself; not a proud love, but an humble love, accompanied by a sense of one's own faults and weakness; not a fickle love, but a love unchangeable as eternal charity. "The voice of rejoicing and salvation."

And when the hour of trial comes, that hour which must come sooner or later, and which sometimes visits the homes of men more than once, what consolation will domestic piety afford! —Where do trials occur if not in the bosom of families? How much a family, where there is mourning, is to be pitied, if it has not that consolation! The various members of whom it is composed increase one another's sadness. But if, on the contrary, that family loves God, if it is in the habit of meeting to invoke the holy name of God, from whom comes every trial, as well as every good gift; then how can the souls cast down be raised up? The members of the family who still remain, meet around the table on which is laid the book of God,—that book where they find the words of resurrection, life and immortality,—where they find sure pledges of the happiness of the being who is no more among them, as well as the warrant of their own hopes. The Lord is pleased to send down the Comforter to them; the Spirit of glory and of God rests upon them, and ineffable balm is poured upon their wounds; and gives them much consolation; peace is communicated from one heart to another.—They enjoy moments of celestial bliss. "Though I walk through the valley and shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for thou art with me: Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me." "O Lord, Thou hast brought up my soul from the grave! Thine anger endureth but a moment; in Thy favor is life; weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning."

And who can tell, my brethren, what an influence domestic piety might exert over society itself? What encouragement all men would have in doing their duty, from the statesman to the mechanic! How would all become accustomed to act not only with respect to the opinions of men, but also to the judgment of God! How could each learn to be satisfied with the position in which he is placed! Good habits would be adopted; the powerful voice of conscience would be strengthened; prudence, propriety, talent, social virtues, would be developed with renewed vigor. This is what we might expect both for ourselves and for society. "Godliness hath promises of the life that now is, and of that which is to come."

ANTIQUARIAN.

The following interesting reminiscence, which we copy from the Western Christian Advocate, is from the pen of an itinerant minister in Indiana. Ed. W. Rec.

"THE BONE BANK."

It was a lurid, rainy morning in autumn: without a guide, I passed through a forest, dwarfish timber and "brush," along a seldom trodden, winding pathway, that was intersected by others so similar that I was oft in doubt which to select. I had been told that I would pass "the cypress slough," (to be to me a way-mark.) Cypresses I had never seen; but they had become in my mind associated with death—synonymous with the gloom of the grave. My mind became, by a combination of causes, not a little melancholy. I passed the expected "cypress"—a marsh filled with large trees bearing the name—and came safely to "the point of destination," on the bank of the then placid Wabash.

After addressing a small congregation, I learned that I was on remarkable ground. It had been known to others, but not to me, as "The Bone Bank." Such an interest was excited, that the facts which were detailed, and my own reflections, made an impression on memory's page that can scarcely ever be erased. The spot is two or three miles "by land" from the junction of the Wabash with the Ohio. It is an elevation, containing about twelve acres, high enough to be above the inundations by which much of the contiguous land is submerged, and is supposed by some to be artificial. It is now diminishing by the depredations of the Wabash. The lower extremity of this elevation is "full of bones." It is said that digging, and even plowing, exhumes entire skeletons. Thousands of these human bones are annually exposed by the river.

But the greatest novelty to me was the vessels that are found among the bonos. Unnumbered fragments may be seen at almost any time by visiting the bank of the river. But there were shown me some entire vessels—one that would contain near a pint had been made in imitation of a fish, showing its mouth, eyes, fins, and tail. They were of different forms and sizes. Some had a shape and "ears" like small pots. I saw one that had a bulb similar to a large turnip, and a neck like a bottle, and which would contain two or three pints. Their usual color is now a brown or dark blue. They are variously marked and carved, showing that their artificers were not destitute of taste; they were probably once also variously colored. Of what these vessels were made perhaps no one now knows. All that I examined were full of small white particles, which led me to believe that one constituent was muscle shells, more or less coarsely pulverized; some kind of clay was doubtless the other. They are, it seems to me, remarkably durable, being capable now, after having been so long in the earth, of sustaining, it is said, heat sufficient to boil water. Over these vessels and bones had grown trees of the largest size, which now are mostly removed, the stumps only remaining. The vessels were, without doubt, interred with the deceased.

And here my "mouth was full" of questions. Was not this the site of an ancient city? Was not this lower extremity the common "graveyard?" A thousand, perhaps two thousand years ago, were here "the hum and bustle of busy life!" The vessels I have been viewing convince me that the people who dwelt here were not destitute of skill; they were evidently, I think, far in advance of the modern aborigines of this country. I am not informed that any of our Indians possessed a knowledge of the potter's art. It is suggested to my mind as possible that they might have had some idea of navigation, and that they chose this spot on the Wabash, near the Ohio, for advantages in this respect. But what people was it over whose bones I am now walking? Did some deadly malady suddenly sweep them all into eternity? or did they die in cruel war? or are some of the southern tribes indeed their descendants? How my thoughts wander in the dark past. Here men lived, loved, hated, fought, died —they loved life, they longed for immortality—some performed deeds of daring, desiring that unborn generations should celebrate their fame; but no, oblivion has inexorably concealed their names till the judgment day. Here lies your dust, my unknown brethren. For many long years you lay in undisturbed repose. Over your graves thickly grew the forest trees, casting around their protecting, yet gloomy shade. No mother, sister, or wife, visited your urn to bedew it with the tears of affectionate remembrance. By day, the zephyrs, mingling with the bowing tree-tops, mournfully chanted your dirge; and night was rendered more gloomly by the hoot of the owl, and the scream of the wild-cat. But your quiet has been disturbed. The trees by which you were shaded for so many years have been felled by the axe of "the white man;" your bones, long so sacredly concealed, are now exposed by the sacrilegious plow of the Anglo-American, and by the ravages of a sometimes furious river: still, however, your cypresses stand, as if to remind me that here are the dead. Rest on! Though now shrouded in impenetrable night are your name, your character, and your deeds, a day is coming when this darkness shall be dispelled, and these mysteries berevealed.

F. A. Hester.

New Harmony, Ia., Dec. 24, 1846.

Extraordinary Discoveries at Nineveh.—Mr. Layard, an English gentleman, has for the last 12 months been pursuing the track—first laid open by M. Botta—at Nimroud, near Mosul, on the Tigris. His excavations have not only settled the precise position of Nineveh—the very existence of which had become little better than a vague historic dream—but have brought to light some of its buildings, sculptures, and inscriptions. According to accounts received at Constantinople, some months since, Mr. Layard had discovered an entrance formed by two magnificent winged, human-handed lions.

This entrance led him into a hall above 150 feet long and 80 broad, entirely built of slabs of marble, covered with sculptures. The side walls are ornamented with small bas reliefs of the highest interest, battle sieges, lion hunts, &c.; many of them in the finest state of preservation, and all executed with extraordinary spirit. They afford a complete history of the military art among the Assyrians; and prove their intimate knowledge of many of those machines of war whose invention is attributed to the Greeks and Romans—such as the battering-ram, the tower moving on wheels, the catapult, &c.

Nothing can exceed the beauty and elegance of the forms of various arms, swords, daggers, bows, spears, &c. In this great hall there are several entrances, each formed by winged lions, or winged bulls. These led into other chambers, which again branch off into a hundred ramifications, Every chamber is built of slabs covered with sculptures or inscriptions, whence some idea may be formed of the number of objects discovered—the far greater part of which, in fact nearly all, are in the best preservation. Mr. Laahrd's excavations have been hitherto confined to a very small corner of the mound under which these antiquities have for ages been buried; it is impossible to say what may come out when they can be carried forward on an adequate scale.—N. Y. Telegraph.

CAUSE OF PEACE.

From the New York Evangelist.

The Voice of the Camp.

The strength of the sea hath spoken, and we have all heard its melancholy voice. It hath spoken in tones of anguish to the widow and orphan, made desolate by its awful ravages. The wreck of the Atlantic has sent a thrill of grief through the length and bredth of the land. From many a pulpit the minister of the gospel has endeavored to impart a lesson of admiration and comfort to the awe-struck people, and to the broken-hearted mourner. These lessons, we trust, will not be in vain. They will be blessed to many.

But, while in common with the many we have wept over the terrible calamities of the storm and the sea, we have been constrained to ask—Is the loss of scores of lives on the battle-field less to be deprecated? Is death more lovely or less dreadful in the siege or the storms of war? There are mourning, lamentation, and breaking of hearts, all over the land because of the terrible desolations of the camp and the field of battle; and yet have the press or the pulpit as faithfully made these dreadful calamities the theme of warning and consolation? The sea speaks, and the land echoes far and near the tones of sadness and grief. The camp lifts up it voice, and scarcely a note of remonstrance or grief is heard amidst the shouts of victory. Some forty or fifty souls are hurried into eternity by the storms of heaven, and we know not how to contain our grief. Some twelve or fifteen hundred immortal beings are brought to an untimely end in the storming of Monterey, and "the brilliant achievement," "the gallant exploit," "the splendid affair," are heralded in flaming capitals, in almost every political print, to an admiring people.

But why this difference? Why is it that we hear no more dreadful calamities of the camp?—Why, when our countrymen, our fathers brothers and sons, with the husband of our mothers, sisters and daughters, are brought to a horrid end by the murderous onset of the contending foes, hurried in full health and strength from time into eternity, hundreds in a single day—must we hold our peace and let the sword be bathed in the blood of hundreds more? Why should the pulpit, so faithful to echo the voice of the sea, refuse to give an echo to the voice of the camp?

We recall with mournful interest to the engagements on the 8th and 9th of May at Palo Alto and Raseca de la Palma, in which the loss of the enemy is stated it something like one thousand men, an addition to the scores that on our own side were killed or put hors du combat. We learn with still greater grief from the official despatches, that on the fatal 21st September, in the storming of Monterey, "the number of killed and wounded incident to the operations in the lower part of the city was three hundred and ninety-four;" and that the whole number thus disabled or lost during the three days was more than five hundred; while, according to some estimates, the number of the loss on the part of the Mexicans was not far from fifteen hundred. A sum total of more than three thousand souls!

Nor is this all. More are said to have perished in the camp than on the battle-field. Our own loss is stated at fifteen hundred, whom disease has carried into eternity. A recent writer at Camargo speaks of fourteen or fifteen hundred persons on the sick list; and of a regiment that numbered nearly 1000 when they left home, who could not muster for duty more than 400. The muster-roll of another regiment is reported to have exhibited a deficiency of eight or nine hundred, not more than 71 men being fit for duty out of nearly 1000 of which it had been composed. Add to all this, the loss in the divisions under Generals Wool and Kearney, and in the fleets on either side of the Mexican peninsula, and, we speak within bounds, when we state the loss of life on both sides, caused by this unhappy war, at not much, if any, less than five thousand.

Of every one of these poor unfortunates it may be said—"He was somebody's child." Some heart ached when he fell on the field of battle, and in most cases more than one. Thousands of hearts are aching now, pierced by the bereaving sword. Who can tell the anguish of those who died, and the deeper anguish of surviving kindred? The following testimony of an eye-witness gives a feeble conception of the concievable horrors of that shower of death:—

"During the fight of the second day, a flag of cessation was sent to the Mexicans, requesting a few hours to bury the dead, which were strewed in frightful piles over the field. This was refused, and the wounded and dead lay where they fell, beneath the rays of a schorching sun, till the battle was ended. It was then almost impossible for our men to endure the strength while they heaped dirt over the poor fellows where they lay. The bodies of the dead were as black as coals; many of them were stripped of their clothing by the Mexicans during the night. Several of those who were wounded during the first day's fight, crawled into ditches and holes to avoid the balls which were roling like hailstones over the field, whence, exhausted by the loss of blood, they were unable to crawl, or give signs of distress. As a consequence, many perished, though some who were found in this condition were removed, and are recovering.

The voice of the camp and the battle-field—who heeds it? The desolate widow; the fatherless child; the weeping parent—they heed it. The God of the widow—he heeds it. "The voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the ground!" And shall not the press heed it? Shall not the pulpit—the legislative hall—the council-chamber heed it?

A Church of Converted Catholics.

Letter from the Corresponding Secretary to the Executive Committee of American Protestant Society.

Beloved Brethren:—The interest you feel in our Missionary work among the Romanists in the United States, induces me to spread before you some incidents and facts connected with this work. I have just closed a visit to some of our Missionary stations; where I have witnessed scenes and gathered facts that will cause your hearts to rejoice, and will be the occasion of many thanksgivings to God.

On Sabbath, 16th of August, I found myself at W. E. eight miles from the Canada line, where our Missionary, M. has been toiling for several years among the French Romanists. From the family where I was hospitably entertained, I had two and a half miles to ride on the Sabbath to reach the place of meeting.

On my way I suddenly met a storm of wind, lightning, thunder and rain, that came rushing with vengeance down the mountains. It was truly terrific. I fled into a house by the way-side for shelter. Although the house trembled & threatened to fly from its foundations, yet when the storm was over we were all safe.

When I arrived at the place of meeting, the people had assembled and were signing most beautifully in French. The Missionary saw me as I was tying my horse to the fence, and came out and gave me a hearty shake of the hand. We entered the house. It was part of a building in which the Missionary resided: the room was filled with benches and people, with a cooking stove in the centre. When I looked around upon this assembly, I felt emotions not easily described. The peaceful and joyous expression of their countenances while singing the praises of God, will never be effaced from any mind. My heart said, "this is none other but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven." Surely there is a work of God in this place.

As soon as they had snng the hymn, the Missionary said a few words to them in French. Immediately all in the room rose, and the tears started from their eyes. While I was surprised and in doubt as to the cause of this, the Missionary in informed me that they rose to salute me and to give me a hearty welcome among them, as he had just told them who was present. I can assure you, brethren, this was a touching scene to me. I felt myself honored and humbled as the unworthy representative of the American Protestant Society. Every person who stood before me had been brought up in the Roman Catholic Church. They were living witnesses of the power of truth over error, and of the Spirit of God over superstitions and benighted minds.

I was unmanned by such an unexpected reception, and knew not what to do or say. I rose, however, and addressed them about an hour. They were not only very attentive, but the tears flowed freely while they heard the simple truths of the Gospel. Most of them could understand English when very plainly spoken. There was an exception directly in front of me. One of the females, a member of the church, could not understand. A woman who sat next to her interpreted as I spoke, and whispered the whole address into her ears.

On this occasion females were present, who came seven or eight miles on foot; but this is no unusual occurrence. Roman Catholics come ten or twelve miles to hear the Missionary preach,

At the close of the meeting, it was proposed that I should preach to them on the next Tuesday in the afternoon. As this was in the midst of harvest, they would loose halt a day's wages by attending the meeting. They are extremely poor, and working by the day hence the loss of half a day's wages was something of a consideration. How many of our Protestant Christians would assemble under such circumstances? One of the members rose and told them the meeting would be worth more than their wages and exhorted them to attend. On Tuesday they were all present. The time was 5 P. M. but at 2 P. M., they began to assemble at the house of the Missionary in order to hear the Bible read. This is the common practice of those who cannot read. I saw some aged females, I should think over 70 years of age, who came seven or eight miles at this early hour for this purpose. One of the converts, a young man who is doing much good among them, read to them the Word of God without a word of comment. They heard and wept. It was affecting to see them. They were eating the pure bread of life. They were nourished by it, it was their life. Oh that all our Protestant church members were fed upon the same bread! How great and rapid would be the increase of spirituality, of life, of self-denial, and of prayer?

On Tuesday all were present at the school-house. It was a meeting of universal interest The tearful earnestness with which they listened to a simple exposition of the nature and fruits of evangelical faith, was truly affecting. At times they were unable to suppress their joy and gratitude. Had the Committee, or the friends of this Society been present, they would have said, "here is enough, and more than enough, to compensate for all the toil, labor and expense that have attended the operations of the Society." To see a people just emerged from the midnight of Popery, rejoicing in the faith of the Gospel, is a rare sight. Such a sight carries conviction along with it, that here is the work of God. And you are constrained to exclaim, "What hath God wrought!"

If any question whether any thing can be done for the conversion of Romanists, let them come and see. This is a work that will bear investigation. It need only be known, to secure the confidence of every Christian and candid mind.

As they retired from the meeting, having listened more than an hour to an exposition of faith and its fruits. one and another said, "I am guilty, I am resolved to do more than I have ever done before," &c. &c. Instead of being satisfied with the past, they were humbled under a view of their deficiency, and at the rich grace of God, of which they were the happy subjects.

This church now consists of eighty-one members. Every one of them was born and trained up in the Roman Catholic Church. They have all been converted under the labors of your Missionary. Another church like this is not to be found in the United States. Such a company of believers I never saw before. While looking upon them, and noticing the peaceful and happy expression of their countenances when singing the praises of God, the tears startled from my eyes. Hard indeed must be the heart that would not be affected by such a sight. In this little church are ten times the number of souls saved in the Ark when the ungodly world were swept away—all monuments of the grace of God—all rescued from the iron grasp of despotism, and from the gloomy regions of superstition.

These are not merely converts from Popery to Protestantism, but there is, we believe, deep and self-denying piety in this flock. From ministers of the Gospel, and from Christians of various denominations, I have received the most favorable account of the piety of this church. One aged minister said, there has been more of the revival of religion among them this year, than among all our Protestant churches in this region." Another says, "Now here do I find such an exemplification of spiritual religion as in this little church."

HERMAN NORTON.

Saratoga, Sept. 1846.

P. S. I have also heard one of our Missionaries preach to a congregation of German Catholics in the German language. This is a promising Mission, of which I may speak hereafter.—American Protestant.

Treatment of Backsliders.

It is a sad and obvious truth, that a considerable portion of those who have made a public profession of religion, even in our best and most evangelical and best disciplined churches, have subsequently become in a greater or less degree unfaithful to their vows, or in the expressive English of the Bible, have backslidden from the Lord, and are living in that criminal and miserable state.—It is a truth also equally sad & apparent, that as a general fact, this large class of persons are either grossly neglected or injudiciously treated as in no other class of persons connected with the church. While the backsliding is of the heart, chiefly, and is manifested by no gross overt obliquity, they are simply neglected; when they have proceeded to visible acts of immortality, and discipline has become necessary, it too often happens that through its faulty administration, that discipline operates to the destruction, and not the reclaimation of the offenders.

We know of no practical subject connected with the prosperity of the church, worthy of the attention of the religious press and the ministry, and the christians generally.—Why should not the large number of back-sliding professors found in our churches, constrain our pity and command our effort?—Why is there not more affectionate watchfulness over weaker brethren? Why is it that persons just beginning to inquire after salvation, receive minute and persevering attention till they join the church; but no sooner is that done, than they are scarcely thought of again; though their ignorance, inexperience and constant exposure to temptation and every evil influence, all render them needy of the most watchful care of their brethren?

How easy might it be if we were affectionately watchful over the first mis-step of a young professor, to save him from falling into so many great & grievous sins; whereas, neglected and unwarned in the early stages of his relapse, his case soon becomes too bad for restraint or remedy.

And then the case of those who have backslidden so long and so far from God, as to render them in our eyes hopeless, but who are by no means dead to the voice of sincere pity, or the pleadings of christian love and anxiety. There are moments in the experience of perhaps nearly every wanderer, when he realizes the shame, the sin, and the utter misery of his condition; when he would welcome to his side a faithful and affectionate monitor, and would drink in the language of kind remonstrance and friendly entreaty, and struggle to throw off the shackles of sin, and to return to his Heavenly father. Why is it that there are not such kind and faithful Christians, seeking along all the avenues to death for the souls of their erring brethren? Why are there not special meetings of conference and inquiry for them? Why are not the mountains of sin echoing with the foot-steps and cries of those who search for the lost sheep of the house of Israel? And why is there not a louder, and more generous and earnest joy over one reclaimed prodigal, than over ninety and nine righteous?

We ask for this subject the prayerful consideration of our christian brethren and readers. We believe if there was a proper concern in the church on this subject, many who were once hopeful members of the church, but who have fallen amid the many snares which were spread in their path, might be brought back again in their right mind to the fold of God's people, filled with joy and with the blessed hopes of the gospel. And multitudes more, who are now in danger daily and hourly of being led off from the narrow path, might, by a very moderate exercise of Christian watchfulness and counsel, be saved from the sin and misery of a backsliding state.—N. Y. Evangelist.

Moral Courage in Every-Day Life.—Have the courage to discharge a debt while yeu have the money in your docket.

Have the courage to do without that which you do not need, however much your eyes may covet it.

Have the courage to speak your mind, when it is necessary you should do so, and to hold your tongue when it is prudent you should do so.

Have the courage to speak to a friend in a "seedy" coat, even though you are in company with a rich one, and richly attired.

Have the courage to own that you are poor, and thus disown poverty of its sharpest sting.

Have the courage to make a will, and a just one.

Have the courage to tell a man why you will not lend him your money.

Have the courage to "cut" the most agreeable acquaintanee you have, when you are convinced that he lacks principle. "A friend should bear with friend's infirmities," but not with his vices.

Have the courage to show your respect for honesty, in whatever guise it appears; and your contempt for dishonesty and duplicity, by whomsoever exhibited.

Have the courage to wear your old clothes until you can pay for new ones.

Have the courage to obey your Maker, at the risk of being ridiculed by man.

Have the courage to prefer comfort and propriety to fashion in all things.

Have the courage to acknowledge your ignorance, rather than to seek credit for knowledge under false pretences.

Have the courage to provide an entertainment for your friends, within your means—not beyond.

Have the courage to take a good paper, and to pay for it annually in advance.

Religious Intelligence.

MUSKINGUM DISTRICT.

Cardington O, Jan. 9th, 1847.

Br. Bassett: By your permission, I wish to say a few things, (through the Recorder) to our worthy President, (Br. G. Clancy,) and the friends of our infant Zion, relative to this (Frederick) Circuit: Our first quarterly meeting was held in Fredricktown, commencing October 24th, and continued until the following Monday night: We had a very pleasent time, though no great excitement; believers were much revived- thank God for his merciful manifestations. At this meeting, we were favored with the labors, of Brs. J. W. Case, and S. Catlin, the Lord bless them for their labors of love: Since that time, we have received at this (Frederick) society, five members of good standing; among whom is Br. Thomas Reed, a son of our much lamented Br. James Reed, of this place, who was so suddenly, taken from us, something over a year ago- How pleasing however, when a father in Israel, is called to the church Triumphant, to see a son, filling up the Breach, in the ranks of the church Militant.

Our next protracted effort was at the Cannan class, which commenced Dec. 12th, and continued six days. It was a time of refreshing, from the presence of the Lord; in our Love feast and speaking meetings especially, while the membership were prompt, in speaking freely of their Christian experience. The Divine presence, was abundantly manifest, in our midst: enabling us to rejoice together, in hope of that eternal feast of love, which the faithful disciples of Christ, shall be permitted ere long to enjoy: During this meeting, two professed to find the pearl of great price, the Lord keep them faithful, until death: on extending an invitation for members, two came forward, and united with the society in this place.

On Christmas day, we commenced a protracted Meeting in Cardington, which continued 12 days, during which time, the Lord manifested himself unto us, in a glorious manner; previous variances between brethren were laid aside, there is nothing like the love of Jesus, to bring those who are at a distance together. It destroys enmity in the heart, and makes us brethren in Christ- it did my soul good; to see those who had long stood at a distance, embrace each other in the arms of love and affection. Those, who had grown cold in religion, were aroused from their spiritual slumbers; & made a newstart for Heaven: Eight professed to find the pearl of great price, and were made happy in the Redeemer's love: three united with the church on probation, more are expected, the Lord enable them to prove faithful, until death: at this meeting Br. A. K. Earl—who resides in this place, rendered good assistance, the Lord bless him for his labor of love. Frederick circuit is on the advance, we expect before conference, to be able to report, still more, of the goings forth of God among us.

Yours in haste

Samuel Lancaster, Supt.

Fairview, O. Jan. 12, 1847.

Mr. Editor: I wish to say to the friends of Christ, through your excellent paper, that since my last we have had some good meetings on the Belmont Circuit. Several have joined the church lately. We enjoy peace amongst us, and in some degree the presence of the divine Spirit.

Yours. J. M. Winn.

OHIO DISTRICT.

Greenfield Highland Co. O. Dec. 30, 1846.

Br. Bassett: I would report through the medium of the Western Recorder to Br. Young, our President, and the brethren in general a few lines of information pertaining to our religious condition on Bainbridge Ct. We have tranquility in all our churches with a few exceptions. But it is to be feared the peace of some is a false peace, the peace of delusion. We have had some success in preaching the gospel of Christ. Some have been awakened to see and feel their total depravity, that in them is no good thing, abstract from the grace of God; and have been aroused to seek deliverance in Christ. And a few accessions have been realized to the Church of Christ. We stand up for the cross of Christ, and all its concomitant doctrines, and with St. Paul determine to make known no other system by which to reform and evangelize the world. Let others glory in their human systems of moral and political reform, let them preach their plain commands to secede from and divide the Churches, in order to reform the world, and save sinners that are in the churches, and out of them from going to hell. Such vain boasters had as well undertake to ride on the wings of the wind, or hold the waters of the ocean in their fist, or weigh the hills in a balance or the mountains in scales, as to undertake to convert sinners from the error of their ways, and save souls from death by a dogmatical display of morals and politics, while they leave the cross of Christ out of their preaching as the first in the order and in the importance of gospel truth. We will therefore proclaim the cross of Christ, not of secondary importance but of primary importance, "first of all—how that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures." Upon this Rock we are aiming to build. Here we direct the bruised reed, the broken and contrite in heart. Let the inhabitants of the rock sing, let them shout from the tops of the mountains. This is our position to effect gospel reformation and give character to the church of Christ. And by the help of God we intend to maintain it, though the Church should starve us, though we should meet the sarcasm of the old Pharisee in the church, the scoffs of infidels, and the taunts of the moralist; though the bursting wave of opposition should break in upon us, yet will we not be vanquished, or displaced from our high ground.

Yours in Christ,

A. H. Trumbo, Sup't.

INDIANA DISTRICT.

Milroy Ia. Jan. 1. 1847.

Br. Bassett: I reached my appointment (Flat Rock Circuit,) soon after Conference, and found prospects rather gloomy. A general deadness seemed to prevail in all the branches of the Church, and sinners appeared to be given over to hardness of heart. We determined however to strive to do our duty. On the 19th of December we commenced a meeting at the Duck Creek Chapel which lasted some 4 days. Here the people of God of different branches of the church felt "how good and pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity," and though I had no ministerial aid, we had a good meeting, one sister gave her name to the Church, and we believe others will join soon. On Christmas day our first Quarterly Meeting commenced at Friendship Chapel near Br. J. J. Amos's. Our unstationed brethren were with us a part of the time Br. Whorton though his head is silvered with age, labored with the zeal of a youth, also Br. C. Morrow a local minister of the M. E. C. was with us on Saturday and Sabbath morning and labored acceptably.

Satan seemed to have taken entire possession of the hearts of the impenitent and some dispaired of seeing any thing effected in this neighborhood, but, we went to work in the name of the Lord and "the times of refreshing" came from the presence of the Lord. Believers shouted aloud the praises of the Lord. Sinners were awakened and came to the alter of prayer inquiring what they must do to be saved, and others were deeply effected. The meeting has been continued on every evening up to this time, and we designed to continue it longer though the rain is now falling in torrents and the country is flooded with water. Ten have joined the church and we look for more. Those who have joined are principally from the world. Our next quarterly meeting is to be held at the Duck Creek Chapel in Franklin Co. 5 miles from Laurel on the road to Blooming Grove 2 miles from the latter place. We invite our brethren from adjoining circuits——especially Brs. Pelan Hunt, Thomas and Stibbens from Twin creek ct. O. Pray for us

Yours &c.

C. H. Williams.

MICHIGAN DISTRICT.

Laport Ct. Ia. Dec. 24. 1846.

Dear Brother Bassett: The good Lord in mercy to the people, Sinners as well Saints, has begun to revive his work, on this Laporte Circuit. At our Quarterly Meeting on the 12 & 13 inst we were favored with the presence & our zealous President, who gave us four Sermons right to the point, & we were aided with the efficient labors of Br. Oaks for most of two weeks so the best of all, the good Lord was with us, sinners trembled & saints rejoiced. About one dozen professed to find peace in believing, five of whom have united in church fellowship with us. And more of the remainder will do so at the next opportunity. I believe it is the determination of most if not all of the ministers within the bounds of this (Mich.) District to go into protracted efforts distinctly during the present winter for the Salvation of souls. And you need not marvel if our ink occasionally freezes or dries up. I hope we shall share in your most fervent prayers.

Yours affectionately

James Gay.

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 16, 1847.

☞Judge Harper, M. C. and Gen. Goddard, of the State Senate, will receive our thanks for further valuable Congressional and Legislative Documents, which they have had the kindness to to send us. Likewise B. F, Metcalf, Esq. of the House of Representatives, for a copy of the Report of the Institution for the Blind.

Ohio Deaf and Dumb Asylum.

The Twentieth Annual Report of the Trustees and Superintendent of this Institution, is replete with interest. An additional building having been recently completed, it is thought that ample accommodations can now be furnished to all suitable applicants. The Superintendent states that death has not entered the Asylum during the past session, and not even sickness in any form, except in one or two instances. This circumstance he records as cause of gratitude to the Almighty. The number of pupils now in the Institution is 103. An interesting review is taked of its origin and progress. In Dec. 1826, Gov. Morrow, in his Annual Message, at the suggestion of Rev. Dr. Hoge of Columbus, recommended the establishment or incorporation of the Deaf & Dumb Asylum. The suggestion found favor with both houses of the Legislature and a bill was passed to establish and locate such an Asylum at Columbus. The School exercises of the Asylum were commenced in October, 1829, in rented buildings, with three pupils. The number of pupils has been gradually increasing, till it has exceeded one hundred, the increase having been prevented till recently by want of accommodations. The whole number of names in the Register is 350.

"Pupils are admitted into the Asylum for one hundred dollars for the session of ten months, payable quarterly in advance. This sum covers all expense, except clothing, travelling expenses and medical attendance in sickness. The Annual session commences Oct. 1st, and ends Aug. 1st. It is strictly required that pupils begin with the session. Application for admission should be made to Rev. James Hoge, Sec. of the Board of Trustees, or to Mr. H. N. Hubbell the Principal. Testimonials of the suitableness of applicants are to be furnished by the Associate Judges of the County.

Ohio Institution for the Education of the Blind.

Mr. Chapin, the former Superintendent, found it necessary to resign his charge, at the close of the session. He however made out his last Annual Report, which is published with that of the Directors. He refers to three embarrassments which the Institution has to encounter, in reference to applications. 1. Children, too young. 2. Some whose object is to procure a comfortable home. 3. Others who are infirm or superannuated. Serious inconvenience has been experienced by such admissions. And Mr. C. recommends that all such applications be referred at once to the Trustees and Superintendent. In conclusion, Mr. C. submits a plan of an Asylum for the Industrious Blind. He recommends that it be located at Cincinnati, and embrace adult, male blind persons only. The object is to initiate such in some mechanical arts, and thus furnish them means of livelihood.

Mr. Penniman former assistant of Mr. Chapin, has temporary charge of the Institution since the resignation of the former, and submits also his Report. Since last Annual Report, 14 pupils have been honorably discharged, and one has died, viz. Thomas Phillips. Nineteen pupils have been received, and 66 are in actual attendance. Eight of the pupils are from Indiana, and are designed to form the nucleus of a sister Institution at Indianapolis. All the English branches are taught in the Institution, with vocal and instrumental music. Already have graduates been sent forth as teachers of music, and organists. The manual labor department, it is stated, is in successful operation. The Report of the Physician and ocalist, which is also appended, exhibits gratifying results of success, in several instances in restoring and improving right. The term of the Institution commences Oct. 1st. and closes Aug. 1st.

Rev Alfred Brunson.—This aged minister, it is known to many, was formerly connected with the Pittsburgh Conference, M. E. Church. But he has for several years past, been engaged as Missionary in the far off North West. We have just read an interesting letter from him in the last number of the Western C. Advocate, dated Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin, Nov. 16, 1846. He speaks of great afflictions in that new country. The companion of his long itinerant toils, was taken from him on the 20th of October. His daughter, a Mrs. Burnett, returned home, 18 miles, the day after her mother's burial, and was taken ill the same night. Her husband, Mr. B. member of the Convention to form a Constitution for the new State (Wisconsin) was sent for, and came home. Within two days, he himself was taken with the fever. Soon, his aged mother died, Nov. 1st. and then Mr. and Mrs. Burnett both died upon the 5th, in the same room, and within four hours of each other, and all within about two weeks after the death of Mrs. Brunson. The letter of Br. B. represents the last season as a remarkable one, for great heat, and unparalleled prevalence of sickness. He himself was brought low, and narrowly escaped death. He states that the thermometer ranged from 80 to 104, for four months. The river was remarkably low, exposing long submerged bottoms, and a South wind almost constantly swept up the valley of the Mississippi, bringing fatal maularia. He adds that notwithstanding the great heat, during the whole summer, thunder and lighning has been scarcely witnessed. These circumstances it is supposed conspired to produce a season of almost universal sickness. And yet Mr. B. writes that comparatively few have died. "But one or two families" he remarks, "have lost as many as mine."

No Rail Road from Baltimore to Pittsburgh.—A misunderstanding has occurred between the Directors of the Baltimore and Ohio Rail Road Company, and the Directors of the Pittsburgh and Connellsville Rail Road Company or at least they have failed to agree upon the terms of forming a junction. A chief point of disagreement seems to be that the Baltimore Company will permit a Virginia Company to construct a branch extending to some point on the Ohio river below Pittsburgh, as Wheeling, Fishing Creek or Parkersburgh, but will not permit the Pittsburgh Company to authorize any branch of of their road to be constructed leading to another point in Pennsylvania, without their consent. The Pittsburgers deem this unfair and entirely inadmissable. And the Gazette of that city says that 'the extinguisher has been put upon the last hope of any rail road connection with Baltimore.' And in relinquishing that hope, the same paper advises his Pittsburgh brethren to apply their energies and their capital to the construction of a Western Rail Road. In such case, our own State will doubtless take a deep interest in seconding the movement, whilst her western and southen portions will be all alive to the claims of the Parkersburgh route to Baltimore. Already we hear of subscriptions being open for the 'Belfre and Cincinnati Rail Road.' This is directly in view of a connection with Parkersburgh.

The German Reformers.—Rev. Dr. Kurtz, Editor of the Lutheran Observer, Baltimore, on the occasion of his attending the Evangelical Alliance last summer, also visited Germany, and acquainted himself with the position and history of the two reformers, Ronge and Czerski. It seems that the former was ruined by flattery. He was called a second Luther, and literally crowned with laurels and garlands. Wherever he went, processions were formed, with torch lights, music, banners, and sumptuous entertainments. Poor Ronge, was not able to stand such adulation. But, says Dr. K. a "second unfortunate circumstance was more deplorable than the first. Ronge fell into the hands of the so called 'Friends of Light,' an association in Germany who are rationalists, or rather irrationalists, or still more appropriately, infidels. These were the first to take Ronge by the hand—they coaxed, and caressed, flattered and fondled him," Sad to tell, they won him over to their 'dark light, their pseudo philosophy.' The contest was now raging between Ronge and popery is one of error in one form against error in another form.

Yet Dr. Kurtz represents that though Ronge is gone, helplessly gone, still all the good fruits of the Reform are not lost. Much good has resulted, and much more will result. More than 200 congregations have seceded from popery, and a goodly portion of the pastors and people are sound in faith, and it is hoped, practical believers in Christ.

Johannes Czerski, the other leading Reformer, resides in Posen, which was part of Poland, but is now embraced in Prussia. It seems that he was a little in advance of Ronge in abjuring the man of sin. Though for a time he was endangered by the error upon which Ronge split, yet fortunately for the cause of truth, he has escaped it, and his soundness of faith and practice is said to be beyond question. It is all a mistake that Czerski was denied a seat in the Evangelical Alliance. Dr. K. heard a discourse he delivered before a crowded assembly in London, from the words: "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Hundreds failed to get admission. Sixty or 70 ministers were there of all denominations, and the most intense interest was manifested. Dr. K. being familiar with the German language, noted down the whole discourse, as Rev. Mr. Hershell translated it sentence by sentence to the assembly.

In conclusion Dr. K. remarks, that the Christian world may rejoice that one of these remarkable men is safe though the other has fallen.

Rev. Edward Smith.—We are sorry to learn by the True Wesleyan, that this brother has lately met with a serious accident. A tree slipped from the stump, upon his foot, and buried it a foot in the ground. What a wonder the man did not lose his life. It is hoped that he will recover, even the use of his limb.

OHIO LEGISLATURE.

Mon. Jan. 4, 1847. House.—A resolution was pass passed, appointing Gen. J. J. Higging of Brown county, and J. H. Thompson of Highland county, as Commissioner, to carry into effect the resolution of Dec. 31st, requiring the remains of Gen. T. L. Hamer, to be brought from Mexico. to be interred in the soil of Ohio, and authorizing them to draw upon the Treasurer of State for the funds necessary.

In the afternoon, the Senators repaired to the Hall of the House, for the purpose of entering with that body into certain elections. The result was as follows:

J. J. Williams, Associate Judge of Marion county.

Benj. Neal, Associate Judge of Preble county.

William Reed, Associate Judge of Muskingum county.

John P. Fay, Associate Judge of Allen county.

T. Wentworth, and H. N. Curtiss, Associate Judges for Paulding county.

B. S. Cowen, President Judge for the 15th Judicial circuit.

E. B. Sadler, President Judge, for the 13th Judicial circuit.

Sat. 9. Senate. Quite a debate took place upon the House bill respecting removal of remains of Gen. Hamer. Several members opposed the measure, as establishing a bad precedent. But the bill was finally passed, Yeas, 19, Nays, 16.

The Inundation.—The beginning of the year 1847 will be long and seriously remembered by many on account of the remarkable and disastrous floods which have occurred. The principal destruction has taken place in the valleys of the Scioto, Great Miami, White Water, and White Rivers. We published some considerable accounts last week, and we this week give further details, taken from exchange papers. The Muskingum river was very high, but we believe that the citizens of Marietta did not suffer so seriously as we had apprehended. But slight injury was done to the public works on the Muskingum. We see that some of our northern streams also were flooded. A Mr. Abel was drowned at Bazetta, in Trumbull Co. Also, a stage with a mail and two horses were lost, between Warren and Wellsville.

A letter just received from Rev. C. H. Williams, Milroy, Rush Co. Indiana, brings us the additional account.

Jan. 4.

P. S. When I wrote the above the rain was falling in torrents. It commenced raining on Thursday and continued through Friday until near night when it cleared away—leaving the whole country more or less flooded, since then the waters have fallen and our country presents a scene of desolation. The oldest settlers say that the streams have never been so high by several feet since they have known them. Every thing like bridges is entirely gone, and travelling almost impossible. Fences buildings &c. have been swept away leaving cornfields &c. entirely exposed.

Slavery in Delaware.—It is said their are but 2000 slaves in Delaware. Many of its leading citizens are urging the abolition of slavery. The N. Y. Sun seconds the motion, telling them it would produce an emigration of northern farmers to that State. Certainly, it ought to be done.

Annual Register, M. P. Church.—The Boston Olive Branch has repeatedly paid a fine compliment to this little work. In the last paper, the President of the Conference announces it as a 'small, but valuable document, with which all our societies should be supplied, as it contains a vast amount of matter in a portable form, of great interest to our church. He states that a supply is to be had in Boston, and urges his brethren in the ministry to see that the churches are supplied. He adds, that they can be sent to them 'at the low price of $6 per hundred copies.' Here, we sell them at $3,50 per hundred.

The New York Legislature—Convened at Albany on the 5th inst. Gov. Young sent in his messsage, the reading of which was commenced at 20 minutes before 12, and by 3. P. M. the entire document was placed in possession of the N. York press, through the Telegraph, and by 4, o'clock, the N. Y. Sun, circulated it in an extral Wonderfull

No peace yet.—The N. Y. Sun had received N. Orleans papers as late as 2d inst. Advices had reached there of the action of the Mexican Congress. It is said that body has declared that no negociation for peace shall be had, until the American army and navy are withdrawn.

The Pennsylvania Legislature met on the 5th inst. Charles Gibbons was elected speaker of the Senate and J. Cooper, Speaker of the House. We have received in the papers of that State, the Message of Gov. Shunk, and will endeaver to give an abstract next week.

Presbyterian of the West.—We have heretofore expressed our high estimation of this exchange, as a religious newspaper. We now have to announce a change in the editorship of the Presbyterian. Rev. Mr. Dunlap, the former editor, we regret to say. has been obliged through serious affliction, to relinquish its control. The publisher informs us in his last number that 'from, and after date, the editorial department of the Presbyterian of the West, will be conducted by Rev. N. L. Rice, D. D. and Rev. S. R. Wilson.' Whilst our sympathies are elicited in behalf of the afflicted brother who has retired, we are gratified that his place is to be so creditably and advantageously filled. Dr. Rice is the gentleman who has attained some distinction by several public debates, one of which came off at Lexington, Ky. with Rev. A Campbell, and another in Cincinnati a year or two ago, with a Universalist gentleman. Rev. Mr. Wilson is son of the late Dr. J. L. Wilson, so long pastor of the 1st. Presbyterian Church in Cincinnati, and we believe he is his successor in the same charge.

Post Office Address of Itinerant Ministers and Preachers of the Western Conerences.

Pittsburgh District.

G Brown, Steubenville, O.
Jos Burns, Port Homer, Jefferson, O.
A Lister, Beverly, Randolph Co. Va.
V Lucas, Farmington, Fayette, Pa.
R H Walker, Big Skin Creek, Lewis, Va.
S Hazlett, Beeler's Station, Marshall, Va.
P T Laishley, Morgantown, Va.
N Gillespie, " "
D R Helmick, Fairmont, Marion, Va.
J I Stillians, Lorentz Store, Lewis, Va.
H Reger, West Milford, Harrison, Va.
G G Collins, Middlebourne, Tyler, Va.
N Watson, Wheeling, Va.
A J Waren, Glady Creek ⋈ Roads, Barbour, Va.
G Nestor, Frankfort, Greenbrier, Va.
J P Prickett, Ravenswood, Jackson, Va.
Wm Reeves, Pittsburgh, Pa.
Mrs. Asa Shinn, Allegheny, Pa.
J Robinson, " "
W H Doe, Sharpsburgh, Allegheny, Pa.
G B M'Elroy, Fallston, Beaver, Pa.
Wm Boardman, Washington, Pa.
J C Hazlett, " "
J Cowl, Eldersville, Washington, Pa.
W A Porter, Waynesburgh, Green, Pa.
R T Simonton, Cookstown, Fayette, Pa.
W Browning, Buchanon, Allegheny, Pa.

Muskingum District

W L Baldwin, Gnadenhutten, Tuscarawas, O.
N Linder, Harrisville, Harrison, O.
M Scott, Oak Hill, Jackson, O.
W B Moody, Richfield, Summit, O.
A R Brown, Fowler's Mills, Geauga, O.
E S Hoagland, New Athens, Harrison, O.
J Hambay, Warsaw, Coshocton, O.
W W Tipton, Jackson, Jackson, O.
S H Heath, Bricksville, Cuyuhuga, O.
J Jack, Lodi, Seneca, O.
W Hatfield, Centerburg, Knox, O.
C S Callihan, Putnam, Muskingum, O.
J Myres, " " "
C Springer, Meadow Farm, Muskingum, O.
W H Marshall, Zanesville, O.
R Andrew, Steubenville, O.
D B Dorsey, " "
Z Ragan, " "
J W Case, Plainfield, Coshocton, O.
John Baker, " " "
J H Hamilton " " "
I Thrap, Tiffin, Seneca, O.
G M Scott, " " "
A S Robinson, Bucyrus, Crawford, O.
J Nichols, Cambridge, Guernsey, O.
W Remsburg, " " "
O V Warren, M'Connellsville, Morgan, O.
J M Piper, " " "
T B Cushman, New Lisbon, Columbiana, O.
A Tracy, Mallet Creek, Medina, O.
N Burgess, Berlin, Mahoning, O.
D Richardson, " " "
C Caddy, Vienna, Trumbull, O.
S Gee, Youngstown, Mahoning O.
W Duling, Otsego, Muskingum, O.
W Maynard, Adams Mills, Muskingum, O.
J K Duffy, Perryton, Licking O.
J M Winn, Fairview, Guernsey, O.
H T Lawson, Woodsfield, Monroe, O.
J W Southard Malta, Morgan, O.
John Burns, Mt. Pleasant, Jefferson, O.
W Munhall, Brownsville, Licking O.
C J Sears, Chester Hill, Morgan, O.
T Potter, Mt. Vernon, Knox, O.
A Channel, Homer, Licking, O.
T Foster, New Haggerstown, Carroll, O.
S Elliott, Lee, Athens, O.

Ohio District.

R Dobbins, Washington, Fayette, O.
R K Davis, Rosedale, Madison, O.
J H Webster, South Solon, Madison, O.
W Tipton, Waterville, Lucas, O.
O Warrington, Wilhamsville, Clermont, O.
J White, Spring Valley, Green, O.
J Dalbey Jr., Cincinnati, O.
J B Peat Richwood, Union, O.
A M'Guire, Springfield, Clark, O.
O P Stephens, " " "
W Pelan, West Alexandria, Preble, O.
R Rose, Port William, Clinton, O.
D Moore, Brinton, Champaign, O.
A H Trumbo, Greenfield Highland, O.
W G Fowler, Hamersville, Brown, O.
J Hunt, Fletcher, Miami, O.
R M Dalbey, Lebanon, Warren, O.
L Ensminger, Russelvania Logan, O.
S P Kezerta, Holensburg, Darke, O.
J M Young, Spartansburg, Randolph, Ia.
Jonathan Flood, Fairview, Randolph, Ia.
A H Bassett, Putnam, Muskingum Co. O.

Indiana District.

W B Evans, Spencer, Owen, Ia.
W W Paul, Mt. Tabor, Monroe, Ia.
C H Williams, Millroy, Rush, Ia.
T Shipp, Edinburg, Johnson, Ia.
S Morrison, Freeport, Shelby, Ia.
H Brenton, Cataract, Owen, Ia.
G Wheatley, Graham, Jefferson, Ia.

Wabash District.

J Alter, Middle Fork, Clinton, Ia.
S W Widney, Peru, Miami, Ia.
R R Bailey, Prairieville, Clinton, Ia.
Jos. Shipp, Frankfort, Clinton, Ia.
Patterson Smith, Wabash, Wabash, Ia.
G Williams, Auburn, Dekalb, Ia.
J C Wright, Northfield Boon, Ia.
F Outcalt, Wilkshire, Van Wert, O.
H Beal, Monroe, Tippecanoe, Ia.

Michigan District.

L Smith, Pine Lake, Oakland, Mich.
J B Jewel, Rose, Oakland, Mich.
L Warren, Commerce, Oakland, Mich.
M Munn, Romeo, Macomb, Mich.
J Gay, Kingsbury, Laporte, Ia.

Illinois District.

J Clarke Jr., Rushville, Schuyler, Ill.

North Illinois District.

W E Martin, Newark, Kendall, Ill.
M Jared, Greenbush, Warren, Ill.
W H Miller, Peru, La Salle, Ill.
P J Strong, Magnolia, Putnam, Ill.
D Bagley, Princeton, Bureau, Ill.

The above list we have made out from our book, indicating the post offices to which the paper is sent for the respective brethren. It does not include all the travelling preachers, but those only who receive our paper. We have made it out, partly for our own conveniance, but chiefly to accommodate the request of a member of brethren, and we perhaps owe them an apology that, for want of time, we have not done it sooner. If any names are omitted it is accidental, and unintentional.

Whilst on the subject, we will state, that all the above named brethren are authorised to act as agents for the Western Recorder, and to collect the dues therefor.

Every itinerant minister or preacher, of any Annual Conference whatever whether embraced in the above list or not can have our paper at half price, i. e. one dollar per year. And every such minister or preacher who will collect for us as much as ten dollars shall have the paper for a year free of charge. These terms to itinerants are just twice as favorable, as the terms of the Methodist Protestant, or any other religious paper, within our acquaintance. And we had much rather the brethren would be active agents, and have the paper free, than to pay us the dollar. Every brother who collects $20 or more for the paper, within the year, shall not only have our warm thanks, but shall receive some literary premium, at least worthy of his acceptance, or if he choose, we will send a copy of our paper for a year to any friend he may designate, provided such friend is not already a subscriber.

Thomas Gough, and old, extensively known, and highly respected citizen of Albany N. Y. died in that city on Thursday last.

Bicknell's Reporter.—We feel in duty bound to express our tribute to the value of this sheet. It is a Philadelphia weekly of large size, furnishing a regular exhibit of commercial and statistical matters, of importance to business men, in endless variety and detail. It gives also a complete Bank note list, with a weekly exhibit of new counterfeits. In connection with the Reporter, is also published a semi-monthly Counterfeit detector, 32 pages, 8vo. The terms of the Reporter, are $3 per Annum. Two copies for $5. Of the Detector, (semi-monthly) $1 50 per An. Monthly, $1 00. Merchants, and tradesman generally would find it to their advantage to have "Bicknell." Address Matthew T. Miller, 20, S. 3d, street, Philadelphia.

Saturday Emporium.—This is a New York mammoth weekly sheet. It has commenced the new year, in a new dress, "not a type, rule or any thing else, ever having been in use before." The 'Emporium' is a very handsome and valuable newspaper, containing every variety of general reading, and general intelligence. We like especially its original poetry, a specimen of which we place before our readers this week, in our poetical department. Published by Wood and Company, 20, Ann St. N. York.

True Wesleyan.—This paper, the organ of the Wesleyan Methodist Connection, has just entered upon its fifth volume. We are pleased to see by the first No. that the editor, Br. Lee, has essentially improved the appearance, and the intrinsic value of his sheet, by arranging its reading matter in departments. This suits our taste, and we trust we shall find an increased interest in the weekly perusal of the 'Wesleyan.' We take but a limited satisfaction in looking over a paper which is one continued Miscellany, from beginning to end. Yet we receive some excellent papers of this very kind.

Protestant Monitor.—This paper last week come to us enlarged. It is published at Greenville, Illinois, and is devoted partly to the interests of the M. P. Church, and is we believe, partially under the patronage of the Illinois Conference. Br. E. M. Lathrap, Editor, J. Waite Assistant. A year ago, we were requested to exchange with this paper, and have ever sent ours with regularity. But from some cause, the Monitor does not reach us no more than half the time. How is this?

Telegraph again.—We gave a statement last week of the completion of this great work to Pittsburgh, and referred to the increased importance of the press of that city, giving us the news, "received by lighting, printed by steam." And withal we spoke a good word for our esteemed exchange the Pittsburgh Gazette. The Commercial Journal, which also, as well as the Gazette, has made arrangements to receive regular telegraphic despatches, brings us the latest intelligence from the eastern cities, but states that the telegraphic line was not in operation east of Harrisburgh on the 5th inst. several of the poles between that city and Lancaster having been carried away by the freshet. We learn also that some obstruction had occured on the line between Philadelphia and Washington, and that the cars likewise had been detained by ice. The "Journal" is a good newspaper, published weekly at $2 per annum.

The Markets.

Wheat is selling in Zanesville 50 cts.; flour $3,25.

At Cincinnati, on the 11th, flour was worth $3,-80, pork, $3,80.

United Brethren.—We learn by the Religious Telescope that the Muskingum Conference of the Church of the United Brethren in Christ, holds its annual session at Union Chapel, near Massilon, Ohio, commencing February 18th, 1847.

Death of a Unitarian Minister.—The Star in the West announces the death of Rev. C. G. Fenner, pastor of the Unitarian Church in Cincinnati, which took place on the 3d, inst.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Death of Gen. T. L. Hamer.—It is with sincere regret that we announce the demise of Brig. Gen. Thomas L. Hamer, of the Ohio Volunteers. He died of inflammation of the bowels, at Montery, after an illness of not more than two days. His death will carry sorrow wherever announced, to all who knew him—and who in Ohio did not know somthing of Thomas L. Hamer? He was one of Ohio's ablest and most favorite sons.—While in Congress he held a rank second to no one of his political party in the House of Representatives. In debate, he was clear, forcible, and persuasive. On the breaking out of the war with Mexico, he enrolled himself as a volunteer, and was mustered into service we think as a private soldier. In the latter part of June, he was elected Major of the 2d Regiment Ohio Volunteers, at Camp Washington, and soon after received the appointment of Brigadier General from the President. He is said to have made such proficiency during his short career as to give high promise for future fame. But he has fallen in the midst of his glory! At the late election, while he was in a foreign country, he was chosen to represent his district in the next Congress without opposition.

The death of Mr. Hamer was this morning announced in the Senate by Mr. Goddard, and and in the House of Representatives by Mr. Ellison, of Brown county—whereupon both Houses adjourned until Saturday morning.

The Supreme Court in Bank being in session the death of Mr. Hamer was announced by Mr Johnson, of the Highland Bar—and the court thereupon adjourned, and a meeting of the Bar ensued, in which Mr. Ewing presided.

Alas! poor Hamer.

Sad Accident.—A Member of the Du Quesne Grays Drowned.—We are pained to hear that Mr Kelly, of the Du Quesne Grays, was drowned in the Mississippi, while the New England was proceeding to New Orleans. Mr. K., it is supposed stepped overboard during the night. He was Prosecuting Attorney for the county of Indiana but resigned his office to serve as a private soldier among the brave volunteers. He was quite a young man.—P. Com. Jour.

Be temperate, an your physician shall look in vain for your name on his day-book.

Massacre of the Nestorian Christians.

We learn says the New York Courier, through the correspondence of the London Morning Chronicle from Constantinople, that another terrible massacre has occured amongst the Nestorians.—In his letter bearing date Nov. 7, he says that the fact of such an event having occured was known at Constantinople, but great pains were taken to conceal the particulars. In his letter of the 9th he gives further details. About a month before, Beker Khan Bey, knowing that the efforts of the Turkish Government to thwart his design must prove futile collected various detachments of troops under the command of the Beys of Hukkarai and Beyari and himself taking command of a large body of Kurds, marched into the country of the Nestorians. Knowing that he would meet with no resistance, he divided his force into small bands, and sent them in various directions to fall on the defenceless Nestorian villages. Of the result of this expedition, the correspondent gives the following details.

Thirty-six of these villages at the least, have been thus made the scenes of the most harrowing wholesale murders. To speak of their having been sacked, plundered and burnt to the ground would be to draw attention to an incident of small importance in the face of the greater horrors which these bloody barbarians committed. Men, women and children crying for mercy; the women and children, in the agonies of terror, were put to death by every species of torture which cruelty could invent. Happy were those who were shot or who fell by the sword, who had not their bowels ripped out of them while living, or who were not impaled amidst the shouts and laughter of the murderers. Two of the bishops of the Nestorians if not more, were impaled, and several of the priests. What impaling is, I suppose your readers understand. But that was not the worst torture that was inflicted. Children were torn from their mothers, some from their mothers breasts and in presence of their mothers, were obliged screaching, to look on, put in the most shocking manner to death. The mothers afterwards were sacrified. The youth of both sexes underwent sacrifices which cannot be mentioned, before their throats, in disgust and satiety, were cut.

The pen refuses to record more of these atrocities, though I might go on, and allude to abominations of cruelty, and worse than cruelty; which call for a retribution as nearly equal of their bestial ruthlessness in severity as can be inflicted.—Three thousand of the Nestorians have perished in this massacre, on the lowest calculation. The most extensive slaughter took place at a large village or township, called Lias, where Beder Khan Bey was himself present where the two bishops were impaled, from this place were sent the three hundred heads (pickled) to the Pacha of Moussoul with the insulting message, that if the Porte presumed to molest the sender, he should send to Constantinople, instead of Nestorian Turkish heads enough to make a pyramid.

Whilst these things were happening a council over which the Nestorian Patriarch who has escaped from Moussoul, presides, was held at a town called, if I recolect right, Artchy, one of the principal Nestorian settlements. Here it was determined that, as resistance was valor, the whole people of the Nestorians should emigrate without an hours delay into Persia, where a numerous body of their countrymen are sculed on the banks of the lake of Oroomiah—

The execution of this design was however, difficult, perilous and disastrous. The fugitives were obliged to leave behind them all their property; most of them crossed the mountains in straggling, frighted, wretched bands. But one corps of emigrants stronger than the others commadded I am told, by the patriarch, was attacked on their passage by the soldiers of Beder Khan Bey. After an obstinate conflict, in which many fell on both sides, the Nestorians gained the victory.

But the whole mountain district of Kurdistan on the Turkish side, is at this moment filled with houseless, famished wanderers, hiding themselves in dens and caves, under all the worst circumstances & guises of misery, from their pursuers. Beder Khan Bey swore, before he started on his expedition, with all the solemnities of his creed before two Imaums, that he would exterminate the whole Nestorian people: and all of them who have not strength to reach Persia will certainly experience the full realization of this oath.

THE NESTORIAN MASSACRE.—Perhaps no circumstance since the Bartholomew massacre, in France, or the persecutions for conscience sake in England, has elicited such a commingled feeliing of commiseration and indignation as the late massacre of Nestorian Christians. For that community, whose antiquity enforces from us a veneration much akin to what we pay the remnant of the Israelites, this country had a deep and abiding interest. Since the visit of the worthy Nestorian bishop Mar Yohonnah, in company with Mr. Perkins, a few years ago, great interest has been felt and expressed for that worthy people. Turkey is pestered with a military chieftan who numbers so strong a force that his government cannot in the least restrain or check his marauding and bloody career. Beder Khan Bey, with his 4,000 Curds in four parties, ransacked the country of the peaceful Nestorians, setting fire to their villages, in October, ripping open the bowels of the old men and women, impaling their bishops and priests; tearing children from the breasts of their mothers and putting them to cruel deaths, ravishing the maidens, then in satiated passion, cutting their throats. In this way fell some thousands of the unoffending Nestorians. The fiend then ordered three hundred heads to be pickled, and sent to the Pacha of Moussoul, threatning that if the Porte presumed to molest the sender he would send to Constantinople instead of Nestorian, Turkish heads enough to make a pyramid. What shall be done with such a fiend? Turkey, of which country he is a subject, it afraid of him. Persia, well disposed to the Nestorians, is unable to avenge their God-invoking slaughter. If there never was before a justification for a crusade of nations here is one. This outcry is one that calls for aid. This act of the bloody Turk is one that would warrant as a righteous act the union of all Christendom to avenge them, and since Turkey is unable to chastise her rebellious subject, she may yet learn that the cry of violated humanity may transfer this right to inflict puuishment into hands able to do it.—N. Y. Sun.

OUR BOAT BUILDING.—We publish our usual statement of the boats built and regestered in Pittsburgh during the year just closed. The result is gratifying, Fifty-three steam boats completed and cleared from our wharves, with an aggregate tonnage of 8551 tons, producing to our mechanics in this city and vicinity the handsome sum of $684,080.

Besides these 53 boats, completed and registered, we have nearly completed or complete and not yet registered, lying at the wharf 10 more, chiefly large boats, two of them, Hibernia No. 2 and New England No. 2, 225 and 220 feet long Cincinnati packets. Another month will clear the whole of them out, and we can then say that, Pittsburgh has turned out 63 Steam Boats in 13 months!

Of course we are foremost of all cities in the Union in steamboat building.

MORE OF THE FLOOD.

The Chillicothe Gazette says:

'Within the memory of the oldest inhabitant, the stream of the Scioto has never been so much swollen as at present. The island opposite this city is completely submerged, and the waters are running over the Maysville turnpike, at the eastern end of the bridge, deep enough to swim a horse. Last night, the old frame mill, called 'Massleman's,' which was built on the first settlement of the country, floated down bodily, and lodged against the Scioto bridge. D. Adams lost 100 acres of shocked corn, and George Wood 1500 bushels. It is also stated that Alex. Renick has lost enough corn to feed 200 cattle all winter. This morning, the settlers on the Station Prairie were obliged to resort to boats to get about. The loss of corn, along the river, must be great indeed, and there is a rumor that the dam at Circleville, belonging to the State, is gone.'

From the Cleveland Herald.

DESTRUCTION OF BRIDGES.—The flood of the 1st has made bad work with bridges in this quarter. We understand all the bridges, six or seven in number, have been swept away between this city and Akron, and one across the Cuyahoga near Troy, Geauga county. Two bridges over Rocky River, between Olmstead and the mouth have been swept away, and some 40 feet of the bridge near the mouth is gone. The bridge will probably be repaired in a few days, and light teams now cross the ferry. The express from the west had a narrow escape. The horses were led safely across the bridge, and while two men were taking the express wagon across, the alarm was given that the bridge was falling. The man at the tongue just succeeded in reaching terra firma as the bridge fell behind him. The wagon and man pushing it were left on the standing part.

From the Mt. Vernon Banner.

Owl Creek never was known to be so high for the last twenty-five years as it was on New Year's night. Considerable damage has been done, the full extent of which has not yet been ascertained.

The rain had been falling for several days and night, and I learn that the mill dams of D. S. Norton, J. Banning, Eli Miller, and several others in the neighborhood of Fredricktown, have either been entirely carried off, or so much injured, that it will take several weeks before they can all be rebuilt or repaired. The mill dam at the old Morrison place, has been carried entirely away. The foot bridge across the creek at the foot of Main street is also gone. This will be a great inconvenience to some, and a benefit to others.

From the Cincinnati Gazette of the 7th inst.

The River is still rising at this point, there being about three feet water on the side walk corner of Main steet and the landing. It rose about an inch an hour yesterday, but has caused no material damage, nor interrupted the active business now going on at the landing. As it had fallen about two feet at Pittsburgh at the last accounts, it must soon come to a stand here:

SIX PERSONS DROWNED NEAR VEVAY.—On the 1st of January six porsons left Vervay Island in a small skiff, about 8 o'clock in the evening, to go to the Kentucky shore, the wind blowing very fresh. It is believed they were all drowned, as no tidings have been received from any one of the party since.

We obtain this intelligence from Mr. Walton Craig, of Ghent, Ky., whose father and brother were in the skiff, and are missing. Mr. C. entertains no doubt that the whole party were drowned.

Benjamin Craig, senior aged 70 years, 6 feet in height, sandy complexion; had on a black box coat and cloth vest, with red sleeves. Silas L. Craig, aged 24 years, had on a suit of blue mixed jeans.

A Mr. Howard and another white man (a fisherman, name unknown) with two negroes composed the missing party.

Mr. Walton Craig, living at Ghent, will give a reasonable reward to any person who will convey the bodies of his relatives, should they be found, to his residece for interment.

Mr. Craig, we hear it said, was owner of Vevay Island and well known to our older citizens.—Cin. Enquirer.

ANTI-SLAVERY SERMON IN MARYLAND.—A correspondent of the New York Tribune gives the following account of an anti-slavery sermon, preached in the city of Baltimore, Md. It is cheering to the friends of humanity to learn, that there are some faithful watchmen on the walls of Zion, men who are not afraid to preach the whole truth. Only let the word of the Lord have free course in the Southern States, and the empire of Slavery will soon be shaken to its centre—an unadulterated Gospel and slavery are as incompatible as light and darkness.

"On last Sabbath morning, for the first time, I attended the Methodist Church, corner of Charles and Fayette streets; the preacher (Rev. Mr. Coffee) took for his text, Mathew, 7th chapter, 12th verse; generally termed the "Golden Rule." Never did watchmen on the tower more faithfully acquit himself of his duties. My heart glowed with rapture as the "man of God" hypothetically reversed the relative position of slave and slave holder. The masterly effort rent to atoms the flimsy covering with which professing Christians could possibly invest the inhuman and unnatural practice; while the chaste and graphic appeals to every man's conscience in the sight of God thrilled through every nerve. This, before a congregation regarded as the 'upper ten' of Baltimore, is indeed 'A change come o'er the spirit of our dream.'

The American prisoners who were returned from San Luis Potosi by orders of Santa Anna, in consideration of Gen. Taylor having liberated the Mexican prisoners taken at Monterey, are now at Saltillo. At San Luis, (says the N. O, Picayune,) they were placed in the barracks with the 11th Mexican infantry, and very kindly treated, the Government allowing them 25 cents a day to purchase their provisions, but the colonel of the regiment gave them rations, and told them to use the money as they pleased. A Mexican soldier attended to their wants; with orders that he should bring or purchase any thing they desired. The day before they left, they were permitted to go through the city wherever they pleased, with a guard to conduct them. The enemy were digging an entrenchment all around the city. An outbreak had taken place at or near the city of Mexico, and seven regiments had been dispatched by Santa Anna to quell it. The situation of the Mexican finance, and their want of means to carry on the war, are shown by the fact that the soldiers, who had within a very short time received 12½ cents every morning, when these prisoners left were receiving but 6¼ cents per day. They also heard that Gen. Ampudia was in irons in the city of Mexico, and that Arista had been released, but has refused to take part in the present contest. They learned that the lad Hill, who was taken with the Mier prisoners, is living near San Luis, the protege of Count Jarnal, the richest man in Mexico. This count lately made a present of 1500 head of horses to the Mexican army. —N. Y. Sun.

A SON of Mr. Wm. Karns, Post Master of Allegheny, was severely injured in the face and hands, by the explosion of gun pewder.

[From the Cincinnati Commercial.]

The Western Telegraph Company.

Various rumors being in circulation respecting the formation of a company, or of companies, to connect this city with Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, Boston, &c., via Wheeling and Pittsburgh, and with New Orleans, and St. Louis via Louisville, the position of the undesigned renders proper for him to state such facts in regard to the extension of the Telegraph lines as are of immediate interest to the people of the Mississippi Valley.

He has obtained a legal transfer from the Patentees, of their right to construct a line, or lines of Magnetic Telegraph, conecting the cities of Washington, Baltimore and Philadelphia, westward, with Harrisburgh, Pittsburgh, Cumberland, Wheeling, via Columbus to Cincinnati, Louisville Nashville, &c., to New Orleans, and from Louisville to St. Louis, and from Columbus to Cleveland.

He is authorized to form a company, (and will proceed to do so immediately) to be known as "THE WESTERN TELEGRAPH COMPANY," for the purpose of rising the necessary funds, to construct the above named places, and all intermediate points, of sufficient importance to require an office. The construction, including batteries, and things necessary for working Morse's Electro Magnetic Teegraph, is not to exceed $125 per mile for one wire, and $35 per mile for each additional wire. The whole distance will fall short of two thousand miles, and consequently the entire cost will be less than $250,000;—a very small sum for such an important work.

A Line of Telegraph is already built and in operation from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh, and provision is made in my articles of agreement with the Patentees, to allow the stockholders, by subscribing their names to the articles of the agreement of "The Western Telegraph Company," to become stockholders in it, upon the same terms and condilions of original subscribers. The Patentees contend, (and I have no doubt correctly) that the line from Pitsburgh to Philadelphia has been built in violation of their rights, and without their authority;—and hence it will be treated by them, and those acting under their legal authority, as spurious, unless the stockholders become absorbed in "The Western Telegraph Company," and till they do become so absorbed.

My agreement with the Patentees stipulates for the completion of the contemplated work within two years from the first of January, 1847, but if no unforseen obstacles should present themselves it is my intention to have it done at a much earlier day.

As soon as a proper organization is made, persons duly authorized to act, will visit the different cities and towns upon the proposed lines, to solicit their friendly co-operation in raising a share of the necessary funds. Pittsburgh, New Orleans and St. Louis being three of the most important points, and most deeply interested will not it is presumed, be a whit behind Cincinnati in the substancial promotion of this great work.

The interruption of the Eastern lines will be avoided upon this line, by using iron, wire instead of copper, and of three times the size, and nine times the strength; and by using greater care in the insolation.

In fact, the frail copper wire used upon the Eastern lines, first constructed, is now being replaced by a substancial iron cord, or wire, of sufficient strength to resist the storms, and especially the ice, that have heretofore broken it to pieces, and interrupted communication.

The productiveness of capital invested in important lines of Telegraph, and their great public utility are now no longer debateble questions; and it will be but a brief period before communications will pass with the speed of lightning over and through the whole extent of our vast territory, from North to South, and from East to West, cementing more and more strongly, the bonds of Union, and holding aloft, with firmer nerves, and stronger grip, the Star Spangle Banner, the glory of American freemen, and the admiration of the millions throughout the world.

ELIPHALET CASE, jr.

THE FRESHET AT ST. MARYS.—The loss to the state on the canals is immense. We have been favored with the following extract of a letter from St. Marys to a friend in this city:—'We have the greatest freshet here now that we have had since 1815. The 1st of January, 1847, was a day long to be remembered by the present residents of this region. The water has not fallen yet so that any estimate of the damage can be made; but on one thing you may depend, viz: that the legislature has got to make an appropriation, from this to the the junction, of at least $50,000. The canal is literally to pieces. Our bridge here has gone, and how many more I cannot tell, for no person can get here or away. The farms on the rivers are perfectly barren—not a fence to be seen on them.'

SAD END OF A PLEASURE PARTY.—A short time since a party of five ladies and five gentlemen went from Lima, La Grange county, Indiana, to 'Union Mills,' in the same county, to attend a ball. On their return, being together, in a lumber wagon, they had proceeded but a mile, when a party on horseback overtook them, and a race commenced. The 'Cold-water Sentinel' thus describes the result. 'The horsemen put spurs to their horses, and the rainsman put whip to his, and when under full headway, the night being dark, the front wheels of the wagon struck a stump, and the passengers and the box of the wagon were thrown some thirty-five feet from the stump against which the wheel first struck. One lady struck a tree distant 30 feet, and broke her neck, and died instantly. One man had his ribs broken and was so seriously injured that he died the day following. Another of the company, a young lady, was so seriously injured that her life was despaired of when our informant left. A fourth one, a female, seriously, and five of the other six more or less injured.'

SERIOUS ACCIDENT.—On Sunday week, the roof of the Bapiist meeting house in Duncanville, Pa. was entirely lifted off and the gable end blown in, severely injuring four individuals in the gallery, and others.

RAIL ROADS IN THE UNITED STATES.—The total length of railway now actually constructed and in operation in the United States, amounts to a little over 5000 miles, of which 500 consists in short lines connected with coal companies and private establishments; leaving 4500 miles of swift steam conveyance. In the construction of rail roads, and the electric telegraph, the United States are far in advance of Europe, in proportion to population.

MELANCHOLY LOSS OF LIFE.—The mail stage from Montreal for Bytown, in attempting to cross the Grand River on the ice at midnight on the 24th Dec., ran into a hole, and drowned the two passengers, named Mr. R. Cumming, and Mr. Cowan. It was wrong to cross the ice in the night.

DARK DAY OF 1846 IN LONDON.—It was so dark in London, says an exchange, on the 26th of November, that it was impossible to write without artificial light.

Hon. Theodore Frelinghuysen has been elected President of the American Peace Society, the last incumbent, Samuel E. Cones, Esq., of Portsmouth having resigned.

A SENSIBLE REMARK.—An exchange paper remarks: "It is a settled principle with us, not to trouble ourself with the affairs of men who have neither the honor, nor yet the honesty, to pay the postage on letters relating to their own business."

FIRST THINGS.—The first Roman Catholic establishment in the United States was in Maryland, under Calvert, son of Lord Baltimore, in 1634.

The first Episcopalians that came to the United States were among the setlers of Jamestown, Va., having their pastor, Mr. Hunt, with them.

The first Presbyterian church in the United States was at Philadelphia, in 1703; and the first Presbytery was organized the following year.

MAJOR DOWNING'S VIEWS ON FIGHTING.—Here is what the celebrated Major Jack Downing said several years ago, on the subject of fighting. True as preaching, is n't it?

"In the matter of fighting, there is one thing I always keep my eyes on, and I fouud Gen. Jackson of the same way of thinking, and that is, to depend less on folks who say hey are ready to shed the last drop of their blood, than on folks who are ready to shed the first drop. Give a man eight dollars a day to make speeches in Congress, with the right of free postage, and you hear enough of the 'last drop' matters; when it comes to camp duty, then the 'first drop' folks have to stand the rack at eight dollers a month.

Three Irishmen were hilled on the 21st inst., on the Lowell Railroad, by the falling in of an embankment. Their names were Arthur Spring, James Hurley, and John Sullivan.

SUDDEN DEATH.—Captain Smith, of the barque Kennebec, of Waldoborough, Maine, suddenly fell dead on the quarter deck, on the 28th of October, in the harbor of Rio de Janeiro. The Kennebec had just arrived from Rio Grande do Sul.

ACCIDENT.—A child, daughter of Mr. William Adams, of Bridgewater, Fayette county, was killed on New Year's day, by the discharge of a gun in the hands of a boy about 9 years old. The children were playing, when the boy pointed the gun, not knowing it was loaded, saying: "I'll shoot you, Jeanie." Unfortunately the gun was loaded; and the contents entering the head of the child, she died in a few hours. She was between three and four years of age.

We are glad to see the determination of Congress to preserve the sanctity of the Capital, from the sale of intoxicating drinks. The motion by Mr. Hamlin of Maine does him honor. The dignity of the Senate makes the sanction of that body, to this resolution sure. We rejoice that we are saved by this noble act, the pain of again calling attention to this subject. God save the United States.—Fountain.

A serious fire occurred at Trenton N. J. on morning of the 23d.

NOTICES.

MY DEAR BR. BASSETT: As the health of my family had improved a little, when I left home, the last day of the past year, I have concluded to publish my appointments, for February and March:

Brownsville	Ct.	7th of	February
George Creek	"	14th	"
Morgantown	"	21th	"
Union	St.	28th	"
Connelsville	Ct.	7th	March
Fayette	"	14th	"

The above appointments, I will fill if my own health, and that of my family, will allow. The Superintendents will please make their own arrangments, as to additional help, and give me information through the Recorder, or by letter, at Cookstown Fayette Co. Pa. in relation to the points where they expect me to labor.

Are our Superintendents attending to the order of the Conference, in relation to the collection for Br. Shinn? Come brethren: gratitude for past services, sympathy for a deeply afflicted brother—the justice and mercy of the New Testament, all require you to act promptly in this case—you yourselves may be afflicted before long and you would not be pleased, if the church were to forsake or neglect you in the dark hour of distress. Will not our brethren in sister conferences lend a helping hand, in this case? It is true Br. Shinn's membership is in the Pitsburg Conference, but it is no less true, that his labors as a leading Reformer, have made him the property of the whole church. All should do a little for his support, while under his present severe afflictions.

What are our brethren doing for the Aid Society? Should not each preacher begin in time? Now brethren, get a book to enter names in, then as you go round your circuits, detain your congregations, saints, sinners—all. Bring the subject up, get as many annual and life members, as you can. Collect the money and bring on to Conference? Much can be done, if a fair trial be made. A provision must be made for our superannuated ministers, &c. or evil will result to our connection. O for energy in the good cause! God bless the brethren in their good efforts.

Yours truly, GEO. BROWN.

Jacob Brown's, Brook co. Va. Jan. 6, 1846.

BELMONT CIRCUIT.—Our second quarterly meeting will be held at Wrightstown, Belmont Co. commencing on the 30th inst. at 11 o'clock. Brethren will please recollect I am alone, and not having received Elder's Orders, and therefore cannot have the communion service, unless some brethren qualified come to our help. Will Brs. J. Nichols, Z. Ragan, N. Linder, H. T. Lawson, favor us with their presence & aid on the occasion? J. M. WINN.

COLUMBIA CIRCUIT.—Our second quarterly meeting wil be held on the 20th and 21st of February, at Pleasant Hill meeting house, 7 miles west of the town of Athens. We invite Brs. M. Scott, W. W. Tipton, C. J. Sears, and we promise our aid on any occasion, when timely notice shall have been given. We ask an interest in the prayers of all, that we may on that occasion have the presence of the Great Head of the Church.

S. ELLIOTT.

FROM PRESIDENT OF MUSKINGUM CONFERENCE.

BR. BASSETT: You will please announce, that if able, I will visit Steubenville station the last Sunday in January; and Wellsville circuit the first Sunday of February.

GEO. CLANCY, Pres.

BUCYRUS CIRCUIT, MUS. CON.—Our second quarterly meeting will commence Jan. 23d. We invite Brethren P. Inskeep, J. Atherston, W. Hatfield, A. K. Earl, J. Jack, I. Thrap, and G. M. Scott. Come brethren, and help us, disappoint us not. Our meeting is to be at Bucyrus. Br. Hatfield is informed that another meeting on hand prevents me from attending his. Let not this hinder you from attending ours.

A. S. ROBINSON

PENNVILLE CIRCUIT.—The second quarterly meeting will be held at the Mt. Zion Chapel, commencing, Friday, Feb. 12, 1847. We invite Brs. Potter and Hatfield with any others of our local or travelling brethren who can attend, to come and aid us, and let all who cannot attend, help us by your prayers.

C. J. SEARS.

[N. B. Is not that a good notice? Ed]

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT.

LETTERS RECEIVED.

H. Springer, J. Cornwell, W. B. Moody, J. W. Blair. P. M. L. Smith, 1 sub. A. H. Trumbo, A. R. Brown, F. Swift, J. Gay, C. S. Sears, 10 subs, that's the brother. R. M'Cracken, S. Hazlett, 1 sub. G. Conklin, G. Brown, Jos. Burns, James Downing, H Reger, W. Maynard, J. M. Winn, G. W. Lorentz, C. H. Williams, 2, S. Lancaster.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

From.	For.	Pays to Vol.	No.	$ cts
H. Springer,		8	52	2 00
J. Cornwell,		8	52	2 00
L. Smith, Mich.	M. Munn,	9	13	1 00
N. Baker,	F. Swift,	8	52	2 00
C. J. Sears, (club)	Eli Mills,	9	14
"	G. Wolfe,	9	14
"	Th. Worrall,	9	14
"	John Boileau,	9	14
"	Jos. Boileau,	9	14	$15,
"	Adam Barton,	9	14
"	Milton Porter,	9	14
"	H. Parker,	9	14
"	S. Parker,	9	14
"	W. Harris,	9	14
"	J. Naylor,	7	52	1 00
R. M'Cracken, Ia.		9	3	2 00
Jos. Burns, Va.	J. L. Diselm,	7	52	2 00
G. W. Lorentz, Va.		9	17	2 00
R. H. Walker, Va.	Geo. R Jackson,	7	26	1 00
C. H. Williams, Ia.	Th. Hansell,*	7	52	2 00
Eli Thomas,		8	52	2 00
Hugh Brown,		8	26	2 00
O. White,	J. Boilen,	8	16	2 00

*Br. H. is two vols. behind with Br. Springer.

New Subscribers this week 13. Discontinuances, 4.

Br. W. B. Moody, we credited J. W. to No. 36. Vol. 8. which is 52 numbers from the beginning of his time: i. e. from No. 37, Vol. 7. We have sent regularly for 6 weeks to C. Hinkley. Strange that he does not receive. Have we the name right? We put it as it was given us. Trust that he has got the paper before now.

Br. L. Smith, as you are doing what you can for our paper. we agree to do as you say. Much obliged.

Br. C. J. Sears, B. G. owes for 75 numbers. $3, from him will do. Please tell Br. N. give us a little time, and we will try and effect the desired arrangement. We send 30 more phamphlets, by mail to Morganville as requested.

Br. S. Hazlett, we certainly never heard from you since Conference, till now, or your request would have been complied with. From some cause, the letter you refer to never reached us.

Br. J. Downing, you will learn by our published list the address of J. B. We have no knowledge of the three letters, or the $3, you say you forwarded. It must have been before we took charge of the the establishment. We certainly have received no remittance from you, on vol. 7 or 8.

Received for Annual Register.

W. H. Marshall,	$1,00
Jos. White,	2,00
John Burns,	2,00
A. R. Brown,	1,00
C. J. Sears,	1,00
Joseph Burns,	1,00
J. M. Winn,	1,00
S. Lancaster,	2,00

ANNUAL REGISTER 1847.—Our edition of 5,200 copies is running short. But like the Razor Strop Man, we have 'a few more left' which we will be pleased to send out to those who order them. G. Conclin, Cincinnati, and C. Craig, Pittsburgh, have each also a small lot to dispose of.

By the by, this little publication cost us considerably more than one hundred dollars, cash, notwithstanding the job was executed at our own office. Those therefore who have received their pamphlets as ordered, will greatly oblige us by forking over the dimes. We are anxious to be out of debt. Much obliged to those who have been prompt in paying.

LIST OF LETTERS

Remaining in the Post Office at Putnam, Muskingum Co. Ohio, on the first of January, 1847.

A
Armstrong Thomas

B
Butler Abram
Browne C M
Bradshaw Robert
Baire John
Brown Ann D

C
Chase W D
Cassiday Hugh
Caton G W

D
Dutton Isaac
Dixon Permelia
Dozer George

F
Frantom Jane
Fulton Dennis
Fletcher Andrew
Fountain Harriet

G
Guy Henrietta
Graham N W

H
Hatter John
Hart Elizabeth
Harris Edward
Hosmer S R
Hammond James
Hough J John

J
Jones Catharine

K
Kitchens John

L
Lumb Abram

M
Morgan George

P
Pennine Cannah
Pensinger Susan
Pain John
Putnam Douglass
Pierce Elizabeth

R
Rambo Peter
Ripley Wm
Russel James
Rees I N

S
Slack Rachael
Searl C W
Stockdale John Jr

W
Welch Katharine
Wharton Elibabeth

J. ELDER, P. M.

COME AND SEE!!

THE SUBSCSIBERS offer very low for CASH, STONE WARE or COUNTRY PRODUCE,

35 pieces assorted Cloths, very low,
20 " Jeans,
300 " Prints, cheaper than ever,
100 " Merinos, Alpaccas, De Laines, &c.,
50 " Tweeds and Cassinets,
25 " Flannels,
22 " Check.

Boots, Shoes, Queensware, Groceries, and a great variety of goods not mentioned.

In a word, they have on hand a LARGE STOCK of goods, which they

WISH TO SELL.

To sell them, they must be sold CHEAP, this they will do. J. C. GUTHRIE & SONS, successors to GUTHRIE'S & BUCKINGHAM.

P.S. We will say to Potters engage not your ware before calling on us. We are dealing EXTENSIVELY in that article, and are determined to buy it on such terms as will prove satisfactory. J. C. G. & S's.

Putnam, O. Jan. 1, 1847.

THE CHEAPEST AND BEST.

New Prospectus for the Year 1847.

FORTY-EIGHT large octavo Pages, and Fifteen Engravings in each No. Published on the first of every month.

Fourth Volume commences in January, 1847.

The No. for Jan. contains a "Pictorial Description of the State of Ohio," elegantly Illustrated with American views, &c. &c.

Other States will appear in subsequent Nos. of the Work.

Robert Sears, 158 Nassau-street, New York, will hereafter furnish his new

Pictorial and Illustrated Family Magazine for 1847, in all respects equal to the Three-Dollar Magazines, at the low price of only one dollar and a half per annum.

Any person sending Five Dollars, shall receive five copies of the magazine for one year, as he shall direct.

All subjects which will admit of it, will be illustrated with engravings. The whole number of the engravings at the conclusion of the volume will amount to several hundred.

Great inducement to subscribe.

We offer to all persons becoming subscribers, a copy of our new work, just published, entitled the Pictorial Description of Great Britain and Ireland.

Containing 262 Views of the Principal Cities, Towns, Castles, Abeys, Costumes, &c. &c., of the Fatherland: a larger number of Engravings than can be found in any book of double the price—or to those who prefer it, the

Pictorial History of the American Revolution,

(Embellished with an original portrait of Washington, by Chapman, and more than 160 other engravings, 430 pp. 8vo.) for every new subscriber, with two dollars enclosed, free of postage.

Any person procuring ten subscribers, and sending eleven dollars shall receive ten copies of the Magazine, and any one of the above popular works, sent as he shall direct.

We have authority, under the new Post-office law, to send any one of the above works, bound. The postage will not exceed twenty-five cents to any part of the United States.

M. P. DISCIPLINES—NEW EDITION.

WE have on hand a supply, lately received from the Book Agent, Baltimore, which we will be pleased to furnish to brethren of surrounding Circuits, at wholesale or retail prices. For sale at the office of this paper.

SACRED MELODEON.

WE have received from the publishers, 50 copies of this excellent collection of Spiritual Songs, compiled by Brs. Joel Dalbey and J. B. Peat of the Ohio Conference, and lately published at Cincinnati. For sale at the office of the Western Recorder, by the dozen or single.

Admistrator's Notice.

NOTICE is hereby given that the suscriber has been appointed and qualified as Administrator of the estate of Thomas Atkinson deceased, late of Springfield Township, Muskingum county. Z. M. CHANDLER, Putnam, O. Oct. 31, 1846. Administrator.

DISSOLUTION.

THE partnership of GUTHRIES & LARGE is this day dissolved by mutual consent. All matters pertaining to the closing up of the business will be transacted at the old stand.

A. A. GUTHRIE.
W. P. LARGE.
GEO. N. GUTHRIE.

Putnam, O. January 1, 1847.

NEW FIRM.

A. A. GUTHRIE, G. BUCKINGHAM and G. N. GUTHRIE announce that they have formed partnership for the transaction of MERCANTILE BUSINESS under the firm of

GUTHRIE, BUCKINGHAM & CO.

They respectfully invite their friends and the publi generally, to the old stand of A. A. GUTHRIE & Co (recently GUTHRIE'S & LARGE,) where it is the purpose to keep a large assortment of the CHEAPEST an BEST goods in the market.

Putnam, O. January 1, 1847.

Something New.

JUST PUBLISHED

By GEORGE CONCLIN, 29 Main st. Cincinnati,

A NEW HISTORY OF TEXAS.

INCLUDING an account of the late WAR WITH MEXICO, together with other interesting matte relating to that country. This history is published i pamphlet form, 12 mo., containing 152 pages and will b sold cheap.

ALSO—A NEW HISTORY OF OREGON AND CALIFORNIA, (BY LANSFORD HASTINGS) containing a minute description of the different routes to those countries—a description of the soil, products of the soil, Towns, Bays, Harbors, Rivers, Lakes, manners and customs of the inhabiants, &c. &c.

DISSOLUTION.

IT is nearly two years since the firm of A. A. GUTHRIE & Co., was dissolved, so far as the selling of Goods is concerned. It is this day fully dissolved by mutual consent all debts due the concern are to be epaid to A. A. Guthrie —who earnestly requests ear y payments & especially urges all wo have suffered thei accounts to stand open thus far, to come immediately a dettle.

A. A. GUTHRIE,
G. N. GUTHRIE.

Putnam, Dec. 14th, 1846

JAMES K. LOGAN,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

FOREIGN & DOMESTIC DRY GOODS

No. 83 Wood St., (One door from Diamond Alley,) Pittsburgh, Pa.

THE WEEKLY

CHRISTIAN WORLD;

An Independent, Comprehensive, and Impartial Newspaper; designed for welcome and useful circulation; Among all Friends of Christian Union, Christian Benevolence, and Christian Literature. To be published every Saturday, At the Reading-Room of the Christian Athenæum, over the Book-store of Mr. James Harmstead, Fourth St., between Market and Arch Sts., Philadelphia;

Price:—Two Dollors a-year invariably in advance.

T. H. STOCKTON,
J. G. WILSON,
THEOPHILUS STORK. } Editors.

W. S. STOCKTON,—General Agent.

TO persons who are acquainted with the character and objects of the CHRISTIAN WORLD, as they have been developed during the last six years, it is only necessary to say, that as soon as one thousand paying subscribers are secured, the paper will be put to press. The Old Subscription List ought to supply this number at once.

To other persons, it is proper to remark, that the Christian World, in print, is intended to reflect the Christian World, in action—in a word, daguerreotype it: and then, for purposes of common advantage, to compare the organized and operature Religion of the Age with the Religion of the Bible.

The enlarged literary and business agencies of the Establishment, are deemed amply sufficient to assure the public of successful management. Its immediate connexion with the CHRISTIAN ATHENEUM—an Institution which is to be furnished with many of the principal organs of Church and State, both in Europe and America,—will give its conductors early access to invaluable sources of universal intelligence.

DIRECTIONS.

1. On receipt of this Propsectus, let the Old subscribers at every Post-office, appoint one of their number, or some other suitable person, an Agent. Let him send us, at once, as many names and as much money as possible. In cases where substantial agents make themselves responsible for their subscribers, this responsibility will be regarded as equivalent to payment in advance—provided they settle their accounts within six months. Even in such cases, however, immediate payments are decidedly preferable; and, to encourage them, the commissions to agents are arranged thus:—On cash orders, 25 per cent.: on deferred remittances, 12½ per cent.

2. As the Prospectus will be widely distributed, let all persons who see it, and feel an interest in it, act promptly in the manner described above. It is thought that a little effort will be sufficient to procure a company, or club, at almost any Post-office in the Union. The times increasingly demand just such a publication as is proposed.

Address,—W. S. STOCKTON, General Agent, Philadelphia, Pa.: or either of the Associate Editors. All orders will be punctually attended to.

T. H. STOCKTON,
Editor and Proprietor.

Philadelphia, December, 1846.

NEW HISTORY OF TEXAS, pages 152 25 cents. A few copies to be had at the offic of this Recorder. Published by G. Conclin Cincinnati.

POETRY.

From the New York Saturday Emporium.

THE BEARING OF THE CROSS.

BY JOHN COOPER VAIL.

MORNING.

No fairer morn to earth was born: the sun kissed Judah's mountains;
No brighter rays, in happy days, e'er gushed from heaven's fountains;
And floating there, each cloud in air seemed timidly to falter—
A blushing bride in all her pride led forth to Morning's alter!
To heaven flew the gems of dew from Sharon's rosy bowers;
To fall again when Evening's train threw shadows o'er its flowers;
And Fancy flings such lovely things around the soul 'tis bending,
You well can see on Calvary bright angels are descending.

They whisper low, like angels do when gladness hath departed—
As mothers keep their sorrows deep, when they are broken-hearted;
They whisper low—why is it so? immortal brows are paling—
The wind alone can hear each moan when angel hearts are failing!
Jerusalem! thy doom hath come—thy future shall be sorrow:
A dark to-day will fade away, but bring a darker morrow:
In every land, on every strand, fondest hopes shall sever,
Till all will seem a hollow dream of glories fled forever.

NOON.

'Tis noon! Jordan's river flows flashing in gold;
Bright sunbeams quiver—Light's banner unrolled;
No tribute streams sparing their joys to impart,
Like veins often bearing the blood from the heart.

"Go onward! walk faster! why tarry ye now?
False prophet! false master! the crown's on thy brow;
'Tis thy coronation—Time suffers the loss—
Thou art king of no nation, but king of the Cross."

'Tis Jesus the Holy—our Saviour of love,
The Cross bearing lowly—oft looking above:
For archangels tearful are hovering near,
The sight is so fearful—Christ bearing his bier!

"May ye be forgiven," His only, sweet prayer—
The second in heaven, though lowliest there!
Yet each tear adorning the spot where he trod,
Took the wings of the morning, and fluttered to God.

A fearful boon paying on that awful day,
And only one praying, "May this pass away!"
Till each angel's pinion, dissolving in air,
Had left his dominion—the throne of despair.

EVENING.

'Tis evening! but no star arrays the breadth of solemn gloom—
The world seems like a giant corse laid in a system's tomb;
Yet in its heart an earthquake beats—the throb of life below—
An echo to dark thunder clouds that breathe upon its brow.
And when the lighting shivers far the trappings of the bier,
It glimmers o'er unhallowed things, that quickly disappear—
Dark phantoms of a former world, who trembling have defined,
The clouds were but a blackened veil—the living God behind!

MIDNIGHT.

'Tis midnight! from heaven descendeth God's love,
A world is forgiven—Christ mounteth above!
The archangels singing a chorus sublime,
A bright spirit bringing to heaven, from time.

Break, Soul! from the portals that bind thee to earth,
And fly with immortals, thy brothers at birth;
Thy pathway is broken—it leads to God's throne!
And now—a bright token—He claims thee his own.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Writen for the Western Recorder.

CHURCH DIVISION.

THINGS TO BE CONSIDERED.

NO. V.

MR. EDITOR:—In enumerating some of the things which will have to be encountered in carrying into effect the proposed division of our church, I observe.

4. That we may look for a decrease of brotherly love, and of Piety towards God, on the part of many among us.

Nothing but the most solemn and thourough conviction of the correctness of this statement could induce me to make it in this connection.—It is not the ebulition of an unexamined thought. And hence it is made with the more sincere and deep regret.

Some may, at first be startled at the suggestion, and feel disposed to deny its correctness. But we think that a little candid and impartial reflection will satisfy the most incredulous of its truth.—That men may honestly differ in their opinions, and retain the spirit of brotherly love towards each other, while publicly controverting those differences, is readily admited. But how few public disputants actualy do this? As to the propriety of this movement, there will be a diversity of opinions; and it will necessarily create discussion and controversy. And how ready are most men to conclude, when their sentiments are opposed and held up for public condemnation, that they have an antagonist towards whom they will look with feelings illy adapted to promotion of fraternal affections. If we may safely judge of mens feelings from their deliberately expressed words, we have a most painful and humiliating example, illustrative of the correctness of this statement, in the unfriendly collision recently had between two distinguished ministers of our church, upon the very question involved in this movement.—I do not refer to it, for the purpose of recalling the unpleasentness of the past—No! Rather let it sleep in eternal oblivion. I mention it only as an instance, in point confirming the truth of the position which I have stated.

I could write in tears of blood! Two ministers of our Church—professed ambassadors for God, to proclaim the Gospel of Peace, Purity and Love, contending over the same question involved in the measures of which we are speaking: One charges the other with prevarication, or falsehood; and the one thus implicated repels the charge, with some explanations, and then goes on to compare his accuser to a "Lousel" "Crawling on a ladies bonnet!"

To what extent such altercations are calculated to promote brotherly love, and piety towards God, may be easily imagined. We may be told that these are rare exceptions. Would to God, they were, and might ever remain such. But these men are among the leaders in this movement—and if our Leaders afford us such an example, how can we expect better things of their Followers? The diciple seldom excells his master—but generally as his master.

Controversy generally excites the unlovely passions of our fallen nature, banishes the spirit of humility and prayer and destroys that sweet and unalayed communion with God in the soul, that the pious may enjoy.

I may be refered to the Apostles, the primative Fathers, and the Leaders in the great Reformation, as instances of piety proceeding with, and being promoted by controvercies. Granting all that may be claimed for these, it should be borne in mind that it is a materialy different thing to contend for fundamental and essential truths, than for complicated, hair-spliting and doubtful inferences.—And hence the difference in the results, of the discussions of early Christians, and many of those of modern times.

To what may be attributed the alarming declension of religious spirituality, in our land, at the present time, more than to the unhappy contentions, arising from questions similar to those involved in the contemplated division of which we are speaking? And which, as an overflowing scourge, are inundating the church and the world.

E. A. W.

Written for the Western Recorder.

The immorality and poisonous effects of the use of tobacco.

MR. EDITOR: As but few take an interest in the redemption of the human family from this deadly enemy, which enslaves all who may chance to taste of his substance. And seeing so many throw their influence in opposition to the principle of man holding his fellow in bondage, I have concluded to cast my influence with the weak as well as the strong. I shall first speak of some of the poisonous effects, its use produces on the human system. If a small portion of tobacco is taken into the mouth of one whose physiological powers are undepraved; the poisonous character of the tobacco is instantly perceived by the vital sensibilities of the parts on which it acts, and a prompt alarm is immediately given to the whole domain of organic instinct; the stomach rallies up all its vital powers, and by the means of vomiting makes a mighty effort to throw off the deadly poison. And will so continue to do until its narcotic qualities have lulled the sensibilities of the system (in a measure) to sleep. Again. Tobacco is an expectorant, and when it is taken into the mouth it excites the glands to such an extent, that the saliva flows in copious abundance; which has to be discharged, being too poisonous to be taken into the stomach. Thus it seems by its expectorant qualities that fluid which the great architect designed in our formation to aid digestion is drawn off and wasted. Hence we see so many of those who use this baneful weed, complaining of symptoms of indigestion. It having a narcotic, and stimulating principle contained in it, it operates more particularly on the nervous system. To prove this, it is only necessary for those who use tobacco to quit its use, and they will find a train of nervous symptoms follow, which will be to them, a state of very unhappy sensations. Hence the argument, it perfectly agrees with my constitution; I could not live without it. Poor bewitched, deluded soul, it is only its stimulating narcotic qualities that cause you to think so. After you have ceased to use it for a while, and all the train of symptoms following the abstinence from such narcotic stimuli have come upon you; if you will but use a small portion, the symptoms will begin to banish; showing that its stimulating narcotic qualities, have you in complete slavery; and are leading you on to an early grave. It is said by some writers that one drop of the essence or oil of tobacco administered internally will kill a cat. This with many other experiments, has proven it to be poisonous to the animal economy.

The next thing that presents itself to our notice, is the moral bearings of its use. God is a God of order, hence all his works harmonize. And in order for this, it is necessary that they should be brought into existence, and governed by certain immutable laws. As the tendency of the violation of the laws, as to dissolve the union between mind and body, or to produce death to some extent, owing to the degree of the violation; it follows it is morally wrong. And if it is voluntary on the part of the violator, it follows it is suicidal in its nature. Now the use of tobacco is voluntary on the part of those who use it; and as its use tends to violate the laws established for the existence and government of all those who use it. It follows those who use it commit suicide to a certain extent. Now as suicide is self murder, "and as no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him," and as using tobacco is suicidal in its effects; it follows no one that uses it, hath eternal life abiding in them.

Again, it is admitted on all hands that the use of any stimulent, begets a desire for more of that stimulent, or some of a stronger and more stimulating character, as its habitual use increases. It also admitted on all hands by those who use it as well as those who do not, that tobacco has a strong stimulating narcotic character; or contains those principles. Temperance lecturers have compared tiplers and drunkards to a pig and a hog. The tiplers they say are those who use wine, beer and cider, and if they continue to use these they will eventually want something a little stronger; and thus they will grow to a hog. Hence they have excluded all these mild drinks from their societies. Now, I contend they have not gone far enough back—show me your drunkards, and I will show you ninety-nine persons out of a hundred among them who use tobacco. According to the philosophy that the habitual use of stimulants begets a desire for more in quantity, or some of a more stimulating quality. It follows the use of tobacco is the pig, and that of cider, beer and wine the shoat, and the effects of the use of all stronger drinks the full groan hog. I believe the use of tobacco may be termed the basis of intemperance. Therefore, I would urge the Sons of Temperance, with other temperance societies to add this; (the basis of intemperance, to their decalogue,) total abstinence from the use of tobacco. Then you may expect to succeed and not till then.

Cleanliness is spoken of in sacred writ in not a few places, it is also in harmony with the laws of mans being, and is requisite for perfect health. Hence it is morally right. We will next inquire, are those who use tobacco cleanly? certainly not. When they chew and rub their gums with snuff, their teeth and mouths look very filthy on account of its escence being smeared over them; the saliva flows and being mixed with its essence it poisons every thing it touches, so that it will take one hand one hour in each week to clean after those in the family who use it. Cruel! cruel!! that time should be wasted when so precious.

I wish to call the readers attention next to the time it takes to cultivate and manufacture this filthy weed, without making any calculation of the amount of time, and the number of lives that have been wasted since this filthy stimulent has been used. We would venture to say, if all the time that the use of tobacco has destroyed by using up men's lives in its various ways, had been spent in relieving the sufferings of humanity, there would not now be one suffering for want in the known world. Besides all this, there would have been time left to have instructed the rising generation in morals and natural science. And as we must know the truth before we can do it: the world by this time might have almost been redeemed, growing up in the image of their God. While the rainbow of his countenance bespeaking a desire to bless man, the best of his works; he to this would reciprocally respond praise and thanksgiving, and all would be peace.

I've nothing more to say to you,
Concerning the evil weed,
Though you my reasoning think is true,
I fear you'll not it heed.

AARON DALBEY.

Written for the Western Recorder.

NORTH AND SOUTH.

No. III.

MR. EDITOR. SIR: My last communication closed by an enquiry, if an increase of Bishops in the M. E. Church, be a good result, then has not the General Conference by its action on division accomplished it. Again Sir, I enquire what has been the true cause of a decrease of thirty nine thousand members in the M. E. Church North, during the last Conference year? I am aware that many causes have been assigned by the friends of this modern Episcopacy, but whether the true cause has been assigned I cannot say, am anxious however to know what is wrong among those northern would-be abolitionists of the M. E. Church. Their statistics show this loss; their assigned reasons are 1st. Emigration, 2nd. Deaths, and 3rd. an extra vigilance on the part of the ministry to rid the church of unworthy members, hence the reins of discipline are said to have been drawn much tighter, than in former years, and hosts of unworthy communicants have been expelled from the Church, the great work of purgation and reformation it is said, has been carried on with an iron hand, how far this statement is correct, facts must speak for themselves. I believe Sir, the tide of Emigration may carry to the far west quite a considerable number of the membership of the M. E. Church, but on general principles, I would suppose the numbers received would equal, if not exceed, the numbers emigrated, or, if I am mistaken on this point, I would suppose the loss would not be very considerable, by emigration. Death it is true, is no respector of persons, and in the M. E. Church as well as all other branches of the Church, he has been executing his office; but still Sir, I have heard of no fearful mortality, sweeping off its thousands, and tens of thousands of members, of the M. E. Church, during the last Conference year. If any fearful, and fatal disorder has raged among that people North so as thus to thin the ranks of their church, it is astounding that their periodicals have kept it so secret, it is usual in fatal epidemics, to give the country at large, an account of its ravages, thro' the medium of the press. This Church has printing establishments of its own, East and West, North and South; is it not passing strange, that this awful visitation should have passed over and nothing be heard of it, until the statistic tables of the Church are completed at the end of the year, and when the work of addition and substraction has been duly attended too, and the North found minus thirty nine thousand, then it is said a very unusual number of deaths have taken place through the last year. Of this matter I leave the public to judge. I have however read the message of the President, and the messages of several Governors of different States of the Union, who all unite in congratulating their constituents, and the country at large, on the general good health of the people of our great nation, during the last year, and we are told no fatal epedemic has swept through our land, but health, prosperity and plenty, have been enjoyed by the citizens of our common country, for which, days of public thanksgiving were appointed in different States in the Union, and in these acts of devotion and gratitude, the ministry and membership of the M. E. Church partook, largely, which was there reasonable duty. But if deaths doings were so extensive in their church during the last year, I would suppose Sir, they felt on Thanksgiving-day a little like old King George felt at the loss of the 13 Colonies of America. His majesty appointed a Thanksgiving day, at the close of the Revolutionary War, and by royal proclamation, made it the duty of his subjects, to meet at their different places of worship, to return thanks to Almighty God. A Scotch minister waited on his majesty, to enquire what he should thank God for; he enquired shall I thank God for the loss of 13 Colonies? his majesty replied No. Shall I thank God for the thousands of soldiers slain in the war? No. Shall I thank God for the number of widows and orphans in the kingdom, the result of the war? No. Shall I thank God for the great debt accumulated in the prosecution of the war? No. Well, what shall I thank God for? his majesty answered, Why, thank God it is no worse, and so I suppose our northern brethren would be disposed to thank God, it is no worse, since it is no better.

The third reason assigned for the decrease in the northern Church, is, the rigid attention on the part of the ministry to the exercise of discipline, and hence the church is said to have been cleared of its spiritual loafers, and hangers on, I am free to admit that no set of ministers on earth, can more readily clear the Church of its membership (even worthy or unworthy) than can the ministers of the M. E. Church, as they are beyond all contradiction, the Legislative, Judicial, and Executive body of said church, and have the entire reins of government in their own hands, so that the entire million of members North and South, united, cannot make one class leader, for were they to convene in one great mass, and unanimously say that A B——Shall be class leader over the class No. 1 in, the city of P. One travelling minister could disannul the whole transaction, and say to them, the power to appoint class-leaders is mine, and with it you have nothing to do. Now altho' we admit the entire power is in the hands of the ministry, yet we cannot admit the disposition on the part of the ministry to expel thirty or forty thousand members during the last year, and indeed so far as your writer is acquainted, the reins of government have been held more loosely, than in former years, expulsions have been less frequent, (whether less deserving or not, I do not pretend to determine.) There is one thing self evident and that is, to a very considerable extent, the usages of the M. E. Church, in the country at least, have of late undergone a very great change, class meetings are now being held with open doors, or at least upon the free admission plan. To love feasts, general invitations are sometimes given and on the only committee trial of which I have any knowledge, that has taken place in the last year or two, the M. E. minister, yielded his power to appoint the committee, and consulted the wishes and feelings of the accused, with regard to the persons, to act as committte men, it is true this is a single case, and ought not to be applied generally, but Sir, so far as I can learn, no extra judicial processes have been attended to during the last year, and no special effort has been made by the ministry, to lighten the reins of government, or purge the church of its unworthy and refractory members. We must look to some other source, and find out some other cause for this unusual decrease in the church North. It cannot be that the True Wesleyans (falsely so called) can have taken the northern abolitionists out of the M. E. Church. Their published statistics do not give a number sufficiently large; and if not gone to the True Wesleyans,* where are they gone? The M. P. Church during the last year, has received but few from the M. E. Church North, where then have they gone? Suppose we make an estimate, it is true it will be uncertain as to the correctness of the result, but will place the estimate sufficiently high. Suppose then for Emigration five thousand, suppose for deaths 3000, for expulsions and those who were dropt on probation 4000, joined the Wesleyans 2000, joined the M. P. Church 1500, and other denominations 1000, here is 16,500 accounted for, and we yet have a decrease of 22500, twenty two thousand five hundred, does not this great decrease speak volumes against the action of the last General Conference with regard to division and does it not say, public opinion is against it, and to return to my original question, is this one of the good results growing out of the geographical division of the M. E. Church? It is true the South has increased during the last year some twelve thousand members, for which we rejoice, and will, rejoice but had the division never taken place the result on both sides of the line might have been very different, had "brotherly love continued" had "each esteemed other better than themselves," had "charity that hideth a multitude of sins" been exercised, had "love that worketh no ill to its neighbor" been enjoyed, had "patience, had her perfect work," had the object of the ministry been, that the Church may "be one, even as the Father and Son are one," then would there have been no schism in the body; then would there be no need for the motto of the Saviour to be applied to this divided church. "A house divided against itself cannot stand."

TO BE CONTINUED.

*Br. Paul will permit us to remind him that this is not the name assumed by the denomination, it is but the name given to their newspaper organ, and they object to being designated by the name True Wesleyans. We make the statement here to save them the trouble of correcting him. Ed.

Written for the Western Recorder.

BR. BASSETT: My feelings are pained, when I hear of the wrong conclusions to which some good brethren arrive, in reference to the scriptural power of the General Conference to act in the premises of Slavery as a moral evil; but my heart's desire and prayer to God is, that they may be saved. I bear them record, that they have a zeal for God, but not according to knowledge; for they being ignorant that God has legislated on all moral subjects, and has given to man the statute book, in which is contained every thing necessary to the salvation of man, and for the government of the judiciary in its decisions on the guilt or innocence of any member of the church, have not submitted themselves to the word of God, to proclaim the evil of slave holding, and are going about to establish their own, as a more summary mode to do this, and for the government of the judiciary, and for a test of membership in the church of God; notwithstanding he has said, neither add too, nor take from. This only would I learn of them, which portion of the word of God authorizes any body of men to do this? Know ye not brethren, that so far as the influence of such edict would go; so far, exactly, would the necessity for the bible be excluded. But says one, "the church is a unit;" therefore, we are all involved in the guilt of slaveholding. But precisely in the same sense is the world of mankind "a unit;" therefore, we are all involved in the guilt of whiskey making, and dram drinking; for it will not be denied, but that church members do both. Notwithstanding we firmly believe slavery to be a dreadful evil, both national and moral; we deny that the bible authorizes the Gen. Con. to act in the premises. And was it to do so; it would be embracing the greater, to avoid the smaller error. This is the third time since May last, that we have called the attention of those to the subject, who are so anxious to have the Gen. Con. act authoritatively on on the subject, or leave the church to fight the battles of liberty over again. Yet they tell us, the church for which they have been fighting, has not, as yet, obtained a victory, but that they have run out of patience by setting the Lord a time; or else, the victory of the church is not that, for which they have been fighting. But let us see. The word of God condemns all evil; but slave holding is an evil; therefore, no christian will hold slaves. But again. The word of God condemns every thing as sinful, which is inconsistent with the morality of the holy scriptures; but slave holding is inconsistent therewith; therefore, the discipline of the M. P. Church, ought to contain an article condemnatory of slaveholding.

Once more. The word of God sanctions every thing that is consistent with the morality of the holy scriptures; but justification by faith is consistent therewith; therefore, the discipline of the M. P. Church, ought to contain an article commendatory of justification by faith. The last conclusion is as good as the one that preceeds it; both resting precisely on the same foundation. But suppose we as a church were to proceed upon this principle, how far would we have to advance, before we would have a very large discipline, and a very small bible? He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

T. F.

New Carlisle, Clark Co. O. Dec. 25, 1846.

Written for the Western Recorder.

MR. EDITOR: I have often felt grieved to witness indications of a mutinous spirit, in some parts of our beloved Zion. The preacher sent by the conference is not a man of splendid talents. Or the man they wanted has been sent elsewhere and one they did not want or knew nothing of has been sent to them. They manifest their disapprobation by withholding the assistance their preacher needs by neglecting to attend his appointments—or if they do attend they act and look like strangers, cold and distant. Sometimes the conference is denounced for sending them such a preacher. Again the preacher's failings or misfortunes are industriously circulated amongst the friends and enemies of the church. For instance he is but a poor orator—or his health is poor, or his wife is of feeble and delicate health and his appointments are not filled occasionally. Now some brethren seem to lose sight of every correct principle so far as to tell and give currency to every thing that will operate to the disadvantage of the preacher. Thus his way is hedged up, at least as far as such conduct can operate in that way.

When the preacher cannot be frowned down, or driven off by their coldness and neglect, but appears determined to stick to them like a brother; they then sometimes get to be very poor—they can do but little for him, and he had better preach but little except on Sundays, and have the week for himself. Every thing that can be done to discourage him is done. The missionary fire is quenched in his bosom if it has been in their power to do it. The minister has gone in obedience as an ambassador for Christ. His brethen for whom he has the kindest feelings and the best wishes, and for whom he feels like spending all his strength do all they can to prevent him from fulfilling his duty to his God and the church.

Now let me ask what a circuit, station, or mission can expect that has thus treated the preacher sent them? Can they expect the work of God to be revived amongst them? Can they hope to accomplish any good by such conduct? If such a circuit is cursed with barrenness it is no strange thing. Such acts of rebellion against God will meet his frowns. They can expect nothing good from God. I will tell you what they may expect. They may expect 1, That the Holy Spirit's influence will be withdrawn from them. 2. That they will injure the character of the circuit. And 3. That such a course will utterly destroy any circuit in the land. Now brethren let me exhort you to support your preachers to the best of your ability. Feed them and their families, sick or well—attend their appointments, come up to their help like warm hearted friends—dont stand off, come up, come up, and if your preachers fail, your circuit will sustain its character; but if you starve out or drive off your preachers your circuit is irretrievably lost, without speedy repentance on your part. For God's sake brethren stand up to the work.

ELIJAH.

PROSPECTUS OF THE

LITERARY ATHENÆUM,

A NEW AND SPLENDID MONTHLY MAGAZINE,

TO BE EDITED BY THE

Rev. Henry D. Moore, of Philadelphia,—and Rev. Andrew A. Lipscomb, Professor of English Literature and Belle Letters, in the city of Baltimore.

ON the first of January, 1847, the subscribers intend issuing the first number of a spendid Monthly Magazine, to be called the "LITERARY ATHENÆUM," to be devoted to the interest and circulation of a mind-refining, soul-inspiring, spirit-stirring literature; such a literature, in a word, as the progressive taste of society seems to demand.

Between the magazines of the day, which are devoted almost exclusively to the circulation of Christian Literature, and those devoted to the light, and in too many instances, tasteless and corrupting literature—there is a wide and deep chasm, to fill which successfully and profitably, very few attempts have been made. To supply this void, to some extent at least, is the intention of the subscribers, in issuing the "Literary Athenæum."

The general cast and character of the contents of the proposed magazine will be fixed according to the standard of the most sterling intellect, and the most liberal appreciation of the wants of the common mind. Its pages will ever present a feast and a glow, to feed and illumine the loftiest and purest taste and spirit of the admirers and lovers of refining and exalting literary walks and research.

To secure this grand design, effectually and honorably, no pains or expenses will be spared.

The contents will be purely original; consisting of Lectures, Addresses, Essays, &c., on the most popular and exciting literary and scientific subjects, from the most able writers that can be secured—interspersed and relieved by beautiful poetic composition.

Science, Art, and government, in their almost infinite variety development and interest, will be liberay and honorably discussed in its pages.

Arrangements are in progress for an extensive and important European correspondence, which will be a feature of great interest in its varied connections.

In addition to such articles, there will be presented occasional tales of unexceptionable character and style, differing essentially from the weakish romances which fill the pages of the many magazines of the day. Writers in this connection, can be secured, whose productions are the embodiment of life, true to itself,—and which will kindle and glow with the loftiest and purest sentiment, and thrill with the beauties of morality and religion in their loveliest forms.

Each number of the Athenæum will contain four embellishments of the first artistical merit, One of them will be a portrait of some distinguished personage in this country or in Europe, accompanied with an interesting biograpical sketch. Another will be a view of the buildings and grounds, of some one of the popular Universities, in this or the old world, accompanied with a historical, biograpical and statisical sketch in this body of the work. The portraits will be fine mezzotint, and the college views, beautiful line engravings. Then will follow richly colored specimens of flowers and fruit; in connection with which, there will also be presented interesting notices—floral and botanical—of climate, habits, culture, &c. All of which cannot but secure interest and favor.

Each number will comprise sixty pages of letter-press, double column, beautifully stereotyped, and printed on fine white paper; the whole corresponding in all respects, with the character of the other departments of the work.

Such is to be the character of the work at its commencement. If it is succersful, as it ought to be, and as is hoped and believed it will be,—improvement will be made as far as possible in the different departments, as they are suggested in the progress of the work.

The subscribers take pleasure in announcing to the public, that they have concluded arrangements with the Rev. Henry D. Moore, of Philadelphia, and Rev. Andrew A Lipscomb, Professor of English Literature and Belle Letters, of Raltimore, who will co-operate as Editors the of new Magazine. Under the management of those gentleman, the subscribers flatter themselves, abundant success will be secured in behalf of the enterprise.

TO PUBLISHERS.

The subscribers would also give notice to Publishers, at home and abroad, that there will be in connection with the work, an extensive review department. This will be made a feature of excelling interest. The department will be conducted fairly and honorably, and all works sent to the office of the snbscribers, will receive such notices as their character may demand.

The first number will be issued on the first of January, 1847. Its contents and the name of contributors, will be published shortly.

TERMS—Three dollars per annum, in advance.

Editors of papers, copying this Prospectus, and sending a paper with it, to the office of the "Athenæum," shall receive the numbers of the work, and the thanks of the publishers.

All letters, containing orders for the work, post-paid, and enclosing the subscription price, will receive prompt attention. To be addressed to

F. C. WILSON & Co.

Philadelphio, Pa.

An Elegantly Illustrated Magazine for Christmas and New Year, containing a Pictorial Description of Ohio, &c. &c., which can be mailed to any part of the United States, for 4 cents postage.

THE January Number of our FAMILY MAGAZINE, for 1847, will be complete in itself, and contain an interesting Historical and Descriptive Account of the State of Ohio, together with a great variety of other literary and interesting matter; the whole illustrated with each one occupying an entire page of the Work. We expect to circulate many thousands of this elegant Periodical in the State of Ohio and elsewhere. The Plates are all executed in a peculiarly chaste and perfect manner; and any one of them is worth the price of the Work.

FIFTEEN ELEGANT ENGRAVINGS,

The following is a list of the principal Engravings that will be published in the January Number, viz:—

1. A splendid View of the City of Cincinnati, as it appears at the present time. This forms the Frontispiece, and is elegantly printed on the best and finest paper, accompanied with a particular account of the origin, rise, and progress, of the Queen of the West.
2. A View of Cincinnati, as it appeared in the year 1800; forming a striking contrast with its preset appearance.
3. A View of the Public Landing Place, at Cincinnati.
4. The New Catholic Cathedral at Cincinnati—a large plate.
5. A View of Lane Seminary, at Walnut Hills, two miles from Cincinnati.
6. Several Views of Kenyon College, &c., &c., at Gambier, Ohio.
10. Several Engravings illustrative of the Antiquities of Ohio. Together with—
13. Bears attacking a boat's crew in the polar seas—a spirited engraving.
14 Picture of the Deluge. This is, without question, the most valuable and interesting Engraving in the whole Wsrk. We have not the space neccessary to describe it, and do it justice.
15. A View of Mount Ararat, from the hills above Erivam. This is generally admitted to be the mountain on which the Ark rested after the Deluge.

☞The whole of these Plates are accompanied with interesting descriptions, making the Number invaluable as a Present to young People.

The price of "The Pictorial Description of Ohio," will be ONLY 12½ CENTS PER COPY, or Ten Copies will be sent by Mail for One Dollar.

Letters enclosing remittances must be post-paid in full. The silver change for a single copy, or for three or four copies, may be thus remitted, (Postage Paid,) at our risk; but when you send silver, please envelop it carefully in a half sheet of writing paper, so that it will be subject to only single postage.

All orders should specify distinctly the town, county, and state, where the Magazine ts to be forwarded. and should be addressed (post paid) to

ROBERT SEARS,
128, Nassau Street New York.

ATTENTION!!

Look Here, All!!

I HAVE JUST received from New York, a fine assortment of Foreign and Domestic DRY GOODS consisting of, Cloths, Casimeres, Sattinents, Tweeds, and Jeans, Cashmeres, Mouslin de Lains, Alpaccas, Morenoes, and Cloakings, Flannels, Checks, Linseys, Brown and Bleach-Muslins, Shawls and Prints of every variety, Men's and Boys' Caps Boots and Shoes. Also Coffee, Sugar, Tea, &c. All of which I am offering to the public, for cash, or in exchange for country produce of all kinds.

AT VERY REDUCED PRICES,

I would add, that those wishing to purchase cheap goods will find it to their advantage to give me a call, as I am determined TO SELL my goods. W. B. GUTHRIE.

Putnam Ohio, October 31, 1846.

SNETHEN'S SERMONS.—Rev. Ulysses Ward of Washing-ing City, has just published a volume of Sermons by the late Rev. N. Snethen. It comprises 480 pages, and is elegantly bound in cloth. Price $1,00 per single copy. Ten copies or more at the rate of $4. And for 50 or more copies, 84 cents apiece. Cash in all cases to be remitted when the books are ordered. "He, being dead, yet speaketh."

NEW SERIES

OF THE

Congressional Globe and Appendix.

CONGRESS at it its last session; through the Joint Library Committee of the two Houses, having authorized a large subscription for the Congressional Globe and Appendix; and the Senate, by resolution; having directed the mode of preparing the reports of the proceedings, and authorized the Secretary of the Senate to contract with the undersigned, stipulating that the reports when written out shall be subject to the revision of the speakers, the Congressional Globe and Appendix is now offered to the public, not only as an authentic, but as an official report of the proceedings of Congress, made under the eye, and published by authority of the body.

The undersigned originated the mode of journalizing the proceedings of Congress, which, thus adopted, is to be perfected with the aid and under the supervision of Congress. Their publication was the first and only one that gave each successive step in every measure in both branches of Congress; a brief of all the debates; every important vote; and an Appendix, including at full length all the revised speeches delivered during the session.

The work, as it is now to be conducted by them, will be found a most perfect political history. The Senators from the States and the Representatives from every section of the Union bring with them into Congress a knowledge of the feelings, sentiments, and interests of their several constituencies. Public opinion and the public information, as it exists among those they represent, are embodied by them; and in the crucible of Congress the wisdom of our times is brought to its test, and is there concentrated; in directing the political movements of the whole country. The impulses thus given through Congress from every quarter react upon the nation as a whole, and all its component parts are made to move in co-operation. The press cannot be more usefully employed than in condensing and again spreading abroad the intelligence of our free country, tending to such happy results through our almost miraculously adjusted State and National institutions.

Having identified ourselves with the plan of advancing the usefulness of Congress by publishing full and impartial reports, and having a large mass of the Congressional Globe and Appendix, issued during the last twelve years which would be impaired in value to us and utility to the public if the work were discontinued, we have a double motive to prompt us to extend it through a new series. We are resolved, if possible, to give it permanence, and hand it down to successors as a standard work worthy of being maintained and improved. We shall enter upon our new undertaking without being distracted or burdened by any associate labors of the press; and thus unencumbered, shall hope to make the new series a step in advance of the former in all points of execution. With a view to accomplish this, we shall be (one or the other) in attendance on Congress.

The reports will not be affected by our party bias. We believe every member of Congress will bear witness that our reports are full and fair.

The Congressional Globe is made up of the daily proceedings of the two Houses of Congress, and printed on superfine double royal paper, with small type, (brevier and nonpareil,) in quarto form, each number containing sixteen royal quarto pages. The speeches of the members in this first form are condensed—the full report of the prepared speeches being reserved for the Appendix. All resolutions, motions, and other proceedings, are given in the form of the Journals, with the yeas and nays on every important question.

The Appendix is made up of the President's Annual Message, the reports of the principal officers of the Government that accompany it, and all speeches of members of Congress, written out or revised by themselves. It is printed in the same form as the Congressional Globe, and usually makes about the same number of pages during a session.

During the first month or six weeks of a session, there is rarely more business done than will make two numbers a week—one of the Congressional Globe and one of the Appendix; but during the remainder of a session, there is usually sufficient matter for two or three numbers of each every week. The next session will be unusually interesting; therefore, we calculate that the Congressional Globe and Appendix together will make near 1500 large quarto pages, printed in small type—brevier and nonpareil. We furnish complete Indexes to both at the end of a session.

We have on hand the Congressional Globe and Appendix for the last fifteen sessions of Congress, making together fifteen large royal quarto volumes, which we will sell unbound, for $41; or bound with Russia backs and corners for $56. Those who want the back volumes should apply for them immediately, as they are in demand. Congress subscribed for 341 complete sets during the two last sessions. The proceedings of Congress for the last nine years cannot be procured from any other source—Gales & Seaton having stopped printing their Register of Debates in 1837.

We will endeavor to print a sufficient number of surplus copies to supply all that may be miscarried, or lost in the mails; but subscribers should be very particular to file their papers carefully, for fear that we should not be able to supply all lost numbers.

TERMS.

For one copy of the Congressional Globe,	$1 00
For one copy of the Appendix,	1 00
For six copies of either, or part of both,	5 00

The money may be remitted by mail at our risk. The safest and best way to remit is, to pay the amount to the Postmaster where you reside, and take from him a receipt.

Our prices for these papers are so low that we cannot afford to credit them out; therefore, no person need consume his time in writing for them unless he sends the money.

BLAIR & RIVES.

Washington, D. C. October 15, 1846.

GEORGE CONCLIN,

BOOKSELLER AND PUBLISHER,

Stationer, Binder, and

BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURER,

No. 39 Main Street, Cincinnati.

KEEPS on hand Books published by the Methodist Protestant Church—such as

CHURCH HYMN BOOKS,
REVIVAL " "
DISCIPLINES,
EVANS' QUESTIONS & ANSWERS, &c.

ALSO—Just received—A supply of the CHRISTIAN WORLD in 3 Vols. with Portraits of the Wesleys, &c., by REV. THOS. H. STOCKTON.

JACOB THORN,

WHOLESALE dealer in all kinds of NOTIONS, No. 91, Wilson's Row, the first store below the Court House, is now opening a new and complete assortment of

NOTIONS AND DRY GOODS,

which will be sold wholesale, at prices a little below what they have ever been sold in this place.—Country Merchants and Pedlers, visiting the city are respectfully invited to examine my stock before purchasing elsewhere, among which may be found the following articles:—

800	Packs American solid head Pins.
200,000	Drilled Ey'd Needles, Sharps and Betweens.
2000	Doz Spool Thread.
500	Lbs. Patent do.
800	do. Cotton do.
3000	Doz. Side Combs.
600	do. Fine Ivory do.
500	do. Dressing do.
100	do. Woolen Comforters.
100	Brass Clocks.
1500	Prints (Engravings,) high col'd.
100	Doz. Chapman Strops.
5000	Almanacks.
300	Shawls, different patterns.
100	Gross Kitting Pins.
4	Bbls. Blacking.
30	Doz. slates.
50	Gt. Gro. Agate Shirt Buttons
500	Coils Bonnet Wire.
50	Gross Boot Laces.
500	do. Hooks and Eyes on Cards
100	do. Wood Combs.
200	do. Sherred and G. E. Suspenders.
12	Boxes Fire Crackers
12	Doz. Looking-Glasses.
100	Gross Pearl Shirt Buttons.
6	Bales Brown Muslin.
200	Doz. Mitts.

Combs of every description, Buttons, Penknives, Razors, Table and Tea Spoons, Tapes, Eyeletts, Jewsharps, Pencils, Shaving Boxes, Gloves, Ladies cotton Hose, Matches, Dress Handkfs., Laces and Edgings, Spectacles, Thimbles, Beads, Candle Wicking, Night caps, Primers, Calicoes, bleached Muslins, Wafers, &c.

WANTED in exchange for goods at wholesale prices Feathers, Beeswax, Ginsang, Rags and Hogs Bristles tied up in small bunches, for which will be given twenty-five cents a pound for all that can be brought in good order

Zanesville, O. Nov. 7, 1846.

PUTNAM BOARDING HOUSE.

THE SUBSCRIBER having been for the last sixteen years keeping Tavern and Boarding House, would respectfully acquaint the public—that he has establishe a Bording House in Putnam, and hopes by strict attentio to business he will merit a share of public patronage. Hi accommodations shall be good, and his table, for variet not surpassed by any Hotel or Boarding House in th West.

R. PUTNAM.

October 31st, 1846.

N. B. Application for boarding should be made soo

R. P.

THE WESTERN RECORDER.

VOL. VIII---NO. 16. PUTNAM, MUSKINGUM COUNTY, OHIO, JANUARY 23, 1847. WHOLE NO. 380.

The Western Recorder,

Is Published every Saturday,

AT PUTNAM, OPPOSITE ZANESVILLE, OHIO.

OFFICE ON MAIN STREET.

A. H. BASSETT, Editor and Proprietor.

C. ALLEN, PRINTER.

TERMS.—Two Dollars per annum, in advance. Two fifty at the close of the year. Payments within three months will be considered in advance.

All letters and communications must be addressed, to the Editor, post paid, except such as contain funds, and directed to Putnam Muskingum Co. Ohio.

Itinerant Ministers and others, who collect from subscribers and remit to us as much as ten dollars within the year, shall receive a copy of the paper free.

Itinerant ministers and preachers, not acting as agents, can have the paper at one dollar.

Clubs of ten or more, paying at the time of subscribing, shall have the paper for $15, i. e. one dollar fifty, each.

THEOLOGICAL.

Written for the Western Recorder.

GOD IS LOVE.

NO. II.

BY DR. D. GIBBONS.

As God is Love—it is of high importance to know that love is the true and only foundation of his every act in the foundation of his glorious government over our world. There is no sentiment more clear, or more fully settled in the minds of thinking and intelligent men, than is the sentiment that all men are designed by the Creator to be free and equal, and are in the true sense of the word agents. By the term agent we mean a person or officer, having duties to perform, which he has plenary power to do—or power not to do—just as he pleases. This is what is meant by some speakers and writers, when they use the term free-agent. One of the prominent principles of God is government is that, no man can be happy unless he most ardently and sincerely desire happiness. We are therefore settled in the conclusion that free voluntary action is one of the main principles, of happiness, both on earth and in heaven. We then must clearly and fully arrive at the position that even God himself cannot make a man happy, notwithstanding HIS sincere and amazing love, and its noble and grand manifestation to man, unless man is sincerely willing to receive the blessing of happiness. Men are then made happy, only in perfect consonance with their agency on will to receive it. We need not now show that sincerity, in every effort we make for happiness, is absolutely essential in obtaining it, as we all know that sincerity is the most substantial, and sublimest part of moral agency. In perfect harmony with the congenial agency of man, God has most beautifully and permanently organized the universe, of matter and of mind, around him, so that in the judicious use, and correct application of things within his reach, man may be perfectly happy. Within the circle of the physical creation, every intelligent, rational agent may be delighted by sights most beautiful and magnificent, may take pleasure in sounds most harmonious and thrilling; and in fine may sweetly entertain himself, by rich odors, natural fragrance, like unto the enchanting frankincense of Heaven itself.

As sights are familiar, and sounds and odors ever ceasing around us, we through thoughtlessness and indifference, lose their enchanting and happy effects. If we are not benefitted in our enjoyments, by the magnificence, the glory, the beauties, and real excellencies of the moving world around us, it is certainly our own fault. For as certainly as we live, these things, just red to, have been purposely organized for our special enjoyment, through our whole sublunary existence, on earth. Love itself led the full organization of the universe in its peculiar manner, and adapted to the wants, necessities and happiness of man, as a social citizen of earth. Love the mild source, and only foundation of the amazing sacrafice of Jesus, for the complete and ample redemption, of this world of guilty rebels. What is there in corrupt human nature? What there in the character of cruel blood-thirsty man, demanding a consummate scheme of untarnished benevolence, to remove all the corruption from his soul, and to transplant in his heart, the holy life of love? Nothing that we can see.

The marvellous death of Jesus, or a stigmatized cross—its bitter pangs of heart-felt agony, are proofs supreme, clear as heaven's own native light, that love, pure, holy and disinterested, opened the way, and consummated the wondrous plan of the world's redemption. Jesus suffering thus in mind, as well as in body, a weight of woe, more than whole worlds could bear, is argument unanswerable that unsullied, boundless love led to the suffering deed,—to finish the amazing plan, without which not a single soul on our globe, could ever be saved here, or raised at last to heaven. His suffering for a series of years,—the insults, buffettings, colds, hungers, temptations, and wants, more than any one merely human, could ever have endured, is suficient to impress every human soul, with irresistible conviction, of his disinterested love to man. This is to purify man on earth, to live a life of bliss, with his associates, in prospect of greater bliss, and higher honor in heaven, her after to be enjoyed.

The preparation of a future state of unlimited and in effable bliss for man's final and eternal enjoyment, is another grand exhibition of God's good will to the human race. Heaven is that state of future Bliss. Its existence is eternal. Its bliss will never end. Its beauty will never fade. Its glory will never be tarnished. Its pure friendship will never abate. Its sincerity can never be destroyed. Its sublime and tasteful interest will never fail. The brightness of its light will never grow dim. And its love, the primary bliss of Heaven, will increase to all eternity.

The following passages most elegantly illustrate and confirm these facts. "In my Fathers house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." John 14. 2, 3. "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the Sun in the kingdom of their Father." Mat. 13. 43. "And when the chief shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." 1 Pet. 5-4. "But we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." 1 John 2-2. "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world.." Mat. 25.-34. "And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars forever and ever." Dan. 12-3 Thus it is seen that all who will love and serve God in the beauty of holiness will have heaven, with all the eternal grandeurs pertaining to its native existence, presented to them, for their everlasting enjoyment. If others have no such heaven presented to them, it is because this heaven has no charms for such characters.—They choose not to walk in the way, toward heaven, evidencing very clearly, thereby, that they do not love heaven, neither do they love the means adequate to bring true believers to heaven.

Ministers' Department.

From the Albany Spectator.

HOW SHALL WE PREACH!

There is too little of faithful, energetic gospel preaching in the Church. Too many watchmen are slumbering on the very battlements of Zion, or uttering but a feeble voice of warning to the passers through the dark valley of sin and death. Traps and pitfalls are on every side, and at each moment's dropping of the sands of time, numbers of the crowd of sinners hasten to eternity, fall and sink, never to rise again. Perhaps no truthful and effective warning has reached them—the gospel trumpet hangs by the side, of the watchman, or, if used, has been made to give an uncertain sound.

There is a tribunal in the other world before which pastor and people must one day stand.—The unwarned will be there to confront him—to reveal the guilt-mark of the faithless servant—to lay at his door, the charge of their impenitence on earth, and hopeless despair in eternity. O, can he stand that ordeal, satisfy the omnipotent Judge, and clear his soul? No, never; he cannot be innocent of the blood of ruined spirits. He cannot receive the welcome plaudit given to the saints, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from before the foundation of the world." He must go with his perdition-bound followers, for ever and forever to be cursed by them of their misery and destruction.

In this view of the subject of ministerial responsibility, how important it becomes for all the ambassadors of Christ, rightly to answer the question. How shall we preach? Not indifferently, for the interests at stake are too vast to allow it. Sent out into a world of sin to rescue souls from endless ruin; time flying, eternity at hand: death and judgment draw near, he has not a moment to lose. Hell yawns, he cannot temporize. The spirit of the world whispers—preach mildly, preach soothingly, learnedly and eloquently! An echo from the flesh replies—mildly, soothingly, learnedly and eloquently!—But God, the Bible, conscience, reply, "Preach with the Holy Ghost, sent down from heaven"—"not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit, and of power."

Preach as dying men to dying men. Preach each sermon as if you knew it were the last your lips should utter, or the last some poor sinner before you should ever hear. Let your souls be full of eternity and the worth of the deathless spirit. Preach as for your own lives: and be sure that you preach the cross. All preaching without this is worthless. Be it your fervent and hourly increasing ambition to know nothing among men bound to death, judgment, and eternity, save Jesus Christ and him crucified.—Glory in the Son of God. Magnify his grace and power before all men, by humble and prayerful individual devotion of soul, by spending and being spent in his service. Let the world take knowledge of you that you have been with Christ and learned of him. Preach as if you had, and the church will no longer slumber on in false security. Her voice will go up to heaven as the voice of many waters. God will hear her cry—he will come and revive her throughout all her borders. Sinners will call aloud for mercy, and find no peace, till they seek for and obtain it at the foot of the Saviour's cross. Zion will rejoice, the nations will break forth into singing, and the whole earth will be vocal with the praises of God.

[From the Northern Christian Advocate.

A LETTER TO A PREACHER,

Who was disappointed in his appointment.

Dear Sir:—You may wonder that there should be any opposition to your being appointed at—— at the last Conference; and it may be proper you should know the ground of that opposition. I believe it is owing to your manner of preaching. You have thoughts plenty enough, and words quite too plenty. You drawl out some words and clip off others, so that together with your amazing rapidity; you seem like a mountain torrent. There is majesty in the scene, but the pleasure consists in being at a suitable distance to behold it without being overwhelmed by it. You stand and pour out a torrent of words, but you do not seem to see your hearer nor care whether they hear, that is, understand you or not. I believe many go to hear you as a matter of curiosity, but very few are profited by what you say owing to the want of connection, method, plan, simplicity and perspicuity. If you are understood at the moment, what you have said is forgotten when that moment is past. Your hearers recollect that they have been in a terrible tempest, that the winds blew and the hail rattled; but so far as recollecting, ruminating and "inwardly digesting" the truth is concerned, it might as well have been delivered in an unknown tongue, when there was none to interpret.

Although I admire you as a gentleman, and love you as a christian brother, I am not much profited by your ministry. In saying this, I doubt not I speak the language of hundreds, although none of them would like to call your attention to this subject.

PASTORAL EXAMPLE.

The conviction of our cordial belief of the truths we deliver, which such a discharge of the ministerial duty will produce in the minds of our hearers, must be seated and maintained by a corresponding life. Unaccompanied with this, all other means will be in vain.—'Example,' says a French prelate, 'is the groundwork of a ministers character.' 'In vain,' he adds, 'do we preach to our hearers. It is not what we declare in the house of God, it is what they see us practice in our general demeanor.' If, then, we would maintain a conviction among our hearers, that we are sincere, our conduct, as well as our sermons, must preach; and if the former contradicts, or does not coincide with the latter, no good effect can be reasonably expected to follow. We must therefore, be able, though we may not think proper, to say, with the apostle, "Be ye followers of me even as I am of Christ. The things which ye have received, and learned, and heard, and seen in me, do, and the God of peace shall be with you." If says archbishop Usher to his clergy, 'if practical Christian piety, benevolence, and self-government, with constant zeal to promote them all upon earth, are not the first and chief qualities, which your parishioners and acquaintance will ascribe to you; if they will speak of you as noted on either account, but pass over these articles in silence, and, when asked about them, be at a loss what to say, excepting, possibly, that they know no harm of you, all is not right: nor can such a clergy answer the design of its institution any where; nor even maintain its ground in a country of freedom and learning." God grant that the clergy of this country may never, by evincing the want of these qualities, frustrate the all important end of their ministry, nor render it impossible for them to maintain their ground against the assaults of error, vice, and infidelity."

MISSIONARY INTELLIGENCE.

TREBIZOND.

JOURNAL OF MR. POWERS

Violent Opposition—Two Brethren in Prison

The December Herald contained interesting letters from Messrs. Dwight and Bliss, respecting certain recent occurrences at Trebizond. The extracts from this Journal, it will be seen, describe some events which took place during the period embraced in those communications. But most of the incidents mentioned below will be new to the reader; and they cannot fail to give a clearer view of the trials of our brethren.

July 20, 1846. Our service has been disturbed, on the last three Sabbaths, by individuals coming to my house for the purpose of withdrawing some of their relatives who were present.—On one occasion a woman accompanied by several others, entered the door and in the most passionate, clamorous and threatening language demanded her aged mother, who was present for the first time. On another occasion the father of a young man and his uncle, provided with a large stick, laid wait at my door for the purpose of beating him, when he should leave the house.—At the close of service, however, the Belgian Consul, who was providentially present, took the boy under his protection and conducted him to his house. The uncle, seeing that his prey was about to escape out of his hands, in his rage and madness broke the stick in his hand, and threw it after the lad in the street. On another occasion several women, collecting a company of others of like spirit, was waiting outside the door to beat their own daughters and sisters, as they should pass out. The crowd was dispersed by the kavass of the English Consul; sent at our request. The women who are thus pursued by their relatives, are in middle life and at the head of families. Our audience, for the last two months, has comprised more than thirty persons.

Under date of July 26, Mr. Powers mentions the administration of baptism and the Lord's supper to the natives, for the first time since the commencement of missionary labors at Trebizond.—"It was a novel spectacle, to see the parents in person present their offspring to God in this ordinance, and then to see the child sprinkled with simple pure water, with no crossings, or other useless ceremonies. The scene was deeply solemn and impressive. It annouced, moreover, a final seperation from that church which has so cruelly persecuted our friends for being faithful to the word of God and their own conscience, and has at length cast them out its pale." The administration of this ordinance, as also of the Lord's Supper, for the first time was described in the letter of Mr. Bliss, published in the last number of the Herald.

August 2. To-day a woman, provided with a bag of stones, and attended by a crowd, waited outside my door to stone her own doughter, as she should leave my house. A single policeman, unable to disperse the crowd called to his comrades and soon cleared the street. As this daughter, with her husband and others was going quietly to her home, she again encountered the crowd of women, from whose missiles all were in Emminent danger. One of the brethren to protect his wife from this storm of stones, seized the principal combatant and held her fast till his wife could escape. For this he was forthwith complained of to the civil authorities, and actually arraigned; and although he was not condemned for this offence, yet his own father, meeting him while in the custody of the kavass, beat him with his fists, then most slanderously complained to the Pasha that his son had beaten him, and had him immediately seized and imprisoned. On a similer charge his brother Hagop, the teacher of our school, was also seized and thrown into the same prison. In this last case however no charge was stated; there was no form of trial; no questions were asked; nor did he himself know on what pretence he had been apprehended, till after the two brothers in the darkness of night, had been marched to another prison and their feet made fast in the stocks.

The imprisonment of these unoffending brethren was briefly described by Mr. Dwight, in the letter which was published in the December Herald. The facts now stated by Mr. Powers, however, were not mentioned in that communication.

3. On demanding Hagop of the Pasha this morning, through the English consulate, on the ground that he is a teacher in our employment, the Pasha denied his having apprehended him!—He said, however, that he was seaching for him, and if he could find him, he should punish him. The wives of these imprisoned brethren gained access to the Pasha, with great difficulty, for the purpose of presenting a petition for their release. The Pasha, on reading their request, tore it in pieces, and, with most insulting and abusive language, drove the petitioners from his presence. They were also denied the privilege of seeing their husbands, or doing any thing for their relief.

The subsequent history of this disgraceful affair is in part known. One of our brothers was conveyed to Constantinople, where he remained in prison at the date of the latest intelligence.—The other brother was not sent to Constantinople because he was too seriously ill to go. Indeed another hour's confinement, in the judgment of two physicians, would have made his recovery hopeless.

Funeral of a Native Brother.

The death of a pious American was mentioned in a letter of Mr. Dwight, which has been already refered to. Mr. Powers gives an affecting account of the trial experienced by the friends of the deceased in procuring a place of sepulture. The Armenians denied him burial in their graveyard, although the family were owners of a lot in it.—The civil authorities refused permission to inter him in a field which had been purchased for a Protestant cemetery; they would not even allow him to be buried on a sand beach near the city, nor on land owned by a Protestant Armenian in a neighboring village. After spending a whole day in fruitless efforts to procure a decent interment, they were obliged to deposit the remains in the road, a horsepath running each side of it.—For such a place they gave twenty-one dollars!

11. Night came, a dark and gloomy night.—but the concourse of persons—men as well as women and children now appearing among them—increased rather than diminished. At eight o'clock the body was removed amid the hissings and cursings and shoutings of the assembled multitudes, who were only restrained from acts of violence by the police. The Pasha had given permission for the funeral ceremonies to be performed by a Protestant minister and according to Protestant usage. I, accordingly accompanied the corpse to its narrow house; but how unlike the solemnities of a funeral occasion! The grave was hastily dug by some of the Protestant brethren. The body was borne by others of their number and by the sons of the deceased. Our unfeeling Moslem police were holding merry chat or smoking their pipes. The rain was falling and the air was filled with sounds not of earthly origin. Altogether the circumstances of the burial were most grievously afflictive.

On returning to the house with the relatives, silent and sad, I gathered them together; and, after reading 1 Corinthians xv, accompanied by remarks designed to tranquilize and console their minds, I conducted them to the throne of grace.

The remains of the Christian brother, and those of his wife, lie side by side in their lone and ignoble graves. Women as they pass to mark their contempt and hatred of Protestants and Protestantism, throw a stone upon them, which the first caravan of horses, more kind than they, brush aside with their feet. Yet, despite the enmity of earth and hell, all that dust shall rise. Our brother shall yet come forth, a mighty conqueror over death and all his foes.

The Pasha—Present State of Affairs.

12. Mr. Bliss and myself had an interview with the Pasha. He received us civilly—politely, I may say—but discovered a mind full of prejudice and unkindly feeling towards us. He accused us of having political ends in view, and of attaching men to our interests by pecuniary considerations, &c. On all these points we endeavored, at considerable length, to clear ourselves from these unjust aspersions, and also remove error and prejudice from his mind, by presenting the nature of our work and the real objects which we have in view. Pasha recognized the Protestants as a seperate community, having the right to hold a seperate religious service, and promised for us personally, and for our congregation on the Sabbath, his protection from the assaults of the Armenians. This recognition by the Pasha and this promise of protection, even if he is not very scrupulous in fulfilling it, are of no small consequence to us and our cause.

Mr. Powers mentions, August 24, the diminished attendance on the public services of the Sabbath. "Women," he says, "dare not come." It is a singular fact that at Trebizond the most bitter and most active enemies to the gospel are females. "The recent outbreak of opposition has been almost exclusively the work of women."

September 28. At present we are in a more quiet state. The last two Sabbaths we have dispensed with police men, previous to which, for two months or more, two men sat regularly at our door on the Sabbath to keep peace. We have passed through a stormy season, but are thankful that nothing more calamitious has occurred. We have taken measures to obtain a firman for a Protestant burying ground in this city, and we learn that a promise to that effect has been given by the Sublime Porte. Externally nothing is more important to the success of our cause, The respect shown to the dead in these countries, the sacredness attached to their graves, and the ceremony with which they are often buried, lead some, not yet established in the truth, to contemplate with horror the idea of becoming Protestants, if they are to be buried like brutes.

Females begin to attend our service again; seven of them were present last Sabbath. I have also an evening lecture at the house of our deacon, at which about the same number of females are usually present; several of these do not attend on the Sabbath.

During these six or eight months the members of this little community have endured great trials; and they still suffer much privately; and will doubtless suffer much for a long time to come; but God has done great things for them, whereof they are glad. To the members of this station these have been months of thrilling interest. In looking back on the past, we feel called upon to bless God and take courage.

Two individuals, having been caarefully examined and approved, stood propounded for admission to the church on the first Sabbath in October.—Missionary Herald.

CHRONOLOGICAL.

Some of the Events of the past Year.

Prepared at the office of the N. Y. Tribune

January 1st.—The Province of Yucatan declared herself independent of Mexico, on the ground that the Central Government had violated the compact.

12th.—The roof of a part of the Coal Mines in Carbondale, Pa., caved in and buried 50 or 60 persons, of whom 15 were killed.

February 9th.—Resolutions for terminating the Joint Occupation of Oregon, passed the U. S. House of Representatives. 163 to 54.

11th.—The English army in British India, under Sir H. Gough, 20,000 strong, fought a great battle with the Sikhs, 36,000, in which the latter were entirely defeated and driven across the Sutlej, with the loss of ten thousand killed and wounded. British loss 2,373, including Maj. Gen. Sir R. Dick.

13th.—Collision between steamers Congress and Saladin on the Mississipp; the Congress destroyed, and 15 persons drowned.

15th.—A severe gale on the Atlantic coast, in which several vessels bound to New York were wrecked on Squam Beach. Among them was the packet ship John Minturn, in which 30 persons were drowned.

23d.—An insurrection broke out in the ancient Kingdom of Poland. The insurgents. said to have been 40,000 strong, obtained possesion of a great part of Gallicia, and marched on Cracow, where they were met and put down by the Russians.

25th.—John H. Pleasants, Esq. an eminent newspaper editor of Richmond, Va., was mortally wounded in a duel with Thomas Ritchie, jr.

28th.—British House of Commons sanctioned, by a large majority, Sir Robert Peel's measure for reforming the Corn Laws.

March 28th.—Gen. Taylor, with an army of 3,500 men arrived at the Rio Grande, and took post opposite Matamoras.

30th.—Great freshet in the Penobscot, and immense damage at Bangor.

April 4th.—Spanish Ministry, under Gen Narvaez, dissolved, and a new Administration installed under M. Isturitz.

16th.—Resolutions to terminate the Joint Occupation of Oregon passed the Senate, 40 to 14.

24th.—Capt. Thornton's command taken by the Mexicans.

May 2d.—Steamer Cambria ran aground at Truro, on Cape Cod.

3d.—The Mexicans opened their batteries on Fort Brown, opposite Matamoras. The cannonade was kept up without intermission for seven days, and returned with effect. During the siege, Major Brown was killed by a falling shell.

7th.—Town of Grenada, Miss., almost swept away by a tornado; 20 persons killed, and many others wounded.

8th.—The first general battle was fought with the Mexicans at Palo Alto. The American force under General Taylor was 2,288; the Mexicans, under Arista, numbered about twice as many. American loss, 9 killed and 44 wounded; Mexican loss in killed and wounded supposed to be about 400.

9th.—Battle of Resaca de la Palma, in which the Mexicans were completely put to route, with a loss of about 600 killed and wounded. American loss, 39 killed, and 83 wounded. Among the officers killed in these two engagements, were Maj. Ringgold, Capt. Page, Lieuts. Cochrane and Chadbourn.

12th.—War with Mexico recognized by both Houses of Congress, and a bill passed authorising the reception of 50,000 volunteers.

26th.—Prince Louis Napoleon escaped from the fortress of Ham, in France, where he had been confined for an attempt at revolution.

June 1st.—Pope Gregory 16th died at Rome, having served more than fifteen years.

4th.—Steamer Queen City burst her connection pipe at Natchez, and instantly killed 10 persons, and scalded about thirty, many of whom died.

8th.—Lecompte guillotined at Paris, for attempting to shoot Louis Phillippe.

12th.—Nearly the whole city of St. John's Newfoundland, destroyed by fire. About 6,000 persons were compelled to pass the succeeding night in the open air. Three lives were lost, and property to the amount of about five millions of dollars.

14th.—Theatre Royal Quebec consumed by fire, and 47 persons perished in the flames.

18th.—The U. S. Senate ratified the Treaty for the division of Oregon.

21st.—Cardinal Mastal Ferretti, was inaugurated at Rome, under the title of Pope Pius 10th. He is 54 years of age.

25th.—Irish Coercion bill rejected by 73 majority in the British House of Commons.

25th.—Peel Ministry resigned, and Lord John Russell was commissioned to form a new Cabinet.

27th.—Brig Sully, on her way from Pictou, N. S., to Fall River Mass, was wrecked in the Vineyard Sound. About 40 lives lost.

July 3d.—The new Tariff passed the House of Representatives by a vote of 114 to 95.

6th.—Com. Sloat took possession of Monterey, California, without serious opposition.

8th.—13 persons killed and 20 or 30 wounded by the cars running off the track of the North of France Railway, between Paris and Brussels.

13th.—About 300 buildings in Nantucket were destroyed by fire—loss $800,000, about one third of which was insured.

17th.—Ratifications of the Oregon Treaty were exchanged at the foreign office in London.

24th.—Louis Bonaparte, brother of Napoleon, and Ex-King of Holland, died in Florence, aged 67. Jerome, Ex-King of Westphalia, is the only surviving brother of Napoleon.

28th.—The new Tariff bill passed a third reading in the U. S. Senate by the casting vote of Vice President Dallas, and was finally passed by a vote of 28 to 27.

29th.—Another attempt was made to assassinate Louis Phillippe by Joseph Henri, a bankrupt merchant of Paris. He fired two pistols at the King while he was standing on the balcony of the Tuillieries in the midst of his family.

August 3d.—President Polk vetoed the River and Harbor bill.

5th.—About 300 buildings were consumed by fire at Laprairie, Canada.

6th.—Another revolution took place in Mexico in favor of the exiled chief Santa Anna. The troops of Vera Cruz and its vicinity first declared in his favor, and were soon followed by those at the capital, who deposed and imprisoned Paredes, and proclaimed in favor of Santa Anna and the Constitution of 1824.

8th.—President Polk vetoed the French Spoliations bill.

10th.—Congress adjourned after the longest session ever held except that of 1841-2.

15th.—U. S. brig Truxton went aground on the bar of Tuxpam River, and two days after was abondoned by Capt. Carpenter, officers and crew, who went ashore and surrendered themselves as prisoners of war. They were subsequently exchanged for General La Vega and his associates.

17th.—Com. Richard F. Stockton declared California a Territory of the United States, proclaimed himself Governor, and issued a code of laws for the Government of the Territory, &c.

18th.—Gen. Kearney at the head of about 9,000 troops, took peaceable possesion of Santa Fe, the capital of New Mexico. He subsequently issued a proclamation declaring New Mexico a territory of the United States, and organized a Civil Government, appointing a Government and Judicial officers.

21st.—Steamboat Enterprize burst her boiler above Reynosa; 5 persons killed several wounded.

31st.—A serious riot among a company of Irish Volunteers at Barita, in which 15 or 20 were killed & wounded. Col. Baker of Ill., badly wounded in attempting to quell the riot.

September 7th.—Steamer New York foundered at sea, on her passage from Galveston to New Orleans; 20 lives lost.

10th.—Felix G. McConnell, M. C. from Alabama, committed suicide at Washington, while under the influence of delirium tremens.—Steamboat Elcelsior burst her boiler as she was leaving the foot of Courtland-st., New York, and killed three or for persons. The boat took fire and was entirely consumed.

19th.—Gen. Taylor arrived before Montery at the head of about 7,000 men, and after a siege of three days, forced the Mexicans, under Ampudia, to capitulate and evacuate the city.—American loss, in killed and wounded, a trifle less than 500; Mexican loss not known, but supposed to be about 1,000. Their force is said to have been 11,000. Among the Americans killed and mortally wounded were the following: Lieut. C. Watson of Baltimore, Brevet Majors Barbour and McCall, Capts. Morris and Field, Lieuts. Irwin, Hazlitt, Hoskins and Wood, all of the regular army; also Capt. Williams of the Topographical Engineers; Capt. McKavell and Lieut. Truet, 8th Infantry; Capt. Battlem and Lieut. Putnam, of 1st Tennessee Regiment; Lieut. Graham and Armstrong, Capt. Gillespie, of the Texan Rangers.

22d.—Steamer Great Britain, Capt. Hosken, went ashore on the coast of Ireland. No lives lost.

October 11th,—A terrible gale occurred in the Gulf of Mexico. Key West, Florida, was almost entirely destroyed; every dwelling except six was swept away, and Government property to the amount of $300,000 was destroyed. Thirty or forty vessels were wrecked or driven ashore, and about 50 persons were drowned, or killed by falling buildings. The gale extended to the West India Islands, and at Havanna was even more severe than at Key West. In and about that city 1,275 houses were destroyed, and 1,038 more or less injured. Great damage was done and many lives lost in other parts of the Island. The coffee, sugar and tobacco crops suffered greatly.

15th.—About this time 3,000 Nestorian Christians were massacred by order of their arch persecuter, Beder Khan Bey; 36 of the Nestorian villages were sacked.

17th—Great fire at Apalachicola, Fla. Loss $75,000 to 80,000.

22d.—Com. Perry captured two Mexican steamers and several other vessels at Fronta, mouth of the rive Tabasco.

23d.—Captured Tabasco, after a slight resistance.

30th.—General Wool took peaceful possession of Monclova, the capital of Coahulia.

November 14th.—Tampico was taken possession of by Com. Conner, without opposition.

21st.—Steamer Maria came in contact with the Sultana near Natchez, when the former was sunk. About 30 persons were drowned and as many more so badly scalded that most of them died.

27th.—Steamer Atlantic, on her passage from Allyn's Point to New York, burst her steam box during a severe gale, and was driven ashore on Fisher's Island and totally wrecked. Her passengers and crew amounted to about 115 souls, over 40 of whom perished. Among the lost were Capt. Dustan of the Atlantic, Dr. Hasler of the Navy, Lieut. Norton of the U. S. Army, and Rev. Dr. Armstiong, Secretary of the American Board of Foreigh Missions.

Meteorology--Remarkable Fall of water.

The Science of Meteorology, though least known is one of the most interesting within the circle of human knowledge. The seeming (for it was only seeming) impossibility of determining the laws, by which the atmosphere is governed, prevented during many ages of the world, any attempt to observe, much less determine with accuracy the measure and recurrence of the winds, the rain the snow and the alternate vicissitudes of heat and cold. Nevertheless it is true, & in a few years will be demonstrated to be true, that all these changes apparantly so fickle, are governed by fixed principles and move in fixed cycles, the entire period of which may require a long time to complete; but which, like the system of comets, will be made in the fullness of time.

Although even Arago admits that it is impossible to predict the weather exactly on a given day, yet all know that the seasons return and complete their circle with absolute certainty. Nay, although we cannot tell what sort of weather will occur on a given day of July or December, we know certainly that one will be a hot month and the other a cold one. We know more, that at certain periods of the year the winds will prevail from the South-West. We do not know beforehand exactly the point the winds will blow a certain day, we do not know that in a certain quarter of a year they will prevail in the South-West.

What we would now call the reader's attention to is the causes which have produced the present Floods in the Valley of the Ohio. These causes are a greatly increased Fall of Water in the month of December, attendant upon a higher average of Temperature.

We have before us the Meteorological table for the month of December, kept by Dr. Ray of Woodward College. The facts there stated explain in the fullest manner, the cause of the present Floods which have extended through the Ohio Valley, and probably through the greater part of the United States.

The winter of 1845—6 was comparatively cold and dry; while the present winter is exactly the reverse. It appears from Dr. Ray's tables, that the past month of December was seven degrees in everage temperature warmer than the average temperature of the same month in the past twelve years; and that its average temperature was fifteen degrees warmer than that of December, 1845.

The result has been an enormous fall of water in the last six weeks. The descent of water is quite remarkable. Dr. Ray finds that in the month of December, just past, the fall of rain, and of snow, melting as it fell, was equal to a perpendicular height of 9-25 inches, or more than three quarters of a foot. This is three times the amount which fell last December, and above the highest average of any month in the last twelve years! It is also about one-fourth the entire average amount of the entire year. The amount of rain which fell at Steubenville in the year 1845 was 38 inches. It is seen that the rain which fell here in December was about one-fourth that amount.—Not only this, but on the 1st of January it rained heavily, and on the 4th (Monday) a very large quantity of rain fell. Taking the entire amount of five weeks, commencing on the first of December, and there has fallen at least 12 inches perdicular, of rain, or one-third the amount for a year.

Consider now the effect of a foot of water perpendicularly spread on the entire surface of the Ohio Valley, and having to find an outlet within five weeks. The Ohio Valley is about 1,000 miles in bredth—being the surface watered by streams tributary to the Ohio. This gives three hundred square miles, and each square mile will have received on its surface no less than twenty seven willion, six hundred and seventy-eight thousand. four hundred cubic feet of water!

The Ohio River averages not more than half a mile in breadth. In high water, it averages about fifty feet perpendicular. Its Cubic Contents, then, are equal to a foot perpendicular spread over the same length twenty-five miles in breadth. This is just one twelfth part only of the quantity fallen in five weeks! The evaporation at this season of the year is small. The ground was already saturated. It is probable, therefore, that full two thirds of the whole amount fallen must find its way to the Ohio River, and an outlet to the Mississippi.

This gives the cause of the very high and continued stage of the Ohio River, at this season of the year, and the overflow of the Scioto, Miami, and other tributaries of the Ohio.

The entire Meteorology of this season has been quite remarkable. It is vain to make exact predictions; but it is certain that within a year or two we must have a very dry and cool season—most probably in the ensuing Summer.—Cin. Chronicle.

SCIENTIFIC.

THE WONDERS OF THE STARRY WORLDS.

We take the following from a report, in the Cincinnati "Chronicle," of a lecture on Astronomy, by Prof. MITCHEL:

A Parallax is the change of position, as measured by the arc of an angle—which a body apparently assumes when the observer himself sees it from two different positions. For example, if the ball of a steple were observed successively by the same person, from two opposite sides of the street below; it would appear in different positions on the sky. If, then a line were drawn through the ball to the eye of the spectator in one place, and another line from the ball to the spectator in the other place, it would make an angle at the ball of the steeple. The angle is called the Parallactic angle; and the arc which measures that angle, or the distance between the two points of observation, the Parallactic motion. It is obvious that if the stars were within a moderate distance, their Parallax could be observed from the surface of the Earth, whose diameter is eight thousand miles. But no parallax can be observed from different positions on the Earth. But there was another more magnificent distance, at which the observer could make his experiment. That was the diameter of the Earth's ORBIT. If, for example, the Astronomer fixed the position of the star on the 1st of January, in six months, (on the 1st of July,) he could observe it, at the end of a line nearly two hundred millions of miles long! For such is the diameter of the Earth's Orbit. This was the very process adopted by Bradley. He observed one of the nearest of the stars. Then in three months, he examined its position again; and in six months again. But, on line two hundred millions of miles long, he found no change! On a Triangle, whose base was two hundred millions of miles, an angle at the vertex, the Parallactic angle was not perceptible!

When the great Astronomer Herschel came upon the stage, he thought he could discover it by another plan. Some of the stars appeared to change in relation to each other optically. It was supposed to be only optical, and Herschel thought that by observing the relative positions of two in regard to one another—at either end of the diameter of the Earth's Orbit, he could obtain an element to calculate their distance. But, when the powers of his great telescope were brought to bear on them, he was astonished to find that those stars, instead of an optical motion, had a real one! That in fact, they were stars which moved round one another! This was a great discovery. But, it defeated his object; for the motion of these stars to one another, and the motion of the Earth in its orbit, relatively afforded nothing, by which to ascertain the Parallax.

At a still more recent period, the celebrated Oelburg requested Bessel of Olhenburgh to undertake this problem. He tried a new plan, and succeeded. It was this: The discovery of the Binary stars, with a motion relative to one another, has introduced a new element. He thought that though the parallax of one could not be discovered, he could discover that of two. He supposed a straight line to unite the two, and then another to be drawn to that line, intersecting it perpendicularly. That point he marked, as being fixed in that system. He then observed as before, and found a variation. After deducting from this enough for all the differences of aberrations, mutations, &c., there was a quantity remaining, which expressed the parallax of that system! It was found that the distance was so immense that while it takes light five hours to come from the new planet of La Verrier to this earth, it would take ten years to come from the stars!!

This was the first grand step towards going out from our own sytem and measuring the highways to other orbs, and other stars, and other systems! Then arose another question: Are our system and these systems disconnected, or are they united? Do these systems wander about without law or order? Or are they parts of one great whole? The first person who appears to have suggested that the fixed stars and the different systems might be placed in one connected order, and have their motion, and places in a still more magnificent system, was a Mr. Mitchell, in the 1769. Later than that the question was tested by Herschel. Even to the naked eye, it is aparent that one part of the heavens is more thickly studded with stars than another. This is that broad belt known as the Milky Way. On either side of this, the stars, though very brilliant, are less numerous. The question arises, may not our sun and planetary system be part of a great circle or sphere of stars and suns, of which this Milky Way is the central track?

The space penetrating power of the telescope does not depend solely on its power of magnifying, but on the size of the object glass. Herschel, by increasing the size of this beyond any thing known, thus acquired a sounding line into the depths of the blue firmanent. With one power the dim and misty light would come into apparent stars. With a still greater they would shine out, and blaze in thousands, and stud with aerial fires the before dim and unknown track of the Milky Way! Light seemed to have come from the very midst of the heavens, and the Gates of Darkness to be turned back upon their hinges!

But what then? Did these stars still thicken on? Or were they the stratum of one cluster? And was there really an interval of space? There was. The telescope sounding line was extending yet farther and beyond the Milky Way; there came a blue depth in which there was nothing! We, then, are in one magnificent stratum of stars! But, was there no other? Is ours the only cluster in the universe? Ah, no! There are dark and dim spots yet left. The telescope sees dim and misty—then dissolves them into stars, but far on the other side of the blue depth beyond the Milky Way!

The Lecturer here quoted the sublime bravura song of Jean Paul Richter:

"God called up from dreams a man into the vestibule of heaven saying—'Come thou hither, and see the glory of my house.' And to the servants that stood around his throne he said—'Take him and undress him from his robes of flesh; cleanse his vision, and put a new breath into his nostrils; only touch not with any change his human heart—the heart that weeps and trembles.' It was done; and, with a mighty angel for his guide, the man stood ready for his infinite voyage and from the terraces of heaven without sound or farewell, at once they wheeled away into endless space. Sometimes with solemn flight of angel wing they fled through Zaarrahs of darkness, through wilderness of death, that divided the worlds of life; sometimes they swept over frontiers, that were quickening under prophetic motions from God. Then, from a distance that is counted only in heaven, light dawned for a time through a sleepy film; by unutterable peace the light swept to them, they by unutterable pace to light; in a moment the rushing of planets was upon them; in a moment the blazing of suns was around them. Then came eternities of twilight, that revealed, but were not revealed.

To the right hand and to the left towered mighty constellations, that by self-repetitions and answer from afar, that by counter positions, built up triumphal gates, whose architraves, whose archways horrizontal, upright—resting, rose—at altitude, by spans—that seemed ghostly from infinitude. Without measure where the architraves, past number were the archways, beyond memory the gates. Within were stairs that scaled the eternities below; above was below, below was above, to the man stripped of gravitating body; depth was swallowed up in height, insurmountable height was swallowed up in depth unfathomable. Suddenly as thus they rode from infinite to infinite; suddenly as thus they tilted over abysmal worlds, a mighty cry arose—that systems more mysterious, that worlds more billowy—other heights and other depths—were coming, were nearing, were at hand.

Then the man sighed, and stopped, shuddered and wept. His overladened heart uttered itself in tears; and he said—'Angel I will go no farther. For the spirit of man acheth with this infinity. Insufferable is the glory of God. Let me lie down in the grave from the persecution of the infinite; for end, I see, there is none.' And from all the listening stars that shone around issued a choral voice, 'The man speaks truly; end there is none, that ever yet we heard of.' 'End is there none?' the angel solemnly demanded; 'Is there indeed no end? And is this the sorrow that kills you?'—But no voice answered, that he might answer himself. Then the angel threw up his glorious hands to the heaven of heavens, saying 'End is there none to the universe of God? Lo! also, there is no Beginning."

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 23, 1847.

☞We see that Professor Mitchell of Cincinnati has been engaged to deliver a course of twelve lectures on astronomy this winter in Boston.

KALIDA CIRCUIT.—Br. J. L. Borton, Superintendent, writes us that when he entered upon his field of labor, on the 1st of Oct. he found the Circuit in a very low condition, several of the classes having entirely declined. But he adds: "We still have some good hearted brethren here who live in the enjoyment of religion, and a better spirit seems to prevail amongst our friends generally. than heretofore. The Lord revive us more abundantly."

TELEGRAPH COMING. The workmen are now engaged in setting posts west of Pittsburgh for the great telegraphic line to Cincinnati. It is expected that it will be completed as far as Zanesville, by the 1st of April next. Our enterprising neighbor of the Courier, is already making arrangements to receive regular telegraphic despatches from the eastern cities. The expenses will be large, if not onerous, but he is determined to stand it, feeling assured that by an increased patronage he will be justified in the undertaking. The "Tri Weekly" will be continued, and if there is prospect of sufficient patronage, a Daily Courier will be commemced. The line to Cincinnati is to be extended without delay, via Louisville to New Orleans. Meanwhile a contract has been made to construct another line from Washington, via Charleston and Mobile to New Orleans. What a big lightning talk we will have, when these projected enterprises shall have been completed! And what an age of wonders do we live in!

REV. BURR H. M'COWN.—This gentleman, heretofore known as a Methodist minister, formerly a professor in Augusta College, Ky. but laterly Professor in Transylvania University, same state, has united with the Presbyterian Church, (O. S.) as we learn by the last number of the Presbyterian of the West. He was unanimously received, upon his application, Jan. 1st, as a member of the West Lexington Presbytery, after thorough examination on Theology and Church Government, and after his adoption of the Confession of faith in the usual form.

A CHALLENGE ALMOST,—ACCEPTED QUITE.—Mr. O. A. Brownson, the recent convert to popery, talks quite valorously of overthrowing Protestantism. He calls upon Catholic controversialists to "carry the war into her camp" and press hard upon her with the sword of truth, and he adds, her days are soon over, and the places which have known her, shall know her no more forever."

The Presbyterian of the West, (Cincinnati) of which that distinguished debater, Rev. N. L. Rice, is now senior Editor, responds in the following words to this boast of Brownson:

Agreed—this is just what we desire.—The sooner the better, and the closer the conflict, the sooner ended. No place better to make this assault than the "Queen City." We shall be quite pleased to see the Roman clergy adopt the counsel of their zealous convert; and we trust, they will have courage enough to come to close quarters. Since Protestanism is to be killed off, we desire to see it done in a fair and manly way. Come on, gentlemen.

M. P. CHURCH IN MADISON, IA.—We are gratified to learn, by private letters from Brs. G. Wheatley and S. Andrews, that the society of Meth. Protestants, in Madison Ia. which had been almost extinct for a few years past, is being revived. The settlement of Rev. Dr. Holcomb, in that city, and identifying himself with the cause, will prove a blessing. Madison is a fine place, and the M. P. Church has a meeting house there, and no debt upon the property. We state this for the encouragement of friends going west, who might be disposed to settle there.

THE FLOODS.—By latest accounts it seems that the damages to the public works of Ohio, by the late inundation, have not been as extensive as had been apprehended. Already were the state hands at work at Dayton, and it is believed that the Miami Canal will be put in complete repair in time for spring navigation.

SENDING BILLS.—We learn by the Boston Olive Branch, that one of the publishers of that city recently addressed a letter to the Post Master General, at Washington, enquiring whether bills can be lawfully sent enclosed in newspapers, to subscribers, free of postage. Answer was promptly returned from the Department, in the following words:

P. O. Department, Dec. 29, 1846.

SIR:—Yours of the 24th has been received. Now, as before the passage of the Post Office law of 1845, publishers of newspapers may transmit their bills for subscriptions due, free of postage, according to the provisions of Sec. 156 of the Post Office regulations.

Respectfully yours,
W. J. BROWN,
2d. Ass't. P. M. General.

As we have many subscribers who ought to pay us our dues for the paper, we think we must send bills, if they do not pay soon. In case bills are sent, our friends should know that it is no infraction of Post Office law, and that no post master has a right to exact either postage or penalty, from them or us.

PENNSYLVANIA—GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE.—After the usual adoration for the Divine Goodness, Gov. Shunk alludes at some length to the war with Mexico, and the promptness and patriotism of the volunteers of his State who have been mustered into the service. Though Governor of the land of Penn, he seems to justify the war. In this his Quaker brethren will think him wrong. He recommends an appropriation for the expenses of the volunteers. The public debt of the State is set down at $40,789,000, but has been somewhat reduced the past year. The injury to the public works, chiefly canals, the past year, by floods, is stated as a serious drawback upon the revenue. The damages are estimated at $261,500. Yet the receipts by canal and rail road tolls are steadily increasing. The Governor conceives that the increased wealth of the State, and the accumulation of business on the public works, will ere long justify a diminution of taxes. He recommends an examination and revision of the tax laws. He states that the modification of the British Corn Laws, by which our agricultural products are admitted into British ports has already a happy influence upon American farming interests. The Banks of the State, he reckons in a comparatively sound condition. He urges that Congress be importunately memoralized for an appropriation to improve the navigation of the Ohio river. The sum of seventy six thousand dollars has been expended within ten years past upon a geological survey, of the State Yet the complete results of the survey, have not yet been made public. To this matter he directs the attention of the Legislature. He alludes to the alarming increase of divorces, and thinks that legislative divorces are of dangerous tendency.

"LET NOT THE STRONG MAN GLORY IN HIS STRENGH."—One of the Washington letter writers states, that the late Senator Barrow, when struck with the sudden disease which terminated his life, had just remarked to a friend, bracing himself up, and throwing out his chest, that he knew not, and had never experienced what a sick day was. At that very moment, he was attacked with a severe and excrutiating pain, the commencement of the fatal illness which proved irremidiable. What a warning!

OHIO LEGISLATURE.—The House have determined upon the 8th day of February for final adjournment.

WAR PROSPECT.

The N. Y. Sun of 18th inst, contain important accounts from the Mexican Congress, from which it appears that the war spirit there is undiminished. We give the following extract from the Message of the Mexican President.

But, worse than all, this unfortunate event has thrown into the power of the enemy one of the capitals of our states, also a vast extent of territory, thus transferring the theatre of the war into the heart of our Republic. The Government, undismayed by these disappointments, thought only of raising new forces. The illustrious General SANTA ANNA, by an act of his life which will cover him with imperishable honor, [refused] to take upon himself the supreme command, but marched at once to San Louis, where, in the space of a few weeks, he united and organized an army of more than 22,000 men, sections of which have already thrown themselves before, and encountered the enemy!! On their part, the Government of the United States, pledged as they are to "conquer a peace," have given orders to General Taylor, that he should advance. Thus, then, another encounter between the two nations will soon take place. From the valor and number of our troops, the enthusiasm and skill of their chief, and the justice of our cause, we ought to expect a favorable result. But however it terminates, this action will neither be the last nor decisive. Our country being invaded and occupied—not only the territory in question, but a great part of that which never belonged to Texas—whole States over which the sovereignty of Mexico was never questioned; enveloped in a war for our race, and aggravated in a manner the most unjust and atrocious which the mind can conceive of, our honor and the welfare of our children—this sacred interest which nations are not able to disregard—oblige us to sustain the struggle, however prolonged and obstinate, until, respected for our valor and our constancy, we shall arrest the immoral ambition of our northern neighbors, and make sure the position of our race upon this hemisphere, peopled for the greater part by them, and where at no distant day their ardent and generous deeds will shine forth, brilliant as the noon-day sun. If great sacrifices are necessary for this strife, disgraceful would it be to lose the whole for the false advantages of a deceitful and fugitive peace. In a great crisis we are called upon to give illustrious proofs of our power and virtue. Our fathers fought for their independence eleven years, in a strife always disadvantageous, spilling their blood at every moment. Thanks to their spirit, we were raised from an humble colony to the position of an independent nation. If Mexico fights with constancy and intrepidity, her's will be the triumph, and the merited respect which she will acquire among the other nations of the earth. Acting on these principles, the government has not desired to receive any propositions of peace; the question of war remains submitted to your decision, and the government can only recommend to congress the urgent necessity of aiding the army with all the resources necessary for the campaign. The people of Mexico, who know and feel the magnitude of the interests which are at stake in this war, will not refuse their resources for its prosecution.

The following is from the reply of Senor Zubieta, President of Congress.

The representatives of the people desire to return through me, the most cordial response to the chief of the people's revolution. The element of democracy rules through the republic, and I am able to give assurance that the fundamental laws of the country will have for their object the common welfare of all, without yielding to the exaggerated pretentions of the minority.

Truly difficult it is, to commence this work at a time when the powerful republic of the North insults, invades and threatens us with the absolute annihilation of our nationalty; but these Representatives, so far from being discouraged by this melancholy situation, will press forward in the midst of the combat to give all convenient organization, to the end that the integral parts of the nation may have vigor to resist. No, Mexico will not be less than France, who, though the legions of Europe came to invade her, conquered princes, and organized her government at the same time. By good fortune the mildness of our climate, the blandness of our customs, and, if I may say it without boasting, our virtues, will cause us to work in an energetic manner, without committing the crimes, and covering ourselves with the blood which stains the history of the old world.

The decision manifested by the supreme power, the intrepid valor of our army, the noble resolution of its cammander, and the reanimation of the public spirit throughout all the States, appear to be good symptoms that the epoch fixed by Providence has arrived, when the Mexican nation may be able to call itself, and to be called, with truth, Sovereign, Free, and Independent!

Before the Supreme Being we were, yesterday, sworn to procure as far as in our power, the good and prosperity of the nation. This oath will be fulfilled with all the loyalty which a sacred duty and tried patriotism demands.

IRELAND.—The accounts which continue to reach us of the extreme destitution and distress experienced by thousands of families in the Emerald Isle, in consequence of the failure of the potato crops, cannot fail to awaken the sympathies of American hearts. Public meetings have been held in various places, and subscriptions and contributions have been taken, for making up shipments of breadstuffs and other provisions, to be forwarded to Ireland for the relief of the perishing. Already, in several counties in our own State has this been done. So near to us as in Jefferson and Guernsey Counties, county meetings have been held, and something efficient has been done. We are gratified to see that a call is about to be made in Muskingum County for a like purpose. Heaven's blessings have been dealt out so bountifully to the people of Muskingum, surely they will more than sympathise with the perishing poor of Ireland. Arrangements are to be made for receiving deposits of provisions at points along the Ohio river to be shipped to Ireland.—"Blessed is he that considereth the poor."

LADIES NATIONAL MAGAZINE.—The February number is before us, embellished with three fine engravings. The most interesting of these is a View of Albany, Next, The Rescue, and then the colored Fashion plate. We are pleased that Dame Fashions allows the ladies to go covered this once, in February. Mrs. Ann S. Stephens is still Editor of the 'National,' C. J. Peterson, publisher, 98, Chesnut St. Philad. $2 per year, in advance.

SEARS' MAGAZINE for January contains a historical and geographical description of Ohio, with numerous illustrations. Amongst these are an ancient and a modern view of Cincinnati, view of Lane Seminary, Keynon College, and the new Catholic Cathedral, Cincinnati. There are rising of 15 plates in all—some very good. The 'Description' is mostly correct, and does credit to our State. We only regret that the latest information in some particulars was not obtained. He gives the State 74 counties, when the dear man must know that we have full 83. Also ten Colleges, whilst he enumerates half that number at a single city. And he gives Cincinnati, "nearly thirty Churches," whilst it has nearer 75. We know that friend Sears will be more accurate in his descriptions hereafter. Other States are to be described and illustrated in succeeding numbers. So that 'Sears' 1847 will be a choice book. We esteem it one of the most instructive Magazines in the country. Terms &c. see prospectus.

THE ANTI JUSUIT.—No 3, is before us, containing a fine portrait of Martin Luther, with a biographical sketch. Several other plates accompany, and the number is filled with valuable reading matter. Rev. C. Sparry, Editor and Publisher, Nassau St. N. York. $1 per year. A very good work against popery.

BRAITHWAITE'S RETROSPECT of Practical Medicine and Surgery.—By politeness of the publisher, we have received through the mail, Parts Third and Fourth of this truly valuable work. Each of the parts is complete in itself, and has a full index and table of contents. The parts are also done up very neatly for mailing and for use, and the postage upon them is the very lowest, not ever from 18 to 20 cents per year, any distance. Ye medical gentlemen, and such as would become your own Physician, send for the Retrospect.' $1 per year. Address, Dan'l Adee, 107 Fulton St. N. York.

THE ANNALIST.—From the same publisher, we have likewise just received the first four numbers of the 'Annalist.' It is a Semi Nonthly Record of Practical Medicine and Surgery in the City of New York, handsomely done up in Magazine form. Edited by W. C. Roberts M. D. Fellow of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of New York. The work must be especially interesting and valuable to Physicians. Address, as above. $2 per annum in advance.

GODEY'S REPRINT of Blackwood's Ladies Magazine.—We have received the third number of the Reprint, and an interesting number it is. We should think that the ladies would have this work, it is so neat and so cheap, only $1 per year. Published by L. A. Godey, Chesnut St. Philad.

SATURDAY COURIER.—This large and valuable Philadelphia weekly, has entered upon a new year with large encouragement, its circulation having reached 60,000 copies. The Courier is a very popular sheet. We esteem it one of our best exchanges. Terms. $2 per annum in advance. Three copies for $5, or one copy 3 years for the same. Very handsome inducements are offered for clubs. For $3, a copy of the Courier, and a copy of Sear's Pictorial Revolution, or Sears' Magazine for a year, will be sent. Address, Andrew M'Makin, 97, Chesnut St. Philad.

WELLMAN'S ILLUSTRATED BOTANY.—Numbers 10,11, and 12, of this charming work, which we have just received, complete the first volume. Each number contains four finely engraved, and exquisitely colored plants. We rejoice to learn that the "Botany" though but one year in existence, has already a patronage of 5000 subscribers. And we opine that the list will be rapidly extended and enlarged, as it becomes more generally known. Handsome improvements are promised. From 6 to 10 colored engravings are to accompany each number. A new Editor has been engaged for the new volume about to commence. This is Dr. J. L. Comstock, so well known as author of various books of Natural Science. Terms, $3 per year. Two copies for $5. A specimen of the 'Botany' can be seen at this office, and if our friends wish, we will cheerfully act as agent for Mr. Wellman, the Publisher.

LITERARY EMPORIUM.—The closing numbers for 1846, of this interesting and useful Magazine, have been received. The publisher has suffered severe losses through the imposition and dishonesty of Agents, which occasioned the delay of the work for a time. We are glad to find however, that he enters now upon a new volume with better and safer arrangements and with increased prospects of success, having a patronage of 15,000. Parents and others who would have a good and cheap Magazine for their Youth, one that discards love tales, literary trash, &c. should send $1 to J. K. Wellman, N. York, and obtain the Literary Emporium. It is worthy of extensive patronage.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S MAGAZINE.—From the same publisher we have received the closing numbers of this work for 1846. We have heretofore commended the Magazine as useful for youth. But we infer that it is to be discontinued, as the publisher proposes to give hereafter his undivided attention to the Illustrated Botany and the Literary Emporium. Success to Mr. Wellman, for he publishes none but useful works.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

FATAL DISASTER.

TROY, Jan. 17—6 P. M.

About 10 o'clock on Saturday evening, a sudden and tremendous gale passed through the lower portion of Troy, blowing down the west wall of the Clinton Foundry, situated a few rods below the Troy rail road depot, on the Troy and Greenbush Railroad, sweeping away some ten or fifteen feet of the roof of the building on the west side, killing three of the workmen engaged in the establishment at the time, and badly injuring several others. At the time the wall blew down, there were in all, eighteen moulders at work upon the different floors of the building, adjoining the west wall. The crash occurred almost instantaneously; the wind spending its force with great suddenness, and permitting the workmen no opportunity to escape from the falling bricks and timbers. John Coffield, aged about 22 years, was taken out of the ruins dead and badly mangled. Michael Madigad, a boy aged 19 years, was horribly cut and mangled. John Allen, formerly a resident of West Troy, aged about 25 years, was found dead in the ruins this morning.—N. Y. Sun.

SUDDEN DEATHS.—The number of sudden deaths recently, has been unusually large, and generally among well-known citizens. ISAAC W. NORRIS, Esq., on the 5th inst., while pulling the bell at a friend's residence, fell over, and died instantly of disease of the heart. On the same evening, Mr. HENRY BENNETT, of Southwark, while employed in his usual avocation, fell and expired of apoplexy. Besides another citizen, mentioned elsewhere, we notice that Mr. George Thatcher, of the firm of Geo. Thatcher & Co., merchants, Boston, was taken suddenly ill, on Saturday noon, and was conveyed to his residence, where he died on the same evening.

Mr. Charles S. Green, of Trenton, N. J., a few days since, was apparently in the enjoyment of good health; in the early part of the evening, while seated in the parlor, he was taken suddenly ill, and expired in a few minutes.

Mr. J. R. Fitzgerald, cooper, Franklin Place, near Market, died suddenly, on Saturday, from the rupture of blood vessels.—Phil. Sat. Cour.

THE NORTH AND SOUTH.—The Cleveland Plain Dealer laments bitterly the ascendancy which the South has enjoyed in the councils of the government. It says:—"The Presidency, at the close of Mr. Polk's term, will have been in Northern hands twelve and Southern hands fifty years. Of twenty seven Supreme Court Judges, appointed since 1789, eleven were from the North and seventeen from the South; Attorney Generals, five from the North and fourteen from the South; ten Speakers of the House of Representatives from the North, and twenty-one from the South; sixteen Presidents of the Senate pro. tem. from the North to sixty-one from the South; and fifty-four Northern to eighty Southern Foreign Ministers. So of Chief Justices, Cabinets, Naval and Military Officers throughout.

FIRE NEAR PHILADELPHIA.—Briggs and Quickshall, calico printers at Frankford, suffered a loss by fire on Friday evening, estimated at $20,000. Their drying house, each a hundred feet long, were destroyed. A large number of hands will be thrown out of employment by the disaster.

THE WAR.—The Mexican war, when it was first entered upon, was to be a sort of fancy work for those engaged in it, & yet we see it stated that the loss of life, in the Mexican war, already exceeds that of the last war with England. And the end is not yet!

FATAL EXPLOSION.—A disastrous explosi occurred on the Reading Railroad, last eveni ten miles from the city. A locomotive drawi a train of empty cars exploded, killing all han five in number. One body was blown six hu dred yards. The engine is a complete wreck.

P. S.—Seven persons were killed by the e plosion of the locomotive, viz: Jacob Sultenbeye engineer; Bernville Berger, conductor, Sim Fitzpatrick, and Jno. Muller, firemen; a strang and two others unknown. The report was hea 4 miles distant. The mangled limbs of the u fortunate persons were thrown a great distan The concussion broke every pane of glass i house in the vicinity.—Phil. Paper Jan. 14.

SUDDEN DEATH.—Mr. Charles Dewey, of We field Mass. widower, about 57 years of age, w found dead in his bed on Thursday morning la The cause of his death is supposed to have be a disease of the heart. By his will he has b queathed three-fifths of his estate to various b nevolent objects, and one fifth to each of two su viving sisters.

ANOTHER U. S. VESSEL LOST.—A letter fro Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, brings news fro the Pacific announcing the wreck of the U. Schooner Shark, on the 10th of September, at t mouth of the Columbia river—the same pla where the sloop of war Peacock was cast awa The Shark was an old vessel of 10 guns. under t command of Lieut. Commandant Howison. It suggested that in the loss of this vessel the report th the frigate Congress had suffered shipwreck, h its origin. The news was carried to the San wich Islands by the ship Mariposa, which w coming out of the Columbia river at the time, a hearing guns as a signal of distress, lay off and until morning, when she went to the station of t Hudson' Bay Company, and there learned th name of the vessel lost; also that the crew h been safely landed in boats early in the mor ing.

DEATH OF JUDGE DAVIS.—Judge Davis, Massachusetts, has died suddenly in Boston, the 86th year of his age. He had been for mar years U. S. Judge for that district. The pape also announce the death, by apoplexy, of Wi Parsons, Esq., President of the Massachuse Bank.

DIED IN PRISON.—Philander Jones, imprison in Delhi, to take his trial for the supposed murd of his wife, died in prison in the 56th year of h age. He was esteemed and respected as a go neighbor until the sudden death of his wife, und suspicious circumstances, caused him to be arre ted and committed to jail. He made no stateme relative to the death of his wife, except a declar tion of his innocence.

FROZEN TO DEATH.—On Christmas day Mr Roy and her little son, aged 10 years, of Quebe went to the parish church. By accident the chi was separated from his mother; and being unab to find his way to the house, strayed into the s burbs. A thorough search by the police a others was made, which was kept up till Monda when he was found dead in the bush near S Leonard's. The little fellow had taken off h coat to cover his face with. It is probable th the child was deterred from applying at any the houses, on account of the curs alway ke round them, which fly at every one who com near.

CARELESS USE OF FIREARMS.—The wife Amaziah Weeks, Jr., of Sandwich, Mass., w shot on Tuesday last by a young lad, her son, wh was playing with a loaded gun in the room. Th charge entered the muscles in the lower part the back, passed along on the side of the spin exposing the spine. Her recovery is doubtful.

Captain Richard Winslow, an eminent citize of Albany, died in that city on Saturday, in th 70th year of his age.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES AND DEATHS.—In the r port of the Secretary of State, of Massachusett the number of births returned is 15,912—8,09 males; 7,552 females; 263 sex not stated. Th greatest number of births in any month was i March, 1512—the smallest number, 1108, in Jun The number of marriages is 5136. November the favorite month for marrying, this doubles number any other month. February has th least. The number of deaths reported is 9320 4356 males, 4839 females, 125 sex not state August has the greatest number of deaths an October the least. A table on the influence occupation on longevity follows the report. Th persons given are over 20 years of age. Averag life of Gentlemen, 66.20; Clergymen, 64.07 Merchants, 55.07; Tailors, 54.94; Coopers, 54.21 Blacksmiths, 44. 09; Masons, 49.50; Laborers 49,00; Carpenters, 49;94; Seamen, 48.76; Tin men, 70.00; Fishermen, 45.15; Sail makers, 42.3. Shoemakers, 42.00 Painters, 40.25; Harness makers, 38.00: Printers, 32.50; Ladies, 70.0 Milliners, 44.00; Seamstress, 39.83; Tailoresse 38.71; Female domestics, 30.60; Dressmaker 29.87. Boston and several towns are not give DIED on the 4th inst, at Montreal, the Re Caleb Strong, pastor of the "American Presbyte rian Church" of that city. His death is muc lamented by the people of Montreal.

A CHURCH MOBBED.—The church called Guil ford Meeting House, Accomac County, Virgini was recently mobbed on the Sabbath, the minis ter insulted in his pulpit and followed home b threats of violence from the mob. The offenc alleged against Mr. H. is, that his church had r fused to withdraw from the Philadelphia confe ence, and to attach itself to the church south, an that consequently it favors abolitionism. This i the county which Mr. Wise formerly represente and which he thanked heaven had not a singl newspaper in it. The Philadelphia Ledge says: "If it had a few of them and some mo schools, perhaps there would not be such outrage to record."

DROWNED.—At Huntingtonville, Jefferson cour ty, on the 31st ult., Charles L. Graham, in th 13th year of his age. He was skating on th river, and it being dark, ran into an air hole.—N Y. Sun.

ROCK IN THE GULF STREAM.—The Captain o the Bark America, at Baltimore, reports that o the 1st of September, he discovered a rock in th Gulf Stream, projecting above the water abou thirty feet, and being, as he supposed, nearl three hundred feet in circumference. The lat tude of the rock is 40. 20., long. 63. 50. Th Captain has no doubt of the precise location o the rock, as his chronometor was found to b correct on his arrival. The rock lies directly i the track of vessels bound for Europe and nav gators should be on their guard.—May not th discovery afford a clue to the loss of the steame President and the packet ships England an United States? The latitude, it will be observed is near on a direct line with this port. A vesse ought to be sent out to search around this rock.

MR. ADAMS.—The health of Ex-President Adam has considerably improved. He was at church o Sunday last, looking quite well.

MICHIGAN.—The increase of this frontier State is wonderful. The value of its exports amounts to $4,647,608 04, and it has 26,928 tons of shipping employed. A few years ago it was a wilderness, occupied by roving bands of Indians.

SUSPENSION OF TELEGRAPHS.—The New York and Philadelphia and the Baltimore and Washington Telegraphs are out of order. Breaks occurred in both lines on Saturday.

THE TELEGRAPH.—An action is pending in the United States Circuit Court, at Philadalphia, between Mr. Morse and his associates, plantiffs, and Mr. O'Reilly and others, defendants, for alleged violation of patent right on the line between Philadelphia and Pittsburgh; an injunction is asked.

Died, in Batavia, New York, the oldest citizen, James Cochran, aged 83 years, bell founder, a very ingenious mechanic, invented cut nails, and claimed to have made the first cents coined in the United States. He was born in Philadelphia, and Franklin often visited the shop where he worked in brass and fine metals.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—Doctor Benjamin T. Johns, of Charles county, Maryland, was killed on Sunday, 3d instant. The deceased and his wife were seated in a buggy, and about to leave their residence for church, when the horse took fright and ran off, overturning the vehicle and shattering it to pieces.

As a proof of the intensity of the home feeling in the Irish breast, take this fact. The Irish in New York city during the year just past, remitted to Ireland nearly a million of dollars.

TELEGRAPHIC DIVIDEND.—The New York and Buffalo Magnetic Telegraph Company have declared a dividend of 3 per cent. for the five months ending the 7th of February. This is the first magnetic dividend ever declared. The earnings of the line have been about $11,000 since the 7th September, of which the expenses have absorbed about one-third. Of this dividend the patentees get $2,700, which may be considered the first practical result of this great discovery. Upwards of 1,200 miles of Telegraph are now in operation in the U. S.

WEALTH OF NEW YORK MEN.—We learn from a brochure entitled the "Rich Men of New York," the estimate wealth of the following gentlemen. It is an interesting list:

Beach, M. Y., of the Sun			$300,000
Bennett, J. G., of the Herald			100,000
Hale, David, of the Journal of Commerce			150,000
Hall, Francis, of the Com. Advertiser			155,000
Hallock, Girard, of the Jour. of Commerce			150,000
Morse, S. E., of the Observer			100,000
Proprietor of the Evangelist			100,000
McElrath, T., of the Tribune			100,000
Stephens, John L.			100,000
Verplank, G. C., editor of Shakspeare			200,000
Appleton, D, Publisher of Brochure			100,000
Wiley. John,	do	do	100,000
Huntington, F. J.	do	do	100,000
Paine, John	do	do	200,000
Harpers	do	do	500,000

MAHOMEDAN DRUNKARDS.—The following punishment of drunkenness was lately inflicted by the populace of Constantinople. An unfortunate Mussulman who under the influence of wine, had lost the perpendicular, was tied upon a lame mule, with his head towards the tail of the animal, and behind was tied a dog back to back.

After having paraded him through the streets, stopping at every fountain to sprinkle him with mud and water, he was taken by the populace to the banks of the Bosphorus, and plunged into the water with his innocent companion. The hair of the back of the dog was then cut in the form of a cross, and the beard of the mussulman was shaved off with the same razor. He was subsequently plunged into tho Bosphorus, and his purification was considered complete.

HORRORS OF THE WAR.—A letter from Monterey, from James A. Jackson, a Washington volunteer in the Baltimore Battalion, describing the late battle, says:

"I was almost thirsted to death; and upon casting a disconsolate look around me, I saw a poor fellow lying dead close by; I stooped down to see if there was any water in his canteen, and it was full; I took a drink, and swung the prize to my side. I soon passed another poor fellow, with both logs carried away; he had been thus wounded ever since morning, and was groaning and calling in a very feeble manner for water. I stopped to give him a draught and he emptied my canteen. I had not got one yard from him, before a grape shot came and cut him in two—throwing little pieces of flesh and blood all over me!

SINGULAR CUSTOM.—It is stated by those who keep night watch in the menageries, that in cages where there are more than one animal, it is always the custom for one to keep watch while the others sleep. The sentry is relieved with as much regularity as in a well regulated camp of soldiers, although not probably, with as much precision, in regard to time. The sentinel paces back and forth, and is very careful not to do any thing to arouse his comrades. Occasionally he lies down, but always with his head towards the front of the cage, and never sleeps until relieved.—Mirror.

CLOCKS.—In Sweeden, Belgium, and Germany generally, as in Scotland, the church-clocks strike the successive quarters of the hour, one, two, three, four. This is an undertone or with a smaller bell. And when the quarters are announced to be complete, the large bell immediately, with slow and solemn tone, sounds forth the hour. By night or by day, I could hardly fail to count. This monitor of time, measuring it out by every fifteen minutes, would forbid idleness, unnecessary sleep, or the vain pursuit of transient pleasure. There is one church in Stockholm, which had a series of bells, so differing in size and key, that psalm tunes are played on them, marking well the long and short notes, the high and the low. This concert is given twice a week, just before midday. The watchmen, too, have a singular custom of blowing a horn, when the hour of the night is given. A response is made in every ward in the city.

THE PYRAMIDS OF EGYPT.—Mr. Gliddon makes the following statements: "The granite contained in the great Pymarid would be sufficient for the building of all the churches and public buildings in Philadelphia, and the quantity of other materials, if converted into brick, would build all the dwellings in that city. There is material sufficient, in the three largest Pyramids, to erect all the buildings, public and private, in the State of Pennsylvania."

ANOTHER GOVERNMENT STORE-SHIP WRECKED.—We learn from the Providence Transcript of Friday evening, that during the severe storm on Thursday night, the Ship Rhode Island, lying at Bristol, was torn from her moorings at the wharf, and driven ashore "high and dry," at the head of the harbor. She was laden with barges for the service in Mexico. It is believed that she cannot be got off until her cargo is discharged.

THE MARKETS.

In Zanesville and Putnam the price of wheat and flour remain the same as last week. Flour $3,25, and Wheat 50 cts.

The following account in relation to the prices at Cincinnati on the 18th inst., we clip from the Cincinnati Correspondence of the Ohio Statesman:—

Tho sales of flour are rather limited. Those that I hear of are 50 and 500 bbls from store at $3,70; 150 choice brand at $3,83; and some lots from wagon at $3,60.

Hogs—The only sale reported on Saturday, was a lot of 75 head dead, slop fed, at $3,12.

The late news from New Orleans will probably give a new impetus to flour, and to-morrow's sales may be at advanced prices.

In money matters I have but little to say. Currency is about as scarce as ever.

The latest intelligenece we have at hand in relation to the Pittsburgh, and other Eastern markets, we find in the last Pittsburgh C. Advocate, of the 20th inst.

PITTSBURGH, Jan. 18.

The receipts of Flour continue on the most limited scale. Prices Saturday were nominally the same, $3,25@3,87.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 6, 7, P. M.

The Flour market has fallen back again.—West. and Pa. brands are selling to some extent at $4,75.

Pork—The market for Pork is moving up again in sympathy with our New York neighbors. Prime is now selling at $9,25@9,50 to the extent of 500 bbls.

Dried Peaches $2,25 and sales. Dried Apples $1, and few sales.

No new Western Bacon yet here.

NEW YORK, Jan. 16—6¼, P. M.

Market for Genessee and Western Flour rather lower, at least as to actual transactions. Sales 3@4000 bbls. at $5,56 per bbl.

Prime White Wheat, Genesee included, are at 115c, and sales 26,000 bu.

Bacon Hams are held at 9c and selling to some extent.

Butter—Western selling at 9c.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 16, 7, P. M.

Flour—Howard street moves off rather freely at $4,87, and sales 1200 bbls.

Wheat—Red, of Prime quality is held at 95c.

MISCELLANY.

Slavery must Cease.

The spirit of the age, and the points of elevation which we have gained in the progress of events, are against the institution of slavery; and that institution is certainly destined to fall. It is a system at variance with the settled views of mankind, and with principles now established, and from which our race is not to go backward. Every thing which has been developed in the long track of ages, and the revelation of God, about the essential qualities of man, the fact that all are of one race, that the same blood has been shed for human redemption, and that the same is open to all, is against this institution. Everything that has been elicited or established, about the dignity of man, the nobleness of soul, the horror of human nature, the distinction between intelect and matter, between man and the brute, is against the existence of this institution. Every blow that has been struck in the cruse of liberty, either in this or the Old World; every struggle of the Puritans for freedom here, is against the spirit of this institution. Every common school, academy, and college in the land, all the views, which we have adapted, that the human mind, as such, has a right to institution; all that is sacred in the right of trial by jury, and all our views that every accused man, no matter what his color, has such a right, all our convictions that the Bible is made for mankind, and is to be withheld from none, and all the deepfelt and extinguishable convictions which man are settling upon, that every man has a right to the fair avails of his own labor; all these things are against this institution. All the settled notions of religion too, are against it; and it is only by warfare upon the plain and indispensable principles of the Bible, that it is maintained.

From these fixed points in regard to liberty, education, trial by jury, the right to read, and the right to the avails of labor, our race do not go backward. These are matters fully settled now, in the age in which we live. "One generation passeth away, and another generation cometh," but these principles, like "the earth abide forever." The spirit of slavery is coming more into contact every year with these great principles; and, as they acquire a deeper hold on the mind, become more repellant to the system.

The opposition made to the institution in this land and this age, is not the ebulition of passion or excitement. It is the spirit of age against it—the growth of centuries, the result of conflict, the fruit of liberty, the offspring of religion; and if anything may be predicted to the future, it is, that somehow, THE INSTITUTION OF SLAVERY MUST CEASE FOREVER.—Rev. Albert Barns.

Mercer County Colored Settlers

A writer in the Free Labor Advocate, who visited this settlement, represents the colored people as in advance of their pale-faced neighbors, both in point of morals and education. He says "they appear to be industrious and prosperous, as a general thing, and I think I am warranted in saying that none of them have ever become a township or county charge. There was therefore evidently no necessity of requiring them to give bail on this account"

Of the origin of this settlement the writer gives the following account.

About eleven years ago, Augustus Wattles well known as a friend to the oppressed, and a devoted philanthropist, purchased land in Mercer county, and commenced operations with a view to the establishment of a manual labor school, for the benefit of those youths who are, by the operation of an unchristain prejudice, and if possible, a more wicked legislation, deprived of the opportunity of even learning to read the Bible in the schools established by law for white children, and for the support of which the colored people are taxed. He erected a school-house in the woods, and gave out an invitation to colored young men and boys, who wished to obtain an education, and pay for it in labor, to avail themselves of the opportunity. Numbers did so, and by studying and laboring alternately, acquired considerable literary attainments, and at the same time prepared the land for cultivation. Thus a centre of attraction was formed, and many industrious, intelligent and, enterprizing colored people flocked to it. At the present time the settlement consists of several hundred persons; (this is only a guess;) and they are nearly all land-holders.

The following is his description of the morals & education and of this people; & we are the more ready to give credit to his statements, as they harmonize with those of Judge Leigh of Virginia, with whom we had an interview after his visit to this settlement.

While white men have been convicted of crime almost every term of your county court, it is believed you will search in vain for the first conviction of a colored person residing in the above named settlement, that none of them has ever been convicted on a criminal charge. As regards the state of education among them, it is superior to that of their white neighbors; who frequently call on the colored boys to write, or make calculations for them. Even township officers (of course they are white) such as road supervisors, are under the necessity of getting colored persons to write their road receipts; and in one case at least, a justice of the peace called on a colored man to calculate the amount of a judgment he was about to render.

And these are the people whom the of citizens O. and a portion of the citizens of Mercer, require to give bond and security for their good behavior, and that they will not become a county charge; and in default of this, their patriotic pale-faced neighbors threatened to expel them from their own homes at the point of the bayonet. There would be more reason in requiting security in the opposite direction.

Even if the law required a property qualification to entitle persons to the rights of citizens, the colored people would have the advantage of their opposers; there being but little doubt that a fair estimate would show the colored people, as a class compared with those who formed the mob meeting and adopted the resolutions of expulsion, to possess property in the ratio of two to one.

NOTICES.

RICHWOOD CIRCTIT.—O. DISTRICT.—Our second quarterly meeting commences on the evening of the 5th of February next, at which we should be glad to see Revs. R. K. Davis, L. Ensminger, D. Moore, and any other brother who will be so kind as to attend. J. B. PEAT.

[At Richwood, we presume. ED.]

KALIDA CIRCUIT.—O. DIST.—We expect to hold our second quarterly meeting, on the 13th and 14th February, at Columbus Grove, and we earnestly solicit the assistance of Brs. A. Besse, I Hunt, and J. P. Fay of Lima. Brethren, come over and help us. J. L. BORTON.

Br. A. H. Trumbo informs the President of Ohio District, that Br. D. How, a young preacher of unassuming pretensions, good character, and studious habits is willing to be employed to travel as an assistant but not superintendent.

MY DEAR BR. BASSETT: As the health of my family had improved a little, when I left home, the last day of the past year, I have concluded to publish my appointments, for February and March:

Brownsville	Ct.	7th of February
George Creek	"	14th	"
Morgantown	"	21th	"
Union	St.	28th	"
Connelsville	Ct.	7th	March
Fayette	"	14th	"

Yours truly, GEO. BROWN.

Jacob Brown's, Brook co. Va. Jan. 6, 1846.

BELMONT CIRCUIT.—Our second quarterly meeting will be held at Wrightstown, Belmont Co. commencing on the 30th inst. at 11 o'clock. Brethren will please recollect I am alone, and not having received Elder's Orders, and therefore cannot have the communion service, unless some brethren qualified come to our help. Will Brs. J. Nichols, Z. Ragan, N. Linder, H. T. Lawson, favor us with their presence & aid on the occasion? J. M. WINN.

COLUMBIA CIRCUIT.—Our second quarterly meeting wil be held on the 20th and 21st of February, at Pleasant Hill meeting house, 7 miles west of the town of Athens. We invite Brs. M. Scott, W. W. Tipton, C. J. Sears, and we promise our aid on any occasion, when timely notice shall have been given. We ask an interest in the prayers of all, that we may on that occasion have the presence of the Great Head of the Church.

S. ELLIOTT.

FROM PRESIDENT OF MUSKINGUM CONFERENCE.

BR. BASSETT: You will please announce, that if able, I will visit Steubenville station the last Sunday in January; and Wellsville circuit the first Sunday of February.

GEO. CLANCY, Pres.

PENNVILLE CIRCUIT.—The second quarterly meeting will be held at the Mt. Zion Chapel, commencing, Friday, Feb. 12, 1847. We invite Brs. Potter and Hatfield with any others of our local or travelling brethren who can attend, to come and aid us, and let all who cannot attend, help us by your prayers.

C. J. SEARS.

[N. B. Is not that agood notice? Ed]

ANNUAL REGISTER 1847.—Our edition of 5,200 copies is running short. But like the Razor Strop Man, we have 'a few more left' which we will be pleased to send out to those who order them. G. Conclin, Cincinnati, and C. Craig, Pittsburgh, have each also a small lot to dispose of.

By the by, this little publication cost us considerably more than one hundred dollars, cash, notwithstanding the job was executed at our own office. Those therefore who have received their pamphlets as ordered, will greatly oblige us by forking over the dimes. We are anxious to be out of debt. Much obliged to those who have been prompt in paying.

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT.

LETTERS RECEIVED.

J. H. Hamilton, 1 sub.; A. P. Widman, W. W. Sterriker, G. Wheatley, C. L. Barker, J. Henderson, T. W. Webster, J. B. Peat, 2, W. B. Dunlevy, E. A. Wheat, D. C. Carson, J. L. Borton, 2 subs., Timothy Jr, Paul Pry, T. Hanna.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

From.	For.	Pays to Vol.	No.	$ cts
Wm. Duling,	V. J. Powelson,	8	52	3 00
"	J. R. Williams,	7	52	2 00
J. H. Hamilton,	W. G. Dean,	8	26	3 00
A. P. Widman,	R. Reed,	8	52	2 00
J. W. Case,	James Ross,	9	12	2 00
G. Wheatley, Ia,	J. H. Harris,	8	52	1 00
T. B. Cushman,	Mrs. K. Wells,	7	52	2 00
R. Collier, Ia.	Jos. Hall,	8	40	1 00
"	Himself,*	8	52	4 00
D. C. Carson,†		8	52	2 00
J. H. Kirby, Pa.		7	52	2 00
J. L. Borton,	A. Hough,	8	40	1 00
G. Vandenbark,		8	52	2 00
R. Cotton,		8	15	7 00
C. Springer,	R. Pyle,	8	22	2 00

*Due Br. C. S. $1, on Vol. 6.
†D. C. C. 75 cts. overpaid.

New Subscribers this week, 4. Discontinuance, 1.

Br. T. B. Cushman, long ago, we gave you notice thro' the paper, that your pamphlets were at Steubenville, in care of Br. Andrew. It was the best we could do. Can you not send and get them immediately? We credit our only sub. at W. Is it right?

If Mr. J. Richey, Chandlerville, O. will send us one dollar, we will credit him in full for Vol. 7, as per arrangement with Br. C. S.

We inform Mr. C. L. Barker, that before we received his letter, the appropriati on for J. H. was disposed of, at his own order, and we have nothing of his in our hands.

Br. G. Wheatley, you were not neglected. We put up and labelled your pamphlets with our own hand. And Br. G. C. writes as that they were shipped to Madison. Wish we had known sooner, that they failed to reach you. Will you not yet receive some from Cincinnati? Send to Br. Concklin.

Receipts for Annual Register.

E. Y. Reese, Book Ag't, Balt. $15 00
J. Cowl, 1 00

We did injustice to the P. M. at Morgantown, Va. in intimating that letters from our correspondent there were overcharged and we ask his pardon. Against some postmasters we have just cause of complaint, but against the gentleman of M. we have none whatever.

Married,

On the 31st ult. by Rev. Wm. Duling, Mr. FRANCIS J. HOLCOM to Miss SUSAN DONALDSON.

On the 12th inst. by the same, Mr. JOSEPH STEEL to Miss ANN PUFF, all of Muskingum Co. O.

On the 17th inst., in Hopewell township, by Rev. C. Springer, Mr. JOHN GRAY to Miss NANCY CHAPPELEAR.

PROSPECTUS OF THE

OHIO CULTIVATOR,

Vol. III—For 1847.

A semi-monthly Journal, devoted to the promotion of Agriculture, Horticulture & Domestic Industry.

PUBLISHED AT COLUMBUS, OHIO,

By M. B. Bateham, Editor and Proprietor,

Assisted by the contributions of a very large number of practical and scientific writers,—farmers, horticulturists, &c.

Illustrated with numerous Engravings.

TERMS—One Dollar per year—Four Copies for Three Dollars: payments invariably in advance.

THE OHIO CULTIVATOR has now become so well known to the farmers and friends of agriculture in Ohio. that it is unnecessary to say any thing of its character or design. Grateful for the encouragement he has thus far received, the editor and proprietor takes this occasion to inform his friends and patrons, that he is determined to put forth new efforts in their service, and make his paper for the coming year still more deserving of their continued liberal patronage. Besides improvement in the matter for its columns, the mechanical appearance of the paper will be improved by the use of new type, and more illustrations. It will contain the latest and most reliable intelligence respecting the crops and the markets, both in this country, and in Europe, so as to aid the farmer in deciding at what time and price to dispose of his productions. This information alone will be worth, to most farmers, many times the price of subscription, especially now that prices are so much effected by foreign intelligence. In addition to all this, the editor believes that his increased experience and knowledge of the agricultural condition of the State, together with his extended correspondence, will enable him to make each succeeding volume of the Cultivator more valuable than the one that preceded it.

The influence of the paper, wherever it has been generally read, is admitted to have been highly salutary. It has began to awaken a spirit of inquiry and improvement among the farmers, and inspire them with more just and elevated conceptions of the character, duties and pleasures of their noble occupation. As evidence of this it may be stated, that during the past year, Agricultural Societies have been organized in twenty counties of this State; and there is reason to believe that as many more will be formed during the year to come. These associations, in connection with the State Board of Agriculture, and the Cultivator as an organ for the diffusion of inteliigence, cannot fail to exert such an influence on the minds and the practice of the farming community, as will in a few yaars place our young Giant State in that position which she is by Nature designed to occupy—the first State of the Union in agricultural wealth and lasting prosperity.

Farmers of Ohio! Who among you are willing to have no part in this onward march of improvement? Who among you are willing to deprive yourselves and your families of that 'knowledge which is power,' and the great means of progress and elevation, for the sake of the small pittance which that knowledge may cost? And who of you that desire to see this work advance, will not make an effort to arouse your neighbors from the mental torpor that rests upon too many of them? The work is not difficult—pursuade them to read papers devoted to their interests—send on their names, with your own, as subscribers to the Ohio Cultivator, and you may rely upon it they will soon begin to awake—to inquire and think—and not only become better farmers, but more intelligent and agreeable neighbors.

Address, M. B. BATEHAM,
Columbus, Ohio.

NOTICE

IS hereby given, that a petition will be presented to the Commissioners of Muskingum County, at their March session, praying for a county road, beginning at a point in the Cooper Mill Road in Springfield township, and where the west line of Barnett Workmans land crosses said Cooper Mill road, from thence running north-eastwardly thro' the lands of B. Workman and William Vansant to the lower end of William Vansant's field, (known as the middle meadow,(thence northwardly to the north-west corner of John Vansant's orchard, from thence north-westwardly on the nearest and best route through the lands of John Vansant and James Vansant, so as to intersect the Flint Ridge Road (so called) near the west end of Cornelius Starkey's farm.

January 15, 1847.

NOTICE

IS hereby given that a petition will be presented to the Commissioners of Muskingum County their March session, praying for an alteration in so much of the county road known by the name of George Norman's road as lies between the Cooper Mill Road and William Vansant's barn. The proposed road to commence at said Cooper Mill road, where the west line of Barnett Workman's land crosses said road. Thence eastwardly to the lower end of William Vansant's field, (known as the middle meadow,) thence north to the lane, thence west so as to intersect the original road east of William Vansant's barn, all in Springfield township.

January 12, 1847.

COME AND SEE!!

THE SUBSCSIBERS offer very low for CASH, STONE WARE or COUNTRY PRODUCE,

35 pieces assorted Cloths, very low,
20 " Jeans,
300 " Prints, cheaper than ever,
100 " Merinos, Alpaccas, De Laines, &c.,
50 " Tweeds and Cassinets,
25 " Flannels,
22 " Check.

Boots, Shoes, Queensware, Groceries, and a great variety of goods not mentioned.

In a word, they have on hand a LARGE STOCK of goods, which they

WISH TO SELL.

To sell them, they must be sold CHEAP, this they will do. J. C. GUTHRIE & SONS, successors to
GUTHRIE'S & BUCKINGHAM.

P.S. We will say to Potters engage not your ware before calling on us. We are dealing EXTENSIVELY in that article, and are determined to buy it on such terms as will prove satisfactory. J. C. G. & S's.

Putnam, O. Jan. 1, 1847.

LIST OF LETTERS

Remaining in the Post Office at Putnam, Muskingum Co. Ohio, on the first of January, 1847.

A
Armstrong Thomas

B
Butler Abram
Browne C M
Bradshaw Robert
Baire John
Brown Ann D

C
Chase W D
Cassiday Hugh
Caton G W

D
Dutton Isaac
Dixon Permelia
Dozer George

F
Frantom Jane
Fulton Dennis
Fletcher Andrew
Fountain Harriet

G
Guy Henrietta
Graham N W

H
Hatter John
Hart Elizabeth
Harris Edward
Hosmer S R
Hammond James
Hough J John

J
Jones Catharine

K
Kitchens John

L
Lumb Abram

M
Morgan George

P
Pennine Cannah
Pensinger Susan
Pain John
Putnam Douglass
Pierce Elizabeth

R
Rambo Peter
Ripley Wm
Russel James
Rees I N

S
Slack Rachael
Searl C W
Stockdale John Jr

W
Welch Katharine
Wharton Elibabeth

J. ELDER, P. M.

THE CHEAPEST AND BEST.

New Prospectus for the Year 1847.

FORTY-EIGHT large octavo Pages, and Fifteen Engravings in each No. Published on the first of every month.

Fourth Volume cammences in January, 1847.

The No. for Jan. contains a "Pictorial Description of the State of Ohio," elegantly Illustrated with American views, &c. &c.

Other States will appear in subsequent Nos. of the Work.

Robert Sears, 158 Nassau-street, New York, will hereafter furnish his new

Pictorial and Illustrated Family Magazine for 1847, in all respects equal to the Three-Dollar Magazines, at the low price of only one dollar and a half per annum.

Any person sending Five Dollars, shall receive five copies of the magazine for one year, as he shall direct.

All subjects which will admit of it, will be illustrated with engravings. The whole number of the engravings at the conclusion of the volume will amount to several hundred.

Great inducement to subscribe.

We offer to all persons becoming subscribers, a copy of our new work, just published, entitled the Pictorial Description of Great Britain and Ireland.

Containing 262 Views of the Principal Cities, Towns, Castles, Abeys, Costumes, &c. &c., of the Fatherland: a larger number of Engravings than can be found in any book of double the price—or to those who prefer it, the

Pictorial History of the American Revolution,

(Embellished with an original portrait of Washington, by Chapman, and more than 160 other engravings, 430 pp. 8vo.) for every new subscriber, with two dollars enclosed, free of postage.

Any person procuring ten subscribers, and sending eleven dollars shall receive ten copies of the Magazine, and any one of the above popular works, sent as he shall direct.

We have authority, under the new Post-office law, to send any one of the above works, bound. The postage will not exceed twenty-five cents to any part of the United States.

M. P. DISCIPLINES—NEW EDITION.

WE have on hand a supply, lately received from the Book Agent, Baltimore, which we will be pleased to furnish to brethren of surrounding Circuits, at wholesale or retail prices. For sale at the office of this paper.

SACRED MELODEON.

WE have received from the publishers, 50 copies of this excellent collection of Spiritual Songs, compiled by Brs. Joel Dalbey and J. B. Peat of the Ohio Conference, and lately published at Cincinnati. For sale at the office of the Western Recorder, by the dozen or single.

Admistrator's Notice.

NOTICE is hereby given that the suscriber has been appointed and qualified as Administrator of the estate of Thomas Atkinson deceased, late of Springfield Township, Muskingum county. Z. M. CHANDLER,
Putnam, O. Oct. 31, 1846. Admistrator.

DISSOLUTION.

THE partnership of GUTHRIES & LARGE is this day dissolved by mutual consent. All matters pertaining to the closing up of the business will be transacted at the old stand.

A. A. GUTHRIE.
W. P. LARGE.
GEO. N. GUTHRIE.

Putnam, O. January 1, 1847.

NEW FIRM.

A. A. GUTHRIE, G. BUCKINGHAM and G. N GUTHRIE announce that they have formed partnership for the transaction of MERCANTILE BUSINESS under the firm of

GUTHRIE, BUCKINGHAM & CO.

They respectfully invite their friends and the publi generally, to the old stand of A. A. GUTHRIE & Co (recently GUTHRIE'S & LARGE,) where it is the purpose to keep a large assortment of the CHEAPEST an BEST goods in the market.

Putnam, O. January 1, 1847.

Something New.

JUST PUBLISHED

By GEORGE CONCLIN, 39 Main st. Cincinnati,

A NEW HISTORY OF TEXAS.

INCLUDING an account of the late WAR WITH MEXICO, together with other interesting matte relating to that country. This history is published i pamphlet form, 12 mo., containing 152 pages and will b sold cheap.

ALSO—A NEW HISTORY OF OREGON AND CALIFORNIA, (BY LANSFORD HASTINGS) containing a minute description of the different routes to those countries—a description of the soil, products of the soil, Towns, Bays, Harbors, Rivers, Lakes, manners and customs of the inhabiants, &c. &c.

DISSOLUTION.

IT is nearly two years since the firm of A. A. GUTHRIE & Co., was dissolved, so far as the selling of Goods is concerned. It is this day fully dissolved by mutual consent all debts due the concern are to b epaid to A. A. Guthrie —who earnestly requests ear y payments & especially urges all wo have suffered thei accounts to stand open thus far, to come immediately ar dsettle.

A. A. GUTHRIE,
G. N. GUTHRIE.

Putnam, Dec. 14th, 1846

JAMES K. LOGAN,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

FOREIGN & DOMESTIC DRY GOODS

No. 83 Wood St., (One door from Diamond Alley,)
Pittsburgh, Pa.

THE WEEKLY

CHRISTIAN WORLD;

An Independent, Comprehensive, and Impartial Newspaper; designed for welcome and useful circulation; Among all Friends of Christian Union, Christian Benevoleuce, and Christian Literature. To be published every Saturday, At the Reading-Room of the Christian Atheneum, over the Book-store of Mr. James Harmstead, Fourth St., between Market and Arch Sts., Philadelphia;

Price:—Two Dollors a-year invariably in advance.

T. H. STOCKTON,
J. G. WILSON,
THEOPHILUS STORK. } Editors.

W. S. STOCKTON,—General Agent.

TO persons who are acquainted with the character and objects of the CHRISTIAN WORLD, as they have been developed during the last six years, it is only necessary to say, that as soon as one thousand paying subscribers are secured, the paper will be put to press. The Old Subscription List ought to supply this number at once.

To other persons, it is proper to remark, that the Christian World, in print, is intended to reflect the Christian World, in action—in a word, daguerreotype it: and then, for purposes of common advantage, to compare the organized and operature Religion of the Age with the Religion of the Bible.

The enlarged literary and business agencies of the Establishment, are deemed amply sufficient to assure the public of successful management. Its immediate connexion with the CHRISTIAN ATHENEUM—an Institution which is to be furnished with many of the principal organs of Church and State, both in Europe and America,—will give its conductors early access to invaluable sources of universal intelligence.

DIRECTIONS.

1. On receipt of this Prospectus, let the Old subscribers at every Post-office, appoint one of their number, or some other suitable person, an Agent. Let him send us, at once, as many names and as much money as possible. In cases where substantial agents make themselves responsible for their subscribers, this responsibility will be regarded as equivalent to payment in advance—provided they settle their accounts within six months. Even in such cases, however, immediate payments are decidedly preferable; and, to encourage them, the commissions to agents are arranged thus:—On cash orders, 25 per cent.: on deferred remittances, 12½ per cent.

2. As the Prospectus will be widely distributed, let all persons who see it, and feel an interest in it, act promptly in the manner described above. It is thought that a little effort will be sufficient to procure a company, or club, at almost any Post-office in the Union. The times increasingly demand just such a publication as is proposed.

Address,—W. S. STOCKTON, General Agent, Philadelphia, Pa.: or either of the Associate Editors. All orders will be punctually attended to.

T. H. STOCKTON,
Editor and Proprietor.

Philadelphio, December, 1846.

NEW HISTORY OF TEXAS, pages 352, 25 cents. A few copies to be had at the office of the Western Recorder. Published by G. Conclin Cincinnati.

POST OFFICE ADDRESS OF ITINERANT MINISTERS AND PREACHERS OF THE WESTERN CONFERENCE.

Pittsburgh District.

G Brown, Steubenville, O.
Jos Burns, Port Homer, Jefferson, O.
A Lister, Beverly, Randolph Co. Va.
V Lucas, Farmington, Fayette, Pa.
R H Walker, Big Skin Creek, Lewis, Va.
S Hazlett, Beeler's Station, Marshall, Va.
P T Laishley, Morgantown, Va.
N Gillespie, " "
D R Helmick, Fairmont, Marion, Va.
J I Stillians, Lorentz Store, Lewis, Va.
H Reger, West Milford, Harrison, Va.
G G Collins, Middlebourne, Tyler, Va.
N Watson, Wheeling, Va.
A J Waren, Glady Creek ⋈ Roads, Barbour, Va.
G Nestor, Frankfort, Greenbrier, Va.
J P Prickett, Ravenswood, Jackson, Va.
Wm Reeves, Pittsburgh, Pa.
Mrs. Asa Shinn, Allegheny, Pa.
J Robinson, " "
W H Doe, Sharpsburgh, Allegheny, Pa.
G B M'Elroy, Fallston, Beaver, Pa.
Wm Boardman, Washington, Pa.
J C Hazlett, " "
J Cowl, Eldersville, Washington, Pa.
W A Porter, Waynesbnrgh, Green, Pa.
R T Simonton, Cookstown, Fayette, Pa.
W Browning, Buchanon, Allegheny, Pa.

Muskingum District

W L Baldwin, Gnadenhutten, Tuscarawas, O.
N Linder, Harrisville, Harrison, O.
M Scott, Oak Hill, Jackson, O.
W B Moody, Richfield, Summit, O.
A R Brown, Fowler's Mills, Geauga, O.
E S Hoagland, New Athens, Harrison, O.
J Hambay, Warsaw, Coshocton, O.
W W Tipton, Jackson, Jackson, O.
S H Heath, Bricksville, Cuyuhuga, O.
J Jack, Lodi, Seneca, O.
W Hatfield, Centerburg, Knox, O.
C S Callihan, Putnam, Muskingum, O.
J Myres, " " "
C Springer, Meadow Farm, Muskingum, O.
W H Marshall, Zanesville, O.
R Andrew, Steubenville, O.
D B Dorsey, " "
Z Ragan, " "
J W Case, Plainfield, Coshocton, O.
John Baker, " " "
J H Hamilton " " "
I Thrap, Tiffin, Seneca, O.
G M Scott, " " "
A S Robinson, Bucyrus, Crawford, O.
J Nichols, Cambridge, Guernsey, O.
W Remsburg, " " "
O V Warren, M'Connellsville, Morgan, O.
J M Piper, " " "
T B Cushman, New Lisbon, Columbiana, O.
A Tracy, Mallet Creek, Medina, O.
N Burgess, Berlin, Mahoning, O.
D Richardson, " " "
C Caddy, Vienna, Trumbull, O.
S Gee, Youngstown, Mahoning O.
W Duling, Otsego, Muskingum, O.
W Maynard, Adams Mills, Muskingum, O.
J K Duffy, Perryton, Licking, O.
J M Winn, Fairview, Guernsey, O.
H T Lawson, Woodsfield, Monroe, O.
J W Southard, Malta, Morgan, O.
John Burns, Mt. Pleasant, Jefferson, O.
W Munhall, Brownsville, Licking, O.
C J Sears, Chester Hill, Morgan, O.
T Potter, Mt. Vernon, Knox, O.
A Channel, Homer, Licking, O.
T Foster, New Hagerstown, Carroll, O.
S Elliott, Lee, Athens, O.

Ohio District.

R Dobbins, Washington, Fayette, O.
R K Davis, Rosedale, Madison, O.
J H Webster, South Solon, Madison, O.
W Tipton, Waterville, Lucas, O.
O Warrington, Wilhamsville, Clermont, O.
J White, Spring Valley, Green, O.
J Dalbey Jr., Cincinnati, O.
J B Peat Richwood, Union, O.
A M'Guire, Springfield, Clark, O.
O P Stephens, " " "
W Pelan, West Alexandria, Preble, O.
R Rose, Port William, Clinton, O.
D Moore, Brinton, Champaign, O.
A H Trumbo, Greenfield, Highland, O.
W G Fowler, Hamersville, Brown, O.
I Hunt, Fletcher, Miami, O.
J L Borton, Gilboa, Putnam, O.
R M Dalbey, Lebanon, Warren. O.
L Ensminger, Russelvania, Logan, O.
S P Kezeria, Holensburg, Darke, O.
J M Young, Spartansburg, Randolph, Ia.
Jonathan Flood, Fairview, Randolph, Ia.
A H Bassett, Putnam, Muskingum Co. O.

Indiana District.

W B Evans, Spencer, Owen, Ia.
W W Paul, Mt. Tabor, Monroe, Ia.
C H Williams, Millroy, Rush, Ia.
T Shipp, Edinburg, Johnson, Ia.
S Morrison, Freeport, Shelby, Ia.
H Brenton, Cataract, Owen, Ia.
G Wheatley, Graham, Jefferson, Ia.

Wabash District.

J Alter, Middle Fork, Clinton, Ia.
S W Widney, Peru, Miami, Ia.
R R Bailey, Prairieville, Clinton, Ia.
Jos. Shipp, Frankfort, Clinton, Ia.
Patterson Smith, Wabash, Wabash, Ia.
G Williams, Auburn, Dekalb, Ia.
J C Wright, Northfield Boon, Ia.
F Outcalt, Wilkshire, Van Wert, O.
H Beal, Monroe, Tippecanoe, Ia.

Michigan District.

L Smith, Pine Lake, Oakland, Mich.
J B Jewel, Rose, Oakland, Mich.
L Warren, Commerce, Oakland. Mich.
M Munn, Romeo, Macomb, Mich.
J Gay, Kingsbury, Laporte, Ia.

Illinois District.

J Clarke Jr., Rushville, Schuyler, Ill.

North Illinois District.

W E Martin, Newark, Kendall, Ill.
M Jared, Greenbush, Warren, Ill.
W H Miller, Peru, La Salle, Ill.
P J Strong, Magnolia, Putnam, Ill.
D Bagley, Princeton, Bureau, Ill.

The above list we have made out from our book, indicating the post offices to which the paper is sent for the respective brethren. It does not include all the travelling preachers, but those only who receive our paper. We have made it out, partly for our own convenience, but chiefly to accommodate the request of a member of brethren, and we perhaps owe them an apology that, for want of time, we have not done it sooner. If any names are omitted it is accid

POETRY.

SNOW.

E'en the old posts, that hold the bars,
And the old gate,
Forgetful of their winter's wars,
And age sedate,
High capped and plumed, like white hussars,
Stand there in state.

The drifts are hanging by the rill,
The caves, the door;
The hay-stack has become a hill—
All covered o'er—
The wagon loaded for the mill,
The night before!

Maria brings the water-pail—
But where's the well?
Like magic of a fairy tale,
Most strange to tell,
All vanished—curb, crank, and rail—
How deep it fell!

The wood-pile is playing hide—
The ax:—the log—
The kennel of that friend so tried.
(The old watch dog)—
The grindstone standing by its side,
All now incog!

The bustling cock looks out aghast,
From his high shed;
No spot to scratch him a repast—
Up curves his head,
Starts the dull hamlet with a blast,
Then back to bed!

The Snow Bird.

BY N. COOK.

Ah, little Snow Bird, why so gay
And cheerful dost thou greet the day,
When frost doth chill the air?
The ice hath coated o'er the trees,
Their branches crackle to the breeze,
Still thou art chanting there.

Methinks thy little wings would fly
And cleave the far-off southern sky
That smiles o'er a sweet clime—
And there remain till the dark day
Of our cold winter pass away,
And spring comes in her prime.

Oft have I seen thee with thy flock,
Skipping o'er tree, and stream, and rock,
And wastes so bleak and bare—
And when the north-blast, fierce and cold,
With gelid wings did thee enfold,
Thy chirp rose on the air.

With beauteous plumage thou art dress'd—
Soft is the down that wraps thy breast—
Thou chantest joyfully;
He that hath made, sustaineth all—
Who "notes the little sparrow's fall,"
Forgetteth not e'en thee.

Thus, beings of true heart and warm,
Encompass'd by life's cloud and storm,
I've seen—and mused the while—
Relying on their innate power,
Sing through the dreariest darkest hour,
'Mid desolation smile!

CHRISTIAN SEPARATION.

BY MRS. MACGOWAN.

If in this world of grief and pain,
We from our friends must sever;
'Tis sweet to look beyond this scene,
Where we shall meet for ever.

Though time and absence may estrange
The hearts once knit together,
Yet severed friends shall meet again,
To part no more for ever.

Where partings ne'er shall sink the heart.
Where sorrow enters never;
And sin no longer can defile,
Those whom we love for ever.

Sweet thought! this earth is not our rest,
When troubles crowd together;
But one with Jesus we shall dwell,
And reign with him for ever.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Written for the Western Recorder,

NORTH AND SOUTH.

No. III.

Concluded.

The Methodists of England and to some extent the Methodists of the U. S, have united with the Evangelical Alliance. which is supposed will be a bond of union, sufficiently strong to bind in one common brotherhood, the whole Orthodox Protestant family. And yet whilst great efforts are being made to unite christians of different names together, the Wesleyans are dividing and sub-dividing, and when other line of division can be drawn, for the sake of a division they take Mason's and Dixon's line. And we repeat what we have already stated that slavery in the M. E. C. exists, and is tolerated both Northand South. We furthermore state that along the line in the slave states, where the Northern conferences send their ministers, no efforts are being made use of to get rid of this great evil, i. e. so far as church discipline is concerned, the relation of master and slave exists as it did before the division. Ministers come and depart, and all things relating to slavery "remain as they were," is it a good result growing out of the action of the Gen. Conf. that these (said to be) abolition ministry, "are dumb dogs that will not bark." Are they watchmen that see "the sword coming and give no warning?" Are they afraid of State's prisons, or stripes? Not so with the primitive ministers of Christ. They "shunned not to declare the whole counsel of God," and counted not their lives dear unto them for the sake of truth and Christ," Paul said, "the Holy Ghost testifieth that bonds and afflictions await me in every city." "Yet none of these things move me. I go bound in the spirit to Jerusalem." Paul "kept nothing back from them that was profitable," and to imitate Paul if the doctrine of ultra abolitionism be true, it ought not to be kept back either North or South. Paul's testimony to masters is "give that to your servants which is equal and right, knowing that ye also have a Master." And to servants, to serve iheir masters "not as eye servants and men pleasers but as the servants of Christ doing the will of your Father which is in heaven." "Let as many servants as are under the yoke, count their own masters worthy of all honor, that the name of God and his doctrine be not blasphemed. And they that have believing masters let them not despise them, because they are brethren, but rather do them service, because they are faithful and beloved, partakers of the benefit. These things teach and exhort. If any man teach otherwise and consent not to wholesome doctrine even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, & to the doctrine which is according to godliness. He is proud, knowing nothing, but doting about questions and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings, perverse disputings, of men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth, supposing that gain is godliness, from such withdraw thyself." Ist Tim 6 chap. 1st—5th verses inclusive." These truths ought to be proclaimed every where, among all people North and South. There should be no fear on the part of any ministers of Christ to declare the whole truth. Northern abolitionists when at home say, immediate emancipation and leave the consequences with God. If it be right to say it at home, it is right to say it abroad. And if the ministers of the M. E. Church North, are abolitionists according to the modern sense of the word, then are we astonished that we hear nothing from them on that subject, in the slave states, where they operate. We are all on tiptoe to see them arraign the wicked masters, we hear the general rules read, and we see the sub-bishop every quarter, whose duty it is to see the laws of the discipline executed, but as yet we have looked in vain, No tyrannical slaveholder has been expelled and the very crime of which the southern church is said to be guilty, and for the commission of which it is said the North could not fellowship them, the Northern church along the line are guilty of themselves. And as I stated in No. 2, an entire slaveholding conference or a conference located in a slave holding state, masters, slaves and all were received by the North with open arms, and demonstrations of great joy manifested, at the adhering of Maryland North. Is this decrease of the membership and the apathy of the ministers a good result? if it is, then the object of the General Con. in dividing the church North and South so far is effected. But we ask again is the increase of parties in the Christian Church a good result? if it is, then has the action of the General Conference aided in their multiplication. If we look over the pages of scripture for an answer to this question, we shall have abundant reasons to deplore the divided and distracted state of the church. Paul reprobates division, speaks against schism, and declares the true church to be an unit. "One body even as ye are called of one hope in your calling." And "ye are all brethren one of another," says Christ. The ever memorable prayer of the Saviour for the unity of the church should be ever kept in mind; that the bond of union may be as strong comparatively between brother and brother, as it is between the Father and Son. Those who cause divisions are to be marked, And no member or set of members, are to be cut off without scriptural pains being taken with them. The whole northern abolitionists seem to have gone into the practice of surgery. They go for amputation, forgetting that Sir Astley Cooper says "the surgeon who saves one limb, is entitled to more credit, than he who takes off a thousand." The church is a body, every member of the church is a member of the body; and if one or more members be disordered great pains should be taken with them, to bring about a healthy action, and amputation should be the last resort: but if amputation be a good result the General Conference has brought it about, it seems however to have left the old northern church in rather an inflamatory state, and a considerable portion of the body has sloughed off, whether she has become convalescent or not, I cannot say, but this I know, she is under medical treatment, and am expecting at the sitting of her next conference to hear an official report from her, and shall be pleased to learn that her fever is not so high as formerly; and that for the future her "moderation may be known unto all men." It is true she has split upon a rock, whether a governmental rock, or whether the rock of abolitiontsm, is a matter of some dispute, It is however enough for us to know the mammoth M. E. Church of America has rent asunder. and ought to be held up as a warning to all other branches of the church, that they may avoid the like fate. The condition of the unfortunate Africans have not been bettered by the unhappy division but rather worsted, and the more ecclesiastical bodies meddle with the slave question, the more unwilling will political legislators be, to ameliorate the wretched condition of that unfortunate race. Let the gospel be preached in all its native and divine simplicity, let it have its proper influence on the heart, it will teach men the divine lesson of "doing unto others as they would have others to do unto them." The weapons of the christian "are not carnal, but mighty through faith to the pulling down of strong holds." Christ sent his ministers to preach the Gospel, baptize and teach all things whatsoever he commanded them. This Gospel he made mighty in overturning Judaism, and the uprooting of Paganism. The same gospel possesses the same power. The church acting under its influence. and by its direction, through the agency of the Holy Spirit, shall be a great moral lever, calculated in its mighty move, to overturn the crying sin of slavery, and whilst we boldly and openly speak in christian frankness on the evils of the accursed system, let us be careful that our excess of zeal, do not forge fetters and rivet chains more firmly on those we may wish to benefit. This we fear has beeen the result of the hasty action of the M. E. Church. And so far as we can trace the history of this unhappy division, we think no good has resulted to the church or world, but on the contrary much evil, at least so thinks your correspondent,

PAUL PRY.

Written for the Western Recorder.

JESUS CHRIST AN ABOLITIONIST.

NO. II.

BR. EDITOR: I now take my pen, to redeem the pledge given in my former communication, and offer a few arguments or proofs that Jesus Christ an Abolitionist. What is an Abolitionist? According to Webster, the word abolition, means "the act of abolishing—consequently an abolitionist must be one, who desires, and strives to effect the abolition, of the supposed, or real objects of his displeasure. And if the devil is a slaveholder, and American or Negro slavery, a part of his works, as we proved in our former number, and Jesus Christ desires, and strives to abolish, or destroy the works of the devil, and introduces the opposite principles, then is he an abolitionist. That Jesus Christ, is in favor of the abolition of Negro Slavery. may be proven in the first place, from his connection with the Father, in the creation of man. "God said let us make man in our own image," and when he was created, God pronounced him, very good. We are informed by the testamony of the Holy Ghost, that God made of one blood, all nations of men to dwell on all the face of the earth, and according to the American declaration of Independence, "that all men are created equal, and that they are endowed by their Creator, with certain inalienable rights among which, are life, liberty, and the persuit of happiness." St. Paul says, "all things were created by him (Christ,) and for him." If the above testimony can be relied upon then Jesus Christ must be, opposed to Slavery, from the fact that Slavery is not only at varience with the "life liberty and persuit of happiness of the enslaved, but is at war, with the creation God. He placed the enslaved among rational beings, with his own image impressed upon them, but slave holders or slavery makes of them, irrational things, goods, and chatles; and thereby seeks to destroy the best, and noblest work of Jesus Christ on earth. To deny this, is to say that Christ, is mutible, and has yielded to the superior wisdom of slave holders, in seeking to place the enslaved among articles of merchandize.

2nd. That Christ is an abolitionist may be inferred from the infinate regard, and love which he has for the beings bearing his own image, as well as for the image itself. He has prepared at the expense of his own life, the shedding of his hearts blood, (not an "under ground rail road," but a way of holiness, for all who will forsake the great slave holder, and his service, and return to freedom, and to freedom's God; and this way or path, is so well fortified that neither the old "Lion, or any of his whelps have ever trod therein. And all fugitives are safe while in this path.

3rd. That Jesus Christ, is an Abolitionist may be proved from his conduct, in removing the Jews from slavery in the land of Egypt, and in punishing that old slave holder, King Pharaoh, and his host while trying to retake those runaway slaves; see the first fifteen chapters of Exodus. What would be thought of a modern abolitionist, if he were to teach the slaves of the South, to borrow or take the gold or silver or precious things of their master or mistress, on pretence of going three days into the wilderness to worship, and then lead them out of the land, and destroy the slave holders by thousands when they were only trying to keep or take their own property. We are aware that some slave holders, and opposers to abolitionism, have falsely charged the modern abolitionists with the intention of exciting the slaves to insurrection, that the white population of the South might be destroyed en masse. But this is as foul a slander, as was ever uttered against any class of men since the world began. As all their writings, and the constitution of the societies, will show. The second Article of the Constitution, of the Anti-slavery society. reads as follows "The object of this society, is the entire abolition of slavery, in the United States—it shall aim to convince all our fellow citizens, by argument addressed to their understandings, and consciences that slave holding is a heinous crime in the sight of God, and that the duty, safety, and best interest of all concerned, require its immediate abandonment without expatriation." And the 3rd. article says, "this society will never in any way countenance the oppressed in vindicating their rights by resorting to physical force." And I need not add that the very same sentiments are embodied in the constitutions of the State and County societies to which these abolitionists belong.

4th. The same may be proved. from the whole plan of salvation, by which Jesus Christ, is able to effect the entire emancipation of all sold under sin or held in captivity by the devil. His disinterested benevolence, brought him from heaven to earth, to suffer, and die, in the behalf of lost, and wretched slaves to sin, and Satan. Yes he died for the poor negro slave, as well as his lordly master or driver. And is it reasonable to think, that He would have died for the slaves of the South, if he had intended them to be "goods, chattles, articles of merchandize, or estate personal in the hands of their owner?" Would he have died for, and put his holy Spirit in, and made articles of property the temple of the living God? He must from his inmost soul be forever opposed to slavery in every and all of its features, for as, Rowland Hill says, "slavery is made up of every crime that treachery, cruelty, and murder can invent; and men-stealers are the very worst of thieves. The most knavish tricks are practised by these dealers in human flesh; and if slaves think of our general character they must suppose that christians are devils, and that christianity was forged in hell." Pope Leo, X. says "Not only the christian religion, but nature herself cries out against a state of slavery."

5th. The conduct of Jesus Christ while on earth, shows that he was an abolitionist of the first stamp The sacred historian says that "He (Christ) went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil." Acts 10, 38. Here it is clearly inferred from the testimony of the Holy Ghost that the devil is an oppressor, and that Christ emancipated or healed all the slaves thus eppressed by that cruel foe of God, and man the devil. Jesus says, "whomsoever the son makes free is free indeed." And Paul says, "I am the Lord's free man." He has not and never did have, nor ever will have, a single follower, or servant among all his followers here, nor one among the innumerable company in heaven, but what have voluntarily entered into his service, of their own free will and choice. Neither will he have a single soul in his service here or hereafter, without bountifully rewarding them for all their suffering, and toil in his cause or service. How unlike the conduct of slave holders is this glorious arrangement of the Saviour of sinners.

6th. I argue in the next place that Jesus Christ is a decided abolitionist from the instruction, and commandments which he has given us in his holy word. He teaches the doctrine of abolitionism most fully, in the illustration of the question "who is my neighbor," by the man who went down from Jerusalem to Jerico. The poor slaves have fallen among slave holders who have stripped them of all—even soul, and body, yes even of the privilege of joining the church unless they get a certificate from their masters or overseers, see a late act of the Georgia district of the M. P. Church. And according to the Savannah River Baptist Association of ministers, they have been stripped to that extent that they "are not moral or free agents." Now Christ, teaches that as far, as possible we should relieve the poor slaves from their miserable condition. He says, all things ye would that others should do unto you, do ye the same unto them. And remember them that are in bonds as bound with them; and them which suffer adversity as being yourselves also in the body. He requires us to love one another, and that we be not called Rabbi (or master) for one is your master even Christ, and all ye are brethren. But such is the nature of the union between Christ and his people that he calls them no more servants but friends.

7th. We offer another argument showing that Jesus Christ is an abolitionist from the nature of the commission given him by the father. He says, Luke 4, 18. The spirit of the Lord God is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor, he hath sent me to heal the broken hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives" &c. He was then anointed to preach abolitionism. "Moses, said unto the children of Israel, a prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren like unto me." Acts 7, 37. As Moses was the agent under God to effect the emancipation of all Israel, so the Lord Jesus Christ should be like him in delivering the captives, from slavery.

My sheet is full and I must close with an objection, and an inference or two. "You abolitionists by praying, writing, preaching &c., are riveting the chains on the slaves tighter, and making their condition worse."

Ans. So they might have said when Pharaoh required the Israelites to make brick without straw &c. But will slavery cure itself? Do not the best of Physicians make their patients worse before they are made better? Well reader on which side do you stand, are you with Jesus Christ, and for the oppressed, or are you on the side of the devil for the oppressor? Remember there can be no neutral ground in this matter for Christ has said if ye be not for me you are against me. Remember He has said inasmuch as ye ye did it not unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it not unto me. Let not your weapons be carnal but mighty pulling down the strong holds of slavery and Satan.

AN ABOLITIONIST.

Dec. 23, 1846.

SIMPLE CURIOSITIES.—1 The adjectives obstemious and facetious contain all the vowels in their regulor order—a e i o u.

2 The noun strength has seven consonants and only one vowel.

3. There is a noun of seven letters, from which if you take two exactly eight remains. That noun is Freight.

To be studying Jesus Christ, what is it but to be digging among all the veins and springs of comfort? and the deeper you dig, the more do these springs flow upon you.

EFFECTS OF MISSIONS.—The North American, in an able article on the late meeting of the American Board of Missions, says:—

There are features of the missionary enterprise that well deserve a record in a secular journal. Wherever missions have been planted by the American Board, the influence has been most marked upon civilization, and learning, and morality, and general virtue. The same is true of other missionary enterprises, wherever they are conducted on the broad and expansive principle of Christian charity. We arrogate nothing peculiar to the American Board. It is the beneficial influence of Christian philanthropy, acting upon the friendless and forsaken, the ignorant and vitious, of which we speak. We bid all such organizations "God speed." They reflect honor on our country, and mark the spirit and progress of the age. They are exerting a powerful influence in softening the asperities of human nature, in staying the madness of passion, and in binding nations together in the bands of brotherhood and affection. The havoc of war, the clashing of arms, the storming of cities, and the battle field, where thousands "bite the dust in death," may well be superseded by those conquests which diffuse a tide of blessing in proportion to their extent. We feel no hesitation in expressing our conviction that the missions of modern times, their influence and efforts, have done far more to prevent national collisions and the effusion of blood, than all the decress of kings, and cabinets, and legislative enactments. Once reclaim men from the dominion of vindictive passions, and they will cherish a spirit of kindness and good will toward the entire race.

MAXIMS.

1. As is the teacher, so is the school and as is the pay, so is the teacher.

2. The Common School is the Peoole's College.

3. Uneducated mind is educated vice. Beecher.

4. Taxes, for the support of schools, are like vapors, which rise only to disbend again to beautify and fertilize the earth.

5. Every school house that is built—every child that is educated—are new and additional pledges of our perpetuity.

6. Common Schools should go before political rights.

7. A patriot is known by the interest he takes in Common Schools.

8. One man, taught, soon becomes the teacher of twenty.

9. From one centre, knowledge radiates in a thousand directions.

10. Vice we learn of ourselves, but virtue and knowledge need a teacher.

11. Moral and religious education is the one living fountain, which must water every part of the social garden, or its beauty withers and fades away.—Everett.

As when God looks upon the rainbow, which is the sign of the covenant, he remembers the earth in mercy; so when he looks on Christ, he remembers us upon his account.

Christ is the original and fountain of all the light which is ministerially diffused by men. Ministers are but planets which shine with a borrowed light from the sun.

OBITUARY.

Written for the Western Recorder.

REV. D. H. STEPHENS.

The worthy brother whose name forms the caption of this article, was born in Picaway county, Ohio, on the 8th day of November 1813. In 1817, he removed with his parents to Miami county, where at an early age, he was convinced of the importance of a change of heart, a blessing which he obtained at about the age of 19, at a Methodist prayer meeting. Shortly afterwards he joined the United Brethren Church, in which he remained about a year, but preferring the economy of the Methodist Protestant Church he joined it about the year 1833. He served the church in the capacity of class-leader, exhorter and unstationed preacher, some three years during which time (to use the language of his father) "he often rode 25 miles and preached three times on Sunday and returned home at night ready to be at his school on Monday morning." He entered the Itinerancy in the Ohio conference in the year 1836 and was appointed 1st to Finley Ct., next to White river Ct., Ia. where he traveled two years, during which time he was married to Miss S. Burton, daughter of Br. John Burton of Monroe county Ia. In the fall of '39 he was appointed to Springfield Station Ohio. At the organization of the Indiana Conference he became identified with that body, of which he remained a worthy member until his death. At the Conference of '45 he was elected President of the Indiana Conf. and delegate to the General Conference. Br. Stephens was one of those men whose principles govern their actions. He was ever ready to do or suffer for the cause of his Master. As a citizen and neighbor he was much esteemed—as a husband kind and affectionate—as a Christian devout and exemplary—as a minister, "a workman that needed not to be ashamed." On the 23rd, day of August 1846, at his residence near Mt. Tabor Monroe county Ia. after an illness of some ten or twelve days, he closed his earthly pilgrimage in peace and triumph. Upon the scenes of his last illness and death it is unnecessary to comment. 'Tis enough to say. he died as he lived, with a hope "big with immortality." He has left a companion and two small children, with numerous other friends to mourn their loss, but their loss is doubtless his gain, and they sorrow not as those without hope. May they follow him as he followed Christ.—Amen.

REV. THOMAS HICKLIN,

Who deported this life on the 26th day of December 1845, at his residence in Jennings Co. Ia. was born in Barren county Ky. on the 23rd day of May 1808. Whence he emigrated to Jennings county Ia. in 1815. In the summer of 1832, he embraced religion and joined the M. P. Church. Shortly afterwards he was licened to preach and in the fall of '33 entered the Itinerancy in the Ohio Conference and was appointed to Zanesville circuit. He afterwards served several circuits in Kentucky, Illinois and Indiana, while the Ohio district embraced those States within its boundaries. When the Indiana District was organized he became a member of it, and sustained this relation until death called him to his reward. In 1842 he was one of the Ministerial members of the General Conference held in Baltimore. During the few last years of his life Br. Hicklin was a child of affliction, and though he often suffered severely, he endured his afflictions with Christian patience and resignation. He died in peace and as he had been long looking for his summons, he held himself is readiness to depart in peace. Br. H. enjoyed the confidence of his brethren and acquaintances and has left many friends to mourn their loss, others who had gone before him have doubtless hail'd him happy on the shores of eternal happiness.—Peace to his quiet remains.

T. SHIPP, } Pub. Com.
C. H. WILLIAMS, }

Millroy, Ia. Dec. 30, 1846.

NEW SERIES

OF THE

Congressional Globe and Appendix.

CONGRESS at it its last session, through the Joint Library Committee of the two Houses, having authorized a large subscription for the Congressional Globe and Appendix; and the Senate, by resolution, having directed the mode of preparing the reports of the proceedings, and authorized the Secretary of the Senate to contract with the undersigned, stipulating that the reports when written out shall be subject to the revision of the speakers, the Congressional Globe and Appendix is now offered to the public, not only as an authentic, but as an official report of the proceedings of Congress, made under the eye, and published by authority of the body.

The undersigned originated the mode of journalizing the proceedings of Congress, which, thus adopted, is to be perfected with the aid and under the supervision of Congress. Their publication was the first and only one that gave each successive step in every measure in both branches of Congress; a brief of all the debates; every important vote; and an Appendix, including at full length all the revised speeches delivered during the session.

The work, as it is now to be conducted by them, will be found a most perfect political history. The Senators from the States and the Representatives from every section of the Union bring with them into Congress a knowledge of the feelings, sentiments, and interests of their several constituencies. Public opinion and the public information, as it exists among those they represent, are embodied by them; and in the crucible of Congress the wisdom of our times is brought to its test, and is there concentrated, in directing the political movements of the whole country. The impulses thus given through Congress from every quarter react upon the nation as a whole, and all its component parts are made to move in co-operation. The press cannot be more usefully employed than in condensing and again spreading abroad the intelligence of our free country, tending to such happy results through our all most miraculously adjusted State and National institutions.

Having identified ourselves with the plan of advancing the usefulness of Congress by publishing full and impartial reports, and having a large mass of the Congressional Globe and Appendix, issued during the last twelve years which would be impaired in value to us and utility to the public if the work were discontinued, we have a double motive to prompt us to extend it through a new series. We are resolved, if possible, to give it permanence, and hand it down to successors as a standard work worthy of being maintained and improved. We shall enter upon our new undertaking without being distracted or burdened by any associate labors of the press; and thus unencumbered, shall hope to make the new series a step in advance of the former in all points of execution. With a view to accomplish this, we shall be (one or the other) in attendance on Congress.

The reports will not be affected by our party bias. We believe every member of Congress will bear witness that our reports are full and fair.

The Congressional Globe is made up of the daily proceedings of the two Houses of Congress, and printed on superfine double royal paper, with small type, (brevier and nonpareil,) in quarto form, each number containing sixteen royal quarto pages. The speeches of the members in this first form are condensed—the full report of the prepared speeches being reserved for the Appendix. All resolutions, motions, and other proceedings, are given in the form of the Journals, with the yeas and nays on every important question.

The Appendix is made up of the President's Annual Message, the reports of the principal officers of the Government that accompany it, and all speeches of members of Congress, written out or revised by themselves. It is printed in the same form as the Congressional Globe, and usually makes about the same number of pages during a session.

During the first month or six weeks of a session, there is rarely more business done than will make two numbers a week—one of the Congressional Globe and one of the Appendix; but during the remainder of a session, there is usually sufficient matter for two or three numbers of each every week. The next session will be unusually interesting; therefore, we calculate that the Congressional Globe and Appendix together will make near 1500 large quarto pages, printed in small type—brevier and nonpareil. We furnish complete Indexes to both at the end of a session.

We have on hand the Congressional Globe and Appendix for the last fifteen sessions of Congress, making together fifteen large royal quarto volumes, which we will sell unbound, for $41; or bound with Russia backs and corners for $56. Those who want the back volumes should apply for them immediately, as they are in demand. Congress subscribed for 341 complete sets during the two last sessions. The proceedings of Congress for the last nine years cannot be procured from any other source—Gales & Seaton having stopped printing their Register of Debates in 1837.

We will endeavor to print a sufficient number of surplus copies to supply all that may be miscarried, or lost in the mails; but subscribers should be very particular to file their papers carefully, for fear that we should not be able to supply all lost numbers.

TERMS.

For one copy of the Congressional Globe,	$1 00
For one copy of the Appendix,	1 00
For six copies of either, or part of both,	5 00

The money may be remitted by mail at our risk. The safest and best way to remit is, to pay the amount to the Postmaster where you reside, and take from him a receipt.

Our prices for these papers are so low that we cannot afford to credit them out; therefore, no person need consume his time in writing for them unless he sends the money. BLAIR & RIVES.

Washington, D. C. October 15, 1846.

JACOB THORN,

WHOLESALE dealer in all kinds of NOTIONS, No. 91, Wilson's Row, the first store below the Court House, is now opening a new and complete assortment of

NOTIONS AND DRY GOODS,

which will be sold wholesale, at prices a little below what they have ever been sold in this place.—Country Merchants and Pedlers, visiting the city are respectfully invited to examine my stock before purchasing elsewhere, among which may be found the following articles:—

800 Packs American solid head Pins.
200,000 Drilled Ey'd Needles, Sharps and Betweens.
2000 Doz Spool Thread.
500 Lbs. Patent do.
800 do. Cotton do.
3000 Doz. Side Combs.
600 do. Fine Ivory do
500 do. Dressing do.
100 do. Woolen Comforters.
100 Brass Clocks.
1500 Prints (Engravings,) high col'd.
100 Doz. Chapman Strops.
5000 Almanacks.
300 Shawls, different patterns.
100 Gross Kitting Pins.
4 Bbls. Blacking.
30 Doz. slates.
50 Gt. Gro. Agate Shirt Buttons
500 Coils Bonnet Wire.
50 Gross Boot Laces.
500 do. Hooks and Eyes on Cards
100 do. Wood Combs.
200 do. Sherred and G. E. Suspenders
12 Boxes Fire Crackers
12 Doz. Looking-Glasses.
100 Gross Pearl Shirt Buttons.
6 Bales Brown Muslin.
200 Doz. Mitts.

Combs of every description, Buttons, Penknives, Razors, Table and Tea Spoons, Tapes, Eyeletts, Jewsharps, Pencils, Shaving Boxes, Gloves, Ladies cotton Hose, Matches, Dress Handkfs., Laces and Edgings, Spectacles, Thimbles, Beads, Candle Wicking, Night caps, Primers, Calicoes, bleached Muslins, Wafers, &c.

WANTED in exchange for goods at wholesale prices, Feathers, Beeswax, Ginsang, Rags and Hogs Bristles tied up in small bunches, for which will be given twenty-five cents a pound for all that can be brought in good order

Zanesville, O. Nov. 7, 1846.

PUTNAM BOARDING HOUSE.

THE SUBSCRIBER having been for the last sixteen years keeping Tavern and Boarding House, would respectfully acquaint the public—that he has established a Bording House in Putnam, and hopes by strict attention to business he will merit a share of public patronage. His accommodations shall be good, and his table, for variety not surpassed by any Hotel or Boarding House in the West. R. PUTNAM.

October 31st, 1846.

N. B. Application for boarding should be made so on R. P..

GEORGE CONCLIN,

BOOKSELLER AND PUBLISHER,
Stationer, Binder, and
BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURER,
No. 39 Main Street, Cincinnati.

KEEPS on hand Books published by the Methodist Protestant Church—such as
CHURCH HYMN BOOKS,
REVIVAL " "
DISCIPLINES,
EVANS' QUESTIONS & ANSWERS, &c.

ALSO—Just received—A supply of the CHRISTIAN WORLD in 3 Vols. with Portraits of the Wesleys, &c., by REV. THOS. H. STOCKTON.

PROSPECTUS OF THE

LITERARY ATHENÆUM,

A NEW AND SPLENDID MONTHLY MAGAZINE,

TO BE EDITED BY THE

Rev. Henry D. Moore, of Philadelphia,—and Rev. Andrew A. Lipscomb, Professor of English Literature and Belle Letters, in the city of Baltimore.

ON the first of January, 1847, the subscribers intend issuing the first number of a spendid Monthly Magazine, to be called the "LITERARY ATHENÆUM," to be devoted to the interest and circulation of a mind-refining, soul-inspiring, spirit-stirring literature; such a literature, in a word, as the progressive taste of society seems to demand.

Between the magazines of the day, which are devoted almost exclusively to the circulation of Christian Literature, and those devoted to the light, and in too many instances, tasteless and corrupting literature—there is a wide and deep chasm, to fill which successfully and profitably, very few attempts have been made. To supply this void, to some extent at least, is the intention of the subscribers, in issuing the "Literary Athenæum."

The general cast and character of the contents of the proposed magazine will be fixed according to the standard of the most sterling intellect, and the most liberal appreciation of the wants of the common mind. Its pages will ever present a feast and a glow, to feed and illumine the loftiest and purest taste and spirit of the admirers and lovers of refining and exalting literary walks and research.

To secure this grand design, effectually and honorably, no pains or expenses will be spared.

The contents will be purely original; consisting of Lectures, Addresses, Essays, &c., on the most popular and exciting literary and scientific subjects, from the most able writers that can be secured—interspersed and relieved by beautiful poetic composition.

Science, Art, and government, in their almost infinite variety development and interest, will be liberay and honorably discussed in its pages.

Arrangements are in progress for an extensive and important European correspondence, which will be a feature of great interest in its varied connections.

In addition to such articles, there will be presented occasional tales of unexceptionable character and style, differing essentially from the weakish romances which fill the pages of the many magazines of the day. Writers in this connection, can be secured, whose productions are the embodiment of life, true to itself,—and which will kindle and glow with the loftiest and purest sentiment, and thrill with the beauties of morality and religion in their loveliest forms.

Each number of the Athenæum will contain four embellishments of the first artistical merit, One of them will be a portrait of some distinguished personage in this country or in Europe, accompanied with an interesting biograpical sketch. Another will be a view of the buildings and grounds, of some one of the popular Universities, in this or the old world, accompanied with a historical, biograpical and statisical sketch in this body of the work. The portraits will be fine mezzotint, and the college views, beautiful line engravings. Then will follow richly colored specimens of flowers and fruit; in connection with which, there will also be presented interesting notices—floral and botanical—of climate, habits, culture, &c. All of which cannot but secure interest and favor.

Each number will comprise sixty pages of letter-press, double column, beautifully stereotyped, and printed on fine white paper; the whole corresponding in all respects, with the character of the other departments of the work.

Such is to be the character of the work at its commencement. If it is succesful, as it ought to be, and as is hoped and believed it will be,—improvement will be made as far as possible in the different departments, as they are suggested in the progress of the work.

The subscribers take pleasure in announcing to the public, that they have concluded arrangements with the Rev. Henry D. Moore, of Philadelphia, and Rev. Andrew A Lipscomb, Professor of English Literature and Belle Letters, of Raltimore, who will co-operate as Editors the of new Magazine. Under the management of those gentleman, the subscribers flatter themselves, abundant success will be secured in behalf of the enterprise.

TO PUBLISHERS.

The subscribers would also give notice to Publishers, at home and abroad, that there will be in connection with the work, an extensive review department. This will be made a feature of excelling interest. The department will be conducted fairly and honorably, and all works sent to the office of the subscribers, will receive such notices as their character may demand.

The first number will be issued on the first of January, 1847. Its contents and the name of contributors, will be published shortly.

TERMS—Three dollars per annum, in advance.

Editors of papers, copying this Prospectus, and sending a paper with it, to the office of the "Athenæum," shall receive the numbers of the work, and the thanks of the publishers.

All letters, containing orders for the work, post-paid, and enclosing the subscription price, will receive prompt attention. To be addressed to

F. C. WILSON & Co.

Philadelphio, Pa.

An Elegantly Illustrated Magazine for Christmas and New Year, containing a Pictorial Description of Ohio, &c. &c., which can be mailed to any part of the United States, for 4 cents postage.

THE January Number of our FAMILY MAGAZINE, for 1847, will be complete in itself, and contain an interesting Historical and Descriptive Account of the State of Ohio, together with a great variety of other literary and interesting matter; the whole illustrated with each one occupying an entire page of the Work. We expect to circulate many thousands of this elegant Periodical in the State of Ohio and elsewhere. The Plates are all executed in a peculiarly chaste and perfect manner; and any one of them is worth the price of the Work.

FIFTEEN ELEGANT ENGRAVINGS,

The following is a list of the principal Engravings that will be published in the January Number, viz:—

1. A splendid View of the City of Cincinnati, as it appears at the present time. This forms the Frontispiece, and is elegantly printed on the best and finest paper, accompanied with a particular account of the origin, rise, and progress, of the Queen of the West.

2. A View of Cincinnati, as it appeared in the year 1800; forming a striking contrast with its preset appearance.

3. A View of the Public Landing Place, at Cincinnati.

4. The New Catholic Cathedral at Cincinnati—a large plate.

5. A View of Lane Seminary, at Walnut Hills, two miles from Cincinnati.

6. Several Views of Kenyon College, &c., &c., at Gambier, Ohio.

10. Several Engravings illustrative of the Antiquities of Ohio. Together with—

13. Bears attacking a boat's crew in the polar seas—a spirited engraving.

14 Picture of the Deluge. This is, without question, the most valuable and interesting Engraving in the whole Wsrk. We have not the space neccessary to describe it, and do it justice.

15. A View of Mount Ararat, from the hills above Erivam. This is generally admitted to be the mountain on which the Ark rested after the Deluge.

☞The whole of these Plates are accompanied with interesting descriptions, making the Number invaluable as a Present to young People.

The price of "The Pictorial Description of Ohio," will be ONLY 12½ CENTS PER COPY, or Ten Copies will be sent by Mail for One Dollar.

Letters enclosing remittances must be post-paid in full. The silver change for a single copy, or for three or four copies, may be thus remitted, (Postage Paid,) at our risk; but when you send silver, please envelop it carefully in a half sheet of writing paper, so that it will be subject to only single postage.

All orders should specify distinctly the town, county, and state, where the Magazine ts to be forwarded. and should be addressed (post paid) to

ROBERT SEARS,
128, Nassau Street New York.

ATTENTION!!

Look Here, All!!

I HAVE JUST received from New York, a fine assortment of Foreign and Domestic DRY GOODS consisting of, Cloths, Casimeres, Sattinets, Tweeds, and Jeans Cashmeres, Mouslin de Lains, Alpaccas, Morenoes, and Cloakings, Flannels, Checks, Linseys, Brown and Bleach Muslins, Shawls and Prints of every variety, Men's and Boys' Caps Boots and Shoes. Also Coffee, Sugar, Tea &c. All of which I am offering to the public, for cash, or in exchange for country produce of all kinds. I would add, that those wishing to purchase cheap goods will find it to their advantage to give me a call, as I am determined TO SELL my goods. W. B. GUTHRIE.

AT VERY REDUCED PRICES,

Putnam Ohio, October 31, 1846.

SNETHEN'S SERMONS.—Rev. Ulysses Ward of Washing ing City, has just published a volume of Sermons by the late Rev. N. Snethen. It comprises 480 pages, and elegantly bound in cloth. Price $1,00 per single copy Ten copies or more at the rate of $4. And for 50 or more copies, 84 cents apiece. Cash in all cases to be remitted when the books are ordered. "He, being dead, yet speaketh."

THE WESTERN RECORDER.

VOL. VIII---NO. 17. PUTNAM, MUSKINGUM COUNTY, OHIO, JANUARY 30, 1847. WHOLE NO. 381.

The Western Recorder,

Is Published every Saturday,

AT PUTNAM, OPPOSITE ZANESVILLE, OHIO.

OFFICE ON MAIN STREET.

A. H. BASSETT, Editor and Proprietor.

C. ALLEN, PRINTER.

TERMS.—Two Dollars per annum, in advance. wo fifty at the close of the year. Payments within ree months will be considered in advance.

All letters and communications must be addressed, the Editor, post paid, except such as contain funds, id directed to Putnam Muskingum Co. Ohio.

Itinerant Ministers and others, who collect from subscribers and remit to us as much as ten dollars within e year, shall receive a copy of the paper free.

Itinerant ministers and preachers, not acting as agents, n have the paper at one dollar.

Clubs of ten or more, paying at the time of subscribing, all have the paper for $15, i. e. one dollar fifty, each.

THEOLOGICAL.

Written for the Western Recorder.

CONDITION OF MAN.

Mr. Editor:— I would, by your permission, esent a few thoughts upon the condition of man in s pristine state, and his subsequent situation. nce the Lord our maker is a holy benevolent, just ise, & an al powerful Being, he would do nothing hich would contravene any of his own attributes. e would not make any creatures with disposions, or propensities directly opposed to his own ature. He being the most perfect, he must be e most happy and lovely, and the best of all eings; and, from his goodness, could not desire ny other, than the highest happiness of all his tional creatures; and he would make no requitions, but those which would tend to this grand ject. If it be granted that this is correct, it will llow, that when the Lord made man, he imanted in him dispositions which were only good; nd if he had continued in obedience to the diine law, all the passions, appetites or propensiies that he possessed, would have tended, only, promote his happiness. Some, however, have pposed that there was in the constitution of dam, when he was still obedient to his Maker, a edilection for evil. Now, if this is correct, ere could have been but one source from which could have derived it; that is, from the ord our Creator; and if he imparted any ing of this nature, it would appear reasonable, at he intended it to be used; and if he deigned it should be used, of course, it would ve to be exerted in conformity with its own ture; and the necessary result would be, that dam would do evil, by transgressing the law of d. Under this view of the subject, man ould be entirely excusable, if not to be applaud, for his conduct, when he participated of the hibited fruit; and the infliction of any punishent, as a penalty, would conduct us to the conusion, that God is unjust. And further, if it uld be made to appear that our Creator imparted an evil disposition, or a disposition, the tenncy of which, was to lead Adam to transgress law in the garden of Eden; since he received from his maker, it would lead us to believe that Deity, himself, possessed something of the me nature; and, if this were established, since ere would be no possibility of determining how s principle might lead him to conduct himself ward us, his creatures, who could then confide him, as a father and a friend? The supposin, which leads to so derogatory conclusions, ght to be, not only rejected, but I believe heartdetested. There can be no doubt then, t when man was created, he possessed good alities only, and that he enjoyed all that was quisite to enable him, voluntarily, to obey the rine law; and since he could of choice, obey his aker, he was a fit subject to be governed by ; and that he might have an opportunity of playing his allegience, and be rewarded, the bdness of God would require that he should ve a law suitable to his capacity. God never signed that man should violate this law; which s every way suited to man's nature; though, ers have perplexed themselves with the thought, t since God foreknows all things, he must have own when he created Adam, that he would ngsress, and fall; and since foreknowledge, and ordaining, with them, are synonymous, there- e they believe God never determined that am should violate the law, under which he s placed. The inference drawn from this, is my mind, as far from being correct, as the position that God created Adam with a predition for evil. I do not refer to the belief that Deity foreknew precisely, what course Adam uld pursue; for this, I readily admit to be cort; still, I believe there is as great a difference ween the Lord's foreknowing the course our t parents would adopt, and his pre determining t they should take the course they did, as there between the most dissimilar things imaginable. foreknow, means, (as I understand the subt,) to have a clear perception of a thing before exists, or comes to pass. To pre-determine, or eordain, means when applied to God, that a ng shall infallibly come to pass, and that he l so guard intervening events, that the thing -determined will inevitably come into exisce. If the foregoing be a correct definition, I n remark. Before any thing can be known, it er real, or conditional, and exists without y dependence upon the knowledge of him who ows it. The exercise of the attribute of the cience of the Divine Being, is caused, by the istence, in some way, of whatever is known; d that which is known, is not the effect of this owledge. It has been said, "knowledge is ver." But this is only saying one thing, when other is meant; viz. that knowledge gives diion to other attributes. Knowledge, in the tract, is not any more power, than power is owledge. It must, however, be admitted, that erever, and whenever any actions transpire, ecially, those having moral quality, there must power, in the agent to produce them. And ce knowledge, in the abstract, is not power, actions do exist, these actions do not exist in sequence of their being foreknown by the ity; because power is necessary to produce m. To say that the foreknowledge of God is cause of all the actions foreknown, is to say t God is the cause of all the actions which take ce throughout his vast dominions; performed angels, men, or devils; and to say he is the agent, (by which I mean the cause,) of all atrocious actions of men and devils, and that will afterwards condemn, or punish them for e actions, is to accuse the Holy one of Israel the great injustice of causing men and devils to wrong, and then to punnish them for that they no possible way to escape. Hence, that ich reflects so greatly upon the divine charac- should be rejected. I well know there are iculties connected with this impenetrable subject; and what attribute of Him, who cannot be found out to perfection, is there not difficulty to comprehend? Here is the main cause of embarrassment with many; they undertake to explain the manner, in which God foreknows; and are not content with believing the fact, as it exists. No man living can explain how he himself knows events which are passed. What necessary connection there is now existing between the past event, and his present memory of this event, none can explain. That the Lord knows all things, present, past and future, is a most consoling thought: No enemy can take any advantage—he knows their designs he, knows when to break a certain concatenation of events, which would prove injurious to his children he knows, always, what is the best for each; and for all—hence, the grounds for entire confidence in him; but when this glorious attribute, is made the cause of all sin, then we offer, as I conceive, the grossest insult to the Majesty of heaven. Therefore I conclude, that the foreknowledge of the Deity, had no more influence on the conduct of Adam when he transgressed, than if he had known nothing about what course he would pursue. Others have taken the liberty to complain that God made man with the power to transgress the divine law, and thus expose himself and his posterity to so great an amount of labor, pain and sorrow, in this life, and to everlasting banishment from the presence of the Lord, and the glory of his power, after death. Those who raise this, cannot, it seems to me, reflect maturely, or they would never raise an objection of this character. Adam's posterity are not forever lost for his sin and folly. It is true, they are deeply depraved, and undergo many afflictions and even temporal death itself, in consequence of Adams rebellion; but not one of his numerous children is lost forever, only through his own personal transgressions—his own neglect of the great salvation provided for him by Jesus Christ. And if Adam had been created incapable of performing his duties of choice, he must have been, most certainly, unprepared to enjoy all those pleasing sensations which arise from a consciousness of having volantarily performed his duty to his maker.

TO BE CONCLUDED.

ECCLESIASTICAL.

Writen for the Western Recorder.

CHURCH DIVISION.

THINGS TO BE CONSIDERED.

NO. VI.

Mr. Editor:—It appears to me that it may not be inappropriate, nor unprofitable for us to consider some of the advantages, and the disadvantages which may be connected with the contemplated movement of Division. "Look, before you leap" is a cautionary adage of long standing, and contains very valuable advice.

Of the advantages to be derived from such a division, the following we regard as being principal ones.

1. When consumated it may rid us of ONE cause of controversy & contention. It is well known that our connection with the South, has for some years past been made the occasion for debate and discussion, both public and private, much to the disquietude and spiritual poverty of our membership, in many places. The hair splitting ingenuity and dogmatical conceitedness of many ultras in Abolition ethics, have had their influence in vexing, worrying and disgusting, as well as in pleasing some of the multitude upon which they have been so freely inflicted. And for a few years last past, this subject has proved one of the most fruitful sources of agitation, existing in the church. By such a division this question may be put to rest among us, provided we intend to suspend, or terminate our action against slavery, as connected with the Southern portion of the Church, with such division. If not the seperation will afford us no relief in this particular. We may be told that our opposition to slavery would be more unanimous if we were seperared from the South. This would be untrue, because impossible. We are already unanimous in our opposition to slavery; we differ only in regard to the measures for operating against it. But in considering the question as a kind of "peace measure" it is deserving our attentive enquiry whether it may not introduce other questions equally productive of agitation, and less reconcilable among ourselves. Little as it may be anticipated by many, I do not flatter myself but what it will prove but an entering wedge, for the introduction of a "legion" of other points of controversy, and the hoisting of the flood gates, through which almost an innumerable multitude of questions for debate, will flow in upon us, to our own serious embarrassment, if not to our entire ruin. It is unnecessary for me to name them, or attempt to point them out in this connection; they will readily suggest themselves to the mind of the reflecting.

I may be regarded as being visionary and needlessly alarmed, for this intimation or prediction; but to this I will quietly submit for the present—and acknowledge myself justly exposed to such a charge, when in the progress of the work of division, a few years have rolled by without witnessing its fulfilment. And so far am I from calculating upon any really permanent advantage of this character from division, that like the fabled fox in the brambles, I shall expect the succession of a more hungry swarm, when this one is removed.

The precedent which it will establish for correcting abuses, and reforming errors is, of a decidedly disorganizing character: The tendency of its influence will be to encourage rebellion and secession, in every society or individual who may please to be in any way dissatisfied with the judgment and action of the body of the church. For an individual to be always threatening to leave the church—or to withdraw from it, because he may chance to see something in the society with which he is not well pleased, we unhesitatingly declare to be wrong, and regard it as a very certain evidence of the want of magnanimity of mind. And so it is. But is not the principle the same, though acted upon by a multitude?

What, but anarchy, would be the result of adopting this principle, as a general rule of action, in society, among men? And what form of government would it sustain, but that of lawless confusion? While then, it might relieve us of one difficulty, it would entail upon us a legion of others less sufferable. E. A. W.

Laziness grows on people; it begins in cobwebs and ends in iron chains. The more business a man has to do the more he is is able to accomplish, for he learns to economise time.

Ladies' Department.

CONVERSATION.

The ladies have long had the reputation of being expert in the use of the tongue; but unfortunately it has not always been well directed. The following useful hints, from the Ladie's Book, we think might aid some in so ordering their words, that pleasure and profit might be the result:

"Good conversation is one of the highest attainments of civilized society," says a popular writer and, she adds, "I remember hearing an English traveller say, many years ago, on being asked how the conversational powers of the Americans compared with those of the English, "Your fluency rather exceeds that of the old world, but conversation here is not cultivated as an art."

Some persons seem to forget that "talking is not always to converse," and they run on without ever pausing to be answered, or, indeed, appearing willing to listen. The loquacious lady little thinks while at thus amusing herself, with an indelible impresion of her own selfishness she is leaving on her hearer. Be considerate of others, and these faults of manner will seldom occur.

But the Table is always a place for pleasant conversation. We will here give place for a friend of ours, who has made the subject a study for the benefit of others, and gathered rare and valuable gems of wisdom from the mines of antiquity, as well as from his own observation and experience.

The first requisite for success in conversation, is a social and kind heart. If you would please in society, you must enter the social circle, with a disposition to be pleased.

"Suppress and root out of your heart envy, jealousy, malice, and all uncharitableness, and nurture in their place the heavenly attributes of love and mercy.

"The little, nameless, unremembered parts Of kindness and love,"

which make up much of the sum human happiness.

"Another requisite for success in conversation is knowledge of one kind or another. It need not be the knowledge of books or society, or countries, or sciences, though either or all of these may be useful—but if you are prepared for bringing forth, in social converse, the treasures which your own thoughts, reflections, experience and feelings will supply you, to compare with the like of others, and observations of the various phenomena and beauties of nature, and kind expressions of sympathy for the joyous, or the weak and the afflicted, and general notices of passing events, you can give and enjoy the measures of conversation.

But besides learning how to talk—there is still another lesson—we must understand when to talk. Our friend gives an illustration or two on the use of silence, which we think well worth remembering.

"A beautiful young lady was addressed by a gentleman who had been captivated by her charm. He would sit for many minutes at a time, in the early stage of his courtship, gazing in silent admiration on her beautiful face; but when he spoke, the charm was broken, so silly and ridiculous were her thoughts and words, and so simpering her manner, that he would exclaim, 'Oh, don't talk!'

"But talk she would, and the more and faster as they became better acquainted, till finally becoming quite disgusted with her insipid, trifling conversation, the spell of her beauty over him was dissolved and he left her."

Sabbath School Department.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Muskingum Association of Sunday School Teachers.

Mr. Editor: The Directors of the Sabbath School Depository of Putnam will furnish you a monthly report of the meetings of the Muskingum Association of Sunday School Teachers. The schools that are represented by these Teachers, their names, and the different subjects discussed from time to time as the meetings take place. The present officers elected for this year, their characters as good men, their business habits, and the interest they have heretofore taken in Sabbath Schools, gives us confidence that they will be faithful in discharge of their duties as officers of so interesting an Association. We would say to all the Sabbath Schools in this vicinity, to you as Teachers, attend, take part in the meetings, make the meetings what they have been or better. Let us all attend, and then we will enjoy that blessing that is promised to those who unite together as brothers in the work of the Lord. If you think it worth a place in the Recorder it will be furnished.

M. Gillespie, John Metcalf, } Directors.

The Zanesville papers will please copy.

This Association has kept up its regular monthly meetings during three years. Their third anniversary was held last week in the 1st Baptist Church in Zanesville.

The meeting was opened with an anthem by a select choir, after which Rev. Mr. Wood of the 2nd Baptist Church read a portion of scripture, and followed by prayer. The choir then sung a hymn, which was followed by a Report from the several schools represented in the association. The report of the school in the first Baptist church by the Superintendent being more full and particular, is here given, showing a system from which others may perhaps profit.

"Our School has been very flourishing, and I may safely say more prosperous, than any previous year since my connection with it. We have had during the past year 176 scholars, being an increase of 50 over any former year. Their average attendance in each moth is as follows: Jan. 75; Feb. 80; March 94; April 92; May 117; June 133½; July 135; August 110; Sept. 99; Oct. 70; Nov. 75½ Dec. 80; being an average of 99 through the year. We are not able to give as encouraging an account in a spiritual view as we did last year. Our officers are a Superintendent, an assistant and a Librarian. 7 Male and 17 Female teachers.

The lost time of the Officers and teachers during the year amounts to 179 days; reasonable excuses have been received for 68 days, leaving an actual loss of 111 days. The former year the loss was 229 days; making the actual loss not quite one half as large as the former year. To this in a great measure we attribute the increase of our school. This seems to us an important subject, to have officers and teachers feel the responsibility of their calling; so that nothing but sickness or antual necessity will prevent them from being present with their classes. This seems to us to be the great secret by which they may be made useful.

We observe the Sunday School concert for prayer, on the second Monday evening in each month, which is usually well attended by the School; at which time we distribute 80 copies of the Youths Penny Gazette. We also take up a collection on that evening to aid the cause of foreign missions. We endeavor to manage the exercises so as to interest the children. We sometimes distribute tracts among the children, promising to redeem all that are returned at the next concert, with a cent which is to be thrown into the collection.

About 15 dollars has been expended upon our Library, and many of our teachers have supplied their classes with new books, which, after being read by each member of class, have been donated to the Library.

In reviewing the year we find much to encourage us to renew our efforts in this noble enterprise."

The Rev. Mr. Miley of the Methodist Episcopal church then addressed the Association, showing the objects, the discouragements, and the encouragement which attend the faithful Sunday School teacher.

The address was followed by singing the hymn

"Come christian brethren ere we part," &c.

The following persons were then chosen as officers for the ensuing year, viz: N. W. Graham president; Wm. Shultz Vice Pres. J. Mount Secretary.

The meeting was dismissed by the Rev. Mr. Hoar of the Lutheran church, pronouncing the benediction.

☞Officers and teachers of Sunday Schools who have not as yet taken a part in this association are earnestly invited to attend and participate in exercises of the meeting: trusting that they may be made not only interesting but profitable to all. J. M.

Putnam, Jan. 26, 1847.

Fulton's first Steamboat Voyage.

We find in the number of Hunt's Merchant's Magazine, an interesting description of Robert Fulton's first voyage from New York to Albany, which "opened the door to a progress for the human race, equivalent, at one bound, to the march of ages." The following extract from this description will be read with pleasure:—

"Judge Wilson resided in the city of New York when Fulton was building his boat, and frequently saw her on the stocks. She was a queer-looking craft, and excited much attention, and not a little redicule. When she was launched, and the steam engine placed in her, that also was looked upon of a piece with the boat built to float it. A few had seen one at work raising the Manhattan water into the reservoir back of the alms-house; but to the people at large, the whole thing was a hidden mystery. Curiosity was greatly excited. When it was announced in the New York papers, that the boat would start from the foot of Cortland st., at six and a half o'clock on Friday morning, the 4th of September, and take passengers to Albany, there was a broad smile on every face, as the inquiry was made, if any one would be fool enough to go? A friend of the writer, hearing that he intended to venture, accosted him in the street, 'John, will thee risk thy life in such a concern? I tell thee she is the most fearful wild fowl living, and thy father ought to restrain thee.' When Friday morning came, the wharves, piers, house-tops, and every 'coigne of vantage' from which a sight could be obtained, were filled with spectators.

"There were twelve berths, and every one was taken through to Albany. The fare was seven dollars. All the machinery was uncovered and exposed to view. The periphery of the balance-wheels, of cast iron, some four or more inches square, ran just clear of the water. There were no outside guards—the balance-wheels being supported by their respective shafts, which projected over the sides of the boat. The forward part was covered by a deck, which afforded shelter to the hands. The after part was fitted up, in a rough manner, for passengers. The entrance into the cabin was from the stern, in front of the steersman, who worked a tiller as in an ordinary sloop. Black smoke issued from the chimney, steam hissed from every ill-fitted valve and crevice of the engine. Fulton himself was there.—His remarkably clear and sharp voice was heard above the hum of the multitude and the noise of the engine; his step was confident and decided; he heeded not the fearfulness, doubts, or sarcasms of those by whom he was surrounded. The whole scene combined had in it an individuality and an interest which comes but once, and is remembered forever.

"When every thing was ready, the engine was set in motion, and the boat moved steadily but slowly from the wharf; as she turned up the river and was fairly under weigh, there arose such a huzzah as ten thousand throats never gave before. The passengers returned the cheer, but Fulton stood upon the deck his eye flashing with an unusual brilliancy, as he surveyed the crowd. He felt that the magic wand of success was waving over him, and he was silent.

"When coming up Haverstraw Bay, a man in a skiff lay waiting for us. His appearance indicated a miller; the paddle-wheels had very naturally attracted his attention; he asked permission to come on board. Fulton ordered a line to be thrown to him, and he was drawn along side; he said 'he did not know about a mill going up stream and came to inquire about it.' One of the passengers, an Irishman, seeing through the simple-minded mill at a glance, became his cicerone; showed him all the machinery, and contrivances by which one wheel could be thrown out of gear, when the mill was required to come about. After finishing the examination, said he, 'That will do; now show me the mill-stones.' 'O!' said the other, 'that is a secret which the master,'' pointing to Fulton, 'has not told us yet; but when we come back from Albany with a load of corn, then if you come on board, you'll see the meal fly.' Dennis kept his countenance, and the miller left.

"As we passed West Point, the whole garrison was out, and cheered us as we passed, At Newberg it seemed as if all Orange county was collected there; the whole side-hill city seemed animated with life. Every sail-boat and water-craft out; the ferry boat from Fishkill was filled with ladies. Fulton was engaged in seeing a passenger landed, and did not observe the boat until she bore up nearly alongside. The flapping of a sail arrested his attention, and, as he turned, the waving of so many handkerchiefs, and the smiles of bright and happy faces, struck him with surprise; he raised his hat and exclaimed, 'That is the finest sight we have seen yet.'

"Fulton, in his letter to Barlow, (22d August, 1807,) adds to these reminiscences:—'My steamboat voyage to Albany & back, has turned out rather more favorable than I had calculated. The distance to Albany is one hundred and fifty miles. I ran up in thirty-two hours, and down in thirty-hours. The latter is just five miles an hour. I had a light breeze against me the whole way going and coming, so that no use was made of my sails, and this voyage has been performed wholly by the power of the steam engine. I overtook many sloops and schooners beating to the windward, and passed them as if they had been at anchor."

Church Almanac and Protracted Meeting Calendar, for 1847.

January—The weather will be too cold and unpleasant to appoint a meeting for this month.

February.—During this season, if the weather be fine, we shall be very busy resetting our fences, and preparing for spring work. It would be advisable to delay our meeting.

March.—All our horses will be employed this month in breaking up corn and oat ground. We could not have anything to ride, if a meeting were appointed.

April.—We are busy preparing for corn-planting, we cannot have a protracted meeting now.

May.—The former part of this month we shall be planting, and the latter plowing corn. It were folly to think of a protracted effort now.

June.—We shall be engaged saving hay, beginning harvest, &c. We will request the brethren to visit us at some other time.

July.—We are right in the middle of harvest, cutting oats, &c.; no time to spare for meetings. The Lord gives us good things, and we must take care of them. Wait till a slack time.

August.—Farmers often lose much by not hauling and thrashing grain early; we should do wrong not to save all we can for our families, and if we have anything to spare, for the Lord's service.

September.—It would not be right to have a long meeting now; as we are engaged in breaking up for next year's crop.

October.—Some of the brethren think this is a suitable time, but prudent Christians will not neglect their seeding.

November.—Our corn will be still in the field, some of it may be spoiled; the cattle will begin to want the fodder; let us now use increasing diligence to prepare for winter.

December.—The season is now too far advanced, the holidays are approaching, people are thinking of other things, let us wait for a "More convenient season."

This calendar is calculated for North and North-western Virginia, and contains a very brief sketch of the compiler's views. He proposes to publish a comprehensive periodical, which he guarantees, will suit the views and feelings of brethren generally better than anything now in circulation. He will calculate his forthcoming work to every meridian in the state, giving convenient seasons for Christian efforts, hints with regard to ths visits of agents, &c

Any communications or orders (post paid) addressed to Simon Magus, Clerk of Cold Run church, Lukewarm Springs, Virginia, will be promptly attended to.

Respectfully, &c.,

S. MAGUS.

Lukewarm Springs, Dec. 3d, 1846.

Be Comprehensive.—Talk to the point, and stop when you have reached it. The faculty that some possess, of making one idea cover a quire of paper, is not good for much. Be short and comprehensive in all you say or write. To fill a volume upon nothing, is no credit to any body; though Lord Chesterfield wrote a very clever poem upon Nothing. There are men who get one idea into their heads, and but one, and they make the most of it. You can see it and almost feel it when in their presence. On all occasions it is produced, till it is worn as thin as charity. They remind one of a twenty-four pounder discharged at a humming-bird. You hear a tremendous noise, see a volume of smoke, but you look in vain for the effects. The bird is scattered to atoms. Just so with the idea. It is enveloped in a cloud, and lost amid the rumbling of words and flourishes. Short letters, sermons, speeches and paragraphs, are favorites with us. Commend us to the young man who wrote to his father—"Dear sir, I am going to be married;" and also to the good old gentleman who replied—"Dear son, go ahead."

Such are the men for action. They do more than they say. The half is not told in their weight in gold for every purpose in life. Reader, be short—and we will stop short with the advice. —Portland Bulletin.

Going to Law.—The following illustrative anecdote may prove new to some of our readers.

Two Duchmen, who built and used in common a small bridge over a little stream which ran through their farms, had a dispute concerning repairs which it required, after a time one of them declined to bear any portion of the expenses necessary to the purchase of two or three planks. Finally the aggrieved party went to a neighboring lawyer, and placing ten dollars in his hand, said,—

"I'll give you all dish moneys, if you'll make Hans do justice mit the bridge."

"How much will it cost to repair the bridge?" asked the honest counsellor of the determined litigant.

"Well den, not more as five tollar," replied the Dutchman.

"Very well," said the lawyer, pocketing one of the notes and giving him the other, "take this and go and get the bridge repaired it's the best course you can take.

"Yaas," said the Dutchman slowly, "y-a-a-s, dat ish more better as to quarrel mit Hans," but as he went along home he shook his head frequently, as if unable after all quite clearly to see how he had gained anything by going to law.

Cultivate a universal benevolence to mankind and according to your ability relieve the poor and help the distressed. This is to imitate the Deity, and to act like a good steward of the property he has committed to your care. It will afford you the most pleasing reflections, and entitle you to the blessing of heaven, and the good wishes of all men.

A lady of Cincinnati, on Christmas Eve, had one of her eyes put out by a knitting needle, which was thrust into the ball, in an attempt to get it back from a gentleman, who had playfully taken it from her. A warning against romping.

Scripture Anecdote.—Matt. iii. 7—"But when he saw many of the Pharisees and Sadducees come to his baptism, he said unto them, O generations of vipers! who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?"

An irreligious young man went to hear Whitefield, who took the above passage for his text.

"Mr. Whitefield," said the young man, "described the Sadducean character; this did not touch me,—I thought myself as good a Christian as any man in England. From this he went to that of the Pharisees; he described their exterior decency, but observed that the poison of the viper rankled in their hearts. This rather shook me.—At length, in the sourse of his sermon, he abruptly broke off, paused for a few moments, then burst into a flood of tears, lifted up his hands and eyes, and exclaimed, 'Oh, my hearers! the wrath to come!' These words sunk deep into my heart, like lead in the waters. I wept, and when the sermon was ended, retired alone. For days and weeks I could think of little else. Those awful words would follow me wherever I went—'The wrath to come! the wrath to come!'" The result was, that the young man soon after made a public profession of religion, and in a short time became a very eminent preacher.

An Example.—Cyrus had taken the wife of Tigranes, and asked what he would give to save her from servitude? He replied all he had in the world, and his own life into the bargain. Cyrus upon this very generously restored her, and pardoned what had passed. All were full of his praises upon this occasion, some commending the accomplishments of his mind, others those of his person. Tigranes asked his wife whether she did not greatly admire him? "I never looked at him?" "Upon whom, then, did you look?" "Upon him," replied she, "who offered his own life to redeem me from slavery." This charming example should be copied in our behaviour in the house of God, where we should behold and contemplate the beauties and perfections of that blessed person alone, who actually did give his life a ransom for all.—See Xenope. Cyroped, iii. 147.—Bishop Horne.

A shrewd old gentleman once said to his daughter: 'Be sure, my dear, you never marry a poor man; but remember, the poorest man in the world is one that has money, and nothing else.'

Noble Sentiment.—When Sir Walter Scott was urged not to prop the falling credit of an acquaintance, he replied—

"The man was my friend when friends were few: and I will be his, now that his enemies are many."

Pure rain water is the best drink for man. Those who use pure rain water alone, generally have sound teeth, good appetites, are not subject to many diseases, and live to a great age.

The passion of love has been known to excite inflammatory fevers, hysterics, hectics and even madness.

The Bible can be read in nearly a hundred and fifty different languages.

The first chimney constuucted was at Venice in 1347; the second at Rome, in 1383.

At the Island of Otaheite, it is high water precisely at noon and at midnight, the year round.

Anger has produced bilious fever, hermorrhages, inflammation of the brain, apoplexies and death.

Suspension of Telegraphs.—The New York and Philadelphia and the Baltimore and Washington Telegraphs are out of order. Breaks occurred in both lines on Saturday.

Religious Intelligence.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Br. Bassett:—Zanesville Circuit is still in a living condition, although, like most of her neighbors, she has not experienced any general and special revival, at any of her appointments during the present year.

The present languishing state of Zion at large, is by no means astonishing, seeing that the Nation is unquestionably suffering the chastisements of Providence, and that the public mind is in a state of intense excitement, by reason of the continuous stream of intelligence, from the stirring scenes beyond the the Rio Grande.

O for the hastening of the reign of the Prince of Peace to stop forever the effusion of blood, and hush to eternal silence the dismal wail of wo that comes up from the battle field!

But, notwithstanding there has been no general revival of religion among us, the faithful few still rally at the Trumpet sound, undismayed at the number, character and conquests of their adversaries; supported by the righteousness of their cause, the abilities of the Captain of their salvation the certainty, if faithful of the final issue, and the surpassing glory of the conquest in view, they are joyfully pressing on, through every opposing difficulty, and endeavoring to influence others to go with them. If the same love and zeal inspired all the membership, the consequence undoubtedly, would be glorious.

But here is the difficulty with us. Amidst these days of trial, practical piety has taken refuge among the constant few, while the many neither appreciate the means of grace, nor sympathize with the cause of Christ. A few of this class, we have dropped at their request, a few by permit, and the condition of others is under consideration.

In the execution of discipline, under the plausible pretext of avoiding too great severity, we sometimes fall into the opposite extreme of too much lenity, until the line of demarkation between the church and the world becomes nearly obliterated, and consequently, it ceases to be regarded as a privilege to belong to, or a disgrace to be excluded her fellowship.

The brethren here, are laboring to establish more permanently their identity as a people. A substantial Church Register for each society, is contemplated; which, in addition to the Names, Births, Baptisms, Marriages, Deaths of members, and remarks, will embrace a continuous history of the same from year to year,—designed for the benefit of the present, and the satisfaction of future generations.

Witnessing the undaunted courage of part of the church, and beholding my able co-workers, Brs. Springer, Marshal, Hamilton, and remembering the promise of Christ, I feel like thanking God and taking courage.

Yours &c. C. S. Callihan.

Jan. 21st 1847.

Lewis Ct., Pitts. Conf., Jan. 16, 1847.

Dear Br. Bassett: I am pleased to have it to say, as a people we have been highly favored. Surely, the Lord hath been mindful of us. And "he hath not dealt with us after our sins, nor rewarded us according to our iniquities." Love to God should occupy our hearts, sacrifices of prayer continually, should be offered up to the most High. We have finished the labors of our second Quarterly Meeting. The Q. meeting was held on Lorral—lickrun, a tributary of Hacker's—creek, meeting commenced on the last evening, of the last year, —lasted 5 days.

We had been looking forward with great solicitude to the results of this meeting. I believe the membership generally have been importunate in prayer, that the Great Head of the church, might revive his work, we have not been disappointed. Professors have been revived—those that were at ease in Zion have been awakened from their lethargy. The church is generally revived on this (Lewis ct.) 9 joined the M. P. Church on probation at our second Q. M. —several backsliders, reclaimed, in all about 12 conversions to God, during the meeting. On Saturday and Sabbath of the meeting, we were favored with the assistance of Br. Walker, who labored to profit. May the Lord reward him. On this circuit since the last A. C. of M. P. C. the aggregate amount which have joined the church is 106. And I am led to believe about 120 conversions to Almighty God. "Praise ye the Lord." There are some hardy soldiers of the cross of Jesus Christ to be found on this circuit, who estimate the organization of the M. P. C. they are praying and laboring that such may be added as shall be saved. In the name of the good Lord we have set up our banners, and by his help, we will labor and toil while life shall last for the glory of God, the interest of the church, the salvation of souls, and the prosperity of that branch of the christian church, with which we have the honor, and privilege to stand indentified,

Yours in Christ,

J. I. Stillians, Supt.

Letter from Br H. Palmer.

[A private letter to the Editor, dated Connellsville, Pa. Jan. 19, 1847, informs us that a series of trying afflictions in his family, together with the difficulties attendant upon his removal to so great a distance from his last year's field of labor, were the reasons of his delay in reaching his present charge, Connellsville Circuit. From the same letter we subjoin the following account.

Ed.]

When I arrived I found every thing quiet, & my colleague at his work, since my arrival we have had two protracted efforts, one at Franklin M. H. which resulted we believe very much to the benefit of the membership, but no additions, the other at Connellsville, commencing with watch night at the last of the old year,—& closing last night, the 18inst. our meeting continued for nearly three weeks; the first ten days, meeting twice each day; & thanks be to God, we had a good time. The membership much benefitted, sixteen souls professing to find peace with God in the pardon of their Sins. Sixteen gave their names to the church, fourteen on probation & two by certificate, which makes twenty two since Conference, six being received by Br. Isherwood before my arrival. At both meetings we had the valuable assistance of Br. V. Lucas who labored faithfully and acceptably.

Woodsfield Ct. Musk. Con. Jan. 11, 1847.

Br. Bassett: As revival intelligence is always cheering to the friends of Zion, I would state that we have just closed a protracted meeting of eleven days continuance. The good Lord was with us from the beginning. The church was greatly revived——twenty joined the church on probation, and one Wesleyan brother by certificate. Between 20 and 30, (I should think,) were happily converted to God, and a number of backsliders were reclaimed. At this meeting, our Baptist and Methodist E. brethren united with us in laboring for the salvation of immortal souls. Some nine weeks previous to the meeting, the brethren had covenanted together to pray for a revival. And, glory to God, the drooping vine has been abundantly refreshed. "The parched ground has become a pool, and the thirsty land springs of water!" My own soul has been greatly blessed. We have peace throughout our borders, and are looking and praying for greater prosperity.

H. T. Lawson.

New Salem, (Lancaster Ct.) Jan. 23, 1846.

Br. Bassett: Our Quarterly meeting is still in progress. Thus far it has been one of considerable interest—and the prospects are still flattering. Our beloved Br. Callihan was with us from Saturday till Tuesday and labored zealously and to much purpose, Since which time I have had no ministerial help; but the members of the church are at their post, and best of all the Lord is with us. Six profess to have found peace in believing, and others are still mourning an absent Saviour, while others are seen trembling under the mighty power of God. Seven have given their names to the Church. Pray for us. Yours in haste,

Wm. Munhall.

Cambridge O, Jan 20, 1847.

Br. Bassett: As I have some room in my sheet I will say some thing in relation to our spiritual affairs. Since I last wrote you, we have held several protracted meetings and God in his mercy has been with us at all of them—has owned and bessed his word. Sinners have been converted, mourners comforted, and Gods people made to rejoice. There has been some addition at most of the appointments. We have received this year 49 into the Church, and better than that, God in his mercy has received most of them into his covenant favor—29 of them found the pearl of great price at the altar of prayer, and a number of them elsewhere, The church has been much blessed, and many of the members who were backslidden in heart have been reclaimed and the Church in general has been revived. The Circuit at this time is in a more prosperous condition than at any period since we have been laboring on it. May God carry on the good begun work, Yours in Christ, Jacob Nichols.

Brinton, O. Jan. 20, 1846.

Br. Bassett: After three months affliction, I am once more permitted to enter on my field of labor. Left home Nov. 14, visited Xenia Nov 21. Found my old friends much encouraged, by the efficient labors of Br. White. Left Xenia on Nov. 23, reached Lebanon Nov. 28. Found Br. R. M. Dalbey at his post and the station doing well. Left for Cincinnati Ct. Met my appointment Dec. 5. Here we enjoyed a season of refreshing. Brs. Langdon and O. Warrington are well received. May prosperity attend their labors. Left for Cincinnati, reached the place of destination. Commenced a protracted meeting Dec. 13 in 6th Street station. Here some interest was manifested —left Br. J. Dalbey deeply engaged for a revival of religion in his charge, Dec. 20, opened a meeting in Elm St. Mission, Cincinnati. This new charge is prospering under the faithful labors of Br. Finkbine, who is appointed superintendent. Journeyed to Twin Creek Ct.: held our meeting in Liberty, which proved to be very interesting. Many were convicted, some converted, while the church and minister were in the spirit of the work. After an absence of 6 weeks I returned home; found my family in tolerable health.

Change in oppointments, Br. R. Rose is released from Cincinnati Ct. and appointed to Port William Ct. Br. R. M. Dalbey is released from Port William Ct. and appointed to Lebanon St. Br. O. Warrington is released from Port William and appointed on Cincinnati Ct. Br. G. M. Hunt is released from Twin Creek Ct. and employed on Lima Ct. Br. Swaney is appointed to Portage Ct. S. B. Smith withdrawn. All our circuits are now supplied. The above changes have been made to accommodate Ministers and Cts.

John M. Young.

Twin Creek Ct. O. Con. Jan. 26, 1847.

Dear Br. Bassett: I take my pen to inform you that the Lord is still with us on Twin Creek circuit. Though we have hard strugling, we are not without hope. Our prospects for the future are rather brighter than heretofore. At our Christmas meeting we had a precious season,—11 conversions, 2 added to the church. Br. G. M, Hunt left me about five weeks ago, and at the President's request has taken charge of Lima circuit. We have just closed a protracted meeting at Liberty which lasted 7 days, the results of which will long be felt. Brethren, pray for us, that the Lord may more abundantly revive his work. Yours, W. Pelan.

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 30, 1847.

Rev. W. B. Evans' Questions and Answers on Church Government,

Alias a "Crazy Catechism." The little publication here alluded to, is a brief epitome of the difference between the government of the M. E. Church, and that of the M. P. Church, in form of questions and answers. It was first published, somewhere in Ohio, shortly after the secession of 1828. It was afterwards republished in various places, as Baltimore, Bosten, Charleston, in Michigan, and at several Cities in the west, so that it has gone through from 15 to 20 different editions. Seldom, if ever, has so small a pamphlet, on so uninteresting a subject, been so extensively called for. We believe it is still published by the Book Agent in Baltimore, but in the West, it is out of print. We should judge however, from a statement of Rev. C. R. Lovell; in the last number of the Western Christian Advocate, that a new edition will soon be called for, somewhere not far from the County seat of Warren County. This said Rev. Mr. Lovell, is Preacher in Charge of the M. E. Church in Lebanon, and has had no little trouble for a few months past, because nearly half of his flock (misguided souls) made a discovery that they had some rights beyond the privilege of submitting to the dictates of a clerical aristocracy. These seceded from under his charge, and were soon a prosperous organization of the Methodist Protesiant Church. They have a good house of worship nearly completed, and number 150 in society, as Br. Dalbey their minister writes us. Rev. Mr. Lovell, has published a series of articles in the W. C. Advocate, vindicating himself as well as possible before community. We should presume that had his cause been just, fewer words would have answered his purpose. But he has given thus far, 4 or 5 articles of some length, whilst those against whom he writes, have neither written nor published one word to his disparagement, that we have seen. We have understood however that they consider some of his representations exceedingly unfair. We will now give our readers the following specimen from his last number which appears in the W. C. Advocate for Jan. 22d.

It is to be regretted that a number of persons, who would be good members of any Church were they under healthy influences, have been so far misled that they really believe that the men who have induced them to leave us are sincere advocates of reform; and astonishing as it may appear to the intelligent reader, it is nevertheless true, that some seem to manifest so little regard for their Bibles as to take lessons from the old crazy catechism of Rev. Wm. Evans: the author himself, doubtless, would be glad had he been sleeping rather than writing so unfair a misrepresenattion. They have been induced to think that such men are better guardians of their eternal interests than the Methodist Church and her ministry, to whom, under God, they are more or less indebted for all they have and are.

Our design at present was only to direct attention to the allusion here made to the publication of Br. Evans. 'Intelligent readers' are the very ones who can appreciate such a work. And Rev. Mr. L. could do the cause of truth no better service than to challenge the 'astonishment' of such readers. in the case, upon their examination of its contents. But then, should 'intelligent readers' be found inspecting this in-offensive little pamphlet not to say, 'taking lessons from it,' we suppose Rev. Mr. L. would consider them guilty of a disregard 'for their bibles.' Wish the man had undertaken to point out wherein the said pamphelt conflicts with the bible. And indeed, unless we mistake, the bible does say something about 'Buying the truth,' 'Proving all things, and holding fast that which is good.' And if we remember aright, it somewhere says 'it is a folly and a shame for a man to answer a matter before he heareth it.' But then this little work is pronounced by Mr. L. 'a crazy old catechism.' This very classical epithet, we presume, is worthy of its author. Nevertheless, if his 'intelligent readers,' will candidly examine the work, we opine, they will find it contains 'words of truth and soberness,' and 'intelligent' though they be, if we mistake not, they will almost think the man himself crazy' for denouncing it. But then, Rev. Mr. L. takes it upon him to pronounce this 'catechism' an 'unfair misrepresentation.' It is infinitely easier to say this, than to prove it. The friends of the pamphlet only wish it examined by an 'intelligent' community, in all the light of evidence, and we greatly mistake, if the 'intelligent reader' do not say that Rev. Mr. Lovell, must be a man of leisure if he undertakes to make appear that the said 'catechism' as he is pleased to call it, is an 'unfair misrepresentation.' But finally, he has such a holy abhorrence of the little pamphlet, he concludes that its author must ere this time have repented, that ever he wrote the 'crazy' thing. He says: "The author himself, doubtless, would be glad had he been sleeping rather than writing it.' We infer from this expresssion, that Mr. L. does not know the said author of the pamphlet, so well as we know him. And had he but consulted the much respected editor of the W. C. Advocate, we are satisfied that from actual acquaintance with our old friend Evans, he would have given a different opinion of him, whatever may be the views he entertains of the "Questions and Answers on Church Government." No. Wm. B. Evans is not 'a man given to change.' We believe that his views are unaltered, and that amongst the least of his regrets in his declining years will be that he ever wrote and published what Mr. Lovell calls a 'crazy catechism.' Our old friend still lives, and, is efficiently engaged as an itinerant minister of the M. P. Church in Indiana. He receives our paper and we hope he will let us hear from him in reference this change of his views. Towards the Editor of the Western Christian Advocate, we entertain the highest respect. And we are far from holding him responsible for the expressions of his correspondent to which reference has been made. We sometimes indeed, with all other editors in some instances, publish for correspondents, on their responsibility, what we cannot approve.

RELIEF FOR IRELAND.

Below we publish the proceedings of a meeting which we attended, on Tuesday evening last in the Senate Chamber Zanesville, in behalf of the suffering poor of Ireland. Mr. Hudson, the principal speaker, exhibited painful facts in reference to the extreme destitution and distress experienced by many thousands of families in Ireland in consequence of the failure of the potato crops. And this state of things, we are assured, existed so early as November last, before the present winter had set in. We were particularly interested in the statement by Mr. H. of the origin of the present movement in the West, in behalf of Ireland, During last fall, the Friends, (Quakers) in England & Ireland, moved with sympathy by the distress of multitudes by a voluntary effort, raised a sum equal to $60,000 for their partial relief, whilst it was supposed the re was not a single family of that society among the sufferers. Reference was made to this matter in a paper called the 'Londor Friend,' copies of which were received in this country. A gentleman of the same denomination residing in Jefferson County, Ohio, also received a few weeks ago a letter from a friend in London enquiring whether Friends in America, where such abundance exists could not do something effective towards relieving those who were 'ready to perish.' The suggestion was readily responded to by the remark, that if the channel was but open by which our benefactions could be conveyed to those who need, much might soon be done. Mr. H. being present, observed that the adage is not more trite than true, that, where there is a will, there is a way,' and that if persons were willing to contribute, means could certainly be found to transmit breadstuffs &c. to those who were upon the point of starvation. A subscription was at once opened, and one of the Friends subscribed five barrels of flour, another two barrels &c. soon a county meeting was called for the county of Jefferson, and arrangements were made for a spirited effort throughout the county. And since then the like effort has been made in several other counties.

We are gratified to see that though many stand aloof from this movement, some of our most active citizens are already enlisted in behalf of the object. Agencies are to be immediately appointed in all the townships of Muskingum County, and a circular largely distributed. We hope that as the people of Muskingum enjoy the bounties of Heaven, almost without measure, they will extend a liberal hand, to administer of their abundance for the relief of the suffering. A place of deposite will immediately be provided. We understand that one gentleman has agreed to store 500 barrels of flour free of charge. It is ascertained also that corn, (in sacks, shelled,) can be safely transmitted, and will be most acceptable. Our worthy farming friends especially will find it most convenient to give of their abundance. "Give, and it shall be given unto you, good measure, pressed down, shaken together, and running over."

RELIEF FOR IRELAND.

Pursuant to previous notice a number of the citizens of Muskingum County met at the Senate Chamber in Zanesville, on Tuesday evening Jan. 26th, 1847, to consult together in relation the present distress in Ireland and to adopt some means of appointing aid to those who have no bread!

On motion George Fracker Esq. was called to the Chair, and George W. Manypenny appointed Secretary.

Mr. J. S. Hudson, of Cuyahoga County, being present, was called upon and addressed the meeting in a forcible and feeling manner in relation to the famishing and starving condition of the people of Ireland, and the necessity of prompt and efficient action on the part of the people of this country, to send them aid. Messrs. M'Cadden Hudson and O. Neal were appointed a Committee to report some plan of operations, by which such persons in Muskingum County are desired to contribute, of their abundance, something, to mitigate the distress of their fellow men in Ireland, would have an apportunity of doing so.

The Committee after consultation reported and recommended to the meeting, the appointment of a Committee of five viz: Mr. John Metcalf, John A. Blair, William Galigher, George W. Manypenny, and Jas. Palmer, with the power in said Committee, to receive contributions, appoint snb Committes and agents, issue circulars, and perform such other duties as may be necessary to carry out the objects and designs of this meeting.

The meeting was also addressed by Messrs O'Neal and Beard.

On motion, it was resolved, that this meeting request the Legislature to provide for the remission of the tolls upon any produce donated by the people of Ohio, for the poor of Ireland and that may be forwarded through our public works.

On motion it was ordered that the editors of all the papers printed in Muskingum County be requested to publish these proceedings.

On motion the meeting then adjourned.

GEORGE FRACKER, Chairman.

G. W Mannypenny, Sec.

☞The Circular above referred to will be presented to the public in a few days.

Great Western Project.—Since the connection of Pittsburgh with Baltimore by Railroad has been abandoned, the capitalists and business men of the former city are about applying their means and energies to the construction of a railroad west, to the interior of Ohio. The city of Philadelphia, meanwhile, has in progress a great "Central Railroad" to Pittsburgh. The friends of these great enterprises contemplate a continuous route by railway through the interior of Ohio, via Canton, Massilon, Wooster, &c. and thence through the interior of Indiana and Illinois to St. Louis. A western Railroad meeting was held at Pittsburgh on the 19 inst., as we see by the Gazette of that city, at which spirited resolutions were adopted, "cordially and actively to co-operate with the citizens of Ohio, in procuring the necessary legislation, for the incorporation of a Company for the construction of a Railroad from Pitsburgh to the interior of Ohio." Numerous writers in the Pittsburgh papers, as well as the Editors themselves, are advocating this measure.

There are table lands extending through the interior of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, entirely to the Mississippi river, and comparatively few intervening rivers of any considerable size, which will greatly favor the execution of the project. It is argued that the railroad can be very cheaply constructed. Success, say we, to western enterprize.

Rev Jesse Oakley.—By a letter of Rev. Z. Covel in the last Olive Branch, we learn of the death of this aged minister. He was identified with the M. P. Church from its first organization. He was one of the oldest Methodist ministers on the continent, having been in actual service nearly 60 years. He died in the city of N. York about the middle of the present month. He endured a long and painful illness with christian heroism, and died happy and triumphant, in prospect of eternal rest.

Burials in Mexico.—None but Catholics are allowed to be buried in the regular burial grounds in Mexico. And if buried any where else, there is no security that the sacredness of the grave of one regarded as an infidel, will not be molested. So says Waddy Thompson, late Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of Mexico.

United States of Africa.—This is likely to be the appellation assumed by the new confederation of States on the Western coast of Africa, which is about to spring from the colonies of Liberia &c, now independent.

M. P. Church in Charleston, S. C.—We learn by the Methodist Protestant that this church, which had suffered embarrassment in consequence of the loss by fire of its house of worship a few years ago, has obtained means of liquidating its debts.

☞Since our outside from was worked off from the press, we are informed that the name of Mr. Geo. N. Guthrie should have been given as one of the Directors of the Association of S. S. Teachers.

☞We have received from Dr. John S. Reese of Alexandria, D. C. a reply to the strictures of Rev. A. M'Caine on the general Conference resolutions which we will publish next week, in whole or in part.

The Markets.

The news by the Hibernia has caused considerable of advance in the Wheat and Flour markets.

Wheat is quoted in Putnam and Zanesville at 60 cts., Flour $3,75

In New York on the 26th, at 10 P. M. Flour was selling at $7,00 per barrel. Wheat $1,40.

At Philadelphia the same day there had been a a large advance in Flour.

In Baltimore on the same day Flour had advanced 87½ per barrel; which would make the price 5,87½ per bbl.

This is the latest intelligence that we have, and we are indebted to our friend of the Courier for it.

Godey's Ladies Book.—The number for February is before us, embellished with an unusual number of engravings. Besides two Mezzotints, it has a fine portrait of Miss Ellet the Authoress. Also, numerous designs of ladies' capes and head dresses, Model Cottages, and illustrations for the Ladies Work Department. There are nineteen distinct engravings and twelve extra pages in the number. The publisher of the 'Book' is taking great pains to make it excel in style all other Magazines. Address, L. A. Godey, Chesnut St, Philadelphia.

Blackwood's Ladies' Magazine.—The January number of this work has also reached us. It is a very neat and interesting publication. It is furnished at $1 per year, but a copy is sent free to the subscribers to the Lady's Book.

London World of Fashion.—Godey's Reprint of this work for January, has also reached us Terms, same as Blackwood.

The Souvenir,—The second number of this unassuming little publication is before us—rather an interesting number. Published by Binkley & Taylor, Roseville, O. at 50cts, a year.

Interference.—Louis Phillippe has written to the Pope recommending more moderation in his reforms. How the world has changed! Liberal Kings used to pray the Pope not to be so proscriptive; now "the King of the Liberals" supplicates the Pope to be more guarded in extending free principles.

Yams have been cultivated in Jefferson County, Ky., with success.

Telegraph communications are now transmitted between Toronto and this city without interruption, and we understand the whole line is in the most complete order, some 50 per cent. more copper wire being used than on any other line in this country.—Buffalo Com. Adv.

Indicted.—The grand jury of Pane Co., Wisconsin, at their recent session, indicted two of the members of the Wisconsin convention for gambling, and presented the convention generally as "a scandal reproach to the Territory."

CINCINNATI CORRESPONDENCE OF THE WESTERN RECORDER.

Mr. Editor:—Having to write on business, permit me to say a word or two, in relation to one or two other subjects.

You are aware of the many misfortunes which our brethren, not only of this Station, but also of the Ohio Conference have endured. They have been afflicted with a want of stability in a portion of their ministers for years. Some have come to the City, promising much good to the church, but after having filled up their time of service in the station, being unwilling to take common fare with their brethren in the sufferings, as well as the comforts of the church, or for some other reason have made the confidence and means received from their brethren, but a stepping stone to some place else. These betrayals of confidence having been so frequently repeated, have doubtless had a discouraging influence on the public mind, as well as upon those ministers and members who have been faithful to their principles; besides it seems to fix upon the ministry of the M P. Church the odium of instability, let them down in public estimation, and give some kind of credit to the old stereotyped slander. "They are going down" &c.

I understood that a Rev'd. Gentleman of some considerable importance in his own estimation, stated, in order to discourage a new organization of a Methodist Protestant Church not a thousand miles from this place. "That the M P. Church had no ministers among them that could preach, and that the church was going down in Pittsburgh, Steubenville, and various other places, and that in Cincinnati, we were doing nothing &c. &c." What a fine specimen of talent and eloquence this was truly!! Wonder if this weight of talent when visiting the City ever caused the brick paved walks to tremble and sink beneath it!! Now I wish to say for the benefit of all such gentlemen, that I have the honor of some acquaintance with both of the charges alluded to, and after an acquaintance of two years as Pastor of the former, and one year as Pastor of the latter charge, I am free to say that two congregations of better material I have never known in any branch of the christian church. And from the best information that I can get they are both in a prosperous condition at present.

But to return to this station. When we consider what these kind brethren have endured to sustain the M. P. Church it requires nothing further to prove their honest integrity in adhereing to principle. That they have had some among them of another class may be true, but I speak of them as a church. In addition the ordinary difficulties in building up a church, they have been in frequent perils among false brethren, and some shocks have been severely bearable. But they have still held on their way. In a City like this, fluctuations in point of numbers are to be expected, but this is no just ground for publishing her death. The financial condition is in some respects better now than in the days of other years, when in other respects, she was considered more prosperous. She now has a commodious Parsonage which is free from debt, worth perhaps three thousand dollars, which is certainly a very great convenience* The membership will not in my opinion, suffer in comparison with any other church in the City in point of moral worth, and chrisian liberality; and that portion of our congregation who are not members, are of that liberal, and orderly class of community who never fail to pay that respect to the order of God's house which is encouraging to their minister. To all our appeals to them, for pecuniary aid, they have responded liberally. We have a protracted meeting in progress, which commenced with the official visit of our President brother J. M. Young, that has been blest with a revival of religion to a considerable extent. Many of the members have been greatly revived, some souls have been converted, and others awakened who are inquiring after the Saviour. Our class and prayers meetings are becoming much more interesting, and we are now looking for a day of general prosperity. May the Lord speed it. Thus you see, although our prosperity is not as great as we could desire, we still live. Nor has God left himself without a witness among us. Nor will he leave us while there are so many prayers offered up in faith for final success. He may try our faith—may scourge us when we do wrong, but he will not leave us. My health is quite impaired at present, but my desires to be useful in the cause of my Master, I believe are increasing daily. And especially do I desire to see the M. P. Church prosper. I wish all well, but she is my home. Yes, with all her imputed faults and corruptions I know of no better home for me. I find it is one thing to find fault with a piece of splendid architecture, and quite another thing to posses the mechanical genius to contrive and produce it. I have waited with some anxiety to see something produced by some body of modern reformers, during these times of revolution, that would suit me better than the M. P. Church having never claimed infallibility for the framers of her church polity, but I have so far looked in vain.

It seems to me to be folly in any man to say positively what he will or will not do in coming life in regard to his church relations, but this much I can say, the M. P. Church is my home, not from necessity, but from choice. I love her government above all others in many respects, and her means of grace. But I have given up the expectation for years, that she will ever become as numerous in her membership as she might with a different form of government. To be a consistant Methodist Protestant, a man must [illegible] become familiar with human rights, and duties, as a man and a christian. And he must discharge his duties from a sense of moral obligation to his God. For we have no fear to excite, but the fear of the Lord—no ecclesiastical rod with which to lash the membership into submission. Nor have we any gaudy show of human invention to attract the marvelous. It seems to me that such is the bewitching nature of power, no matter however wickedly usurped, that thousands would rather humble themselves at the feet of a Tyrant to receive his favors dealt out with a spareing hand, than to enjoy their rights as freemen. It is no marvel that there should be negro slaves who would prefer to serve their masters and then enjoy their freedom when there are so many thousands who are enjoying the rights of civil freedom, and yet become the voluntarily * * * * * * to ecclesiastical oppression. Power generally finds a wealthy aristocracy ready to rally to its standard and sustain it, whether it be in church or state, and the great mass, won by its charms, and flateries tamely submit, and with the spirit of the infatuated slave kiss the rod, which lashes them into passive obedience. Hence all this boasting of dignitaries. Just as the slave boast of the rank of his master. Attack this Anaconda, and at once the shout is raised, Posecution! Persecution! &c. &c. But if this policy will not work, perhaps silent contempt will be the course, or if any thing is said, it will be. "The Godly must suffer persecution."! Or they have no time to talk about such subjects. In fine, although they find it quite convenient to exercise a little of this usurped power occasionally, still they can not pollute their brains, hearts nor tongues, by thinking feeling or speaking in behalf of laymen's rights. Dearbless such pious souls!

Yours &c. Joel Dalbey Jr.

Cin. Ohio, Jan. 20, 1847.

*In the acquisition of this property, much credit is due to the enterprise of our good sister Hall. It was projected by her, and persevered in, through many discouragements, until accomplished, who besides her own labors bestowed in getting donations, paid, $100 of the purchase money.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

From the N. Y. Sun.

Great Fire in Boston.—100 Buildings Burnt.

A dreadful fire broke out in Boston at half-past 10 o'clock Thursday night.—It commenced in the Bowling Saloon attached to the Neptune House, kept by Mr. Leonard Allen, in Haverhill street, north side; and owing to a strong westerly wind, blowing hard at the time, one of the most extensive conflagrations ensued, which has been known there for many years. The Neptune House was wholly destroyed. The following are among the sufferers, who owned and occupied buildings on Haverhill street, and are arranged in nearly the order in which they were consumed. The carpenter shop of S. F. Watson, building and stock burned. Cushing & Robin's carpenter shop; a very small portion of stock and tools saved. The shop of J. A. Southwark, stair builder, with a large quantity of stock and tools. The Free Stone Monument, and Grave Stone Manufactory of Mr. Henry Warren. From this, the fire had reached through to Beverly street, on the north, where several building were burned. The large store house on the south side of Haverhill street, and nearly opposite Mr. Warren's Marble Manufactory, was next on fire, and was much damaged. Next came the Saw manufactory of Mr. Wm. Mousley, entirely burned, together with a considerable portion of his stock, Marble manufactory of Mr. J. Webb, whose loss is very considerable. The next building occupied by C. Traverse, carpenter, and E. T. Kent, iron and junk dealer, The shop of J. C. Hackett; then the extensive coach manufactory of Mr. Roberts, a large quantity of stock was removed from this establishment; the shop of Mr. James Marshall, stair builder. Gerald's looking glass and picture frame manufactory. Thomas Patten's marble manufactory. On Beverly St. Cheever's sawing and plaining mill, the dwelling house of Mrs. Hazeltine, the carpenters shop of S. Dockham, and nearly every building on the street, easterly from the plaining mill, and up to Thatcher street, were destroyed. On Medford street, the carpenters shop of Benjamin Abbot, the dwelling house and stable of Mr. N. Boynton, and the stable of John Byer, together with several other buildings of comparatively small value.

15 minutes before 2 o'clock A. M. We have just returned from the scene of destruction, which beggars all description. The rage and fury of the devouring element seems to be almost incontrolable. Haverhill street, Beverly st, and Medford st. are nearly laid waste—the fire raging furiously when we left. On the westerly side of Thatcher street, the large block of wooden dwellings belonging to Messrs. John H. & Geo. W. Collamore, was entirely destroyed, and many families rendered houseless. Their loss is about $15,000 on which they were insured at the Fireman's office for $5000. On the same street another block of wooden dwellings, belonging to David Fisher, was totally consumed. His loss is considerably less than that of the Messrs. Fisher, and we learn he was partially insured. Several small buildings in the rear of these blocks were also burned.

2 1-2 o'clock A. M.—The fire has crossed Thatcher street, where it has burned the housewright and carpenter shops of Messrs. Patch and J. Ridlon, and 7 or 8 other buildings. Here our gallant firemen, who have battled the raging element for nearly 4 hours have conqured, and victory is about to crown their efforts. Last night was the coldest we have had this year, the very worst for the firemen. Engines from Roxbury, Cambridge, Charlestown, Chelsea and other neighboring towns, were early on the ground. A young man named Wildes, a member of Lyman Engine Co. No. 5, was seriously injured by the beam of the engine striking him on the head. Another man was carried to his home in Prince street, who had one of his legs broken by an engine. The men worked like heroes.

From the Ancient Metropolis, Eztra, of Jan. 23, 1847.

Destructive Fire in Chilicothe.—Twelve or Fifteen Houses Destroyed.

Saturday Night, 11 o'clock.

About a quarter before nine o'clock, this evening, a fire broke out in the rear of Wm. G. Mick & Son's Auction Store, on Paint street, and in less than an hour and a half the whole known as Hollow's Row was level with the ground. The buildings were mostly small frames, and had been standing for a number of years.

The following, we believe is a correct list of the buildings destroyed: M'Dougal's Dry Goods Store on the corner of Main and Paint streets, Hanley's Dry Goods Store, Mick's Auction Room Kom's Grocery, Scully's Grocery, Kemery's Saddler Shop, Baker's Cabinet Shop, and Brockman's Grocery Store, all on Paint street; and on Main street, McCollister's Meat shop Chapman's Grocery, Braden's Grocery, End's Bakery, and several other small buildings: Most of these houses were also occupied by the families of the owners of the shops and stores.

We have not heard an estimate of the losses sustained. The goods were removed from several of the stores before the flames reached them. Mr. Mick, we understand lost every article in his [illegible] room. Several of the [illegible] insured.

The utmost exertions of our Firemen alone saved the Market House. At one time the roof of the Court House was on fire, but it was soon extinguished. The public buildings, the First Presbytertan Church, Mr. Taigert's residence, on main street, and the houses on the east side of Paint, were also in great danger.

We have not understood how the fire orignated It is supposed by some to have been the work of an incendiary.

Fire.—We are sorry to announce that the dwelling house of Mr. Geo. Parkin was totally destroyed by fire, on Saturday afternoon, with nearly its entire contents. The fire originated from a stove pipe in the second story. The building was owned by Mr. G. R. White, and was situated in the bottom in the lower part of Allegheny city Apart from the mere pecuniary loss, valuable Family Records were destroyed, some of which were two hundred years old, and had been handed down in the family from father to son. No insurance.—Pitts. Gaz.

Fires.—In Lexington, Kentucky, 10 inst. the clothing store of Mr. Lyons, the coffeehouse of Mr. Fox, owned by D. N. Payne, the confectionary of Tho, R. Taylor, and the talor shop of T. Frazier, were destroyed.

A New Catholic Cathedral is to be erected at Dubuque, Iowa, next summer. It is to be in cifix form, 177 feet long and 100 feet wide. The side walls will be 50 feet high, and the tower 17 feet high, measuring from the ground. It will be the most magnificent building in the Northwest ful Gale and loss of life at Troy, New York.

The New York papers of yesterday morning nish the particulars of a dreadful gale which sed over the city of Troy, N. Y. on Saturday h last:

At 10 o'clock on Saturday evening, a sudden d tremendous gale passed through the lower rtion of Troy, blowing down the west wall of e Clinton foundry, situated a few rods below the oy rail road depot, on the Troy and Greenbush lroad, sweeping away some ten or fifteen feet he building on the west side, killing three of e workmen engaged in the establishment at the ne, and badly injured several others. At the ne the walls blew down, there were, in all, ghteen moulders at work upon the different, ors of the building adjoining the west wall.

The crash occured almost instantaneously, the ind spending its force with great suddenness, rmitting the workmen no opportunity to escape om the falling bricks and timbers. It is almost raculous that a larger number were not killed, all were much exposed to danger.

The west wall of the building was ninety-six et in length, and some fifty feet directly in the ntre were blown down.

John Coffield, aged about 22 years, taken out the ruins dead and badly mangled, soon after e accident occured. He had been married but o or three months, and his young wife is nearly stracted in consequence of his sudden and unmely death.

Michael Madigan, a boy aged 10 years, was rribly cut and mangled. He survived until this orning when he died.

John Allen, formerly a resident of West Troy, ed about 25 years, found dead in the ruins this orning.

The following were severely wounded: John hiney; John Kennedy, David Cooper, Jas. Ryan, hos. Gillian, Michael Louth and John Freer.—rong hopes are entertained for the recovery of e persons injured. Kennedy only is considered a dangerous state.

It is fortunate that the sad occurence happend on Saturday evening, when nearly all the workmen were away; other wise the disaster would ave been attended with a much larger loss of fe. The force of the gale must have been trendeous. The wall which was blown down as one foot in thickness and well supported by osts. The frame work was considered very rong, and capable of resisting the force of any ind. The gale swept in some 15 or 16 feet off e roof from the Railroad depot, a short distance bove, carrying it over the Railroad track several bds.

Damage to our Public Works.—We see it ated in the Dayton Journal, on the authority of Ir. Forrer, acting commissioner on the western ivision of our public works, that the whole damge by the late flood to the canals under his charge, ill not exceed 25 or 30 thousand dollars. The stimate seems to have been made up with great are, by actual inspection and measurement by he engineers, and includes earth work and reairs to mechanical structures. This is much better than we had dared to anticipate.

Navigation may be resumed between Cincinnati and Dayton, if ice should not prevent, on Tuesday or Wednesday of this week. And we are particularly gratified at the announcement, on so reliable authority, that "the public may rely on navigation being opened from the Ohio River to the Lake, in the first week in April, if no new casulties occur during the winter."

On the eastern division, which includes the Ohio canal, we are informed, on the best authority, that the damage will not exceed 10 or 12 thousand dollars, all told. The immediate damage will not exceed 10 or 12 thousand dollars, all told. The immediate damage by the flood will soon be repaired, and navigation will open as usual in the spring.—O. S. Journal.

Rail Road Causalities.—The neighborhood of Pennsylvania coal mines appears to be fruitful in rail road causalities. On the 7th, an old farmer, by the name of Calhoun, had occasion to visit Schuylkill Haven on business, when he lost his life being killed instantly by a train of cars coming upon him while he was endeavoring to avoid another coming in a contrary direction. A child, nine years old, residing at Port Carbon, was sent for an oil can, while standing between two engines which were stationary, one engine was started and the child being caught by the side machinery was literary flayed alive; the flesh on her sides was stripped from her bones. No hopes were entertained of her recovery.—N. Y. Sun.

Large Cargoes.—It is surprising to cont emplate the vast cargoes which some of the steamboats on the Mississippi can carry. The Charles Carrel, cleared from Cincinnati for New Orleans, carried 4475 bbls pork, 1273 bbls, 150 half bbls and 4017 kegs of lard, 713 bbls flour, 155 bbls beef, 400 bbls and 31 hhds hams, 449 bbls whisky, besides bees wax, ginsing, corn, oats, hemp, rope, tobacco, 100 kegs of pigs' feet, butter, ale, &c., &c.—N. Y. Sun.

The Plainfield Bank and Bills are perfectly good, every report and rumor to the contrary notwithstanding.—N. Y. Sun.

Calamitous fire.—A destructive fire broke out in Norfolk, Virginia, about 6 o'clock on Saturday evening, which destroyed a number of fine buildings in Market square, Main street. Two boys lost their lives by the explosion of camphine. The fire began in the grocery store of Mr. Sampson Rea, the 2d in continuation of Newton's beautiful block.

Fire.—Five buildings were consumed by fire at Dubuque, on the 29th ult, $6,000. The principal losers are H. Simplor M. Bourgois, N. Navion, F. Smith and J. Sullivan.

Telegraphing Rogues.—On Friday night last the tailoring establishment of Mr. Wm. Cochran, in York, Pa.; was broken open and robbed of goods to the amount of $200. Mr. C. hearing that the property had been sent to Baltimore, immediately started for Lancaster whence he sent a communication by telegraph to Baltimore via Philadelphia—a distance of 160 miles—to stop the goods. The rogue arrived in Baltimore, procured a hack to remove them from the depot, and threatened prosecution. But before the police officers were informed, he had decamped, leaving the goods, and has not since been heard from.

Wreck.—The brig Gerhard Hermann, Capt. H. D. Ehntholt, from Cremen, went ashore near the west end of Galveston Island Texas, on the 30th ult. and is a total loss. The captain was drowned in the cabin. Eight passengers were lost.

Sudden Death.—Mr. Wm. M. Benedict a highly respectable practising physician at Milbury, Mass., died suddenly on Sunday night.

Hon. John Banks has been elected State Treasurer of Pennsylvania.

Hon. Caleb Cushing has been elected Colonel of the Massachusetts regiment of Volunteers.

FOREIGN NEWS.

From the Zanesville Courier.

Late News From Europe.

Arrival of the ship Hibernia—four weeks later from Europe.

Philadelphia, Jan. 25th,—11 P. M.

The Foreign news has at length arrived by Telegraph from New York.

One cause of the steamer's detention was her being obliged to stop at Halifax for coals, and to land his Excellency, the new Governor General of Canada, Earl Elgin, and his suite.

France has protested against the occupation and suppression of the Republic of Cracow.—Guizot was for infusing a strong tone into the protest, but Louis Phillippe counselled moderation.

The British are well pleased with the new American Tariff, and their papers teem with eulogiums upon it. O'Connel is very feeble and looks broken down.

Several slight shocks of Earthquake has been felt at Versailles, near Paris.

The English money market was quiet.

Rome had been visited with inundations of the Tiber, which overflowed the suburbs, and caused great distress. The amount of property destroyed was very large.

The Pope has reduced the duties on imports into his dominions, and has laid an export duty on Grain.

The number of population in the Highlands of Scotland and the adjacent Islands, now suffering for an adequate supply of food, is estimated at 100,000.

The distress in Ireland continues to increase, and has reached a fearful extent.

The Hibernia brought £200,000 to £300,000 in Specie.

Ladies' Address to Sons of Temperance.

Oh! blest the hour when first kind Heav'n,
Caused ye to feel the galling chain,
By which so many hearts are riven—
Which leaves behind so foul a strain.
Thrice happy we! whose hearts have bled,
To see our lov'd ones 'neath the power
Of that fell foe, whose wiles have spread
A poison blast o'er many a flower.

Words never can our joy express,
'Tis to our bosoms only known;
Our gratitude and thankfulness,
By our kind actions shall be shown
But oh! there's many a heart yet sad,
There's many a wife yet mourns for one
Who can her sorrowing heart make glad,
If to your standard he will come.

Then may your zeal and love ne'er tire,
While one the galling chain doth feel;
Send round the pledge, and tune the lyre,
To strains which to the soul appeal.
And graceful hearts to you we bring,
The tribute which your deeds have won;
And prized will be our offering,
By each and every Temp'rance Son.

PRAISE TO THE LORD.

Praise to the Lord on high,
Who spreads his triumphs wide;
While temp'rance's blessed cause
Is urged on every side;
Balmly and rich its odors rise,
To fill each realm beneath the skies.

Ten thousand dying men,
Its influence feel and live;
Sweet as the vital air
The increase they received;
They breathe anew, to God they bring,
Their thanks through Christ their conquering King.

But drunkards scorn the grace,
Which brings such blessing high;
They turn away their face,
And faint and fall and die,
Ye temperate men their doom deplore,
For oh they fall to rise no more.

O may I e'er be kept,
From wine's destruction bowl;
The foe who seeks to kill,
My body and my soul:
Savior with aid divine anew,
I bid its touch a last adieu.

Increase of Population and Political Influence in the West.—The Home Missionary thus sums up the growth of the Western States:

Ohio welcomed the first permanent settlers in 1788; now it is occupied by 1,732,000 people.

Michigan, to which the attention of emigrants was turned twelve or fourteen year ago, now has 300,000 people.

Indiana, admitted into the Union in 1816, has received a population of more than half a million since 1830, and now numbers more than 900,000 inhabitants.

Illinois was organized a separate territory in 1810, and entered the Union as a State in 1818. From that date the population trebled every ten years until the last census, and in the last five years has risen from 476,000 to 700,000.

Missouri, which in 1810 had only 20,800 people has now 600,000, having increased fifty per cent in six years.

Iowa was scarcely heard of ten years ago, and it is but fourteen since the only white inhabitants, north of the Misouri line. were a few Indians traders. More than 100,000 now make that beautiful land their home—60,000 of whom have gone in during the last four years.

Wisconsin was organized ten years ago; the marshals have just taken the census, and, from present appearances, the population will vary but little from 150,000, being an increase of 100,000 in five years. On one portion of the Territory, 33 miles by 30, which ten years ago was an unbroken wilderness, now numbers 37,000 inhabitants; and the emigration to that portion of the West is greater than ever.

As a consequence of this transfer of population, there is a steady but rapid transfer of political influence. In ten years, from 1830 to 1840, the East lost, by the change of the ratio of representation, 31 members of Congress more than it gained by the increase of population; while, in the same period, the West gained by increase of population, 11 members more than it by the change of ratio—making a difference of forty-two votes. The seven new States and Territories above enumerated—to say nothing of the other western and south-western States and Territories—have increased since the last adjustment of the ratio, more than a million and a half—enough to entitle them to sixteen more members in our national legislature.

NOTICES.

Ohio Conference.

Presidential Visitation.

Washington Circuit,		February 13	& 14.
Bainbridge	"	" 20	& 22.
Buford	"	" 27	& 28.
Batavia	"	March 6	& 7.
Cincinnati	"	" 13	& 14.
Lebanon Station,		" 17.	Night.
Twin Creek	"	" 20	& 21.
Greenville Mission,		" 27	& 28.

J. M. Young.

Columbia Mission.—The second quarterly meeting will be held at Br. (somebody's) three miles north of Columbia, 20th, Feb. 1847.

G. Williams.

Zanesville Circuit.—Our second quarterly meeting will commence at Sringfield Chapel, on Saturday, the 13th of February. Our brethren, who can, are requested to come.

C. S. Callihan.

Woodsfield Ct.—I would inform Br. Clancy, Pres. that notwithstanding we had not the pleasure of sitting under his ministrations, as per appointment, some money has been placed in my hands for him, which is subject to his order. By request of the brethren of Somerville Ct. I have been preaching for them, and will do so till the end of the year, if they are not supplied.

H. T. Lawson.

Xenia Circuit, O. Con.—Our second quarterly meeting will be held in Xenia, commencing, Feb. 13, proximo. Brethren from adjoining circuits are invited to attend.

Joseph White.

Twin Creek Circuit, O. Con.—Our second quarterly meeting will be held at Liberty, to commence on the 20th of Feb. We respectfully invite Brs. R. M. Dalbey. G. M. Hunt, O. P. Stephens, S. P. Kezerta, and J. Pelan to come over and assist us, and we will endeavor to return the favor.

W. Pelan.

Richwood Circtit.—O. District.—Our second quarterly meeting commences on the evening of the 5th of February next, at which we should be glad to see Revs. R. K. Davis, L. Ensminger, D. Moore, and any other brother who will be so kind as to attend.

J. B. Peat.

[At Richwood, we presume. Ed.]

Br. G. Brown, when you visit this part of the Pittsburgh District, in the spring of the year "God willing." You will please bring along with you some Hymn Books, Disciplines, and Evan's Pamphlets on C. Government. In view of our previous conversation, concerning the Greenbrier and Huntersville circuit, our next Quarterly meeting is to be held in the new Meeting House at J. Lorentz's on the pike. And I will not be able to publish the time of holding that meeting, until I can hear from you, concerning your arrangements, please publish in time.

J. I. Stillians.

Kalida Circuit.—O. Dist.—We expect to hold our second quarterly meeting, on the 13th and 14th February, at Columbus Grove, and we earnestly solicit the assistance of Brs. A. Besse, G. Hunt, and J. P. Fay of Lima. Brethren, come over and help us.

J. L. Borton.

My Dear Br. Bassett: As the health of my family had improved a little, when I left home, the last day of the past year, I have concluded to publish my appointments, for February and March:

Brownsville	Ct.	7th of	February
George Creek	"	14th	"
Morgantown	"	21th	"
Union	St.	28th	"
Connelsville	Ct.	7th	March
Fayette	"	14th	"

Yours truly, Geo. Brown.

Jacob Brown's, Brook co. Va. Jan. 6, 1846.

Columbia Circuit.—Our second quarterly meeting wil be held on the 20th and 21st of February, at Pleasant Hill meeting house, 7 miles west of the town of Athens. We invite Brs. M. Scott, W. W. Tipton, C. J. Sears, and we promise our aid on any occasion, when timely notice shall have been given. We ask an interest in the prayers of all, that we may on that occasion have the presence of the Great Head of the Church.

S. Elliott.

Pennville Circuit.—The second quarterly meeting will be held at the Mt. Zion Chapel, commencing, Friday, Feb. 12, 1847. We invite Brs. Potter and Hatfield with any others of our local or travelling brethren who can attend, to come and aid us, and let all who cannot attend, help us by your prayers.

C. J. Sears.

[N. B. Is not that a good notice? Ed]

Annual Register 1847.—Our edition of 5,200 copies is running short. But like the Razor Strop Man, we have 'a few more left' which we will be pleased to send out to those who order them. G. Conclin, Cincinnati, and C. Craig, Pittsburgh, have each also a small lot to dispose of.

By the by, this little publication cost us considerably more than one hundred dollars, cash, notwithstanding the job was executed at our own office. Those therefore who have received their pamphlets as ordered, will greatly oblige us by forking over the dimes. We are anxious to be out of debt. Much obliged to those who have been prompt in paying.

NOTICE.

The presentation of a BIBLE by the Ladies of Putnam to the Putnam Division No. 64, Sons of Temperance, will take place at the Presbyterian Church in Putnam, on Tuesday evening next, at 6 o'clock. P. M. The citizens are respectfully invited to attend. It is expected that our Brethren of Zanesville, with the Insigna of our order, will unite with us. Revs. Brs. Smallwood, of the Episcopal Church; Wood, of the Baptist; and Fee, of the Methodist E. Church, will take part in the exercises.

The Musical Department under the direction of Mr. Ward, will it is presumed be as good as our villages can afford. A profitable meeting is anticipated.

H. Safford,
F. Potts,
L. Wiles,
Z. M. Chandler,
J. B. Irwin,
} Committee of Arrangements.

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT.

LETTERS RECEIVED.

J. Nichols, H. Palmer, D. Moore, S. T.—G. Williams, 3 subs., O. P. Stephens, R. M. Dalbey, 1 sub. H. T. Lawson, T. Gardiner, J. S. Reese, J. Dalbey Jr. 2, one sub. J. I. Stillians, N. Linder, W. Munhall, J. M. Young, T. Hanna, W. Pelan.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

From.	For.	Pays to	Vol.	No.	$ cts
D. Moore,	T. Dickson.	8	52	8	00
G. Williams,	J. Ingraham,	8	41	2	00
O. P. Stephens,	J. Stickney,	8	52	2	00
R. M. Dalbey,	J. Snider,	8	52	2	00
"	W. Glenny,	9	3	2	00
J. Dalbey, Jr.	S. Devon,	9	35	2	00
N. Linder,	J. Pyle,	8	52	2	00
W. Munhall,	A. Stephenson,	9	9	2	00
Jos. Thrap,		8	52	2	00
D. Vandenbark,		8	26	3	00
W. Pelan,	J. Yonkey,	8	31	2	50

New Subscribers this week, 5. Discontinuances, 3.

Pamphlets ordered by Br. Lawson, we sent to Cambridge, last fall. Br. L. requests Br. Remsburg, if he comes to Woodsfield to bring them; if not, send them to him by mail.

Methodist Protestant.—We assure Br. Reese that when ever one copy of our paper is sent instead of two, it is without our knowledge or approbation. The missing numbers have been sent.

Receipts for Annual Register.

J. Dalbey, Jr.	$2 00
W. Pelan,	1 50

Married,

On the 26th of this instant, by Rev. C. Springer, Mr. JOSEPH MAPEL, son of the Rev. Thomas Mapel, of Green county Pa., to Miss MARY ANN SWEENY, of Springfield Township in this county.

OBITUARY.

Written for the Western Recorder.

MRS. MARGARET MACK.

Departed this life in the City of Cincinnati on the 29th of September, 1846, Mrs Margaret Mack, in the one hundred and first year of her age. She was a member of the Methodist Protestant Church. She was born in the State of Virginia, August, 6th 1746, and removed to Baltimore in her 26th year, where she remained till 1828, when she visited Cincinnati for the purpose of seeing her children. She remained until 1830 and returned home. In 1833, she concluded to return to Cincinnati where she resided with her daughter Mrs. Elizabeth Hall, till her death. She was the child of a century, and from her have descended some of the most respectable families in Maryland and Ohio. She has left four children, forty grand children, about eighty great grand children, and one great great grand child. She was a woman of remarkably even temperament and of great consistency of character, much beloved by her family, and respected by all who were favored with her friendship and acquaintance. To her cheerful disposition tempered by the graces of religion and the the evenness of her life, may be attributed the great age to which she attained. She was most exemplary in her deportment and seemed to live for the happiness of those around her. The fatigues of travel were endured by her at 75 or 80 years of age as well as they could have been by one three score years younger. Her health to the last was very good and she was often heard to say that she had lived long enough in the world, and was willing to leave it for another and happier state of existence. Her end was as peaceful as her life had been calm and unruffled. Like the patriarchs of old when the messenger came, she had nothing to do but gather up her feet and depart in peace. She died as she had lived a worthy and faithful Christian mother.

Give glory to Jesus our head,
With all that encompass his throne:
A widow, a widow indeed,
A mother in Israel is gone.

J. M.

NOTICE.

There will be a petition presented to the trustees of Newton Township, Muskingum county, at there annual meeting on the first Monday in March next, praying for a Township Road to commence at a stone bridge on the old Lancaster Road at Kent's run at the foot of John Williams's hill, thence to run a Northwardly direction to the corners of land owned by G. M. Crooks and Lewis Stine.

January 23d, 1847.

NOTICE

Is hereby given, that a petition will be presented to the Commissioners of Muskingum County, at their March session, praying for a county road, beginning at a point in the Cooper Mill Road in Springfield township, and where the west line of Barnett Workmans land crosses said Cooper Mill road, from thence running north-eastwardly thro' the lands of B. Workman and William Vansant to the lower end of William Vansant's field, (known as the middle meadow,(thence northwardly to the north-west corner of John Vansant's orchard, from thence north-westwardly on the nearest and best route through the lands of John Vansant and James Vansant, so as to intersect the Flint Ridge Road (so called) near the west end of Cornelius Starkey's farm.

January 15, 1847.

NOTICE

Is hereby given that a petition will be presented to the Commissioners of Muskingum County their March session, praying for an alteration in so much of the county road known by the name of George Norman's road as lies between the Cooper Mill Road and William Vansant's barn. The proposed road to commence at said Cooper Mill road, where the west line of Barnett Workman's land crosses said road. Thence eastwardly to the lower end of William Vansant's field, (known as the middle meadow,) thence north to the lane, thence west so as to intersect the original road east of William Vansant's barn, all in Springfield township]

January 12, 1847.

COME AND SEE!!

The SUBSCSIBERS offer very low for CASH, STONE WARE or COUNTRY PRODUCE,

35 pieces assorted Cloths, very low,
20 " Jeans,
300 " Prints, cheaper than ever,
100 " Merinos, Alpaccas, De Laines, &c.,
50 " Tweeds and Cassinets,
25 " Flannels,
22 " Check.

Boots, Shoes, Queensware, Groceries, and a great variety of goods not mentioned.

In a word, they have on hand a LARGE STOCK of goods, which they

WISH TO SELL.

To sell them, they must be sold CHEAP, this they will do.

J. C. GUTHRIE & SONS,
successors to
Guthrie's & Buckingham.

P.S. We will say to Potters engage not your ware before calling on us. We are dealing EXTENSIVELY in that article, and are determined to buy it on such terms as will prove satisfactory.

J. C. G. & S's.

Putnam, O. Jan. 1, 1847.

New History of Texas, pages 152. 25 cents. A few copies to be had at the office of the Western Recorder. Published by G. Conclin Cincinnati.

LIST OF LETTERS

Remaining in the Post Office at Putnam, Muskingum Co. Ohio, on the first of January, 1847.

A

Armstrong Thomas

B

Butler Abram
Browne C M
Bradshaw Robert
Chase W D
Cassiday Hugh
Dutton Isaac
Dixon Permelia
Frantom Jane
Fulton Dennis
Guy Henrietta
Hatter John
Hart Elizabeth
Harris Edward
Jones Catharine
Kitchens John
Lumb Abram
Morgan George
Pennine Cannah
Pensinger Susan
Pain John
Rambo Peter
Ripley Wm
Slack Rachael
Searl C W
Welch Katharine
Baire John
Brown Ann D
Caton G W
Dozer George
Fletcher Andrew
Fountain Harriet
Graham N W
Hosmer S R
Hammond James
Hough J John
Putnam Douglass
Pierce Elizabeth
Russel James
Rees I N
Stockdale John Jr
Wharton Elibabeth

J. ELDER, P. M.

Post Office Address of Itinerant Ministers and Preachers of the Western Conferences.

Pittsburgh District.

G Brown, Steubenville, O.
Jos Burns, Port Homer, Jefferson, O.
A Lister, Beverly, Randolph Co. Va.
V Lucas, Farmington, Fayette, Pa.
R H Walker, Big Skin Creek, Lewis, Va.
S Hazlett, Beeler's Station, Marshall, Va.
P T Laishley, Morgantown, Va.
N Gillespie, " "
D R Helmick, Fairmont, Marion, Va.
J I Stillians, Lorenz Store, Lewis, Va.
H Reger, West Milford, Harrison, Va.
G G Collins, Middlebourne, Tyler, Va.
N Watson, Wheeling, Va.
A J Waren, Glady Creek ✕ Roads, Barbour, Va.
G Nestor, Frankfort, Greenbrier, Va.
J P Prickett, Ravenswood, Jackson, Va.
Wm Reeves, Pittsburgh, Pa.
Mrs. Asa Shinn, Allegheny, Pa.
J Robinson, " "
W H Doe, Sharpsburgh. Allegheny, Pa.
G B M'Elroy, Fallston, Beaver, Pa.
Wm Boardman, Washington, Pa.
J C Hazlett, " "
J Cowl, Eldersville, Washington, Pa.
W A Porter, Waynesbrgh, Green, Pa.
R T Simonton, Cookstown, Fayette, Pa.
W Browning, Buchanon, Allegheny, Pa.
H Palmer, Connellsville. Pa.

Muskingum District

W L Baldwin, Gnadenhutten, Tuscarawas, O.
N Linder, Harrisville, Harrison, O.
M Scott, Oak Hill, Jackson, O.
W B Moody, Richfield, Summit, O.
A R Brown, Fowler's Mills, Geauga, O.
E S Hoagland, New Athens, Harrison, O.
J Hambay, Warsaw, Coshocton, O.
W W Tipton, Jackson, Jackson, O.
S H Heath, Bricksville, Cuyuhuga, O.
J Jack, Lodi, Seneca, O.
W Hatfield, Centerburg, Knox, O.
C S Callihan, Putnam, Muskingum, O.
J Myres, " " "
C Springer, Meadow Farm, Muskingum, O.
W H Marshall, Zanesville, O.
R Andrew, Steubenville, O.
D B Dorsey, " "
Z Ragan, " "
J W Case, Plainfield, Coshocton, O.
John Baker, " " "
J H Hamilton " " "
I Thrap, Tiffin, Seneca, O.
G M Scott, " " "
A S Robinson, Bucyrus, Crawford, O.
J Nichols, Cambridge, Guernsey, O.
W Remsburg, " " "
O V Warren, M'Connellsville, Morgan, O.
J M Piper, " " "
T B Cushman, New Lisbon, Columbiana, O.
A Tracy, Mallet Creek, Medina, O.
N Burgess, Berlin, Mahoning, O.
D Richardson, " " "
C Caddy, Vienna, Trumbull, O.
S Gee, Youngstown, Mahoning O.
W Duling, Otsego, Muskingum, O.
W Maynard, Adams Mills, Muskingum, O.
J K Duffy, Perryton, Licking, O.
J M Winn, Fairview, Guernsey, O.
H T Lawson, Woodsfield, Monroe, O.
J W Southard, Malta, Morgan, O.
John Burns, Mt. Pleasant, Jefferson, O.
W Munhall, Brownsville, Licking, O.
C J Sears, Chester Hill, Morgan, O.
T Potter, Mt. Vernon, Knox, O.
A Channel, Homer, Licking, O.
T Foster, New Hagerstown, Carroll, O.
S Elliott, Lee, Athens, O.

Ohio District.

R Dobbins, Washington, Fayette, O.
R K Davis, Rosedale, Madison, O.
J H Webster, South Solon, Madison, O.
W Tipton, Waterville, Lucas, O.
O Warrington, Wihamsville, Clermont, O.
J White, Spring Valley, Green, O.
J Dalbey Jr., Cincinnati, O.
J B Peat Richwood, Union, O.
A M'Guire, Springfield, Clark, O.
O P Stephens, " " "
W Pelan, West Alexandria, Preble, O.
R Rose, Port William, Clinton, O.
D Moore, Carysville, Champaign, O.
A H Trumbo, Greenfield, Highland, O.
W G Fowler, Hamersville, Brown, O.
I Hunt, Fletcher, Miami, O.
J L Borton, Gilboa, Putnam, O.
R M Dalbey, Lebanon, Warren. O.
L Ensminger, Russelvania, Logan, O.
S P Kezerta, Holensburg, Darke, O.
J M Young, Spartansburg, Randolph, Ia.
Jonathan Flood, Fairview, Randolph, Ia.
A H Bassett, Putnam, Muskingum Co. O.

Indiana District.

W B Evans, Spencer, Owen, Ia.
W W Paul, Mt. Tabor, Monroe, Ia.
C H Williams, Millroy, Rush, Ia.
T Shipp, Edinburg, Johnson, Ia.
S Morrison, Freeport, Shelby, Ia.
H Brenton, Cataract, Owen, Ia.
G Wheatley, Graham, Jefferson, Ia.

Wabash District.

J Alter, Middle Fork, Clinton, Ia.
S W Widney, Peru, Miami, Ia.
R R Bailey, Prairieville, Clinton, Ia.
Jos. Shipp, Frankfort, Clinton, Ia.
Patterson Smith, Wabash, Wabash, Ia.
G Williams, Auburn, Dekalb, Ia.
J C Wright, Northfield Boon, Ia.
F Outcalt, Wilkshire, Van Wert, O.
H Beal, Monroe, Tippecanoe, Ia.

Michigan District.

L Smith, Pine Lake, Oakland, Mich.
J B Jewel, Rose, Oakland, Mich.
L Warren, Commerce, Oakland, Mich.
M Munn, Romeo, Macomb, Mich.
J Gay, Kingsbury, Laporte, Ia.

Illinois District.

J Clarke Jr., Rushville, Schuyler, Ill.

North Illinois District.

W E Martin, Newark, Kendall, Ill.
M Jared, Greenbush, Warren, Ill.
W H Miller, Peru, La Salle, Ill.
P J Strong, Magnolia, Putnam, Ill.
D Bagley, Princeton, Bureau, Ill.

The above list we have made out from our book, indicating the post offices to which the paper is sent for the respective brethren. It does not include all the travelling preachers, but those only who receive our paper. We have made it out, partly for our own conveniance, but chiefly to accommodate the request of a member of brethren, and we perhaps owe them an apology that, for want of time, we have not done it sooner. If any names are omitted it is accidental, and unintentional.

Whilst on the subject, we will state, that all the above named brethren are authorised to act as agents for the Western Recorder, and to collect the dues therefor.

Every itinerant minister or preacher, of any Annual Conference whatever whether embraced in the above list or not can have our paper at half price, i. e. one dollar per year. And every such minister or preacher who will collect for us as much as ten dollars shall have the paper for a year free of charge. These terms to itinerents are just twice as favorable, as the terms of the Methodist Protestant, or any other religious paper, within our acquaintance. And we had much rather the brethren would be active agents, and have the paper free, than to pay us the dollar. Every brother who collects $20 or more for the paper, within the year, shall not only have our warm thanks, but shall receive some literary premium, at least worthy of his acceptance, or if he choose, we will send a copy of our paper for a year to any friend he may design ate, provided such friend is not already a subscriber.

PROSPECTUS OF THE

OHIO CULTIVATOR.

Vol. III—For 1847.

A semi-monthly Journal, devoted to the promotion of Agriculture, Horticulture & Domestic Industry.

PUBLISHED AT COLUMBUS, OHIO,

By M. B. Bateham, Editor and Proprietor,

Assisted by the contributions of a very large number of practical and scientific writers,—farmers, horticulturists, &c.

Illustrated with numerous Engravings.

TERMS—One Dollar per year—Four Copies for Three Dollars: payments invariably in advance.

The OHIO CULTIVATOR has now become so well known to the farmers and friends of agriculture in Ohio, that it is unnecessary to say any thing of its character or design. Grateful for the encouragement he has thus far received, the editor and proprietor takes this occasion to inform his friends and patrons, that he is determined to put forth new efforts in their service, and make his paper for the coming year still more deserving of their continued liberal patronage. Besides improvement in the matter for its columns, the mechanical appearance of the paper will be improved by the use of new type, and more illustrations. It will contain the latest and most reliable intelligence respecting the crops and the markets, both in this country, and in Europe, so as to aid the farmer in deciding at what time and price to dispose of his productions. This information alone will be worth, to most farmers, many times the price of subscription, especially now that prices are so much effected by foreign intelligence. In addition to all this, the editor believes that his increased experience and knowledge of the agricultural condition of the State, together with his extended correspondence, will enable him to make each succeeding volume of the Cultivator more valuable than the one that preceded it.

The influence of the paper, wherever it has been generally read, is admitted to have been highly salutary. It has began to awaken a spirit of inquiry and improvement among the farmers, and inspire them with more just and elevated conceptions of the character, duties and pleasures of their noble occupation. As evidence of this it may be stated, that during the past year, Agricultural Societies have been organized in twenty counties of this State; and there is reason to believe that as many more will be formed during the year to come. These associations, in connection with the State Board of Agriculture, and the Cultivator as an organ for the diffusion of intelligence, cannot fail to exert such an influence on the minds and the practice of the farming community, as will in a few years place our young Giant State in that position which she is by Nature designed to occupy—the first State of the Union in agricultural wealth and lasting prosperity.

Farmers of Ohio! Who among you are willing to have no part in this onward march of improvement? Who among you are willing to deprive yourselves and your families of that 'knowledge which is power,' and the great means of progress and elevation, for the sake of the small pittance which that knowledge may cost? And who of you that desire to see this work advance, will not make an effort to arouse your neighbors from the mental torpor that rests upon too many of them? The work is not difficult—pursuade them to read papers devoted to their interests—☞send on their names, with your own, as subscribers to the Ohio Cultivator, and you may rely upon it they will soon begin to awake—to inquire and think—and not only become better farmers, but more intelligent and agreeable neighbors.

Address, M. B. BATEHAM,
Columbus, Ohio.

THE CHEAPEST AND BEST.

New Prospectus for the Year 1847.

FORTY-EIGHT large octavo Pages, and Fifteen Engravings in each No. Published on the first of every month.

Fourth Volume commences in January, 1847.

The No. for Jan. contains a "Pictorial Description of the State of Ohio," elegantly Illustrated with American views, &c. &c.

Other States will appear in subsequent Nos. of the Work.

Robert Sears, 158 Nassau-street, New York, will hereafter furnish his new

Pictorial and Illustrated Family Magazine for 1847, in all respects equal to the Three-Dollar Magazines, at the low price of only one dollar and a half per annum.

Any person sending Five Dollars, shall receive five copies of the magazine for one year, as he shall direct.

All subjects which will admit of it, will be illustrated with engravings. The whole number of the engravings at the conclusion of the volume will amount to several hundred.

Great inducement to subscribe.

We offer to all persons becoming subscribers, a copy of our new work, just published, entitled the Pictorial Description of Great Britain and Ireland.

Containing 262 Views of the Principal Cities, Towns, Castles, Abeys, Costumes, &c. &c., of the Fatherland: a larger number of Engravings than can be found in any book of double the price—or to those who prefer it, the

Pictorial History of the American Revolution,

(Embellished with an original portrait of Washington, by Chapman, and more than 160 other engravings, 430 pp. 8vo.) for every new subscriber, with two dollars enclosed, free of postage.

Any person procuring ten subscribers, and sending eleven dollars shall receive ten copies of the Magazine, and any one of the above popular works, sent as he shall direct.

We have authority, under the new Post-office law, to send any one of the above works, bound. The postage will not exceed twenty-five cents to any part of the United States.

M. P. DISCIPLINES—NEW EDITION.

We have on hand a supply, lately received from the Book Agent, Baltimore, which we will be pleased to furnish to brethren of surrounding Circuits, at wholesale or retail prices. For sale at the office of this paper.

SACRED MELODEON.

We have received from the publishers, 50 copies of this excellent collection of Spiritual Songs, compiled by Brs. Joel Dalbey and J. B. Peat of the Ohio Conference, and lately published at Cincinnati. For sale at the office of the Western Recorder, by the dozen or single.

Admistrator's Notice.

Notice is hereby given that the suscriber has been appointed and qualified as Administrator of the estate of Thomas Atkinson deceased, late of Springfield Township, Muskingum county.

Z. M. Chandler,
Putnam, O. Oct. 31, 1846. Admistrator.

DISSOLUTION.

The partnership of GUTHRIES & LARGE is this day dissolved by mutual consent. All matters pertaining to the closing up of the business will be transacted at the old stand.

A. A. GUTHRIE.
W. P. LARGE.
GEO. N. GUTHRIE.

Putnam, O. January 1, 1847.

NEW FIRM.

A. A. GUTHRIE, G. BUCKINGHAM and G. N. GUTHRIE announce that they have formed partnership for the transaction of Mercantile busines under the firm of

GUTHRIE, BUCKINGHAM & CO.

They respectfully invite their friends and the publi generally, to the old stand of A. A. GUTHRIE & Co (recently GUTHRIE'S & LARGE,) where it is the purpose to keep a large assortment of the cheapest an best goods in the market.

Putnam, O. January 1, 1847.

Something New.

JUST PUBLISHED

By GEORGE CONCLIN, 39 Main st. Cincinnati,

A NEW HISTORY OF TEXAS.

Including an account of the late WAR WITH MEXICO, together with other interesting matte relating to that country. This history is published i pamphlet form, 12 mo., containing 152 pages and will b sold cheap.

Also—A NEW HISTORY OF OREGON AND CALIFORNIA, (By Lansford Hastings) containing a minute description of the different routes to those countries—a description of the soil, products of the soil, Towns, Bays, Harbors, Rivers, Lakes, manners and customs of the inhabiants, &c. &c.

DISSOLUTION.

It is nearly two years since the firm of A. A. Guthrie & Co., was dissolved, so far as the selling of Goods is concerned. It is this day fully dissolved by mutual consent all debts due the concern are to be paid to A. A. Guthrie —who earnestly requests early payments & especially urges all who have suffered their accounts to stand open thus far, to come immediately & settle.

A. A. GUTHRIE,
G. N. GUTHRIE.

Putnam, Dec. 14th, 1846

POETRY.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Mr. Editor:—If the following lines are acceptable they are at your pleasure. Yours, &c.

Anon.

THE LIGHT OF MY YOUTH.

O'er the scenes of my youth flow forever gone,
Memory sheds a fond tear from her sacred urn,
Yet fondly returns to each beautiful spot,
Where care never darkened my innocent lot.
There borne on the wind, o'er a green leafy dell,
Came holyday tones of the merry church bell,
When the blackbird sat mingling its notes with the breeze,
That kissed the bright dew from the green mantled trees;
And its clear cherry tone, as it rang o'er the plain,
Enlivened the toil of the laboring swain,
The green meadows bloomed in their beauty around—
The crimson tipped daisy bespangled the ground;
And joyful I ran o'er the verdure away,
To catch on the flowers the butterfly gay,
As on its light wing amid sunshine it flew,
To sip from their bosom the soft pearly dew;
Where the rivulet glides in its musical flow,
There on a green bank the primroses grew;
And the vi'let reclined its beautiful head,
Too modest to peep from its own mossy bed;
While perched on the spray of the thorn—scented bush,
Sat merrily singing the deep mellow thrush.
O sweet were the echoes that woke in the bowers;
As I strayed through the groves to cull the wild flowers—
The woodbine and wildrose grew beautiful there,
And ladened with perfume the bosom of air
O light was my step when I played on the green,
Unburdened by cares which, alas I have seen—
When laughing I ran upon the green mountain,
And bathed in the stream, or drank at the fountain,—
Or wandered with joy by the lake's pebbled shore,
And ruffled its breast with the fisherman's oar,—
When I angled for trout beneath the old willow,
That threw a green shade afar o'er the billow.
What rapture enkindled my heart as I strayed
Beneath the old elms where the coy zephyrs played—
Or the banks of the stream which the alder o'er spread,
When Sol from the earth in his chariot had fled,
With a maiden as pure—now low in the grave—
As the rays of the moon that danced on the wave!
How sweetly our moments then glided away,
And hope shed her light to illumine our way!

* * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * *

These scenes are all fled, and my head it is bowed,
With sorrow that hangs like a dark bosomed cloud;
The light of my youth, now extinguished with care,
That has furrowed my cheek and silvered my hair:
A stranger I roam on a far distant shore,
And the home of my youth I shall visit no more;
Yet when I recline in the halls of the dead,
My spirit shall gaze on the scenes which are fled.

Anon.

Solitudinarian Cabin: January, 1846.

From the Cincinnati Gazette.

THE POOR.
YOUR PURSE AND HEART.

Open not your purse alone,
Its lucre to impart;—
Of the two 'tis better far
You freely ope your heart.
That which wrings the bosom most,
Your money wont allay:
Sympathy's the sun that turns
Its darkness into day.

For the body, if ye will,
Your bread and broth still dole;
Love's the only nourishment
That satisfies the soul.
Gingling change like that ye give,
May please the baser part,
But kind and gentle words and looks
Alone can reach the heart.

Warmth's not all the poor demand,
Nor shelter, nor yet food:—
Ye who pause, bestowing these,
Withhold the greater good.
What they want, and what require
All things else above,
Is kindly interest in their fate,
And sympathy, and love.

W. D. G.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Written for the Western Recorder.

NORTH AND SOUTH.

No. IV.

Mr. Editor: My last communication closed with the 2d proposition, what good has resulted from the geographical division in the M. E. Church? The third proposition is to enquire, judging the future from the past, what good is likely to result from the divided and distracted state of that great ecclesiastical body? 1 Is it likely that the bonds of christian union will be strengthened between these contending partizans? No man can dispassionately examine into the nature of the seperation of that great body, but must come to the conclusion, that it was transacted more under the influence of the depraved passions of our fallen nature, than under the influence of the noble principles of our most holy religion. The strong cords of christian affection, which for more than a century had bound together this christian community, at one fell sweep, were snapped asunder, and those who at the altar had vowed everlasting brotherhood, professing to be bound together by the golden chain, that binds happy spirits together around the throne of God; now marshall their forces, and with a death-like struggle, enter upon the great strife for mastery, each charging the other, with passions the most depraved and motives the most unworthy. The church that supposed herself to be a SUN to the moral world, by this STRANGE AND UNNATURAL WAR IN HER OWN RANKS, becomes eclipsed, and the saying of the Saviour is applicable to them, "if your light be darkness how great shall that darkness be," and now instead of hailing each other as brethren beloved, the Southern fraternity is charged with being guilty of the sum of all VILLANIES, whilst the North is said to be AGITATORS, ULTRAS, disturbers of the geneful peace, mad-caps, haer brained lawless revolutionists fishing in troubled water, "busy bodies about other mens matters," whisperers, back biters, slanderers, those who make division, the worst of men and the offscouring of the earth. Are these feelings calculated to draw more closely the bonds of Christian fellowship, and for the future, is it likely these Northern and Southern Methodists will "love each other with a pure heart fervently." Will this ecclesiastical break up, be the means of forever burying the strifes, and animosities of these contending parties? or is it not more likely, that the "little unruly member, that no man can tame, that sets on fire the course of nature, and is set on fire of hell," will continue its work of mischief and keep up the unhallowed work of division? and what the tongue cannot do, judging the future from the past the press will accomplish, and the saying of the Saviour, "Ye are all brethren one of another," will not be applicable to those geographical separationists, perhaps for many years to come.

Again sir, is it likely that the rights of the membership of the church, will be better secured for the future, under the present division, than before the seperation took place, much is said about the power of bishops and the powers of the Gen. Conference, but not one single sentence about the powers of the laity, they are left out of the question altogether, as though it were a matter of course that they were only a cypher, and that pay and obey were the whole and sole duties they were to perform. Indeed judging from the position the South has taken on the powers of a bishop, it would seem, the prospects of Mutual Rights are more gloomy than at any other period in the history of the M. E. Church. The powers of the episcopacy are said to stand higher, than was ever dreamt of, previous to the division; it is now openly declared that the board of bishops, is the highest ecclesiastical court in the M. E. Church, over which the Gen. Con. can have no control. Is it likely the episcopacy will relinquish any part of their power? Is it not more reasonable to suppose, they will hold with an unyielding grasp all the authority they have, and by all the means in the compass of their power reach forward for more? Is there any prospect of a representation of the church in either the annual or the General Conferences? Is it not come to pass in the M. E. Church that "the PRIESTS bear rule and my PEOPLE love to have it so?" Do not the Methodist priests imitate the Gentiles spoken of by Christ? Do not they "exercise authority over the people"? But says the Saviour "it shall not be so among you." The church is commanded to call no man master, for one is our master even Christ. Taking the most dispassionate view of the M. E. Church North and South, and penetrating the veil of futurity so far as possible, your writer, sir, is of the opinion that no reform in government is either intended or expected by the division of this body, but so far as the powers of the clergy are concerned. It is intended to be increased, and so far as the fetters that bind the laity are concerned, they are intended to be more firmly rivetted, hence no good has resulted, for the future is likely to grow out of the division, unless overruled by a providence beyond our conception. Again sir, is the present division in the M. E. Church, (said by the ministry of the church to be on the principles of abolition) calculated to better the condition of the African slave in these U. S. judging the future from the past, what is the prospect? The Southern M. E. Church consists of nearly half a million of members, with its ministers, preachers, leaders, stewards, trustees, &c. &c. Suppose for the sake of argument, we admit the ground of the division of the church to have been the morality or immorality of slavery, the North being the anti slavery division, and the South the pro slavery division, what will be the amount of influence wielded by this southern division in favor of the system of slavery? Will not every wicked slaveholder, with tenacious grasp hold on to his fellow beings? And will he not ease the clamors of his conscience by adverting to the position of the M. E. Church in favor of slavery, will he not say, a half a million of Christians on my side, more than a thousand ministers, headed by a SOULE, an ANDREW a PAYNE, a CAPERS, a BASCOM, and a host of others, who have been held up as luminaries of the moral world, will not their learning, talents, and piety, all be plead as an argument in favor of American slavery? Is not the amount of influence wielded by this Southern division, calculated in the future to increase and perpetuate the wretched captivity of the African race in the South, to strengthen their chains, rivet more tighly their fetters, and from this injured community, shut out the last ray of hope, of an approaching jubilee, "when the oppressed should be let go free." Before the division the church harmoniously worked together in their ecclesiastical departments, the conflicting views of christian brethren were compared, moral suasion was used, the principles of conservatism was frequently thrown into the scale, and by these means the moderation of parties was made known unto all men. But so soon as in the heat of passion and partyism, the unjustifiable division took place, moral suasion ceased, conservatism was scouted out of countenance, and each party looked upon as dangerous and wicked. By the South, the North are considered as enemies to their social institutions, kidnappers, men of the worst of principles, and hence are excluded from Southern Conferences, Southern pulpits, and Southern privileges. The North acts on the same principle toward the South. And slavery and slaveholding progresses, and will progress, until the entire christian community shall unite together upon the broad principles of christian brotherhood by holy living, shall give testimony to the world, that the motto of the christian religion is, "whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye also unto them." Then shall fetters and chains be broken, then 'shall the captive go free,' "then shall the servant stand on a level with his master," and then shall Mutual Rights prevail. The dividing of churches can never liberate a slave, and the division of this Union, would only be to perpetuate slavery. Let Christians stand united, live holy lives, and by all the influence of scripture and example give testimony against oppression. It will speak in tones of thunder not to be misunderstood; it will be approved by the Almighty; it will be a great moral lever, calculated to go far in the up-rooting and down-pulling of every thing "that hurts or destroys in all God's holy mountain." A house divided against itself cannot stand. The prospect for the future is gloomy, and nothing but a firm reliance in the good providence of Almighty God, can ever throw a gleam of light across our pathway, trusting in the strong for strength, we look foward to a day when in spite of divisions and the injuries done by divisions, the down-trodden race shall be emancipated, Ethiopia shall stretch forth her hand to God, and the sable sons of Africa shall be made temporally and spiritually free.

Yours respectfully,

Paul Pry.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Slavery Question Again.

Mr. Editor: I see by the Recorder of Dec. 5th, that Br. Williamson attempts what he calls, a "review of my argument against his communication of Sept. 3rd." But instead of "reviewing" and giving a thorough analasis of my "argument," and showing its fallacy and inconclusiveness, he has only given his opinion of its merits; with, perhaps, some further considerations in support of his "former position." The first thing that attracts our attention, is the wonderful perspicuity and literary accuracy which marks the greater part of our friend's production. He says, "my position was this: "I wished to beg leave to differ with many who are of the opinion, that the slave while in the hands of a religious master, and well treated is a sin against God." What is here represented as being the opinion of many? Why, that the slave, and not the holding of the slave is a sin against God. Again, he says, "He thinks the slave may be treated well as a slave, but not as a man." To treat him otherwise than described by the religious man, would de inveighing against the laws that be. But according to our friend's own assertion the desideratum is just to use legal influence, or in other words just give an expression against the system." Now, what are we to understand by the words, "described by the religious man." Again: he defines the words, "legal influence," to be "just giving an expression against the system." I will here say for the special benefit of Br. W, that according to my understanding of the term legal it means according to law; and when I made use of the words "legal influence" in the case refered to, I not only meant that the persons spoken of should give an expression against the system of slavery, but, that when opportunity offered, they should exercise their elective franchise, or vote, against it, and those oppressive laws which are designed to prevent emancipation.

I design now to offer a few thoughts on what I conceive to be the true issue between Br. W. and myself. I understand him to take the ground that slavery is not a sin unless abused; that the treatment the slave receives, determines the guilt or innocence of his master. While I take the position that slavery is a sin, in and of itself, without regard to treatment. And in the first place it will be necessary to understand what slavery is. This matter will be the most readily and satisfactorily settled, by reference to the laws of the slave states which define and authorize slavery within their limits.

In South Carolina the condition of the slave is described as follows. "Slaves shall be deemed, sold, taken, reputed and adjudged in law to be chattels, personal, in the hands of their owners and possessors, and their executors, administrators and assigns, to all intents, constructions and purposes whatsoever."

The law of Louisiana declares, that the slave "can do nothing, possess nothing, nor acquire anything, but what must belong to his master."

Slavery then, is just what the laws of the slave States define it to be; neither more, nor less; and is just the same in the hands of the religious and humane master, that it is in the hands of the wicked and cruel master. The condition of the slave does not depend at all upon the will of the slaveholder; his condition is fixed by law, over which the master has not nor can have any control. If a man holds a slave at all, he holds him as his property, and, no matter how well disposed and kind-hearted the master may be:—he may, at his own option, clothe his slaves well—give them plenty to eat and drink, and not over work them, yet all this cannot make men of them: they are deprived of their liberty—their right to themselves—they are property to all intents and purposes whatsoever; and the owner cannot help himself, unless he sets his slaves free. Now, suppose the master should become largely involved in debt, or decease, his slaves are liable to be sold as cattle, hogs, horses, or as any other kind of property. Yet, your friend W. says, that "to talk about the slave being stripped of all his rights, and reduced to the level of the brute creation is a mere farce." But, with all deference to his superior "capacity of discernment," I affirm that it is even so. They are reduced by law to the condition of beasts.

I would ask, is this kind of slavery right? Is American slavery, which originated in robbery, and which can only exist by force, in accordance with reason and scripture. Can that that was wrong in the commencement, ever be made right by continuing in it? If the title to those who were first captured and held as slaves was not valid, I should like to be informed at what period it became so.

But, slavery is a violation of the "Golden Rule." "Therefore, all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you do ye even so to them, for this is the law and the prophets." Could Christ have expressed himself more directly against slavery, than he has in these words? Does the slave holder do as he would be done by, in withholding from his slaves their liberty, the greatest of all earthly blessings? Does he do as he would be done by, when he deprives them of the fruit of their labor? Does he do as he would be done by, when he deprives the parents of the right to their own offspring? Does he do as he would be done by, when he separates husbands from wives and wives from husbands? All of which the laws of the slave States authorize men to.

In justification of slavery, friend W. quotes 1 Pet. 2, 18. "Servants, be subject to your masters with all fear; not only to the good and the gentle, but also to the froward." But he has only given part of the verse; it continues. "For this is thankworthy, if a man for conscience toward God, endure grief, suffering wrongfully." Now the right of the master to the persons of those whom he claimed as his slaves, is not here in the slightest degree recognized. It is merely an exhortation to servants, though they might suffer wrongfully, to takee it patiently; for this was thankworthy, and pleasing in the eyes of God. This is the language which anti-slavery men would use, were they permitted to have access to the slaves of this land. We could but enjoin upon them peacefulness and patience.—It is said, "whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also." Might not the ruffian assault our person, and claim this as his authority for the act, with as much propriety as the slaveholder could claim the advice given to servants to be obedient, as a warrant for exercising dominion over them?

Br. W. says, "that the way the subject has been carried on, has done an injury to the slave." I remark in regard to this honestly, that it is my opinion, that the harsh bearing, and uncharitable spirit manifested by some abolitionists, has had a tendency, to create a disagreable and unnecessary excitement upon the question of slavery, but, that the efforts of anti-slavery men in general, has had a detrimental influence upon the interests of the slave, I am not prepared to admit without evidence. By the by, what a high-minded magnanimous set of folks, some of these southerners are; according to friend W's. own showing. Because anti-slavery men try to prevail upon them to deal justly, love mercy &c., they get mad and turn round and wreak their vengeance upon the poor slave; thus corroborating the representations made in regard to the cruelty of the slave system. Would it not be more reasonable, to suppose that they would treat their slaves better; and thereby show these northern fanatics, that the condition of the slave was not as bad as represented to be. Yes, I am unwilling to believe that these slaveholders are quite as bad, as my friend makes them out to be.

Br. W. concludes thus: 'I am an anti-slave man, opposed to ultraism, and inconsistency.' Did he think that we would not find this out, unless he told us? Surely, after quoting scripture to justify slavery, and after having piously exclaimed. "May God forbid that ever I should judge my fellow-man of things as being sinful when not revealed as such in his word," he need not have taken the trouble to have told us, that he believed what he had been writing—that he was an anti-slavery man, and opposed to inconsistency!!!

Now, Mr. Editor, I presume this will bring the controversy between Br. Williamson and myself to a focus; as he has signified his intention of having nothing more to say on the subject. But some how or other, does'nt it look like he has great faith in the potency of truth? Does he think 'truth is mighty and will prevail?' If he does, why not present it, and let the light shine?

Permit me in conclusion to say, that I entertain no unkind feelings towards friend W. or any one else; and hoping that truth may prevail over every error, I subscribe myself,

Yours &c., Ralph Collier.

Tanners Creek, Ia. Jan. 1, 1847.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Brief Notice of Rev. A. McCaine

On the General Conference Resolution.

Br. Bassett: I see that our hero of the South is out again, and boasts his many victories on the subject of slavery. He tells us that the General Conference is the highest tribunal known to the M. P. Church. At the close of the same communication, No. 1. he says, in this case (the case of slavery) the Annual Conference is supreme, as having the sole power of legislation on the subject of slavery. Now I deny that the Constitution gives any power to the Annual Conference to legislate on that subject, and I defy Mr. M'Caine, or any other man to show any such authority. I know the constitution provides that the Annual Conferences make such rules and regulations for the reception and government of colored members as they jndge proper; but is that making law for the slaveholder? You might as well persuade me that if I admit my children to go to a teacher to to learn morals and christianity, that I would be accountable to that teacher for the abuse of those children, when under my care.

Again, he says that the power and duties of the General Conference are clearly defined. I acknowledge that some of the duties are pointed out but I deny that they are all pointed out. Mr. M'Caine says that the General Conference is the highest tribunal of the Church. Is it a tribunal, or a legislative body? I say a legislative body. He says that the General Conference has no right to say that slavery is sinful. Now, I would ask, who ever knew a legislature to enact laws without first pointing out the transgression, and then fixing the penalty? Would the General Conference have surpassed its bounds, if it had said that profane swearing, or lying, or stealing, or drunkenness, or murder is sinful? O, no. No one would have thought of saying so. Mr. M'Caine himself would not have said so. But to touch the slave question, is to touch our old friend in the most tender place, his worldly interest. I would advise him, first to cast out the beam out of his own eye, and then he will see clearly to pull out the mote out of the eye of the General Conference. Again, Mr. M'Caine claims to be one of the Committee of the framers of the Constitution, and of course the best explainer. He had better write out an explanation and have it printed for posterity, for he will not always live to explain.

Mr. Editor, I recollect some 55 or 60 years ago of an old discipline of my father's, in which crimes and offences were pointed out, such as 'buying and selling men, women, and children, drunkenness, or buying goods upon which the duty was not paid,' &c. But Mr. M'Caine and his committee have got too wise for all this. They can frame a Constitution and Discipline without a word respecting these crimes, and even the General Conference has no right to say what is a sin or what is not. But they took good care to say, 'the Gen. Conference shall pass no rule that shall interfere with the laws of the States,' plainly throwing the mantle of the church around the slaveholder, to keep him secure in his wickedness and to encourage him to presevere. But again, we are bound by this constitution, framed by these boasters of religious liberty, as with bands of iron. Two thirds of the Annual Conferences must concur, or it cannot be touched, not even a word altered! What republicanism—what christian liberality? And all to keep the slaveholder out of the reach of discipline.

Yours, John Burton.

Mt. Tabor, Ia. Dec. 25, 1846.

THE DEVIL'S DIOCESE.

(The following is taken from a very ancient writer which accounts for the spelling.)

"And I would aske a strange question.—Who is the most diligentest bishop and prelate in all England, and passeth all the rest in doing his office? I can tell, for I know him who he is, I know him well. But now me thinkes I see you listening and harkning, that I shoud name him. There is one that passeth all the other, and is the most diligent prelate and preacher in all England. And will ye know who it is? I will tell you. It is the devil. He is the most diligent preacher of all other—he is never out of his diocese—hee is never from his cure—ye shall never find him unoccupied—he is ever in his parish—hee keepeth residence at all times—ye never find him out of the way, call for him when ye will—he is ever at home—the diligentest preacher in all the realms, he is ever at his plough—no lording or loytering may hinder him—he is ever applying to his business—ye shall never find him idle, I warrant you. And his office is to hinder religion—to maintaine superstition—to set up idolatry—to teach all kinde of Popery. He is as ready as he can be wished for to set forth his plough—to devise as many waies as can be to deface and obscure God's glory. Where the devil is resident, and hath his plough going, there away with bookes, and up with candles; away with Bibles, and up with beades, away with the light of the Gospel & up with the light of candles, yea at noon-daies. Where the devil is resident, that hee may prevaile, up with all superstition and idolatry, sensing, painting of images, candles, palines, ashes, holy water, and new service of men's invention, as though man could invent better way to honor God with than God himself hath appointed. Down with Christe's crosse, uppe with Purgatory pick-perse, uppe with Popish purgatory.—Away with clothing the naked, the poor, and impotent—up with the decking of images, and gay garnishing of stockes and stones.—Up with man's traditions and his lawes—downe with God's will and his most holy word. Downe with the old honors due unto God, and up with the new god's honor." Again—

"I know him by St. Peter's words, which saith of him—Sicut leo rugiens quærens quem devoret—he goeth about, every word of it. Circuit, he goeth about every corner of his diocese, he goeth on visitation daily, and leaveth no place of his eure unvisited; he walketh round about from place to place, and ceaseth not. Sicut leo, as a lion, that is, strongly, boldly, fiercely, and proudly, with haughty lookes, with a proud countenance and stately braggings. Rugiens, roaring, for he letteth not slip any occasion to speak or to roar out when he seeth his time. Quærens, he goeth about seeking, and not sleeping as our bishops doe, but he seeketh diligently, he searcheth diligently all corners, where as he may have his prey. He roveth abroad, in every place of his dioceses, he standeth not still, he is never at rest but ever in hand with his plough that it may go forward. But there never was such a preacher in England as he is. . . . Be woe worth thee, O devil, that has prevailed to evacuate Christ's crosse, and to mingle the Lord's Supper. These be the Italian bishop's devises, and the devil hath pricked at the marke, to frustrate the cross of Christ. He shot at this marke long before Christ came—he shot at this marke four thousand years before Christ hanged on the cross, or suffered his passion."—Selected.

Grumblers.—There is a class of people in the world who are always dissatisfied.—The weather is too hot, or too cold; too wet or too dry; the days are too long or too short; the times are too dull, or if brisk, they reap none of the benefits; if in good health they cannot accumulate enough to satisfy the cravings of their avaricious dispositions If sick, murmuring at the dispensations of heaven; in fine, let what will happen, blow high or blow low, adversity or prosperity, it is all the same. they are never contented. These are real grumblers from Grumbleton Hall. Heaven deliver us from such men; they taint the very atmosphere they breathe. When we meet persons of this cast, and it is frequently we do, we lose all patience. We had rather be banished to the wilds of the Rocky Mountains, or be compelled to eat train oil with a Greenlander, than to have such a man for a companion. A man that cannot find anything to admire in the beauties of creation, we set him down as a stupid Jack--and a man who is always grumbling is a public nuisance.

Principle.—The virtue of a person without principle is like a warm wind in winter—pleasant enough while it lasts; bnt it is here to-day and gone to-morrow.

PROSPECTUS OF THE

LITERARY ATHENÆUM,

A NEW AND SPLENDID MONTHLY MAGAZINE,

TO BE EDITED BY THE

Rev. Henry D. Moore, of Philadelphia,—and Rev. Andrew A. Lipscomb, Professor of English Literature and Belle Letters, in the city of Baltimore.

On the first of January, 1847, the subscribers intend issuing the first number of a spendid Monthly Magazine, to be called the "Literary Athenæum," to be devoted to the interest and circulation of a mind-refining, soul-inspiring, spirit-stirring literature; such a literature, in a word, as the progressive taste of society seems to demand.

Between the magazines of the day, which are devoted almost exclusively to the circulation of Christian Literature, and those devoted to the light, and in too many instances, tasteless and corrupting literature—there is a wide and deep chasm, to fill which successfully and profitably, very few attempts have been made. To supply this void, to some extent at least, is the intention of the subscribers, in issuing the "Literary Athenæum."

The general cast and character of the contents of the proposed magazine will be fixed according to the standard of the most sterling intellect, and the most liberal appreciation of the wants of the common mind. Its pages will ever present a feast and a glow, to feed and illumine the loftiest and purest taste and spirit of the admirers and lovers of refining and exalting literary walks and research.

To secure this grand design, effectually and honorably, no pains or expenses will be spared.

The contents will be purely original; consisting of Lectures, Addresses, Essays, &c., on the most popular and exciting literary and scientific subjects, from the most able writers that can be secured—interspersed and relieved by beautiful poetic composition.

Science, Art, and government, in their almost infinite variety development and interest, will be liberay and honorably discussed in its pages.

Arrangements are in progress for an extensive and important European correspondence, which will be a feature of great interest in its varied connections.

In addition to such articles, there will be presented occasional tales of unexceptionable character and style, differing essentially from the weakish romances which fill the pages of the many magazines of the day. Writers in this connection, can be secured, whose productions are the embodiment of life, true to itself,—and which will kindle and glow with the loftiest and purest sentiment, and thrill with the beauties of morality and religion in their loveliest forms.

Each number of the Athenæum will contain four embellishments of the first artistical merit, One of them will be a portrait of some distinguished personage in this country or in Europe, accompanied with an interesting biographical sketch. Another will be a view of the buildings and grounds, of some one of the popular Universities, in this or the old world, accompanied with a historical, biographical and statistical sketch in this body of the work. The portraits will be fine mezzotint, and the college views, beautiful line engravings. Then will follow richly colored specimens of flowers and fruit; in connection with which, there will also be presented interesting notices—floral and botanical—of climate, habits, culture, &c. All of which cannot but secure interest and favor.

Each number will comprise sixty pages of letter-press, double column, beautifully stereotyped, and printed on fine white paper; the whole corresponding in all respects, with the character of the other departments of the work.

Such is to be the character of the work at its commencement. If it is succesful, as it ought to be, and as is hoped and believed it will be,—improvement will be made as far as possible in the different departments, as they are suggested in the progress of the work.

The subscribers take pleasure in announcing to the public, that they have concluded arrangements with the Rev. Henry D. Moore, of Philadelphia, and Rev. Andrew A Lipscomb, Professor of English Literature and Belle Letters, of Raltimore, who will co-operate as Editors the of new Magazine. Under the management of those gentleman, the subscribers flatter themselves, abundant success will be secured in behalf of the enterprise.

TO PUBLISHERS.

The subscribers would also give notice to Publishers, at home and abroad, that there will be in connection with the work, an extensive review department. This will be made a feature of excelling interest. The department will be conducted fairly and honorably, and all works sent to the office of the subscribers, will receive such notices as their character may demand.

The first number will be issued on the first of January, 1847. Its contents and the name of contributors, will be published shortly.

Terms—Three dollars per annum, in advance.

Editors of papers, copying this Prospectus, and sending a paper with it, to the office of the "Athenæum," shall receive the numbers of the work, and the thanks of the publishers.

All letters, containing orders for the work, post-paid, and enclosing the subscription price, will receive prompt attention. To be addressed to

F. C. WILSON & Co.

Philadelphia, Pa.

THE WEEKLY

CHRISTIAN WORLD;

An Independent, Comprehensive, and Impartial Newspaper; designed for welcome and useful circulation; Among all Friends of Christian Union, Christian Benevolence, and Christian Literature. To be published every Saturday, At the Reading-Room of the Christian Atheneum, over the Book-store of Mr. James Harmstead, Fourth St., between Market and Arch Sts., Philadelphia;

Price:—Two Dollors a-year invariably in advance.

T. H. Stockton,
J. G. Wilson,
Theophilus Stork. } Editors.

W. S. Stockton,—General Agent.

To persons who are acquainted with the character and objects of the Christian World, as they have been developed during the last six years, it is only necessary to say, that as soon as one thousand paying subscribers are secured, the paper will be put to press. The Old Subscription List ought to supply this number at once.

To other persons, it is proper to remark, that the Christian World, in print, is intended to reflect the Christian World, in action—in a word, daguerreotype it: and then, for purposes of common advantage, to compare the organized and operature Religion of the Age with the Religion of the Bible.

The enlarged literary and business agencies of the Establishment, are deemed amply sufficient to assure the public of successful management. Its immediate connexion with the Christian Atheneum—an Institution which is to be furnished with many of the principal organs of Church and State, both in Europe and America,—will give its conductors early access to invaluable sources of universal intelligence.

DIRECTIONS.

1. On receipt of this Prospectus, let the Old subscribers at every Post-office, appoint one of their number, or some other suitable person, an Agent. Let him send us, at once, as many names and as much money as possible. In cases where substantial agents make themselves responsible for their subscribers, this responsibility will be regarded as equivalent to payment in advance—provided they settle their accounts within six months. Even in such cases, however, immediate payments are decidedly preferable; and, to encourage them, the commissions to agants are arranged thus:—On cash orders, 25 per cent.: on deferred remittances, 12½ per cent.

2. As the Prospectus will be widely distributed, let all persons who see it, and feel an interest in it, act promptly in the manner described above. It is thought that a little effort will be sufficient to procure a company, or club, at almost any Post-office in the Union. The times increasingly demand just such a publication as is proposed.

Address,—W. S. Stockton, General Agent, Philadelphia, Pa.: or either of the Associate Editors. All orders will be punctually attended to.

T. H. STOCKTON,
Editor and Proprietor.

Philadelphia, December, 1846.

ATTENTION!!
Look Here, All!!

I HAVE JUST received from New York, a fine assortment of Foreign and Domestic DRY GOODS consisting of, Cloths, Casimeres, Sattinetts, Tweeds, and Jeans, Cashmeres, Mouslin de Lains, Alpaccas, Morenoes, and Cloakings, Flaunels, Checks, Linseys, Brown and Bleach-Muslins, Shawls and Prints of every variety, Men's and Boys' Caps Boots and Shoes. Also Coffee, Sugar, Tea, &c. All of which I am offering to the public,

AT VERY REDUCED PRICES,

for cash, or in exchange for country produce of all kinds.

I would add, that those wishing to purchase cheap goods will find it to their advantage to give me a call, as I am determined to sell my goods. W. B. Guthrie.

Putnam Ohio, October 31, 1846.

Snethen's Sermons.—Rev. Ulysses Ward of Washington City, has just published a volume of Sermons by the late Rev. N. Snethen. It comprises 480 pages, and is elegantly bound in cloth. Price $1,00 per single copy. Ten copies or more at the rate of $4. And for 50 or more copies, 84 cents apiece. Cash in all cases to be remitted when the books are ordered. "He, being dead, yet speaketh."

NEW SERIES

OF THE

Congressional Globe and Appendix.

Congress at it its last session, through the Joint Library Committee of the two Houses, having authorized a large subscription for the Congressional Globe and Appendix; and the Senate, by resolution, having directed the mode of preparing the reports of the proceedings, and authorized the Secretary of the Senate to contract with the undersigned, stipulating that the reports when written out shall be subject to the revision of the speakers, the Congressional Globe and Appendix is now offered to the public, not only as an authentic, but as an official report of the proceedings of Congress, made under the eye, and published by authority of the body.

The undersigned originated the mode of journalizing the proceedings of Congress, which, thus adopted, is to be perfected with the aid and under the supervision of Congress. Their publication was the first and only one that gave each successive step in every measure in both branches of Congress; a brief of all the debates; every important vote; and an Appendix, including at full length all the revised speeches delivered during the session.

The work, as it is now to be conducted by them, will be found a most perfect political history. The Senators from the States and the Representatives from every section of the Union bring with them into Congress a knowledge of the feelings, sentiments, and interests of their several constituencies. Public opinion and the public information, as it exists among those they represent, are embodied by them; and in the crucible of Congress the wisdom of our times is brought to its test, and is there concentrated, in directing the political movements of the whole country. The impulses thus given through Congress from every quarter react upon the nation as a whole, and all its component parts are made to move in co-operation. The press cannot be more usefully employed than in condensing and again spreading abroad the intelligence of our free country, tending to such happy results through our all most miraculously adjusted State and National institutions.

Having identified ourselves with the plan of advancing the usefulness of Congress by publishing full and impartial reports, and having a large mass of the Congressional Globe and Appendix, issued during the last twelve years which would be impaired in value to us and utility to the public if the work were discontinued, we have a double motive to prompt us to extend it through a new series. We are resolved, if possible, to give it permanence, and hand it down to successors as a standard work worthy of being maintained and improved. We shall enter upon our new undertaking without being distracted or burdened by any associate labors of the press; and thus unencumbered, shall hope to make the new series a step in advance of the former in all points of execution. With a view to accomplish this, we shall be (one or the other) in attendance on Congress.

The reports will not be affected by our party bias. We believe every member of Congress will bear witness that our reports are full and fair.

The Congressional Globe is made up of the daily proceedings of the two Houses of Congress, and printed on supernie double royal paper, with small type, (brevier and nonpareil,) in quarto form, each number containing sixteen royal quarto pages. The speeches of the members in this first form are condensed—the full report of the prepared speeches being reserved for the Appendix. All resolutions, motions, and other proceedings, are given in the form of the Journals, with the yeas and nays on every important question.

The Appendix is made up of the President's Annual Message, the reports of the principal officers of the Government that accompany it, and all speeches of members of Congress, written out or revised by themselves. It is printed in the same form as the Congressional Globe, and usually makes about the same number of pages during a session.

During the first month or six weeks of a session, there is rarely more business done than will make two numbers a week—one of the Congressional Globe and one of the Appendix; but during the remainder of a session, there is usually sufficient matter for two or three numbers of each every week. The next session will be unusually interesting; therefore, we calculate that the Congressional Globe and Appendix together will make near 1500 large quarto pages, printed in small type—brevier and nonpareil. We furnish complete Indexes to both at the end of a session.

We have on hand the Congressional Globe and Appendix for the last fifteen sessions of Congress, making together fifteen large royal quarto volumes, which we will sell unbound, for $41; or bound with Russia backs and corners for $56. Those who want the back volumes should apply for them immediately, as they are in demand. Congress subscribed for 341 complete sets during the two last sessions. The proceedings of Congress for the last nine years cannot be procured from any other source—Gales & Seaton having stopped printing their Register of Debates in 1837.

We will endeavor to print a sufficient number of surplus copies to supply all that may be miscarried, or lost in the mails; but subscribers should be very particular to file their papers carefully, for fear that we should not be able to supply all lost numbers.

TERMS.

For one copy of the Congressional Globe,	$1 00
For one copy of the Appendix,	1 00
For six copies of either, or part of both,	5 00

The money may be remitted by mail at our risk. The safest and best way to remit is, to pay the amount to the Postmaster where you resige, and take from him a receipt.

Our prices for these papers are so low that we cannot afford to credit them out; therefore, no person need consume his time in writing for them unless he sends the money. BLAIR & RIVES.

Washington, D. C. October 15, 1846.

JACOB THORN,

Wholesale dealer in all kinds of NOTIONS, No. 91, Wilson's Row, the first store below the Court House, is now opening a new and complete assortment of

NOTIONS AND DRY GOODS,

which will be sold wholesale, at prices a little below what they have ever been sold in this place.—Country Merchants and Pedlers, visiting the city are respectfully invited to examine my stock before purchasing elsewhere, among which may be found the following articles:—

800	Packs American solid head Pins.
200,000	Drilled Ey'e Needles, Sharps and Betweens.
2000	Doz Spool Thread.
500	Lbs. Patent do.
800	do. Cotton do.
3000	Doz. Side Combs.
600	do. Fine Ivory do.
500	do. Dressing do.
100	do. Woolen Comforters.
100	Brass Clocks.
1500	Prints (Engravings,) high col'd.
100	Doz. Chapman Strops.
5000	Almanacks.
300	Shawls, different patterns.
100	Gross Kitting Pins.
4	Bbls. Blacking.
30	Doz. slates.
50	Gt. Gro. Agate Shirt Buttons
500	Coils Bonnet Wire.
50	Gross Boot Laces.
500	do. Hooks and Eyes on Cards
100	do. Wood Combs.
200	do. Sherred and G. E. Suspenders
12	Boxes Fire Crackers
12	Doz. Looking-Glasses.
100	Gross Pearl Shirt Buttons.
6	Bales Brown Musl.n.
200	Doz. Mitts.

Combs of every description, Buttons, Penknives, Razors, Table and Tea Spoons, Tapes, Eyeletts, Jewsharps, Pencils, Shaving Boxes, Gloves, Ladies cotton Hose, Matches, Dress Handkfs., Laces and Edgings, Spectacles, Tumbles, Beads, Candle Wicking, Night caps, Primers, Calicoes, bleached Muslins, Wafers, &c.

WANTED in exchange for goods at wholesale prices, Feathers, Beeswax, Ginsang, Rags and Hogs Bristles tied up in small bunches, for which will be given twenty-five cents a pound for all that can be brought in good order

Zanesville, O. Nov. 7, 1846.

PUTNAM BOARDING HOUSE.

THE SUBSCRIBER having been for the last sixteen years keeping Tavern and Boarding House, would respectfully acquaint the public—that he has established a Bording House in Putnam, and hopes by strict attention to business he will merit a share of public patronage. His accommodations shall be good, and his table, for variety not surpassed by any Hotel or Boarding House in the West. R. Putnam.

October 31st, 1846.

N. B. Application for boarding should be made so on R. P.

GEORGE CONCLIN,

BOOKSELLER AND PUBLISHER,

Stationer, Binder, and

BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURER,

No. 59 Main Street, Cincinnati.

Keeps on hand Books published by the Methodist Protestant Church—such as

CHURCH HYMN BOOKS,
REVIVAL " "
DISCIPLINES,
EVANS' QUESTIONS & ANSWERS, &c.

Also—Just received—A supply of the Christian World in 3 Vols. with Portraits of the Wes

THE WESTERN RECORDER.

VOL. VIII---NO. 18. PUTNAM, MUSKINGUM COUNTY, OHIO, FEBRUARY 6, 1847. WHOLE NO. 382.

The Western Recorder,

Is Published every Saturday,

AT PUTNAM, OPPOSITE ZANESVILLE, OHIO.

OFFICE ON MAIN STREET.

A. H. BASSETT, Editor and Proprietor.

C. ALLEN, PRINTER.

TERMS.—Two DOLLARS PER ANNUM, in advance. TWO FIFTY at the close of the year. Payments WITHIN THREE MONTHS will be considered in advance.

All letters and communications must be addressed, the Editor, POST PAID, except such as contain funds, and directed to Putnam Muskingum Co. Ohio.

Itinerant Ministers and others, who collect from subscribers and remit to us as much as TEN DOLLARS within a year, shall receive a copy of the paper free.

Itinerant ministers and preachers, not acting as agents, will have the paper at one dollar.

Clubs of ten or more, paying at the time of subscribing, will have the paper for $15, i. e. one dollar fifty, each.

ECCLESIASTICAL.

Written for the Western Recorder.

REV. A. M'CAINE.

BR. BASSETT: The Rev. A. M'Caine, a southern brother, has taken exception to the Resolution, on Slavery, which was passed by the late Gen. Conf. He has published his views, on that subject, in your "Western Recorder" and they are now before the church and the world. Br. M'Caine certainly has a right to his private judgment and an equal right to express his opinion: I understands that right as well as any other man living. I take pleasure in saying that I agree with him that "the proceedings of the Gen. Conf. ought to be confined within the prescribed limits of its organization and should be characterized by wisdom, justice and truth." This brother affirms that the Gen. Conf. has "exceeded its powers" in passing the resolution which it has used in reference to "domestic slavery." Mr. M'Caine's opinion is entitled to respect: he is a man of age and experience. Many of the men, whom he complains, who were at the Gen. Conf. are also, aged and experienced, whose opinions are entitled to equal respect. The brethren from the South were generally well satisfied with the resolution as I understand; and any man, I believe, on the floor of the Gen. Conf. from North or South, intimated that to pass that resolution would be to exceed the "powers" of the Gen Con. I am pleased that Br. M'Caine does not insist that the Gen. Con. exceeded its "powers" knowingly and with design to effect the stability, purity and prosperity" of the church which we all so much love and whose interests are near our hearts."

That brother and the whole church and this brother painfully know the difficulties connected with the slave question and the great diversity of opinion which prevails on that subject among good men, both in church and State. I believe Mr M'Caine is the only man, who has written on the slave question, that has said the Gen. Conf. exceeded its "powers." I have read his papers with care and attention and really I cannot feel the force of his reasoning on that subject. I know, he does not therefore, follow that there is no force in it.

Our brother wants the argument, not the mere assertion. Well, perhaps some of the reasoners will give the argument.

But we will now inquire: If the Gen. Conf. of '46, exceeded its "powers" by passing the resolution on slavery?—Did not the Gen. Conf. of '42, exceed its "powers" by passing a similar resolution? There is but one answer. If the Conf. did wrong in the last act, it did wrong in the first. If it be admitted that the Gen. Conf. did without constitutional authority in the one case it certainly did in the other. Well, but what have that to do with this subject? We will tell.

The Rev. A. M'Caine was present and a member of the Gen. Con. of '42.—I had the privilege of to be present at that time.

That brother, a prominent member, did not only argue that the Gen. Conf. would "exceed its powers" if it should pass that resolution. He did, I think, in good health at the time and very regular in his attendance, always in his seat and remarkably attentive to the business of the conference: a fine example for the imitation of younger members. That resolution, which this brother thinks "caps the climax of absurdity," before the conference three days at least, and any amendments proposed.

But not one word from this brother, about exceeding the powers" of the conf., during that whole, warm discussion. Well, his mind and it might have been so much oppressed, at the time with fear lest the acts of the conference would not be characterized by "wisdom, justice and truth," that he did not then perceive the absurdity" of the resolution. But, then, how shall we account for the strange fact that this brother observer, of men's rights, of principle, of truth, should have failed to discover the iniquity of the resolution, when he was relieved from the excitement of the conference, and the "long agony was over."

Or, indeed, he did perceive the mischieveous tendency of that resolution; why did he, a man so watchful, so prompt, so competent, neglect to inform the church and the public? He did not write and publish a single line, condemning that act of the Gen. Conf.! During the whole time, intervening between the sessions of the Conf. of '42 and that of '46, neither Mr. M'Caine nor any other brother, so far as I know, intimated that the act of '42 "exceeded its powers." At that conference, there were present some of the most experienced and pious ministers and laymen of our church: Rev. N. Snethen, A. Shinn Dr. Waters, Dr. Springer, P. S. Graves, G. Brown, Editor Harris, Judge Bibb and many others; not one of whom, I believe, objected to the resolution from constitutional scruples.

Before, and yet more, that surprises! Who, has read Mr. M'Caine's strictures on the Gen. Conf. of '46, is prepared to hear that the Rev. A. M'Caine, himself, voted for a similar resolution at the Gen. Conf. of 42,?—He, a member present all the time, and yet never intimated to the Conf. that, to pass the resolution would be to exceed its "powers," and actually voted for its passage on a call for the yeas and nays!—But lo! upon as this vigilent "watchman on our walls" was that the Gen. Conf. of '46, had expressed the same sentiment on the subject of slavery that the Conf. of '42 had previously done, he seizes the trumpet and sounds an alarm. He tells the church that the "opinion" expressed by the Gen. Conf. of '46 is "most extraordinary and objectionable."

The church is fully competent to judge which is more "extraordinary and objectionable" the two, his "opinion" or that of the Conf. of '42.

For the information of our readers, we here present an extract from the journal of the Gen. Conf. of '42 and the resolution of '46.

An extract from the Journal of the Gen. Conf. of May, 1842.

The following Resolution being before the house, was decided by yeas and nays.

"Resolved, that in the judgment of this General Conference, the holding of slaves is not, under all circumstances, a sin against God, yet in our opinion, under some circumstances it is sinful, and in such cases should be discouraged by the Methodist Protestant Church. This General Conference does not feel authorized by the constitution to legislate on the subject of slavery; and by a solemn vote, we present to the church our judgment, shall the different Annual Conferences, respectively, should make their own regulations on this subject, so far as authorized by the constitution."

Adopted, yeas 23, nays 20.

Yeas; Brs. Ragan, Burns, Brown, Collins, Whitefield, Norris, Waters, Webster, Lipscomb, Reese, Bordley, Stier, McCaine, Graves, Souder, Whetstone, Woodhouse, Naudain, Waugh, Light, Rusk, Crutchley, Bibb, 23.

Nays; Brs. Shinn, Clark Jr. Bassett, Witsil, Jacobs, Bennett, Hicklin, Albright, Pennell, Freeman, James Clark, Carson, Reed, W. Smith, Burton, Whitaker, Rankin, Fish, Barkley, Morris, 20.

I have transcribed the above from the Journal, and declare it to be a true copy.

JAMES R. WILLIAMS.

Balt. Dec. 29, 1846.

Here follows the resolution of 1846.

"Resolved, That in the judgment of this General Conference, the holding of slaves, is under many circumstances a sin against God, and in such circumstances should be condemned by the Methodist Protestant Church: nevertheless, it is our opinion that under some circumstances it is not sinful. This General Conference does not feel authorized by the constitution to legislate on the subject of slavery, and by a solemn vote, we present to the church our judgment that the different Annual Conferences respectively should make their own regulations on this subject, so far as authorized by the Constitution."

The careful reader has perceived that the same "opinion" is expressed in both resolutions and nearly in the same language: he has also seen that Rev. Alex. M'Caine's name is found in company with the yeas in '42. Is not this "extraordinary?" How shall we account for a procedure so remarkable, so wonderfully strange?

Did Br. M'Caine forget the resolution of '42 or that he actually sustained and voted for it? If he did, which I suppose to be possible, still it must be evident to all, that he did not entertain the same "opinion" then that he does now, unless we say, he voted for the resolution believing, at the same time, that the conference, by that act, was "exceeding its powers" and voting, hoodwinked, for a resolution that "sets forth the doctrine that domestic slavery is not a sin."

This alternative I could not allow to have place in my soul for one single moment. I entertain too high an opinion of Br. M'Caine and have too much respect for one whom I have known so long and with whom I have toiled and suffered so much. "Far be such an imputation from me." The conclusion, however, is certain, that he does not entertain the same opinion now that he did in '42.

Well, if he did not forget, as above supposed, we must push on our inquiries still further in order to account for this wonderful movement: we may yet arrive at some pleasant & satisfactory conclusion. Has Br. M'Caine, since the Conf. of '42; been convicted of "error?" Has he really repented and changed his mind: and is he now doing, that which he "humbly hopes the late Gen. Conf. will do," reviewing the resolution on slavery and "retracting the errors it contains?" If this is indeed the true cause of Br. M'Caine's uneasiness and solicitude, it is noble and highly praise-worthy. He certainly has a right to change his mind, and that too without subjecting himself to the slightest censure.

If, however, the burning view, which he has given to the church and the world, of that "absurd" resolution on slavery, be of recent discovery, it is but reasonable that he should give some intimation of that fact. Inasmuch as he has not instructed us on this point, we are left to conjecture: and in the present aspect of this affair, we are rather inclined to express the opinion that the brother has seen cause, good cause, to change his opinion on the subject, about which he writes. We think this the most charitable conjecture.

We are fully aware that it is not at all common for men of his age and mental strength to change their views materially particularly on subjects involving important principles.

We expect young men to change; their minds are not fully developed, they often err, but men of the age, and the habits of close and careful thinking of Rev. A. M'Caine, very rarely change; they see no cause for change.

It must, however, be admitted that, even aged and wise men do sometimes change their views on important subjects. An aged and noble senator has seen cause to change his mind, recently on a question connected with State affairs.

When this Lion of the Senate was charged with "inconsistency," he declared, in justification of his course, that he was, "par excellence," the 'consistent" man, who changed from conviction. We will allow then, for the present, that Br. M'Caine has "changed from conviction."

With this understanding then, we would most respectfully say that we think Br. M'Caine ought to have been very tender and farther in his review of that act of the Gen. Conf. of which he so much complains. All the men at that Conf. were not blessed with his "gifts and graces." If they really did wrong in passing that resolution, which declares that slave holding is, under many circumstances, a sin against God, they only did that which he did himself, but 4 years previously.

The word "some" is used in the resolution of '42 and the word "many" in that of '46. The sentiment against which Br. McC. wars, is the same in both Resolutions. If that brother, with all his knowledge and virtue, with his pure intentions and unquestionable love for the church, voted for a resolution 4 years ago.by which he now thinks the "characters of thousands in the church is injured and their membership jeoparded," ought he not to deal kindly with his erring brethren of the Gen. Conf. of '46? Furthermore, these reckless legislators may see cause, as he has done, to change their "opinions" before an other session of the Gen. Conf. Every brother who voted for that resolution which contains so many "dangerous principles," will, if he follow Mr. M'Caine's example, "turn round" and oppose it as an outrage on the right of private judgment in the members of the church." As Mr. M. voted for this "outrage" at the Conf. of '42 and has seen cause to change his views since then, he ought, one would think, to avoid all severity of censure, and allow his brethren a few years to reflect; it may be they will become convicted and repent and find forgiveness.

I may suggest an additional reason why Br. M'Caine should be particularly forbearing towards his weak brethren of the Gen. Conf. of '46. In '42 there was no precedent to plead, no prominent man whose example or vote could be urged in favor of the resolution, but in '46 it was quite different. The same resolution was passed by the Gen. Conf. of '42 and Rev. A. M'Caine, a strong southern man had voted for it. Here was precedent and high authority—the resolution "endorsed good" by Mr. M'Caine. One of the members of the Con. of '46 urged the brethren from the South to vote for the resolution and stated as a reason the fact that Mr. M'C. had voted for it in '42.

The Secretary was called on immediately to refer to the Journal of that Conf. to know the certainty of the statement, and the name of A. M'Caine was found among the YEAS which settled the question and the resolution passed. Every blow Mr. M'Caine aims at the Conf. strikes himself. Let him strike lightly.

It will be seen, by reference to the extract from the Gen. Con. journal of '42, furnished me, by Rev. J. R. Williams, that brother Shinn voted against the resolution. I think the members of that Conf. will remember that he voted against it, not because, he thought the Conf. would exceed its "powers," but because he was unwilling to say that "the holding of slaves is not under all circumstances a sin against God." The members of that Conf. will recollect too, that Br. Shinn proposed to amend the resolution by inserting the words "a control over" after the word "holding," so as to make the resolution read "The holding a control over slaves is not under all circumstances a sin against God." These words he wished inserted because he contended that where the laws of the States would not admit of emancipation, the holders of slaves were not the sinners, but the legislators must be regarded as the sinners and the owners as merely holding a control over them which he did not consider sinful. If the amendment had passed, Br. Shinn would have voted for the resolution. This is proof that he did not oppose the resolution because of any constitutional difficulties that existed in his mind. If there should be any misapprehension upon my part with reference to Br. Shinn or Br. M'Caine, when informed, I shall be happy to correct the error, as I do not wish to be in error myself or to lead any person into error. JOHN S. REESE.

Written for the Western Recorder.

CHURCH DIVISION.

THINGS TO BE CONSIDERED.

NO. VII.

MR. EDITOR:—In pursuing our enquiries we notice,

2. That another advantage which may be derived from division, (if advantage it may be called,) is, that It will save us the trouble of correcting the public mind, in relation to the nature and character of our connection with the south, by accommodating ourselves to their ignorant predjudices.

The impression seems to prevail with many, that this connection is of such a character as to compel us to lend our sanction to slavery with all its abominable sequences, so long as it is cotinnued. This impression may originate from ignorance of the ground, or principles of this federative consociation—or from connecting such an idea with us, on account of our bearing the name Methodist: As it is well known that the dominant body of Methodists in this country, are in their church organization, a unit—Or it may exist from the unrepelled charges of designing enemies. Could we point to such a line of distinction as this division proposes to create, it might be somewhat easier to satisfy the ignorant predjudices of many upon this subject than without it. But this affords us only an evidence of its being a work of expediency, inasmuch as by such connection we in no way sanction, nor tolerate slavery.

The objection arising to our connection with the south, entirely overlooks the fact that ecclesiastical connection does not necessarily imply christian fellowship. The only proper basis of which, is, the mutual recognition of christian character. And this may be done, and often is, where no ecclesiastical connection exists: and ecclesiastical connection often exists where there is no christian fellowship. We recognise the worthy members of sister churches as, christians, and fellowship them as such, while there is no ecclesiastical connection between us. But the unworthy delinquents of our own church, we refuse to recognise as a christian, and we cannot fellowship them as such, notwithstanding we are ecclesiastically connected with them. Had we used proper exertions for it, I think that we might have satisfactorily shown to the intelligent of all classes concerned, before now, that every consideration which may demand a division of our church, for the purpose of withdrawing support from slavery, would urge with equal, or increased propriety the division of the Union of the States. The fundamental principles being analogous, or nearly the same, if our church connection is sinful in its character, surely our state connection must be, also; and we shall continue to remain sinners until that is broken up, or disolved. Have we not, some of us been quite needlessly alarmed! The cry, "mad dog!" has been raised, and as if terror stricken at the first notes of worning, we have been inclined to run for life, without pausing to ascertain whether there is a dog in all the land, or not. Forgetting that the enemy, in accomplishing his designs, ever seeks,

"TO SCATTER, tear, and slay" and not realizing that,

The sheep he never can devour,
Unless he first DIVIDE."

It has been common, with some to charge upon every person as being Pro-Slavery, who was not disposed to "go all lengths" in the ultra abolition measures, and to stigmatise them as being leagued with Robbers and Man-stealers, &c. And the same has been done with churches. Which has awakened such a fear, or dread of falling under such imputations that many are ready to run almost any hazard, in their individual relations, or their church relations, to avoid it. This we may escape by division. But is it worth making such an effort for? Let us remember that "wisdom is justified of all her children."

Shall we run wild, to please the bewildered?—

E. A. W.

The Seceders, to Bishop Hughes.

The free German Catholic Congregation of New York, to his Reverence Bishop Hughes.

1. The free German Catholic Congregation unanimously express their disapprobation of the intolerant course of Bishop Hughes. Inasmuch as the Congregation quietly and peacefully withdrew from the Romish Hierarchy, without having given to the Bishop or to one of his adherents the least occasion for an assault, they therefore pronounce the letter of Bishop Hughes to be unchristian.

2. Whereas Bishop Hughes declares "that we were no Romanists, and that therefore no secession has taken place," we are constrained to contradict Bishop Hughes, and to assure him that we were born and brought up Roman Catholics, and also that the names of our children may be found in the baptismal registers of New York. It was high time, surely, that we had renounced such a church, in which the shepherds do not even know who belong to their flocks.

3. Whereas Bishop Hughes has publicly declared "the German Catholics in New York are fully satisfied with the Romish Church," we can only pity the ignorance of Bishop Hughes, that he is so unacquainted with their feelings. It cannot be otherwise; for what can a priest who is not himself a German know of German character and the feelings of Germans? We therefore repel this assertion of Bishop Hughes as not founded on truth.

4. Because Bishop Hughes could not assail the unimpeachable character and the pure doctrine of our pastor, the Rev. Dr. Giustinani, he calls him a "German Jew." We pity the fall of the Romish Hierarchy! When a Bishop can sink so far as to resort to such an expedient, it was time that we had declared ourselves free from her. (But what if this were really the case? Does not Bishop Hughes know, that Jesus Christ himself, our Saviour, was a Jew, of the root of David? He is a Bishop, and does he not even know that the Apostles were also Jews?) The ordination certificate of our pastor is sufficient for us.

We Germans, Mr. Bishop Hughes, desire Scriptural truth, sound reasoning, and not personality.

The self-denial, the Christian love, the sacrifice of time and health of the Rev. Dr. Giustiniani Germans only, and not Irish Jesuits, know how to appreciate. If Bishop Hughes can assign no better reasons to bring us Germans back to the Romish Hierarchy than those which he has given in his letter, we do most solemnly that were gard the Romish Hierarchy as an enemy of Bible-truth and freedom of conscience.

5. Whereas a genuine Christianity cannot exist without the word of God; and whereas republican freedom is incomplete without religious freedom, we declare that we will possess both, of which we have hitherto been deprived, as the preface to the Romish New Testament approved by Bishop Hughes, shows.

6. The unjust allegation of Bishop Hughes, "that we have set up a new form of Protestantism," we must also repel as untrue. We are and remain Catholics, though not Romanists; because the Romish Hierarchy has fallen from the genuine Catholic faith.

7. The Rev. Pastor Giustiniani is respectfully requested, as soon as possible, to prepare an appeal to the German priests and the German people generally, residing in the United States, to draw out the friends of truth and freedom from the dark Hierarchy, that we may constitute ourselves into a free, unrestricted, German Catholic Church.

8. The Committee in instructed to publish these resolutions in the Staats Zeitung and in an English journal, as a testimonial of the high regard we have for our Rev. Pastor Dr. Giustiniani, who has begun the severe contest between light and darkness in the United States.

In the name of the Congregation, the Committee subscribe themselves,—

JOSEPH BOCK,
GEORDE STATT,
JOHANN FRANTZ SPATZ,
A. SCHRANT.

The Congregation will meet for worship at the Alhamra, Broadway, next Sabbath, at the usual hours; when the first time in the United States, the liturgy expurgated and revised, will be read in the German language.—Jour. of Com.

From the Neshville Christian Advacate.

METHODIST STATISTICS.

Although the Methodist Episcapal Church now exists in the United States in two distinct and separate Organizations,, we expect always to rejoice at the success of each branch, and shall mourn at the reverses or the want of prosperity of either In 1844–5, our brethren at the North experienced a sad falling off in the number of their members; and from the following statistics it seems that 1846 was also a year of decrease. We really think it high time that the Editors North should strive to awaken a spirit of inquiry into the cause of this continued decrease of members. If they would employ less time in striving to "kill off" their Southern brethren, perhaps they would have more success in breathing life into their churches at home. May the Lord send upon them a new and reviving influence.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

We recently noticed the publication of the minutes of the Methodist Episcopal Church, published by Messrs. Lane & Tippet of New York, for 1846.

These minutes embrace the statistics of twenty-three annual conferences, begining with the Baltimore conference which was held on the 11th of March 1846, and ending with the Indiana conference which was held on the 7th of September, 1846.

The conferences included in these statistics are those known as comprising the Methodist Episcopal Church, are as as follows:

Baltimore, Philadelphia, Providence, New Jersey, New England, New York, Troy, New Hampshire, Vermont, Black River, Pittsburgh, Oneida, Erie, Rock River, North Ohio, Genesee, Maine, Ohio, Iowa, Illinois, North Indiana, Michigan, and Indiana. In addition to these there are included in the statistics of numbers, &c., the Liberia Mission and German districts.

The entire membership is now 613,125 whites, and 30,515 colored, being a decrease or falling off from the previous year of 12,173 whites, also a decrease from the previous year of 224 colored members.

The Baltimore conference contains the largest membership, being 51,953 whites, and 17,315 colored; although the Ohio conference has the largest number of white members, which is 55,304.

LOCAL PREACHERS.—There are in the whole connection of this branch of the Church 8,517 local preachers, being an increase of 229 the past year.

INDIANS.—Three conferences contain Indian members, namely: Onedia 80, Rock River 120, and Michigan 450. The increase of which for the past year has been 54.

MISSIONARY MONEY.—All the conferences report missionary money collected, except the Baltimore and Onedia; and the aggregate amount collected was $66,594,88.

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY.—Collections are reported as having been taken up for the American Bible Society in all the conferences but four, namely, Baltimore, Erie, Rock River, and Iowa. The aggregate amount reported colected, is $14, 532,76.

The entire amount of money wanted to meet the full demands of all claimants the past year was $188,308 20; and the whole amount collected amounted to $34,143,99, leaving a deficiency of $154,164,21.

In these collections are included the dividends of the Book Concern, which the past year was $600 to each annual conference, except the Baltimore conference; to this conference the minutes show a dividend of $800, This collection also embraces the interest of the chartered fund, and ten cent and conference collection.

INCREASE OF MEMBERS.—Eight conferences have increased the membership within their bounds the last year. The largest increase was in the North Ohio conference namely: 3,478, and the smallest increase in the North Indian, namely: 15.

DECREASE OF MEMBRS.—There has been a decrease of members within the bounds of fifteen conferences. The largest of which was in the Ohio conference, viz: 2,321. The smallest decrease in the New Hampshire viz: 346,

We have collected the above statistics with some care from the printed Minutes now before us, believing that they will be useful as a source of information to many.—Christian Repository.

Sabbath School Department.

BROTHER BASSETT, I perusing the recent Report of the "Young men's Bible Society of Cincinnati," I noticed the following among its standing rules; "A testament will be given gratuitously to each destitute Sunday School pupil in the State of Ohio, who is able to read it. Superintendents and officers of schools in need, are therefore invited to apply to the Depository, or if at a distance, to address Heman Ball Cincinnati Corresponding Secretary."

It is to be hoped that this offer may not be neglected by any, needing the aid so kindly proffered; and also that it may stimulate many to efforts in the Sunday School enterprise, in the destitute portions of the State. J. M.

Putnam, O. Feb. 1, 1847.

RELIGIOUS FICTION.—The Congregational Visitor, the organ of the Massachusetts Sabbath School Society, says that this Society publishes no Fiction. When the Committee of publication receive a manuscript, of a narrative character, they do not even examine it till they are assured by the author that it is true.

If not true—if it is a religious novel, it is at once returned to the author. [Puritan.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL BOY IN A HIGH PLACE.—We learn that the Rev. William Roberts, who sailed from New York, a few weeks since, to take the superintendence of the Methodist mission in Oregon, was a Sunday-school boy in one of the schools in Burlington, N. J. The place to which he has been appointed is one of the great interest and responsibility. After a voyage of five or six months, over a distance of not less that 15,000 miles, his influence may be felt in laying the foundation of a new and mighty empire. It is no small matter to have such a man under our tuition, for three or four years, at that period of life, when impressions are most easily and most deeply made.—S. S. Jour.

Ladies' Department.

A Good Husband

When you see a young man modest and retiring in his manners, who cares less about his dress than his moral character, depend upon it, ladies, he will make an excellent husband. If you see one that is kind and attentive to his mother, affectionate to his sisters, industrious in his habits and economical in his business, rest assured you have found one of whom you will never be ashamed. The ballroom is no place to find a husband; the fashionable assembly is no place; it is in the retirement of home, in the place of business, where you can study the character and the disposition; and where the best outside is not put on for effect and display. Many a young woman sadly misses it, who is carried away by a bright look and splendid dress. The man who makes the most polite bow and is most graceful in his manners, is not always the most suitable person for a husband. Look at the heart, study the character, and learn the disposition.

We knew a beautiful young lady, beautiful to look upon, we mean, who turned up her pretty nose at a shoemaker, and refused to acknowledge a painter in the streets, who finally married a dashing fop, the son of a wealthy man. Poor girl! a few years of misery passed away, and her husband became reduced, and she to maintain him actually took in washing. Many a shoemaker's wife and many a painter's daughter has contributed to her comfort during the last few years of her life. Girls, be wise and look at the heart, the character, if you want good husbands.

GOOD WIVES.

That young lady will make a good wife who does not apologise when you find her at work in the kitchen, but continues at her task until the work is finished.

When you hear a lady say, I shall attend church and wear my old bonnet and every day gown, for I fear we shall have a rain storm, depend upon it she will make a good wife.

When a daughter remarks—"Mother, I would not hire help, for I can assist you to do all the work in the kitchen," set it down that she will make somebody a good wife.

When you overhear a young woman saying to her father—"Don't purchase a very expensive or showy dress for me, but one that will wear best," you may be certain she will make a good wife.

When you see a female rise early, get breakfast and do up her mother's work in season, and then sit down to sow or knit, depent upon it, she will make a good wife.

When you see a female anxious to learn a trade so as to earn something to support herself and perhaps assist her aged parents, you may be sure that she will make one of the best of wives.

The best qualities to look after in a wife are industry, humility, neatness, gentleness, benevolence and piety. Where you find these there is no danger. You will obtain a treasure and not regret your choice to the last period.

From the N. Y. Tribune.

'MUNIFICENCE' OF A SLAVE DEALER.

We published a few days since from the New Orleans Tropic an account of the 'munificence' of Mr. Isaac Franklin, who died in April last in Louisiana, leaving the principal part of his property, amounting to nearly a million of dollars to be appropriated to the endowment of an Educational establishment in Sumer county. Tennessee. We were not aware at the time that this Mr. Franklin was the famous dealer in human flesh, whose name has so long been familiar throughout the country in connection with the firm of Franklin & Armfield. We have often been assured that, throughout the South, the negro trader is regarded with disgust and abhorence; but this man who amassed an immense fortune in buying and selling bodies and souls of his fellow men and transferring them from the comparative ease and comfort of a slave's life in the Northern Slave States to the terrible severities of the cotton, sugar and rice plantations of the South—a doom which they dreaded often more than death—separ ting husbands and wives, parents and chileren, regardless of their cries and entreaties—this man is eulogized in the papers of the South as a progedy of "benevolence and philanthropy,' who lived "but for the benefit of the whole human race"!! Yes, this 'soul-hardened barterer of human blood,' whose ——"treasures of gold

Were dim with the blood of the hearts he had sold,"

is represented as a man eminent for every virtue that adorns the human character! "No doubt," says the New Orleans Tropic, "he often contemplated with delight, the character and usefulness of his immortal namesake, Benjamin Franklin, and resolved in his own mind to imitate his bright example in an effort to scatter good among his fellow men." "Had he lived," continued the same authority, "in the remote time of early Greece and Rome, his fame would have descended to us in the genius of the far-famed lyric poets, who adorned those classic lands; and have been embalmed for immortality in the living pages of Thucydides or Livy, or Tacitus." To crown all, he is represented as a "worthy Christian," who has been transferred "from a scene where suffering is predominant, to A STATE OF PERFECT BEATITUDE."

Eulogy like this bestowed on a negro trader whose wealth was "dyed in human gore and steeped in widow's tears," and who left the world without one expression of regret, still less of pentence, for his life of villany, may well convince us that Coleridge was right when he sad that

"Earth's renown is infamous;
Her titles slanderous names—her praise reproach."

If such men can get to Heaven by relinquishing at death a portion of their ill-gotten wealth to be disposed of by a clerical executor,* it seems to us hardly fair to exclude anybody, however corrupt or wicked, from that happy place. We agree with the sailor who exclaimed on seeing a Slave ship and witnessing the cruelties of the 'middle passage.' "Well, if the Devil don't catch those fellows there's no use in having a Devil!"

*Rev. O. B. Hays, a Presbyterian clergyman, is one of Mr. Franklin's executers.

AN INCIDENT OF THE NEW REFORMATION.—"We have just heard" says a New York paper, the following interesting story connected with the recent Roman Catholic movement in this city, at the head of which is the Rev. Mr. Giustiniani.

Some time ago, this gentleman made his appearance, a perfect stranger, at the rooms of the American Bible Society, and solicited a present of thirty German Bibles; and while he refused to give his name, he added that he hoped the Bibles would do much towards promoting the cause of the Redeemer. The Bibles were presented to him, and he departed.

On Tuesday morning last, the agent of the Bible Society received a note through the post office, from the Rev. Mr. Guistiniani, mentioning the fact that he was the stranger who had received thirty Bibles some months ago. He also stated, that each of these Bibles was presented at the time to an influential German family of this city, and that every one of those families had foresworn the church of Rome. He also added that there were thousands of intelligent Germans in the city of N. York, who were ready to follow this little band of Christians, in the (to them) newly discovered pathway to eternal life. They were only waiting to see how the pioneers would be received by the American Evangelical churches.

DRUNKENNESS.—Lord Chief Justice Hale, two centuries ago, remarked—"The places of judication, which I have long held in this kingdom, have given me an opportunity to observe the original cause of most of the enormities that have been committed for the space of nearly twenty years; and by a due observation, I have found that, if the murders and manslaughter, the burglaries and robberies, the riots and tumults, the adulteries, fornications, rapes, and other great enormities that have happened in that time, were divided into five parts, four of them have been the issues and product of excessive drinking, or of tavern and ale house meeting."

Judge Rush, in a charge to a Pennsylvania grand jury, nearly echoes this: "I declare in this public manner, and with the most solemn regard to truth, that I do not recollect an instance, since my being concerned in the administration of justice, of a single person being put upon his trial for manslaughter, which did not originate in drunkenness: and but few instances of trials for murder where the crime did not spring from the same unhappy cause."

EDUCATION IN IOWA.—A correspondent of the New York Observer speaking of education in Iowa, says:—

"Our new constitution makes it the duty of the legislature to establish a school system and appoint a State Superintendent to direct its operations. There is also provision made for a most magnificent school fund. if it is properly managed.—There are now 442,107 acres of land reserved for school purposes within the limits of the present organized counties, and an estimated amount of 463,048 acres in the part of the State not yet laid off into counties, and we become entitled to 500,000, acres more on our admission in the Union, making a splendid patrimony of 1,405,155 acres with which to commence operations."

Religious Intelligence.

PITTSBURGH DISTRICT.

Masontown Pa. Jan. 28, 1847.

DEAR BROTHER: The Lord is doing a good work on the George's Creek circuit this year. We held a protracted meeting at Gass's Run School House, where we had no society. Here we organized a class of eighteen members. Br. Mapel preached once for us.

We held another meeting at Wood Grove Meeting House, and eleven embraced religion, and six gave their names to the church. Br. V. Lucas preached 3 times for us during the meeting.

We held another at Zion, where the Lord poured out his Spirit, and revived the church, and eighteen gave us their names for church membership. Here we were favored with the labors of brothers Mapel, P. T. Laishley, and Gillespie. We had an excellent time. Glory be to God for his kindness to us. My residence is in Masontown. S. CLAWSON.

Morgantown Ct. Pittsburgh Dist. } January 29, 1847. }

BR. BASSETT, Dear Sir: With your pemission through the "W. Recorder," I would take the liberty of saying a few words to our worthy Br. Brown and friends in general, in relation to our Zion and her prospects on this circuit. We commenced our labor in the fear of the great Head of the Church by holding a series of protracted meetings, this winter, one of which was held in Stewardtown here we have a good little class but no church to worship in of our own. We got the use of the Presbyterian Church, it being occupied only once in 4 weeks, by that denomination. Br. Clawson, and Br. Mapel of Monongalia, both came to my assistance and labored acceptably. We had a very precious season. It was not in vain to wait upon our God. Four persons evidenced their attachment to Christ and joined the church. They have influence in society and will be useful in the church; may they live faithful.

Our 1st. quarterly meeting came on, Nov. 7th 1846, held at Avery Chapel. Here we had the assistance of Br. Asby Pool our local minister who is faithful and labors acceptably at all our meetings when able to attend, likewise Br. P. T. Laishly on sacramental occasion addressed a very attentive congregation, from John 21, 17. It was not without effect the membership was revived, and 2 persons came forward and united with the church professing to obtain the pearl of great price. Next protracted meeting at Stewardtown on 1st. January 1847. Having received permission from the Trustees of the Presbyterian Church in that place we proceeded in our meeting until Sabbath evening. Being informed that it was the request of the Rev. Mr. Davis pastor of the congregation that we should not occupy the church any longer. We repaired to the dwelling house of Br. W. John, who has recently become a member of M. P. Church. Even here we had all a welcome reception and a profitable season. Br. Laishley braved a stormy day and arrived for his appointment at night and comforted the church from Isa, 33, 20, 21. I had tho't that the atmosphere of * * * * bigotry had well nigh fled before the gentle zephyrs of divine grace, saying 'love worketh no ill to his neighbor, therefore love is &c,' and "as ye would that men should do unto you, do ye so unto them, for this is the law and the prophets."

Second quarterly meeting just closed in Morgantown; my brethren whom I expected fail'd coming in consequence of sickness. One conversion—2 joined the church. Received during this conference year 16 members. One from the Presbyterian church the others from the world. One new meeting house is in progress near Stewardtown for the use of Methodist Protestants and when not occupied by them for all other christian denominations. May the Lord send prosperity in practical holiness, this conference year that the time may soon come when the world will be evangelized to God. Pray for us.

Yours truly &c,,
N. GILLESPIE.

MUSKINGUM DISRICT.

Hartford, O. Jan. 20*th* 1847.

MR. EDITOR:—I wish through the medium of the Recorder—to encourage my christian friends in general and especially Brs. Cushman, Robison, and Baker, who labored the last three conference years on this circuit and who preached so incessantly and prayed so fervently for a revival on this circuit and especially in the Westbrook class, but who were called away to labor in other parts of our Lord's vineyard without seeing their prayers answered. I can truly say that their prayers have been like bread cast upon the water, gathered after many days. Our little class has been on the decline for several years, and when Br. Hatfield came on the circuit he soon became acquainted with its situation. He began to pray to God fervently and zealously for a revival of religion in our class, but seemingly to no purpose until at a protracted watch meeting we have seen the Devil defeated almost on every hand. He is now on retreating ground, and the work of the Lord is begining to move forward, for notwithstanding the severe discouragements which arose from a death like coldness which seemed to pervade the class, Br. Hatfield remained inflexible. He labored zealously, prayed fervently night and day for the Lord to begin the work, and while the hearts of sinners seemed like adamant, and the class all doubting in reference to a revival here, and while a dark could seemed to overshadow the place; amidst these severe discouragements Satan made use of another agent who had recently been expelled from the class who exerted every latent power of his mind to prevent the work of the Lord in this place, but he found that his puny arm was too short to fight against the Lord. For while the dark clouds of unbelief and opposition were gathering thick around and hovering directly over us, it was then that Br. Hatfield, firmly believing that God was about to begin a work with us, preached, prayed and agonized 3 days and 3 nights before he could see any sign except through faith, opening the doors of the church every day and every night; when late on Sabbath night while praying admonishing and inviting sinners to flee from the camp of the enemy, and rally under the banner of Jesus, it was then that an aged grand father was seen to raise his head above the seated congregation, with his face bathed in tears which were fast trinkling down his grief worn cheeks, advanced towards the pulpit with his arm extended, gave the minister his hand, name to the church and his heart to God. He was quickly followed by another, who united with our old friend in desiring the prayers of the church that God would forgive his sins. Many unconverted were melted to tears, the fire began to burn in the hearts of christians. The members began to wake up. They began to pray in faith to God to convert sinners. The meeting was protracted 3 days longer. Seven united in the church and there are others who will join soon. Serious impressions were made upon many which I trust will result in much good, an increased attention to spiritual duties and ardent prayer in faith to God to convert sinners seems now to exist in our class of 16 members which a few days ago were only 9 members who thought that God had given up the place, and Satan had taken full possession. New members are being united to the several classes throughout the Delaware Ct. The people are receiving Br. Hatfield as one who walks worthy of the vocation wherewith he is called.

S. T.

Bird Run, January 27, 1847.

BR. BASSETT:—The first special manifestation of revival influence on Coshocton Circuit for this conference year was at a meeting held at the Ross apt.—This meeting continued six days. The church was much revived. Three professed Religion and joined the church. This society is of choice material, ready to do anything that would tend to promote the interest of the Redeemers Kingdom. Father Ross an aged veteran was able to attend at each interview and his once shrill voice was heard shouting "to the contest." The days of this Father among us, according to the common course of nature, cannot be many. But he consoles himself with the prospect of soon arriving at Home. The second was held at the union class, commencing christmas eve, continued 5 days. This meeting promised much good, but circumstances caused us to close just at a time when prospects were most flattering. Only 2 were received here. We expect to renew the attack at this point soon.

A third meeting was held at Pleasant Bethel commencing on New Years Eve. At this meeting we were assisted by Brs. Duling and Baker of Otsego Ct. this lasted 18 days and was truly a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. The Church seemed to stand erect, clothed in her beautiful garments, and received the smiles of the Master of Assemblies, while copious showers of grace divine refreshed, cheered, and gladened the hearts of the children of God; those without hope and without God in the world: who come from time to time in great numbers, to witness the good dealings of the Lord with his people; began one after another, to fall out with their sins and their sinful practices, and cry out "What shall we do?" Evening after evening, both Brethren and Sisters were at their posts and while the slain of the Lord were many and the mourner was heard "crying mightily unto the Lord, O Lord I beseech the deliver my soul, the united prayers of the church and mourners were heard and many emerged from natures darkness to the light and liberty of the children of God. We will not pretend to say how many were hopefully converted during this meeting. It was a season to which we look back with pleasure and we hope and believe will prove a lasting benefit to the neighborhood. Twenty-nine united with the church, a few of which will meet with other classes but more than 20 of them will remain at the Bethel class. This is very seasonable help to the good brethren at Bethel as many of their class mates have removed to the west from time to time thus reducing their number and tending to discourage but this seasonable blessing seems greatly to revive, Encourage, and build them up, may the Lord bless the old veterans, and may the new recruits prove valiant soldiers, and may they prove mutual benefit and blessing to each other.—

We have just commenced a protracted meeting at Bird Run Meeting House. Br. J. M. Winn was with us and preached for us last evening—Christians seemed happy in the Lord. Two young women presented themselves as seekers at the alter of prayer, no conversions at this meeting yet; but we have faith to believe we shall see many before the meeting closes. For this we intend to work as well as believe. O Lord work in us and by us for thine own name's Glory. Amen.

J. W. CASE,
J. H. HAMILTON.

Frederick Circuit, Jan. 29, 1847.

BR. BASSETT: Angels, that "minister to the heirs of salvation," are shouting over Frederick. "Great and marvellous are thy works, thou King of saints," and to their song, our rejoicing souls respond, "the Lord hath indeed done great things for us whereof we are glad." Great and glorious times we have had in Fredericktown, in which not only have the children of God been wonderfully revived, but sinners also have been powerfully converted to God.

A protracted meeting of 13 days continuance was held in this place commencing on the 15th inst. during which between 30 and 40 were made to rejoice in the conscious possession of the pearl of great price. The angels, that mail the news of the conversion of sinners from earth to heaven, have been kept busy through this meeting, in going up so frequently with fresh intelligence of the lost being found: for at almost every service; not only when there was preaching, but at the prayer meetings, and speaking meetings, and sometimes when but few persons had assembled, sinners were converted. Many persons who had long neglected the means of grace, and some who had hardly ever been at a religious meeting, were brought out, by visitations from the Spirit that strives with men. Nay, the whole population in and about the town seemed to be stirred up by the good Spirit. It comes as with a rush to the place where prayer was want to be made. Our place of worship in Frederick was "too strait" for the crowding congregations, and we had to avail ourselves of the kindness of our Congregational friends, by using their large and commodious church, which was generally full to overflowing.

At the love-feast, on the second Sabbath of the meeting, the days of heaven upon earth seemed to be begun among us. One hundred and two individuals stood up as living witnesses of the God of all grace, and happily spoke in evidence of the religion of Jesus as "a glorious treasure." A considerable proportion of the speakers were young converts, babes in Christ, who have just commenced to speak the language of Canaan; and, Br. Clancy, my predecessor on this circuit, had he been present, would have been compelled to raise the Glory-shout, by hearing many of the youths of his acquaintance, male and female, once lost, now saved by grace divine, triumphantly declace what God has done for their souls. At the close of this protracted effort, 27 came forward to unite on probation with the society in this place. Others ere long will, we confidently hope cast in their lot among us, to swell our numbers and to strengthen our cause. An enlargement of the meeting house is strongly talked of. We have received in all since last Conference 40. At this meeting we were favored with the labors of Brs. T. Potter and P. Inskeep, who labored like men in the cause of their Master. The Lord bless them for their labors of love. We have yet three other protracted meetings published. May the Lord still continue to bless us, and the work of the Lork yet prosper more and more among us.

Yours, SAMUEL LANCASTER.

MR. ADAMS.—The National Intelligencer of the 14th inst, says:

"We are happy to hear from Boston that Ex-President Adams has so far recovered from the effect of his late sudden and serious indisposition that he was last Sunday able to attend Church, and is expected to be in his seat in the House of Representatives within a week or two,"

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1847.

DR. FRANCIS WHITCOMB.—We learn by the Religious Telescope, that this brother, a minister of the Church of the United Brethren, died recently in Elkhart County, Ia. It is stated that in dying, he said that all was well.

SUSPENSION BRIDGE AT NIAGARA FALLS.—We learn by the Boston Olive Branch that the charter for a Bridge over the Niagara at the Falls is now complete, having received the sanction of the Legislature of New York, and the signature of the British Queen. It is expected that the work will be commenced the ensuing Spring. This work will be of great importance both to the U. States and to Canada.

FIRST PAGE.—We have yielded more space than usual this week to our Ecclesiastical Department, to the exclusion of our usual variety. Hereafter, we must avoid giving too many articles at once on the same subject, as we are anxious that our paper should be found one of general interest.

OHIO APPLES.—See an article on this subject on our fourth page. It should have been regularly quoted from the Ohio Cultivator.

MONROE EDWARDS, the forger, died in the prison Hospital at Sing Sing, N. Y. of consumption, about a week ago.

ANOTHER FATAL EXPLOSION.—The towboat Phoenix exploded her boilers at Southwest Pass, on the 21st ult. killing about 20 persons. Sad—but not uncommon.

FRIGHTFUL MASSACRE.—Information has been communicated both to the British and French government, that a chief on the Western coast of Africa, having 2000 slaves on his hands which he could not dispose of, had them all butchered before his eyes. Awful, most awful. Yet it is but a concomitant of slavery and the slave trade.

☞We omitted to mention last week that the Steamer Newark struck a snag in the Muskingum river, between this place and Marietta, and sunk. It is hoped however that her hull can be raised, and that her enterprising owners Messrs. Bishops will sustain a loss of little more than $1000.

☞The letter of our New England Correspondent this week will be found interesting. Read it.

OHIO LEGISLATURE.—Both branches of the Legislature have resolved to adjourn on Monday next, the 8th inst.

NEWARK CIRCUIT.—We omitted to mention in our paper of last week that we had just enjoyed the satisfaction of making our first visit to this circuit, at the quarterly meeting held at Irville, by Brs. Maynard and Kinney, the circuit ministers. There was not a large attendance during the meeting, on account of apprehensions of small pox, which was prevailing within an adjoining township. Yet it was a pleasant profitable meeting. Besides enjoying the hospitalities of other kind families, we visited our aged Br. Thrap, now about 70 years of age. He was one of the first, (if not the very first,) gospel minister who settled in Muskingum county. He was also one of the earliest Methodist reformers, a "Wesleyan Repository" man. Newark circuit, (though rather a misnomer as it does not embrace Newark) is one of the best of circuits. May it have great religious prosperity.

TEMPERANCE MEETING.

Quite an interesting Temperance Meeting was held in this place on Tuesday evening last. It is supposed that over 200 Sons of Temperance, consisting of the Zanesville Olive Branch, Muskingum, and Putnam Divisions, together with a large number of ladies and gentleman assembled at the Presbyterian Church.

The exercises were very appropriate. Singing an excellent Temperance Hymn by the choir—Prayer was then offered by Rev. J. M. Courtney, of the Baptist Church. The Rev Wm. Smallwood followed in an address of some length, which was very suitable to the occasion. After the address a large, nice and handsome Bible was presented to the Putnam Division, No. 64, S. of T. by Miss Fairlamb, in behalf of the ladies of Putnam; which she accompanied with a very appropriate address, which was responded to by the Rev. W. I. Fee, Chaplain of the Putnam Division. We would make still further account of the proceedings of the evening, only we understand that a committee are appointed to furnish a report of them, which will appear soon. Also the Rev. W. Smallwood, Miss Fairlamb, and Rev. W. I. Fee, were requested to furnish copies of their addresses for publication. We must say however that the singing under the direction of Mr. Ward was excellent, and in fine, we do not think it could have been easily beaten. Every one seemed delighted and returned home with the joyous anticipation that old King Alchohol would be soon banished from this part of the country.

C. A.

COLUMBIAN MAGAZINE.—The February number is before us, embellished as usual, with three fine engravings, and a piece of original poetry. Contents are original, furnished by eighteen talented contributors. Israel Post Publisher, Nassau St. N. York. $3 per year. Two copies for $5.

The Markets.

In Zanesville Wheat at 60cts., flour $3,75.

At Cincinnati on the 1st inst. flour was worth $4,75, Wheat $1,00.

At Pittsburgh on the 1st inst. flour was selling at $3,87½ a 4,07.

At Philadelphia on the 30th ult. flour was worth $6,00

At Boston on the 29th ult. flour was bringing $6,75.

At New York on the 30th ult flour was selling at $6,75.

At Baltimore on the 30th ult. flour was worth from $6,00 to 8,18¾.

REV. EDWARD SMITH.—This distinguished minister of the Wesleyan M. Connection, has been making a visit at Putnam and Zanesville. He preached last Sabbath afternoon at the Presbyterian Church in this place, at candlelight at the M. E. Church, and on Monday evening, at the M. P. Church in Zanesville. We enjoyed the privilege of hearing two interesting and profitable sermons by him, viz. at the first and last named places. We were not aware till we were favored with an interview with Br. S. that he had retired from the more active scenes of public life, and located himself in the borders of Delaware Co. Ohio. His post office address however, is Chesterfield, Knox Co. O. His retirement was occasioned by a failure of his health, a year or two ago. At the last A. Conference he was appointed Conference Missionary, in view of his rendering what service he might be able, and to obtain contributions for a Mission amongst the 20,000 fugitives from slavery, now located in Canada West. The claims of the object, he presented on each public occasion here, and met with a somewhat liberal response. Br. S. acknowledged the advance of Christian liberality, as he observed that he had not for three years past, had access to any pulpit, save of his own denomination, until he visited Columbus last week. It occured to us, that possibly there had been a mutual improvement both in Br. Smith and the churches. At any rate, he did not whilst here, denounce all churches but his own, as proslavery and Babylonish. He freely pointed out the duty of the churches in reference to slavery, (which indeed we wish to see every minister do in a proper spirit and manner,) and we know not that any were offended. Br. Smith is capable of being very useful in the cause of Christ, and the cause of humanity. We are gratified to say that he has mostly recovered from the injury received by an accident which occured a few weeks ago to which reference has been made in the papers.

The Distress in Ireland, Again.

The accounts received by Irish newspapers brought out by the Hibernia, of the results of the famine in Ireland, are heart rending. All the calamities which have befallen that unfortunate country for many years together, would not equal the present dreadful visitation. No reasonable doubt can be entained of the truth of the picture, that thousands are actually dying from starvation. We are assured that the government is affording all the aid in its power, and yet the prevalent distress seems scarcely at all mitigated. Read the following statement of cases taken from a single Dublin paper, the Freeman's Journal for which we are indebted to the New York Daily Sun.

At Skibbereen a reporter staying half an hour in the town counted three funeral processions. One family was found dying of disease and want, unable to go out and seek food or medicine. In another cabin, nine persons lay stretched on the ground, suffering from fever produced by want of food; here a woman had given birth to a child, lying upon some straw. Six persons lay around her, suffering from aggravated symptoms of fever brought on by starvation. In another cabin a whole family was ill with fever, having lost two of its number within two days, and the unfeeling landlord had unhinged the door, took off their blankets, and left them to die without shelter, clothing or food. In thirty-two houses at least two of each family were ill with fever or dropsy; in some cases nine in family were down, unable to move, and apparently anxious for death to relieve them from their sufferings. A man, his wife and children were confined with the fever, and among the dying children was found the decaying corpse of a little boy who had died some time previously. In this case a piece of coarse packing stuff was the only covering over the living and the winding sheet of the dead. In another house a poor woman having lost two of her children by fever, was found lying at the side of her third and last child. She tried to go to the town for relief for her dying infant, and while doing so, dropped down in the street, was carried home and died in twenty four hours. John Maloney and Michael Donovan, of the town of Beenean, were found in their hovel, having been dead some time. They died of famine. There was nothing in the house to keep the vermin off the bodies. Four corpses lay in that town as they had died, without preparation of any kind. Another case is reported, of a boy who lay six days and nights beside a dead body, without being able to procure assistance for its removal, and when the last farthing candle went out, the rats commenced to eat the decomposing body.

These are only a few of the thousand cases reported in the Irish papers. We could fill our columns for days with these details from various parts of Ireland and the highlands of Scotland.

Now, it is this very intelligence of scarsity and destitution across the Atlantic, as announced by the late arrival, that has produced the present rise in prices of breadstuffs in this country. But whilst farmers and others are rejoicing at the increased demand and price upon their grain, should they not more than sympathise with those whose very distress has thus benefitted our American markets? We submit whether in bringing their abundance to the store houses or to the mills for sale, they should not appropriate a certain portion, to be transmitted to famishing Ireland. For, arrangements are already made even here in Muskingum County, for shipping breadstuffs across the Atlantic. We have taken the liberty to refer especially to farmers as being possessed in such abundance with the very sustenance so greatly needed by those who are 'ready to perish.' But we would not exonerate those in others branches of life, who also have abundance, and could conveniently spare the price of one or more barrels of flour or sacks of corn. We are gratified to learn that in the eastern cities something efficient is being done. But let it not be forgotten that Ohio is now one of the first States of the Union, and blessed with the greatest abundance. And now that the channel is open for conveying our benefactions directly to the needy, we are without excuse if we withhold our sympathies and our aid. A circular has been largely distributed through this County, and committees appointed in each township to solicit and receive contributions. We hope that Muskingum and other Counties will do their duty.

Since writing the above, we see it stated in Bicknell's Reporter that on board the Hibernia, during the passage, a collection was made, of £70 sterling, ($359,00) for the starving population of Ireland. The passengers, we should judge, could not have been deceived by exaggerated accounts.

SEARS' MAGAZINE for February, is before us. It contains descriptions of the States of North and South Carolina, with numerous illustrations. An interesting number. R. Sears, Publisher, N. York, $2 per annum. Two copies for $3.

NATIONAL ERA.—With pleasure, we acknowledge the receipt of this large and valuable weekly. It is a national anti slavery paper, recently commenced in Washington City. Dr. G. Baily, formerly of the Cincinnati Herald and Philanthropist, is Editor, assisted by Messrs, J. G. Whittier and A. A. Phelps, Corresponding Editors. We hail the establishment of an independent press at the national capital as an Era indeed. Our earnest wish and prayer shall be given for its success and permanency. We are gratified to learn that already its patronage is quite extensive, and that its appearance is welcomed by many at the South. Dr. Baily weilds a masterly pen, having had ten years experience in editing the Philanthropist at Cincinnati; and his coadjutors in the present enterprise, are too well known to need our acknowledgment of their abilities. Success to the National Era. Terms, $2 per annum in advance. Address L. P. Noble, publisher, Washington, D. C.

FOUR SHORT SERMONS, on different subjects. By Rev. J. Waite, Greenville Ill. A copy of this unassuming pamphlet has been sent us, and so for as we have had time to examine we are pleased with the sermons. We understand that the writer is unable through indisposition to preach orally, and therefore sends out these written sermons to do good.

CONSUMPTION AND ITS ANTIDOTE.—Dr. Jewett, of Columbus has sent us a copy of his publication with the above title, exhibiting his mode of treatment and cure by Iatroleptic Remedies. Certificates of numerous physicians and others are given declaring the great virtues of these remedies. And we feel free to say, that from acquaintance with some of them, we have confidence in their efficacy in many cases.

ALEXANDER'S PICTORIAL MESSENGER.—This is a large, popular family newspaper, published at Philadelphia, and one of our most interesting exchanges. It has a weekly circulation of 60,000 copies. It promises that neither slang nor vulgarity shall ever pollute its pages. Terms for a single subscription, $2 per year. Four copies for $5. Twelve copies for $10. Address, Charles Alexander, Franklin Place, Philad.

NEW YORK SUN.—Daily—Weekly and Monthly. We have repeatedly expressed our obligations to the publishers of the Sun for their daily issues during the year past, as well as for numerous extras with important intelligence, though we previously had but their weekly in exchange. Our news department shows that we quote largely and constantly from the Daily Sun.

The Sun Weekly is a very handsome and intersting sheet, containing much instructive reading matter besides a great variety of general intelligence, with handsomely engraved illustrations every week. Terms, $1 per year.

The Illustrated Sun, and Monthly Literary Journal. Under this title, the publishers have just commenced an elegant monthly publication, the second number of which (for February) has just reached us. It is a sheet of extra mammoth size and very fine paper, folded in sixteen large pages suitable for binding. The present number contains nearly 30 engravings, some of them representing cities, scenery &c. very interesting. This is indeed "something new under the Sun." Terms, only $1 per year, and only newspaper postage. Six copies for $5. The Illustrated Sun, will be a very attractive publication Address, M. Y. Beach & Sons, N. York. Will the obliging publishers, favor us with the January number?

New England Correspondence of the Western Recorder.

Boston, Jan. 25, 1847.

DEAR BR. BASSETT: More time than I intended, has passed away, since I last wrote you, before troubling your readers with another birds-eye communication.

Yesterday the city was put into a panic by having the case of A. J. Terrill, for the supposed murder of Mrs. Bickford, committed to the jury. Doubless you know we are all in high dudgeon in Massachusetts against capital punishment. Circumstantial evidence was so strong against Terril both for murder and arson that many of the vast crowd who witnessed the trial, feared that the jury would return a verdict of guilty—if so, as the law now is, the penalty would be the gallows! The jury were out about five hours, and returned a verdict of—not guilty. The prisoner at the bar was a young man about 23, and is supposed to have put to death one of natures finest specimens of beauty—but alas, for her beauty—it proved her ruin! The symmetry of her form, her exquisitly fair and glowing features, and her expressive dark hazel eye, attracted the notice of every body. If she travelled on a steamboat, or stopped at a hotel, her smiles were sought for, alike by the young and old, by the humble, and the high and noble. She could not endure such flattery. She flirted with her admirers, she abandoned her young husband, she neglected to adorn her intellectual and spiritual being. She was wholly devoted to the external. She became a coquette and fell! Whether she killed herself, or Terrill killed her, God only knows!

Our state legislature is now in session. Little else has yet been done besides arranging and preparing business for the future. The election sermon this year was not as good, altogether, as usual although it had one redeeming quality. The Rev. Mr. Bisbee, for that was the minister's name, speak in a plain and feeling manner of the necessity there was, that rulers should be good men "ruling in the fear of God." He closed with an address to the Governor which was extremely gratifying at least to the wise and the good. Our Governer is decidedly a good man. He appears to be a devoted, praying christian. He is deacon of a Baptist Church, is polite and easy in his manners but plain and natural, that is, unaffected. He never wears a collar, or dicky as some call it. A plain stock is his only cravat. With all his plainness, piety, and temperance, (for he goes hard against intemperance) he is the most popular Governor Massachusetts has had in modern times.

By the by, one of the younger Protestant Methodist preachers Rev. N. S. Clarke is sent from Rochester, the town of my residence as a member of the legislature. He is a truly devoted man, and I think will bear it very well. The State of religion is low in New England. Still, I think the churches are not backsliding, and I trust the time is not far distant when there will be a more general out pouring of the spirit, and an all pervading reformation begin.

Our noble metropolis is altogether an interesting city. We have, here for antiquities in architecture some interesting relics of the days, especially, 'which tried man's souls.' The house for instance, in which John Hancock resided when he signed the "Declaration" of our independence is still standing. Fanuel Hall, called the "cradle of liberty" in which the pioneers of the revolution assembled to deliberate, is still in good repair, and in good repute. A runaway slave of rare and splended talents, occupied it last week, in addressing overflowing audiences who would stand on their feet an hour an a half, to hear his tales of woe. The "old South" Church, which the British occupied as a barracks before they evacuated Boston, "Kings Chapel" which became the first Unitarian Church in America, and Brattle street church, which has the same cannon ball now sticking in the wall of the building, which was thrown there from a British cannon; all these, and several other buildings, were erected long before the American Revolution.

There are now about one hundred churches in the city, and as many ministers; yet the people of Boston are not properly supplied with church room—all the churches will not hold those who would attend worship could they obtain seats and pay the rent of them.

Since I commenced writing this letter we have had one of the most destructive fires which Boston has experienced for many years, destroying about one hundred buildings, and throwing about fifty families housless on the charities of the cold world. This fire had its origin on a bitter cold night in a Bowling Saloon, where men were bereft of reason in their dissipation.

O Alcohol! Thou foe of humanity—demon curse of the domestic sphere! When will thy ravages cease to strew our pathway with squallid poverty and haggard wretchedness? And when will the wailings of the prisoner, clanking in the chains with which alcohol has bound him cease to accumulate like maw worms on the bosom of society. L. D. J.

PREACHER'S AID SOCIETY.

Pittsburgh, January, 28*th* 1847.

REV. A. H. BASSETT, Dear Sir, I am requested to transmit to you the following resolutions, for publication in the Recorder. Passed at a meeting of the board of manager of the Preacher's Aid Society, Jan. 27 1847.

Resolved, by the Board of Managers of the Preachers Aid Society of the Pittsburgh conference of the Methodist Protestant Church, That all the Superintendants and their assistants in the District be, and they are hereby requested to obtain annual and life members of the Aid society, enter their names and the amount subscribed in a book kept for that purpose. And shall collect all the monies so subscribed and pay them over at each Annual Conference.

Resolved, That the superintendants and their assistants be, and they are hereby requested whenever it is practicable to obtain Donations, Bequests and Notes of Twenty five dollars and upwards payable at some distant date not exceeding twenty years, with interest from the date of note, the Interest to be paid annually. The giver of the note to hold the money on loan and make the principal sure, at the time specified.

JOHN SARGEANT Sec. Pro Tem.

THE THEATRE A SCHOOL OF MORALS.—Will any of you who have been to theatres, please to tell me whether virtue ever received important accessions from the gallery of theatres?

Will you tell me whether the pit is a place where an ordinarily modest man would love to seat his children?

Was ever a theatre known where a prayer at the opening, and a prayer at the close, would not be tormentingly discordant?

How does it happen that in a school for morals, the teachers never learn their own lessons?

Would you allow a son or a daughter to associate alone with actors or actresses?

Do these men who promote virtue so zealously when acting, take any part in public moral enterprises, when their stage dresses are off?

Which would surprise you most, to see actors steadily at church, or to see Christians steadily at a theatre? Would not both strike you as singular incongruities?

What is the reason that loose and abandoned men abhor religion in a Church, and love it so much in a theatre.

Since the theatre is the handmaid of virtue why are drinking houses so necessary to its neighborhood, yet so offensive to Churches?—H. W. Beecher.

HINTS TO RETAILERS.—The editor of the Hartford "Charter Oak," in a recent account of a "trip to the Bay State," makes the following statement in reference to Blandford—

"There have been in Blandford, since the incorporation of the town, thirty-eight tavernkeepers. Of these, three died of delirium tremens—seven became intemperate—one died in the poor house—eight lost all their property—seventeen did not improve their pecuniary condition by the business—three only acquired property—four were cursed with intemperate wives—twenty five sons, and four daughters became intemperate."

If we would enjoy ourselves, we must take the world as it is, mixed up with thousand spots of sunshine—a cloud here and there—a bright sky—a storm to-day, calm to-morrow—the chilly piercing winds of autumn, and the bland, reviving air of summer.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

News from Turkey.

FURTHER EXTRACTS BY THE HIBERNIA.

The news from Turkey is of the most distress- g character, as to the Nestorians. The butch- y of this inoffensive people has been continued ring the period intervening since the Steamer evious to the Hibernia, left Liverpool.

MAR YOHANNAN, the ve erable Bishop and pa- arch of the Nestorians, who visited the United ates a few years since, was captured by the butch- Bedohan Bai, and impaled alive. This event eates a universal sensation of horror in New ork, Bo ston, and other eastern cities, where the shop is well remembered by the religious com- uni y.

The pastors who were taken by their invetcrate emies, had oil poured over their bodies and re then roasted alive before slow fires amid the rs, yells, and other hellish demonstrations of light on the part of their Mahommedan persecu- rs.

Sixty seven villages had been laid waste by em, and no less than eight hundred persons put death by the worst tortures that inhumanity uld devise. Neither men, women, nor children r helpless infants, were spared by the demons human form. Some were burnt, others impal- . cut to pieces, stabbed, and put to death in ev- y variety of form.

LOSS OF FLAT BOATS AND OF LIVES.—The Ben anklin No. 7, brought news to Cincinnati that e fell in with a Flat Boat 6 miles below Helena nk to the roof, and five men clinging to her.— was loaded with produce, was towed ashore d the men saved—from Cincinnati. Another at was lost one mile above this.

The Ben also picked up on her passage the ews of four other flatboats, lost in the late storm; ho report the loss of several other boats between emphis and Plum Point, during the same storm.

A passenger on board the Ben reports the loss two Coal boats at the mouth of the Wabash, and t of a crew of thirteen in number, twelve were owned, or frozen to death. Five miles above e mouth of the Wabash, another boat, with five en, was lost in the same gale.

We also learn that the steamboat Louisville ran er a flat boat at Enterprise, and sank her instan- y. Particulars not known.—Pitt. Gaz.

FATAL RAILROAD ACCIDENT.—William Flint, of anvers, Mass., was killed on the Essex railroad st Thursday, at the crossing at Frey's Mills.— he engineer sounded the alarm, but being aged, af and somewhat crippled in his hands, deceas- d either did not hear it or was unabled to get his ehicle off the track in time. The train came pon him and dashed him over the dam upon the e, killing him instantly, and injured the horse so uch that it was found neccessary to kill him al- .

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 24th—6 P. M. Henry Da- ault, a centenarian was killed yesterday after- oon by the Germantown Railroad stone car, on e d s ending grade, in Ninth street, above Poplar, e car by its own momentum overtook him as he as crossing the street; the brakeman was unable o arrest its progress; the unfortunate man, through eafness did not hear the approach of the car.— The markets of Saturday were quiet. In cotton nd flour there was no change.

FROZEN TO DEATH.—A young man named urns, resided in Aisquith street, Baltimore, went ut on Thursday morning on a gunning excursion ith two or three others, and in the course of the ay got seperated from his companions. After a onsiderable search, they found him frozen stiff.

LOSSES BY FIRE.—At Roxbury, on Thursday, immon's Turpentine Factory. At Lowell, on riday, about midnight, a fire commenced in Merrimac street, which destroyed:—the Restora- or of Mr. Barron, the Perfumery shop of Mr. N. . Cary, the Boot, Shoe and Leather store of Mr. . Critchet, the Watch and Jewelry store of Mr. . K. Fellows, the Book store and Bindery of Mr. ohn E. Allen, the Dry Goods and Lace store of . Handscom. Three or four families living over ese stores were burnt out. The dwelling house f Captain David Lincoln was burnt at Brewster n Sunday night. It was insured at the Mutual ffice at Yarmouth for $1550. The Court House t Newton, Sussex County, N. J., was fired by a risoner and burnt down before day light last hursday morning.

CALAMITOUS FIRE.—On Friday of last week the ouse of John Connor, in the township of Lanark Canada, was burnt to the ground. He perished n the flames, with his wife, five children and ser- ant girl.

A SAD RESULT.—Joseph Stockhouse, jr., aged ineteen, of Mount Holley, N. J., seeing a boy reak through the ice while skating, ran to his res- ue, and after considerable efforts, rescued him; ut sad to relate, being so chilled by the cold him- elf that he sank and was drowned.

LIGHT OF THE GREAT FIRE.—The Nantucket nquirer says the light of the fire in Boston was seen by the watch in both the towers of that place The distance is about 90 miles.

HORRIBLE DEATH.—As Mr. Joseph Hall, of Lyme, N. H., was lighting a match to fire a seam harged with powder, at the Summit, in the town f Orange on Friday afternoon, a spark from the match caught the trail and exploded the whole, lowing him into the air and killing him instantly. He has left a wife and four small children.—Wor- ester Spy.

SUDDEN DEATH AT BERLIN, CT.—Mr. Isaac Dobson, aged 23 years, died very suddenly on the 22d inst. of apoplexy of the lungs. He had just prosecuted a very large amount of business. Mr. D. had an insurance of $2,000 on his life, in the New York Company, which will be of great ben- efit to his family.

DREADFUL ACCIDENT.—On Thursday last a shocking accident occured at Lonaconing, Md., which resulted in the instantaneous death of John Barrett, the assistant engineer of the iron works there. The engine was stopped, and Barrett en- tered the cylinder to clean out the flues, not com- ing out when the signal was given, the steam got up, and the engine set in motion, crushing him into atoms.

A COMMERCIAL EVENT.—The Hibernia, beside her two or three millions of dollars in specie, had a very valuable cargo of goods. The whole a- mount of her freight was greater than that of any other which ever pased from the Eastern to the Western continent, or which has ever entered any of our ports.—Boston Courier.

MOYAMENSING HOUSE OF INDUSTRY.—Over fifty colored persons are daily employed, at the pres- ent time, in the House of Industry, at Hancock Hall, Shippen street above Ninth, established so as to place within the reach of the deserving poor the means of procuring subsistence by their own exertions.—Philadelphia Ledger.

If you would live long, drink cold water.—Those who use this as a beverage usually live longer than those who drink intoxicating liquors.

REMITTANCES TO IRELAND.—Mr. Jacob Harvey, who published recently a statement that the large sum of $808,000 had been remitted to Ireland from New York, in small sums during the last year, through certain houses, has since received returns from Philadelphia and Baltimore, which swells the total of remissions from the three cities to $1,001,650—to wit, $170,150 from Philadelphia and $22,600 from Baltimore. He says:

Here are one million of dollars, part of the hard earnings of the poor Irish emigrants, sent in one year to help their poorer friends at home, and all done, quietly, regularly and systematically, without any parade of public meetings or committees. It will be acknowledged by the most prejudice sectarians and politicians that my countrymen have their virtues as well as their failings—they certainly receive a full share of abuse for the one and I therefore think they are honestly entitled to praise for the other.

THE CENTENARIAN, whose death we noticed by telegraph yesterday, died at the residence of his daughter at Fort Pleasant, Monmouth county, on Friday, the 15th inst. His name was John Chamberlain, and his age 105. He was a Revolutionary Pensioner, and raised eleven children, whose offspring amounted to 175-children, grand, and great, and great great grand. He enjoyed extraordinary health and a vigorous mind. Although not a professor of religion, his dying words were, when asked, "Father are you in pain."—"No. I have seen my Saviour! I am happy! Let me rest!

FATAL ACCIDENT.—About 11 o'clock in the forenoon of last Saturday, an accident occured at the workshop of our fellow citizen, Elijah Ross, by which a worthy citizen, Cornelius Wilkins, lost his life. A young man, named David Brown, had been loading a gun, when in adjusting the cap it exploded, the ball passing through the stove pipe; and striking Mr. Wilkins in the back thence passing the body and lodging near the surface of the right breast; whence it was extracted a few hours afterwards. It is supposed to have passed through the lungs. Every attention was bestowed upon the wounded man, and until sometime in the day on Saturday, hopes were entertained of his recovery; but he gradually sunk; and about three in the afternoon of that day breathed his last. He leaves a widow and three children to mourn their sad bereavement. He was about forty years of age. As in all other cases where accident occurs, it is easy now to see how it might have been avoided; and no doubt a degree of care might be used that would greatly diminish the number of accidents; but we are assured by Mr. Ross, that the course pursued by the young man was what is the daily practice of persons in the habit of using guns; and that but for the tragic result, none would think of blaming him. The deceased was his intimate friend. We feel therefore no disposition to wound his already lacerated feelings more deeply by imputing to him greater want of care than is daily exhibited. The deceased was a member of the Sons of Temperance, and will be buried with the appropriate ceremonies of that association.—Z. Gazette.

EMANCIPATION IN THE WEST INDIES.—Associations of colored persons have been able to purchase various estates in Jamaica and other West India Islands. It is mentioned that the Perseverance Estate, 470 acres, has been sold for $5.000. The Little field Estate, 500 acres, for $9000 Lovely Lass Estate, 500 acres, sold for $5,715. The North Brook Estate for $1,000.

TERRIBLE CALAMITY.—We learn from the Franklin (Pa.) Gazette, that on the 21st inst. the dwelling house of Mr. Anson Benedict, of Allegheny township, in that county, was destroyed by fire, and that three of his children (the eldest about 13 years of age) perished in the flames.—From the position in which their remains were afterwards found, it is supposed that they must have been in bed asleep, at the time the fire broke out and overtook them.

The parents, and two elder children, who had been absent at some of the neighboring houses returned, almost distracted, to witness the scene of desolation but not in time to save anything, or to render any relief to the suffering victims of the devouring element.

The fire is supposed to have originated from a vessel of hot ashes left on the porch, or stove--another awful warning to house-keepers, and others that they cannot be too careful in the disposal of so dangerous an article as live ashes.—P. C. Adv.

BUSINESS IN CINCINNATI.—We may judge of the business transacted in the Queen City, from the fact that sixteen auctioneers pay a tax to the State of $735,205, and that one house pay $198,875, and the lowest return is $7,528. It is impossible for any city to have better prospects.

REVIVAL AMONG SEAMEN.—The Sheet Anchor states that there is a revival of religion among the seamen at the port of Boston. The meetings in the Bethel church are fully attended, and many are anxiously seeking salvation. This is good news. The very same means which produced this result are employed in New Orleans, and the same God who gave his blessing with the means, has power in New Orleans to give success to his own instruments. Why then do we not see similar effects?—Pa. Spectator.

A telegraph communication from Albany to Pittsburgh, via. New York and Philadelphia, was made, and an answer received, including all the detentions, in two hours. The distance is 990 miles.

"I'M OFF."—There is a moral in the following incident which may prove beneficial to some of our fair readers:—

'A young man went to pay his addresses to a very pretty girl whom he had seen abroad neat as a pink, and mild as a summer evening—all smiles and dimples. Going in unexpectedly one day, he heard the voice of his charmer an octave above and at least a demisemiquaver too rapid for good nature. Standing a moment, he saw her pass,—those silken tresses, in a wild disorder.

'Streaming like a meteor thro' the troubled air,

—slip shod—the heel of one stocking half torn off. It was not the disabille, of industry, but the grab of the slattern. Amazed, the lover gazed a moment then crying, 'I'm off,' took his departure forever.

'Such a girl—so neat in public, so sweet before company—I look upon as a piece of veneered work, a thin covering of beautiful stuff, put on for show, concealing the rough and unsightly material of which the article is mainly formed.'

EFFECTS OF TOBACCO.—Dr. Rush says of tobacco—"It impairs appetite, produces dyspepsia, tremors, vertigo, headache, and epilepsy. It injures the voice, destroys the teeth, and imparts to the complexion a disagreeable, dusky brown."

Dr. Boerhaave says that "since the use of tobacco, has been so general in Europe, the number of hypochondriacal and consumptive complaints has increased by its use."

Dr. Cullen says: "I have known a small quantity snuffed up the nose to produce giddiness, stupor and vomiting. There are many instances of its more violent effects, even of its proving a mortal poison."

Dr. Darwin says, "It produces diseases of the salivary glands and the panereas, and injures the powers of digestion."

Dr. Tiscott once saw the smoking of it prove fatal.

Our own highly distinguished Dr. Muzzy, speaks thus:—"Tobacco is one of the most active and deadly vegetable poisons known. It acts directly upon the nervous power, enfeebling, deranging, or extinguishing, the action of life."

NOTICES.

TANNER'S CREEK CT. IA. CON.—The second quarterly Conference will be held at the Stone Chapel, East Fork, on Saturday, March 6th ensuing. We most cordially invite any of our ministerial or lay brethren from adjoining circuits, or from Cincinnati, who can do so, to come to our assistance. We hope the brethren will not all excuse themselves but come, for we want help very much. Br. Paul, our minister, is detained ed away, as we fear by affliction.

WM. SMITH

COLUMBIA CT. MUSK. CON.—Our President is informed that his appointment will be at Graham's station, on the Ohio river. We also purpose holding a two days meeting at Athens Bridge, March 20th and 21st. We invite Brs. H. T. Lawson, C. J. Sears, S. Means, W. Sears, J. W. Southard, F. Edwards, and any other brethren who can attend. S. ELLIOTT.

Ohio Conference.

Presidential Visitation.

Washington	Circuit,	February 13	& 14.
Bainbridge	"	" 20	& 22.
Buford	"	" 27	& 28.
Batavia	"	March 6	& 7.
Cincinnati	"	" 13	& 14.
Lebanon Station,		" 17.	Night.
Twin Creek	"	" 20	& 21.
Greenville Mission,		" 27	& 28.

J. M. YOUNG.

COLUMBIA MISSION.—The second quarterly meeting will be held at Br. (somebody's) three miles north of Columbia, 20th, Feb. 1847.

G. WILLIAMS.

ZANESVILLE CIRCUIT.—Our second quarterly meeting will commence at Sringfield Chapel, on Saturday, the 13th of February. Our brethren, who can, are requested to come.

C. S. CALLIHAN.

WOODSFIELD CT.—I would inform Br. Clancy, Pres. that notwithstanding we had not the pleasure of sitting under his ministrations, as per appointment, some money has been placed in my hands for him, which is subject to his order. By request of the brethren of Somerville Ct. I have been preaching for them, and will do so till the end of the year, if they are not supplied.

H. T. LAWSON.

XENIA CIRCUIT, O. CON.—Our second quarterly meeting will be held in Xenia, commencing, Feb. 13, proximo. Brethren from adjoining circuits are invited to attend.

JOSEPH WHITE.

TWIN CREEK CIRCUIT, O. CON.—Our second quarterly meeting will be held at Liberty, to commence on the 20th of Feb. We respectfully invite Brs. R. M. Dalbey, G. M. Hunt, O. P. Stephens, S. P. Kezeria, and J. Pelan to come over and assist us, and we will endeavor to return the favor. W. PELAN.

KALIDA CIRCUIT.—O. DIST.—We expect to hold our second quarterly meeting, on the 13th and 14th February, at Columbus Grove, and we earnestly solicit the assistance of Brs. A. Besse, G. Hunt, and J. P. Fay of Lima. Brethren, come over and help us. J. L. BORTON.

MY DEAR BR. BASSETT: As the health of my family had improved a little, when I left home, the last day of the past year, I have concluded to publish my appointments, for February and March:

Brownsville	Ct.	7th of	February
George Creek	"	14th	"
Morgantown	"	21th	"
Union	St.	28th	"
Connelsville	Ct.	7th	March
Fayette	"	14th	"

Yours truly, GEO. BROWN.

Jacob Brown's, Brook co. Va. Jan. 6, 1846.

COLUMBIA CIRCUIT.—Our second quarterly meeting w be held on the 20th and 21st of February, at Pleasant Hill meeting house, 7 miles west of the town of Athens. We invite Brs. M. Scott, W. W. Tipton, C. J. Sears, and we promise our aid on any occasion, when timely notice shall have been given. We ask an interest in the prayers of all, that we may on that occasion have the presence of the Great Head of the Church.

S. ELLIOTT.

PENNVILLE CIRCUIT.—The second quarterly meeting will be held at the Mt. Zion Chapel, commencing, Friday, Feb. 12, 1847. We invite Brs. Potter and Hatfield with any others of our local or travelling brethren who can attend, to come and aid us, and let all who cannot attend, help us by your prayers.

C. J. SEARS.

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT.

LETTERS RECEIVED.

Wm, Munhall, L D. Johnson, H. Matson, J. Sargeant, L. Garrett, N, Burgess, N, Gillespie, 1 sub. L. Smith, Wm, Smith, Josiah Carnes, S. Clawson, S. Elliott, A. Hill, J. T. Miller, T. Hanna. J. W. Case, 1 sub. D. Gibbons, S. Lancaster, O. P. Stephens, 3 new subs. and an X. Just like you.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

From.	For.	Pays to Vol.	No.	$ cts
C. S. Callihan,	H. Myres,	7	52	2 00
W. Munhall,	J. Miller,	9	13	2 00
W. H. Marshall,	L. Miller,	9	21	2 00
N. Burgess,	H. Wilber,	8	14	2 00
Wm. Smith,		8	52	2 00
Josiah Carnes,		8	5	2 00
S. Elliott,	J. Boileau,	8	52	2 00
A. Hill,		8	17	1 00
J. W. Case,	Wm. Forney,	8	43	1 00
O. P. Stephens,	E. Arbegast,	9	11	2 00
"	E. Souver,	9	11	2 00
"	G. Anderson,	9	11	2 00
"	D. Brindle,	9	17	2 00
"	S. Wallace,	9	17	2 00

Br. Stockton Sr. Philad. will hear from us in a few days.

Br. S. Elliott, J. H. owes 25 cts. which you will please obtain from him.

Br. J. T. Miller is assured that we have sent regularly to Louisville. Ky. from the moment we received his request to do so.

Br. G. Brown. please bring to Morgantown Ct. 1 doz. Disciplines, new Edition. N. GILLESPIE.

18 pamphlets have been sent to G. Williams, Ia.

New Subscribers this week, 10. Discontinuances, 3.

POSTAGE.—Several of our brethren are so generous and polite, as to pay their postage when they send us funds. This is more than we wish them to do. Br. O. P. S. paid double postage on the remittance acknowledged in this number. But we have a large number of correspondents who are by no means so thoughtful. A number of the preachers have taxed us with postage, just to inform us, to what office we may send their paper. We have repeatedly paid double postage for persons in distant states, who only requested us to send them a specimen number of our paper in view of their subscribing for it if they should like it. Those who are so thoughtless as this, should pay in advance, if they do subscribe. Were we otherwise situated, we would be ashamed to say a word about postage. But receiving as we do from 1500 to 2000 letters per year, our postage bills will come to more than $100 per year, if our letters are not post paid. And we see, that it is now the rule of many publishers to take no letters from the post office but such as are post paid, cash or no cash. But we will cheerfully pay postage on all letters enclosing funds.

Receipts for Annual Register.

W. Munhall,	$2,00
G. Williams,	55
S. Elliott,	1,00

CHRISTIAN WORLD.—Br. H. Matson, Port Washington, Tuscarawas, O. requests us to say to Br. Stockton, that he has not received the last two numbers of C. W. for 1845. He says he has paid, and is anxious to get the balance of the work.

ANNUAL REGISTER 1847.—Our edition of 5,200 copies is running short. But like the Razor Strop Man, we have 'a few more left' which we will be pleased to send out to those who order them. G. Conclin, Cincinnati, and C. Craig, Pittsburgh, have each also a small lot to dispose of.

By the by, this little publication cost us considerably more than one hundred dollars, cash, notwithstanding the job was executed at our own office. Those therefore who have received their pamphlets as ordered, will greatly oblige us by forking over the dimes. We are anxious to be out of debt. Much obliged to those who have been prompt in paying.

MARRIED,

On the 2nd inst., by the Rev. J. Miley, Mr. LEROY S. PERRY to Miss SARAH A. JOSSELYN, all of this place.

"The bard has sung, God never formed a soul
Without his own peculiar mate, to meet
Its wandering half, when ripe to crown the whole
Bright plan of bliss, most heavenly, most complete."

On the 2nd inst. by Rev. C. Springer, Mr. JOSEPH PORTER to Miss ELIZA JANE, daughter of the Rev. Samuel Hamilton, all of Hopewell township, in this county.

DIED

On Saturday evening, 30th ult. BETSEY A. HOGE, wife of Israel Hoge, Esq. Postmaster of this place. She was a native of Winchester, Va. Aged 46 years and 11 months. For nearly 29 years she has been a worthy member of the Presbyterian Church of this place. Her disease was pulmonary consumption. She was fully apprised of her approaching end; and in her departure was exhibited the noble triumphs of the Christian faith. Her funeral was numerously attended on Monday. S. B.

Z. Gaz.

NOTICE.

THERE will be a petition presented to the trustees of Newton Township, Muskingum county, at there annual meeting on the first Monday in March next, praying for a Township Road to commence at a stone bridge on the old Lancaster Road at Kent's run at the foot of John Williams's hill, thence to run a Northwardly direction to the corners of land owned by G. M. Crooks and Lewis Stine.

January 23d, 1847.

NOTICE

IS hereby given, that a petition will be presented to the Commissioners of Muskingum County, at their March session, praying for a county road, beginning at a point in the Cooper Mill Road in Springfield township, and where the west line of Barnett Workmans land crosses said Cooper Mill road, from thence running north-eastwardly thro' the lands of B. Workman and William Vansant to the lower end of William Vansant's field, (known as the middle meadow,(thence northwardly to the north-west corner of John Vansant's orchard, from thence north-eastwardly on the nearest and best route through the lands of John Vansant and James Vansant, so as to intersect the Flint Ridge Road (so called) near the west end of Cornelius Starkey's farm.

January 15, 1847.

NOTICE

IS hereby given that a petition will be presented to the Commissioners of Muskingum County their March session, praying for an alteration in so much of the county road known by the name of George Norman's road as lies between the Cooper Mill Road and William Vansant's barn. The proposed road to commence at said Cooper Mill road, where the west line of Barnett Workman's land crosses said road. Thence eastwardly to the lower end of William Vansant's field, (known as the middle meadow,) thence north to the lane, thence west so as to intersect the original road east of William Vansant's barn, all in Springfield township

January 12, 1847.

JAMES K. LOGAN,
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in
FOREIGN & DOMESTIC DRY GOODS
No. 83 Wood St., (One door from Diamond Alley,)
Pittsburgh, Pa.

COME AND SEE!!

THE SUBSCSIBERS offer very low for CASH, STONE WARE or COUNTRY PRODUCE,
35 pieces assorted Cloths, very low,
20 " Jeans,
300 " Prints, cheaper than ever,
100 " Merinos, Alpaccas, De Laines, &c.,
50 " Tweeds and Cassinets,
25 " Flannels,
22 " Check.
Boots, Shoes, Queensware, Groceries, and a great variety of goods not mentioned.
In a word, they have on hand a LARGE STOCK of goods, which they

WISH TO SELL.

To sell them, they must be sold CHEAP, this they will do. J. C. GUTHRIE & SONS, successors to
GUTHRIE'S & BUCKINGHAM.

P.S. We will say to Potters engage not your ware before calling on us. We are dealing EXTENSIVELY in that article, and are determined to buy it on such terms as will prove satisfactory. J. C. G. & S's.
Putnam, O. Jan. 1, 1847.

NEW HISTORY OF TEXAS, pages 342. 25 cents. A few copies to be had at the office of the Western Recorder. Published by G. Conclin Cincinnati.

PUTNAM BOARDING HOUSE.

THE SUBSCRIBER having been for the last sixteen years keeping Tavern and Boarding House, would respectfully acquaint the public—that he has established a Bording House in Putnam, and hopes by strict attention to business he will merit a share of public patronage. His accommodations shall be good, and his table, for variety not surpassed by any Hotel or Boarding House in the West. R. PUTNAM.
October 31st, 1846.
N. B. Application for boarding should be made soon
R. P.

GEORGE CONCLIN,
BOOKSELLER AND PUBLISHER,
Stationer, Binder, and
BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURER,
No. 39 Main Street, Cincinnati.

KEEPS on hand Books published by the Methodist Protestant Church—such as
CHURCH HYMN BOOKS,
REVIVAL " "
DISCIPLINES,
EVANS' QUESTIONS & ANSWERS, &c.
ALSO—Just received—A supply of the CHRISTIAN WORLD in 3 Vols. with Portraits of the Wesleys, &c., by REV. THOS. H. STOCKTON.

POST OFFICE ADDRESS OF ITINERANT MINISTERS AND PREACHERS OF THE WESTERN CONFERENCES.

Pittsburgh District.

G Brown, Steubenville, O.
Jos Burns, Port Homer, Jefferson, O.
A Lister, Beverly, Randolph Co. Va.
V Lucas, Farmington, Fayette, Pa.
R H Walker, Big Skin Creek, Lewis, Va.
S Hazlett, Beeler's Station, Marshall, Va.
P T Laishley, Morgantown, Va.
N Gillespie, " "
D R Helmick, Fairmont, Marion, Va.
J I Stillians, Lorentz Store, Lewis, Va.
H Reger, West Milford, Harrison, Va.
G G Collins, Middlebourne, Tyler, Va.
N Watson, Wheeling, Va.
A J Waren, Glady Creek ⋈ Roads, Barbour, Va.
G Nestor, Frankfort, Greenbrier, Va.
J P Prickett, Ravenswood, Jackson, Va.
Wm Reeves, Pittsburgh, Pa.
Mrs. Asa Shinn, Allegheny, Pa.
J Robinson, " "
W H Doe, Sharpsburgh, Allegheny, Pa.
G B M'Elroy, Fallston, Beaver, Pa.
Wm Boardman, Washington, Pa.
J C Hazlett, " "
J Cowl, Eldersville, Washington, Pa.
W A Porter, Waynesbnrgh, Green, Pa.
R T Simonton, Cookstown, Fayette, Pa.
W Browning, Buchanon, Allegheny, Pa.
H Palmer, Connellsville, Pa.

Muskingum District

W L Baldwin, Gnadenhutten, Tuscarawas, O.
N Linder, Harrisville, Harrison, O.
M Scott, Oak Hill, Jackson, O.
W B Moody, Richfield, Summit, O.
A R Brown, Fowler's Mills, Geauga, O.
E S Hoagland, New Athens, Harrison, O.
J Hambay, Warsaw, Coshocton, O.
W W Tipton, Jackson, Jackson, O.
S H Heath, Bricksville, Cuyuhuga, O.
J Jack, Lodi, Seneca, O.
W Hatfield, Centerburg, Knox, O.
C S Callihan, Putnam, Muskingum, O.
J Myres, " " "
C Springer, Meadow Farm, Muskingum, O.
W H Marshall, Zanesville, O.
R Andrew, Steubenville, O.
D B Dorsey, " "
Z Ragan, " "
J W Case, Plainfield, Coshocton, O.
John Baker, " " "
J H Hamilton " " "
I Thrap, Tiffin, Seneca, O.
G M Scott, " " "
A S Robinson, Bucyrus, Crawford, O.
J Nichols, Cambridge, Guernsey, O.
W Remsburg, " " "
O V Warren, M'Connellsville, Morgan, O.
J M Piper, " " "
T B Cushman, New Lisbon, Columbiana, O.
A Tracy, Mallet Creek, Medina, O.
N Burgess, Berlin, Mahoning, O.
D Richardson, " " "
C Caddy, Vienna, Trumbull, O.
S Gee, Youngstown, Mahoning O.
W Duling, Otsego, Muskingum, O.
W Maynard, Adams Mills, Muskingum, O.
J K Duffy, Perryton, Licking, O.
J M Winn, Fairview, Guernsey, O.
H T Lawson, Woodsfield, Monroe, O.
J W Southard, Malta, Morgan, O.
John Burns, Mt. Pleasant, Jefferson, O.
W Munhall, Brownsville, Licking, O.
C J Sears, Chester Hill, Morgan, O.
T Potter, Mt. Vernon, Knox, O.
A Channel, Homer, Licking, O.
T Foster, New Hagerstown, Carroll, O.
S Elliott, Lee, Athens, O.

Ohio District.

R Dobbins, Washington, Fayette, O.
R K Davis, Rosedale, Madison, O.
J H Webster, South Solon, Madison, O.
W Tipton, Waterville, Lucas, O.
O Warrington, Withamsville, Clermont, O.
J White, Spring Valley, Green, O.
J Dalbey Jr., Cincinnati, O.
J B Peat Richwood, Union, O.
A M'Guire, Springfield, Clark, O.
O P Stephens, " " "
W Pelan, West Alexandria, Preble, O.
R Rose, Por ; William, Clinton, O.
D Moore, Carysville, Champaign, O.
A H Trumbo, Greenfield, Highland, O.
W G Fowler, Hamersville, Brown, O.
I Hunt, Fletcher, Miami, O.
J L Borton, Gilboa, Putnam, O.
R M Dalbey, Lebanon, Warren, O.
L Ensminger, Russelvania, Logan, O.
S P Kezerta, Holensburg, Darke, O.
J M Young, Spartansburg, Randolph, Ia.
Jonathan Flood, Fairview, Randolph, Ia.
A H Bassett, Putnam, Muskingum Co. O.

Indiana District.

W B Evans, Spencer, Owen, Ia.
W W Paul, Mt. Tabor, Monroe, Ia.
C H Williams, Millroy, Rush, Ia.
T Shipp, Edinburg, Johnson, Ia.
S Morrison, Freeport, Shelby, Ia.
H Brenton, Cataract, Owen, Ia.
G Wheatley, Graham, Jefferson, Ia.

Wabash District.

J Alter, Middle Fork, Clinton, Ia.
S W Widney, Peru, Miami, Ia.
R R Bailey, Prairieville, Clinton, Ia.
Jos. Shipp, Frankfort, Clinton, Ia.
Patterson Smith, Wabash, Wabash, Ia.
G Williams, Auburn, Dekalb, Ia.
J C Wright, Northfield Boon, Ia.
F Outcalt, Wilkshire, Van Wert, O.
H Beal, Monroe, Tippecanoe, Ia.

Michigan District.

L Smith, Pine Lake, Oakland, Mich.
J B Jewel, Rose, Oakland, Mich.
L Warren, Commerce, Oakland, Mich.
M Munn, Romeo, Macomb, Mich.
J Gay, Kingsbury, Laporte, Ia.

Illinois District.

J Clarke Jr., Rushville, Schuyler, Ill.

North Illinois District.

W E Martin, Newark, Kendall, Ill.
M Jared, Greenbush, Warren, Ill.
W H Miller, Peru, La Salle, Ill.
P J Strong, Magnolia, Putnam, Ill.
D Bagley, Princeton, Bureau, Ill.

The above list we have made out from our book, indicating the post offices to which the paper is sent for the respective brethren. It does not include all the travelling preachers, but those only who receive our paper. We have made it out, partly for our own conveniance, but chiefly to accommodate the request of a member of brethren, and we perhaps owe them an apology that, for want of time, we have not done it sooner. If any names are omitted it is accidental, and unintentional.

Whilst on the subject, we will state, that all the above named brethren are authorised to act as agents for the Western Recorder, and to collect the dues therefor.

Every itinerant minister or preacher, of any Annual Conference whatever whether embraced in the above list or not can have our paper at half price, i. e. one dollar per year. And every such minister or preacher who will collect for us as much as ten dollars shall have the paper for a year free of charge. These terms to itinerents are just twice as favorable, as the terms of the Methodist Protestant, or any other religious paper, within our acquaintance. And we had much rather the brethren would be active agents, and have the paper free, than to pay us the dollar. Every brother who collects $20 or more for the paper, within the year, shall not only have our warm thanks, but shall receive some literary premium, at least worthy of his acceptance, or if he choose, we will send a copy of our paper for a year to any friend he may designate, provided such friend is not already a subscriber.

PROSPECTUS OF THE
OHIO CULTIVATOR,
Vol. III.—For 1847.

A semi-monthly Journal, devoted to the promotion of Agriculture, Horticulture & Domestic Industry.
PUBLISHED AT COLUMBUS, OHIO,
By M. B. Bateham, Editor and Proprietor,
Assisted by the contributions of a very large number of practical and scientific writers,—farmers, horticulturists, &c.

Illustrated with numerous Engravings.

TERMS—One Dollar per year—Four Copies for Three Dollars: payments invariably in advance.

THE OHIO CULTIVATOR has now become so well known to the farmers and friends of agriculture in Ohio, that it is unnecessary to say any thing of its character or design. Grateful for the encouragement he has thus far received, the editor and proprietor takes this occasion to inform his friends and patrons, that he is determined to put forth new efforts in their service, and make his paper for the coming year still more deserving of their continued liberal patronage. Besides improvement in the matter for its columns, the mechanical appearance of the paper will be improved by the use of new type, and more illustrations. It will contain the latest and most reliable intelligence respecting the crops and the markets, both in this country, and in Europe, so as to aid the farmer in deciding at what time and price to dispose of his productions. This information alone will be worth, to most farmers, many times the price of subscription, especially now that prices are so much effected by foreign intelligence. In addition to all this, the editor believes that his increased experience and knowledge of the agricultural condition of the State, together with his extended correspondence, will enable him to make each succeeding volume of the Cultivator more valuable than the one that preceded it.

The influence of the paper, wherever it has been generally read, is admitted to have been highly salutary. It has began to awaken a spirit of inquiry and improvement among the farmers, and inspire them with more just and elevated conceptions of the character, duties and pleasures of their noble occupation. As evidence of this it may be stated, that during the past year, Agricultural Societies have been organized in twenty counties of this State; and there is reason to believe that as many more will be formed during the year to come. These associations, in connection with the State Board of Agriculture, and the Cultivator as an organ for the diffusion of intelligence, cannot fail to exert such an influence on the minds and the practice of the farming community, as will in a few years place our young Giant State in that position which she is by Nature designed to occupy—the first State of the Union in agricultural wealth and lasting prosperity.

Farmers of Ohio! Who among you are willing to have no part in this onward march of improvement? Who among you are willing to deprive yourselves and your families of that 'knowledge which is power,' and the great means of progress and elevation, for the sake of the small pittance which that knowledge may cost? And who of you that desire to see this work advance, will not make an effort to arouse your neighbors from the mental torpor that rests upon too many of them? The work is not difficult—pursuade them to read papers devoted to their interests—☞send on their names, with your own, as subscribers to the Ohio Cultivator, and you may rely upon it they will soon begin to awake—to inquire and think—and not only become better farmers, but more intelligent and agreeable neighbors.

Address, M. B. BATEHAM,
Columbus, Ohio.

THE CHEAPEST AND BEST.
New Prospectus for the Year 1847.

FORTY-EIGHT large octavo Pages, and Fifteen Engravings in each No. Published on the first of every month.

Fourth Volume commences in January, 1847.

The No. for Jan. contains a "Pictorial Description of the State of Ohio," elegantly Illustrated with American views, &c. &c.

Other States will appear in subsequent Nos. of the Work.

Robert Sears, 158 Nassau-street, New York, will hereafter furnish his new

Pictorial and Illustrated Family Magazine for 1847, in all respects equal to the Three-Dollar Magazines, at the low price of only one dollar and a half per annum.

Any person sending Five Dollars, shall receive five copies of the magazine for one year, as he shall direct.

All subjects which will admit of it, will be illustrated with engravings. The whole number of the engravings at the conclusion of the volume will amount to several hundred.

Great inducement to subscribe.

We offer to all persons becoming subscribers, a copy of our new work, just published, entitled the Pictorial Description of Great Britain and Ireland.

Containing 262 Views of the Principal Cities, Towns, Castles, Abeys, Costumes, &c. &c., of the Fatherland: a larger number of Engravings than can be found in any book of double the price—or to those who prefer it, the

Pictorial History of the American Revolution,

(Embellished with an original portrait of Washington, by Chapman, and more than 160 other engravings, 430 pp. 8vo.) for every new subscriber, with two dollars enclosed, free of postage.

Any person procuring ten subscribers, and sending eleven dollars shall receive ten copies of the Magazine, and any one of the above popular works, sent as he shall direct.

We have authority, under the new Post-office law, to send any one of the above works, bound. The postage will not exceed twenty-five cents to any part of the United States.

M. P. DISCIPLINES—NEW EDITION.

WE have on hand a supply, lately received from the Book Agent, Baltimore, which we will be pleased to furnish to brethren of surrounding Circuits, at wholesale or retail prices. For sale at the office of this paper.

SACRED MELODEON.

WE have received from the publishers, 50 copies of this excellent collection of Spiritual Songs, compiled by Brs. Joel Dalbey and J. B. Peat of the Ohio Conference, and lately published at Cincinnati. For sale at the office of the Western Recorder, by the dozen or single.

Admistrator's Notice.

NOTICE is hereby given that the suscriber has been appointed and qualified as Administrator of the estate of Thomas Atkinson deceased, late of Springfield Township, Muskingum county. Z. M. CHANDLER,
Putnam, O. Oct. 31, 1846. Admistrator.

DISSOLUTION.

THE partnership of GUTHRIES & LARGE is this day dissolved by mutual consent. All matters pertaining to the closing up of the business will be transacted at the old stand.

A. A. GUTHRIE.
W. P. LARGE.
GEO. N. GUTHRIE.

Putnam, O. January 1, 1847.

NEW FIRM.

A. A. GUTHRIE, G. BUCKINGHAM and G. N GUTHRIE announce that they have formed partnership for the transaction of MERCANTILE BUSINES under the firm of

GUTHRIE, BUCKINGHAM & CO.

They respectfully invite their friends and the publi generally, to the old stand of A. A. GUTHRIE & Co (recently GUTHRIE'S & LARGE,) where it is the purpose to keep a large assortment of the CHEAPEST AN BEST goods in the market.

Putnam, O. January 1, 1847.

Something New.
JUST PUBLISHED
*By GEORGE CONCLIN, 39 Main st. Cincinnati

POETRY.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Lay of a Supposed Wanderer in Europe.

TO A LADY IN THE U. S.

Maiden, list! upon the breeze, a lay
Comes floating o'er the main,
O catch one feebly trembling note,
Thou may'st not hear again.

Thou wer't my young life's happy dream,
Of purest love and joy,
Which flowed like an unruffled stream,
Without a murmuring wo.

O baneful was the gloomy hour
That breathed its fatal blight,
And nipt young love's expanding flower,
And veiled our hopes in night.

Far, far beyond Atlantic's main,
From thee I'm doomed to stray,
And drag behind a "length'ning chain,"
With none to cheer my way.

Now while I wander on the shore,
Of this far distant coast,
I weep—for me thou art no more;
I mourn a treasure lost.

I never can thy beauty share,
Nor clasp thy lovely form:
The future all, alas! despair;
The present—deep'ning gloom.

But still for thee there flows a tear
Of silent grief and love,
When none but solitude is near,
And all is calm above.

Around thee joy may twine her chain,
Hope wreathe thy maiden brow;
And music in its softest strain
In sweetest numbers flow.

But not for me shall summer's sun
Shed a serener ray,
Nor earth adorned with russet green,
Smile joyful o'er my way.

Yet could one lovely smile of thine
For me illume thy cheek,
'Twould cheer me in my life's decline—
And I could cease to weep.

But fare-thee-well, fair one, my lot
Whate'er on earth shall be,
Will oft with joy turn to the spot
Where first I gazed on thee.

And from thy bosom will no sigh
Or prayer ascend above;
Nor pearly tear fall from thine eye,
For one who thus can love?

O yes, methinks the falling tear
Will soft bedew these lines,
When memory turns to seasons dear,
That bloomed in former times.

ANON.

Solitudinarian Cabin, January, 1847.

[The following from the pen of a lady, was written on reading the above lines of the 'Wanderer,' just before it was given to the compositor. Ed. W. R.]

IMPROMPTU.

And tell us if a smile for thee
Does not "illume that cheek,"
And is thy spirit now not free
From that which made thee "weep?"

Say, wanderer, if that "treasure" now
Is not thy priceless wealth,
To soothe, when pain thy spirits bow,
And bless thee when in health?

The "present."—Has its cloud of gloom
From thee not passed away?
And the "future" to thy hopes become
The dawn of a blissful day!

THEOLOGICAL.

Written for the Western Recorder.

CONDITION OF MAN.

CONCLUDED.

I remark either to applaud, or to censure any person, who has not the power of determining his own actions, the testimony of all of the nations declares to be unreasonable. Every man feels that he, alone, is censurable for conduct by himself, and all others condemned; which could not be, if he had not the moral power to select a different course. For though a man may feel sorry that he, unintentionally, has injured his neighbor by firing his gun at a ferocious wild beast, yet, he can never feel that he is a culprit, worthy of punishment for the action. It is known among men, that it was not his design to do the injury, he would stand acquitted from criminality; but if it was clearly proven, that he, with afore thought and malice, thus injured his neighbor, all men of candor would condemn him to be worthy of punishment. The reason for the acquittal, or for the condemnation, rests, alone, upon the common sense of mankind; that every man has the power of determining his own actions; and that, whatever design was entertained, the individual alone, should be held responsible. Then, to make a man worthy of praise or censure for his actions, he must have the power to determine his own course; without which, he could never, that I can discover be rewardable, or enjoy intellectual pleasures. In fine Adam to be incapable of sinning, must have been made similar to the brute creation; and, consequently, so far as we can discover, disqualified to know, obey, or enjoy his Creator. Where is the man, who would, with all his afflictions, feel willing to exchange his present rank in sequence of God's creatures for that of a brute? I conclude that it was the goodness of God that led him to create man with the power to voluntarily do well; which power is, of stern necessity, associated with the power of doing wrong. It is impossible that these powers should be seperated; destroy the one, and you, at the same time, destroy the other. They must remain together while the character of any, is to be determined by his conduct.

There are others, who say they believe, that Adam was mortal, before he violated the law of God; that his body, and the bodies of all of his children would have died, if he had never sinned. The scriptures, I remark, most unequivocally assert, Wherefore as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned. Rom. V. 12. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. 1 Cor. XV. 21. And as a farther reason for believing that Adam would not have died, if he had not sinned, I observe, If Adam had not transgressed the divine law, there would have been no necessity for the advent of the Lord Jesus Christ; and, consequently, he would not have suffered, died, and arose from the dead. Hence there would have been no resurrection of the dead; for Jesus says, I am the resurrection, and the life. John XI. 25. And by taking the doctrine urged by the apostle, in his first epistle to the Corinthians, XV. 12–22. which is that since there is a resurrection that, therefore, Christ arose from the dead, but if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen; and say, if Christ had not risen, then there would be no resurrection of the dead; which doctrine is sustained by the scriptures; then it will necessarily follow, if Adam had died, and Christ had not come, and rose from the dead; Adam's body would never have been raised again to life; hence, he, and all his children, must have lost their bodies forever. This being unreasonable; the supposition that Adam's body would have died if he had never sinned, is not to be entertained, but to be rejected.

Adam was created reasonable, or intelligent; and by his Maker pronounced very good; and, no doubt well understand what the law required. He had all the moral power necessary, to perform its requisitions. Life, and the favor of his God, on the one hand; and death, and the displeasure of the Deity, on the other, were the inducements to keep the divine law. But he voluntarily disobeyed—he ate—he died. He lost, with the favor of God, his moral excellence—his moral power to do well while unredeemed. But I annex, For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him, should not perish, but have everlasting life. John III. 16. By the promise of the Saviour made to our first parents, they, with all their children were unconditionally justified from the guilt contracted by the offense of Adam. The virtue of the sacrificial offering of Jesus Christ affected the condition and the relation of Adam and all his progeny. When Adam sinned, we were all in him; hence, we all fell with him; and when the promise of the Saviour was made to our first parent, we were also all in Adam; and when he was redeemed, we were also, redeemed; when the guilt of his crime was removed from him, it was likewise removed from us. I said, Adam lost his moral power to do well; but this power was restored to him, and to us, by the Lord Jesus Christ; and is by him continued, while we remain in this state of trial; unless we sin so highly, that his grace is entirely withdrawn from us. Then we would as it respects this power, be in the same predicament in which Adam stood, previous to his restoration, and after his fall. That Adam had the power, voluntarily, to perform his duty before he fell is conclusively shown, by his being placed under law. The justice, and the goodness of God forbid the idea, that Adam was ever required to perform that which God well knew he had no ability to perform. Then, since God imposed a law upon him, he must have had the moral power to perform its requisitions. But now, since the fall, the Lord Jesus says, Without me ye can do nothing. John XV. 5. Of course, the Saviour only meant, nothing good. Now, every man will admit that to do any good action, is to do something, but Jesus Christ says, this action we cannot perform, without him that is, without his aid—his grace. Now, if we are entirely dependent on the Lord Jesus, to impart moral power to us to enable us to do his will, we must of course, have lost this power in the fall; for how can that be restored, which was never lost? It cannot be done. From these premises we are led to believe, that it is only while the grace of Christ is continued with us, that we have the power to do well or to obey God; when this grace is withdrawn, whether at, or before our dissolution, we no longer have the power to repent, believe, or to obey—hence, our opportunity of salvation then, is forever closed—the door is shut. It may be urged, if men, after they have terminated this life without a compliance with the conditions of the gospel of Christ, are, by a loss of the grace of God, no longer in a condition to obey the command, here obligatory; they cannot, neither be capable of doing any thing to merit the displeasure of the Deity. To this I remark I entertain no objections whatever. For I believe it is not for actions performed out of the body, but for those actions performed in the body, in this life, for which men are rewarded in futurity. The word of the Lord declares, For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad .2. Cor. V. 10. The day of judgment immediately follows the resurrection, of the just and of the unjust. From the period of the death of men, until the resurrection, their souls are out, and not in their bodies; consequently, during this interval, they can do no works or things in the body; hence, none for which, agreeable to the foregoing quotation, they will receive "any reward. And since the resurrection immediately precedes the final decision of the great Judge, there can be no time between these two periods for men to form any other character than that already formed; and then the bodies of the righteous will be resurrected suitable for the enjoyment of eternal life, and those of the finally wicked, for everlasting death; for these are to come forth to the resurrection of damnation;" and neither the one nor other can then in a scriptural sense, be said to be in the body, where, or in which, their deeds will be rewardable. When the judge of all the earth shall have passed the sentence, and the righteous enter upon eternal bliss, and shall depart into everlasting punishment, agreeable to the scriptures, then each will be enjoying, or enduring the reward of their deeds here done in their bodies. But if the character of either were to become, changed, then it would appear reasonable, that there should be another and a future scene, wherein their bodies could undergo a change, similar to that in the resurrection already past; and that there should be another period, in which the sentence already pronounced, might be reversed; and a different reward be dealt out to them, whose character had undergone a change. It cannot be successfully controverted, that, notwithstanding all the sorrows and sufferings the Saviour of sinners has endured for them, they are more deeply depraved, and that there is not one solitary exception, where this depraviy, in those of mature age, has not predominated, and broken out into overt acts, and men have become personal, or natural sinners, and are guilty, and condemned by the law of God, and are liable to future punishment. But Jesus Christ has also atoned for the actual transgressions of all men; and the offer of a free pardon through the blood of the cross, is kindly profered to all upon the conditions of "Repentence," which includes conviction, conversion, confession, forsaking of sin, and humble supplication; "Faith," which involves a belief in the existence and attributes of the Divine Being; and in all the fundamental doctrines of the gospel, as revealed in the word of God; with a firm reliance on the Lord Jesus Christ, that he is now willing and able to save them from the guilt and power of sin; and "Obedience," which includes our duty to God our Saviour; our duties to our neighbor and to ourselves. He who attends to these requisitions, the word of God assures us, shall be saved in life, in death, and in heaven forever. The foregoing requisitions are made upon all who have enjoyed, the high but too often neglected privileges of hearing gospel and perusing the holy scriptures; but those who still sit in darkness, and have never had these opportunities, and have never heard the name of their Saviour, "are a law unto themselves:" and if they do the things contained in the law, agreably to the best light and information they possess, shall be justified in the day when God shall juduge the secrets of men, by Jesus Christ. For God is just and good, and never has, nor will require any thing more of any man, than he has imparted moral power, and opportunity to perform; hence these shall hear from their king and redeemer, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world;" while numbers of those who have been raised with the Bible in their father's house, and have been privileged with hearing the gospel of Christ from their infancy, but have rejected the bleeding Saviour, will hear the judge say unto them, Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the Devil and his angels.

JOHN HILL.

Batavia, O. Dec. 14th. 1846.

COMMUNICATION.

Written for the Western Recorder.

SECEDERS PRO-SLAVERY.

MR. EDITOR:—Among the recent passing occurrences chronicled in the Recorder; I noticed that the Seceders from the Ohio Conference have organized themselves, bearing the title "Methodist Free Church." I have no objections to offer here to their organization or to their title, but I have objections to the conduct or some of the leaders of the organization, (unless they are belied.) For I understaad in their zeal against the position of the Conference from which they seceded it is common to drag out to public gaze members by name as pro-slavery or to brand the whole Ohio Conference as being pro-slavery. And as I have been one of the personal speckled birds to shoot at, I feel bound in justice to the Conference and myself to state a few facts, explanatory of the ground on which they in reality seceded from the conference. It is well known by all the members of conference that a special committee was appointed to whom was referred all documents pertaining to slavery division secession, &c. That committee made a report which was adopted en masse by the conference without debate. And in that report was linked a resolution as follows "Resolved that we send no delegates to the General Conference until that body gives a decided expression on the subject of slavery, nevertheless nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to imply secession division or convention." Here I remark the committee erred, not intentionally but by an over zeal for a compromise as one of them (who was the principal author of the resolution,) confessed to me that his zeal for compromise led him beyond bounds. So also did the conference err in its adoption. A few of the most active members being absent on committees, at the time it was pushed through conference, may serve as an apology for this prematnre step. However there was enough in conference to have prevented its adoption if we had spoken out, if we had seen its legitimate tendency. The last member of the resolution, "Nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to imply secession division or convention" fastened a spell upon some of our minds. Tis not secession, tis not division, tis not convention, run through my own mind, loosing sight of the first member of the resolution, its real consequence. And doubtless it was so with others, and thus the way was paved in our minds to a premature step. And when the vote on adoption was taken some voted against it, some did not vote at all, some voted loud and strong. Among these were the seceders, I saw they were highly pleased with the adoption of the report. One got up and thanked the Conference. No intimation was given at this stage of things of secession by the ultra brethren by caucus and otherwise, but all seemed fully satisfied to continue in the church for they all voted against secession. But in this first member there was something which the major part of conference members were not willing to submit to, when they looked at it in all its bearings. So the move was made to reconsider the report. Now came the tug of war. The seceders opposed reconsideration to a man. Their votes are recorded against it, their arguments went against it, which is an additional proof that they were perfectly satisfied with the resolution. And in arguing against reconsideration, one of the seceders made a direct charge upon the constitution of the M. P. Church as being pro-slavery. I demanded of the brother at the time the clause that was pro-slavery; he quoted "Every white lay male member" &c. This is pro-slavery because it lays a disability upon the colored man to the right of franchise—so argued the brother, and in his steps fellowed all the rest—for it was one thing, over and over. But to come to the conclusion of the whole matter. What does it amount to? It comes to this, the Seceders are pro-slavery. If the premises be correct, that a disability to the right of franchise is pro-slavery, then there is no other alternative for the Seceders but to admit that they are pro-slavery. Hear it, "Resolved that we will send no delegate to the General Conference until that body give a decided expression on the subject of slavery." What is this but a disability to the right of franchise laid upon the whole Ohio Conference and every member in the District? This resolution the Seceders argued for, voted for, with all its pro-slavery, and actually seceded because the conference would and did reconsider the report and indefinitely postpone this pro-slavery resolution (I mean it is pro-slavery according to the position of the seceders in Conference,) for every resolution in the report of the committee was adopted item by item, but this pro-slavery concern; and because the conference would not deprive the whole Ohio District of the right of franchise they left. They say they left on anti slavery grounds; but if their position in conference to prove the constitution of the M. P. Church pro-slavery be correct, then the conclusion is plain and indisputable that they left on pro-slavery grounds or because the conference would be anti slavery—would not wrest from the members of the District the right to vote foe representives to the Gen. Con. For I repeat that the resolution in its last member protested against "Secession, division or convention," that is we will maintain our adherence to the General Association. All therefore that the seceders asked of the conference to satisfy them fully. was just virtually to say to all our members in this District you shall not have the right to vote in all cases. And it will not mend the matter for the seceders to say we intended the resolution to lead to secession and division, for that would at once involve their characters in duplicity, for they solemnly voted to the contrary. And a character filled with duplicity is not a fit character to be leader of others, for that is a character that belongs only to the Devil and his subjects. Now Mr. Editor, I have given an unvarnished statement of facts, and facts are stubborn things. And as facts in the case prove 1st. That the seceders were perfectly satisfied with the adoption of the resolution we have under consideration. 2d. They opposed its reconsideration. 3d That they argued in conference hat a disability to the right of franchise is pro-slavery. 4th. That the resolution laid this disability upon every qualified member, white and black, in the Ohio District. 5. That they seceded because the Con. would not implore this disabilite in the adoption of the resolution as one of the items of the report. This summary of facts shows that the brethren have no just ground on which to predicate the charge pro-slavery against the conference, or any of its individual members. All we plead for is justice in the case, for I call heaven and earth to witness to the truth that the seceders did not make a single move for secession at conference until the conference reconsidered and refused to adopt the resolution involving the principles they declared to be pro-slavery. If I am wrong, I will cheerfully stand corrected. If I am right, then the seceders are pro-slavery on their own ground according to their arguments.

TIMOTHY, Jr.

Written at home Jan. 11th 1847.

A man that is constantly bragging what he can be, is like a bellows, he has more wind than sense.

AGRICULTURAL.

OHIO APPLES.

The following is extracted from an article in the Jan. No. of "Downing's Horticulturist,"—published at Newburgh N. Y.,—on the subject of Ohio apples. Mr. D. is the author of the distinguished Treatise on the Fruit and Fruit Trees of America.

THE "COOPER" APPLE.—Our friend the Rev. C. Springer of Meadow Farm, Ohio, has sent us for examination some interesting apples. We feel bound particularly to notice one variety, which is new to us, and is undoubtedly a fruit of great merit. This is labelled the "Cooper" apple.

The fruit is not known to us. It belongs to the class of autumn apples, of which that large and admirable fruit, the Fall Pippin, is the type. It has much the same flavor, and considerably resembles, in size and flavor, that fruit; yet it is a very distinct variety, remarkable not only for its excellent flavor, but for its lightness, its very small core and seeds, and the deep cavities at the eye and stalk.

We have made on accurate description and drawing of this noble fruit, which we shall publish hereafter.

Mr. Springer says in his letter, "by what ever name this apple may be known to pomologists, I consider it the best fall apple I have ever seen. The tree is a great bearer, and the fruit large and perfect. It is in great demand in our market. There are some who would buy a cart-load of apples for the sake of getting a barrel of Coopers."

We have also a letter before us from the Hon. James Matthews of Coshocton, Ohio, full of interesting pomological bits, among which we note the following respecting this fruit:

"I do not believe that any apple cultivated in the Western States, excels the Cooper apple in flavor.

Notwithstanding we have been favored by our correspondents west of the Alleghanies, most liberally with specimens of their apples, we have never seen the "Cooper" before.

We may add here, that parts of Ohio are undoubtedly in the highest degree favorable to the growth of the apple. Mr. Springer's letter contains the following item of proof, which will interest orchardists every where:

"I have gathered this year from one acre of ground, about one hundred and fifty barrels of the finest and fairest apples grown in this vicinity, and about one barrel of the White Doyenne pears. The latter are now (Nov. 9th) in perfection. I had one Rhode-Island Greening five inches in diameter, weighing eighteen ounces and three-quarters. My trees have never been trimmed, and I raise larger and better fruit than any one who trims his trees."

ROXBURY RUSSET AND PUTNAM RUSSET.—There has been a good deal of conjecture and inquiry about the identity of these two fruits. A year or two ago the Putnam Russet was confidently claimed as a distinct western seedling. On the authority of Professor Kirtland, of Cleveland, we stated in our work on Fruits, that it had originated at Marietta. But discussion in the western agricultural papers, elicited the fact that beyond a doubt, the grafts of the so-called Putnam Russet were carried to the west from New England, by the Putnam family, whence the fruit obtained the latter title.

Some cultivators of the west still doubted the identity of these fruits—and we had ourselves doubts of their being the same.

We have however compared the two, this autumn, pretty carefully. Specimens of the "Putnam Russett" have been obligingly sent us by A. H. Ernst, Esq.' of Cincinnati, Mr. Elliot of Cleveland, and Rev. C. Springer of Meadow Farm, Ohio. The specimens from the latter gentleman were from the Putnam orchard itself.

The Roxbury or Boston Russet is an apple well known here, but to satisfy ourselves, while we were in Boston the past autumn, we gathered specimens from large bearing trees in Roxbury, and in Dorchester, to compare them with the Putnam Russet.

The result is, that we cannot see any distinction between the two fruits, and are bound to consider them identically the same—that is, all the Roxbury Russet.

The "Putnam Russet," grown on rich soil at the west, are rather larger, and have shorter stalks than the Roxbury Russet usually exhibits here. But we find this apple unusually variable, both in shape and in length of stalk. Ordinary specimens are rather flat, with a somewhat slender stalk—fine specimens are slightly elongated, with a short thick stalk. We gathered specimens from a Roxbury Russet tree at Dorchester which in shape, stalk, flavor, &c., appeared to us precisely identical with the "Putnam Russets" we have received from Ohio.

In the nurseries last summer we could distinguish no difference between the leaves, wood, and growth, of these two sorts.—O. Cultivator.

MR. BATEHAM:—You will confer a favor by publishing the following extract from Mr. Downing's letter.—There are several fruit cultivators of my acquaintance who have manifested some interest to know whether the Putnam Russet, is identical with the Roxbury Russet—whether the cooper apple, is the Gravenestien or Watson's Dumpling,—and whether the Little Pearmain, of this vicinity, is the American Golden Russet, of Mr. Downing's book? With a view of settling these questions, I forwarded to Mr. D., specimens of these, and other fruit, not described by him, under the names current here, and the following is his reply, at my request.

By the way, I shall take occasion, here, to give my suffrage in favor of Mr. D's. work "On the Fruit and Fruit Trees of America," as the best production I have seen on the subject. His method of giving, first, the proper, and then the local names of the different varieties of fruits, will do much to banish that confusion of names which now greatly afflict the nurseries of the country, and will enable the purchaser to know what kind of fruit he is getting. If the work had no other merit than this, it would be sufficient to recommend it to the public patronage.

Yours &c.,
C. SPRINGER.

Meadow Farm, O., Jan. 12, '47.

LETTER FROM MR. DOWNING.

Highland Gardens,
Newburgh, N. Y., Dec. 31, 1846.

DEAR SIR:—Notwithstanding the box of fruit did not reach me till the beginning of this month, yet most of the specimens you had the kindness to send me, were in good order.

You will see a notice of the Cooper Apple, &c., rec'd. from you, in the Jan. No. of the Horticulturist. I will now add a few remarks about the others.

"Little Pearmain." This appears to be the Sheep-nose of Coxe, and the American Golden Russet of my work. The "Seek-no-further," also, strongly resembles my Westfield-Seek-no-further, and I presume it is the same.

(I ought to note here, that our apples undergo a considerable chance in appearance, in being grown on your western soil. Mainly in the length of the stalk and depth of the cavity at both ends, which in your specimens is usually increased—i. e., the stalk is shorter and the basins deeper.)

The "Cooper Apple" is truly a noble fruit. It is most like our Fall Pippin; but quite distinct. It bears no resemblance to the Gravestien, which is a striped apple,* or to the Watson's Dumpling! Putnam Russet, from the Putnam source, I was truly glad to see. It is, I think, undoubtedly our Roxbury Russet. The "Never-fail" is unknown to me.

I shall be greatly interested to hear further accounts of your seedling apple. Your soil and climate are so well adapted to the apple, that new varieties of high merit must undoubtedly arise with you. With esteem, yours,

A. J. DOWNING.

REV. C. SPRINGER, Meadow Farm, O.

*The Coopers which grow in the sun are considerably striped.—C. S.

NEW SERIES

OF THE

Congressional Globe and Appendix.

CONGRESS at its last session, through the Joint Library Committee of the two Houses, having authorized a large subscription for the Congressional Globe and Appendix; and the Senate, by resolution, having directed the mode of preparing the reports of the proceedings, and authorized the Secretary of the Senate to contract with the undersigned, stipulating that the reports when written out shall be subject to the revision of the speakers, the Congressional Globe and Appendix is now offered to the public, not only as an authentic, but as an official report of the proceedings of Congress, made under the eye, and published by authority of the body.

The undersigned originated the mode of journalizing the proceedings of Congress, which, thus adopted, is to be perfected with the aid and under the supervision of Congress. Their publication was the first and only one that gave each successive step in every measure in both branches of Congress; a brief of all the debates; every important vote; and an Appendix, including at full length all the revised speeches delivered during the session.

The work, as it is now to be conducted by them, will be found a most perfect political history. The Senators from the States and the Representatives from every section of the Union bring with them into Congress a knowledge of the feelings, sentiments, and interests of their several constituencies. Public opinion and the public information, as it exists among those they represent, are embodied by them; and in the crucible of Congress the wisdom of our times is brought to its test, and is there concentrated, in directing the political movements of the whole country. The impulses thus given through Congress from every quarter react upon the nation as a whole, and all its component parts are made to move in co-operation. The press cannot be more usefully employed than in condensing and again spreading abroad the intelligence of our free country, tending to such happy results through our all most miraculously adjusted State and National institutions.

Having identified ourselves with the plan of advancing the usefulness of Congress by publishing full and impartial reports, and having a large mass of the Congressional Globe and Appendix, issued during the last twelve years which would be impaired in value to us and utility to the public if the work were discontinued, we have a double motive to prompt us to extend it through a new series. We are resolved, if possible, to give it permanence, and hand it down to successors as a standard work worthy of being maintained and improved. We shall enter upon our new undertaking without being distracted or burdened by any associate labors of the press; and thus unencumbered, shall hope to make the new series a step in advance of the former in all points of execution. With a view to accomplish this, we shall be (one or the other) in attendance on Congress.

The reports will not be affected by our party bias. We believe every member of Congress will bear witness that our reports are full and fair.

The Congressional Globe is made up of the daily proceedings of the two Houses of Congress, and printed on superfine double royal paper, with small type, (brevier and nonpareil,) in quarto form, each number containing sixteen royal quarto pages. The speeches of the members in this first form are condensed—the full report of the prepared speeches being reserved for the Appendix. All resolutions, motions, and other proceedings, are given in the form of the Journals, with the yeas and nays on every important question.

The Appendix is made up of the President's Annual Message, the reports of the principal officers of the Government that accompany it, and all speeches of members of Congress, written out or revised by themselves. It is printed in the same form as the Congressional Globe, and usually makes about the same number of pages during a session.

During the first month or six weeks of a session, there is rarely more business done than will make two numbers a week—one of the Congressional Globe and one of the Appendix; but during the remainder of a session, there is usually sufficient matter for two or three numbers of each every week. The next session will be unusually interesting; therefore, we calculate that the Congressional Globe and Appendix together will make near 1500 large quarto pages, printed in small type—brevier and nonpareil. We furnish complete Indexes to both at the end of a session.

We have on hand the Congressional Globe and Appendix for the last fifteen sessions of Congress, making together fifteen large royal quarto volumes, which we will sell unbound, for $41; or bound with Russia backs and corners for $56. Those who want the back volumes should apply for them immediately, as they are in demand. Congress subscribed for 341 complete sets during the two last sessions. The proceedings of Congress for the last nine years cannot be procured from any other source—Gales & Seaton having stopped printing their Register of Debates in 1837.

We will endeavor to print a sufficient number of surplus copies to supply all that may be miscarried, or lost in the mails; but subscribers should be very particular to file their papers carefully, for fear that we should not be able to supply all lost numbers.

TERMS.

For one copy of the Congressional Globe,	$1 00
For one copy of the Appendix,	1 00
For six copies of either, or part of both,	5 00

The money may be remitted by mail at our risk. The safest and best way to remit is, to pay the amount to the Postmaster where you reside, and take from him a receipt.

Our prices for these papers are so low that we cannot afford to credit them out; therefore, no person need consume his time in writing for them unless he sends the money. BLAIR & RIVES.

Washington, D. C. October 15, 1846.

JACOB THORN,

WHOLESALE dealer in all kinds of NOTIONS, No. 91, Wilson's Row, the first store below the Court House, is now opening a new and complete assortment of

NOTIONS AND DRY GOODS,

which will be sold wholesale, at prices a little below what they have ever been sold in this place.—Country Merchants and Pedlers, visiting the city are respectfully invited to examine my stock before purchasing elsewhere, among which may be found the following articles:—

800	Packs American solid head Pins.
200,000	Drilled Ey'd Needles, Sharps and Betweens.
2000	Doz Spool Thread.
500	Lbs. Patent do.
800	do. Cotton do.
3000	Doz. Side Combs.
600	do. Fine Ivory do.
500	do. Dressing do.
100	do. Woolen Comforters.
100	Brass Clocks.
1500	Prints (Engravings,) high col'd.
100	Doz. Chapman Strops.
5000	Almanacks.
300	Shawls, different patterns.
100	Gross Kitting Pins.
4	Bbls. Blacking.
30	Doz. slates.
50	Gt. Gro. Agate Shirt Buttons
500	Coils Bonnet Wire.
50	Gross Boot Laces.
500	do. Hooks and Eyes on Cards
100	do. Wood Combs.
200	do. Sherred and G. E. Suspenders
12	Boxes Fire Crackers
12	Doz. Looking-Glasses.
100	Gross Pearl Shirt Buttons.
6	Bales Brown Muslin.
200	Doz. Mitts.

Combs of every description, Buttons, Penknives, Razors, Table and Tea Spoons, Tapes, Eyeletts, Jewsharps, Pencils, Shaving Boxes, Gloves, Ladies cotton Hose, Matches, Dress Handkfs., Laces and Edgings, Spectacles, Thimbles, Beads, Candle Wicking, Night caps, Primers, Calicoes, bleached Muslins, Wafers, &c.

WANTED in exchange for goods at wholesale prices, Feathers, Beeswax, Ginsang, Rags and Hogs Bristles tied up in small bunches, for which will be given twenty-five cents a pound for all that can be brought in good order

Zanesville, O. Nov. 7, 1846.

PROSPECTUS OF THE

LITERARY ATHENÆUM,

A NEW AND SPLENDID MONTHLY MAGAZINE,

TO BE EDITED BY THE

Rev. Henry D. Moore, of Philadelphia,—and Rev. Andrew A. Lipscomb, Professor of English Literature and Belle Letters, in the city of Baltimore.

ON the first of January, 1847, the subscribers intend issuing the first number of a spendid Monthly Magazine, to be called the "LITERARY ATHENÆUM," to be devoted to the interest and circulation of a mind-refining, soul-inspiring, spirit-stirring literature; such a literature, in a word, as the progressive taste of society seems to demand.

Between the magazines of the day, which are devoted almost exclusively to the circulation of Christian Literature, and those devoted to the light, and in too many instances, tasteless and corrupting literature—there is a wide and deep chasm, to fill which successfully and profitably, very few attempts have been made. To supply this void, to some extent at least, is the intention of the subscribers, in issuing the "Literary Athenæum."

The general cast and character of the contents of the proposed magazine will be fixed according to the standard of the most sterling intellect, and the most liberal appreciation of the wants of the common mind. Its pages will ever present a feast and a glow, to feed and illumine the loftiest and purest taste and spirit of the admirers and lovers of refining and exalting literary walks and research.

To secure this grand design, effectually and honorably, no pains or expenses will be spared.

The contents will be purely original; consisting of Lectures, Addresses, Essays, &c., on the most popular and exciting literary and scientific subjects, from the most able writers that can be secured—interspersed and relieved by beautiful poetic composition.

Science, Art, and government, in their almost infinite variety development and interest, will be liberay and honorably discussed in its pages.

Arrangements are in progress for an extensive and important European correspondence, which will be a feature of great interest in its varied connections.

In addition to such articles, there will be presented occasional tales of unexceptionable character and style, differing essentially from the weakish romances which fill the pages of the many magazines of the day. Writers in this connection, can be secured, whose productions are the embodiment of life, true to itself,—and which will kindle and glow with the loftiest and purest sentiment, and thrill with the beauties of morality and religion in their loveliest forms.

Each number of the Athenæum will contain four embellishments of the first artistical merit, One of them will be a portrait of some distinguished personage in this country or in Europe, accompanied with an interesting biograpical sketch. Another will be a view of the buildings and grounds, of some one of the popular Universities, in this or the old world, accompanied with a historical, biograpical and statisical sketch in this body of the work. The portraits will be fine mezzotint, and the college views, beautiful line engravings. Then will follow richly colored specimens of flowers and fruit; in connection with which, there will also be presented interesting notices—floral and botanical—of climate, habits, culture, &c. All of which cannot but secure interest and favor.

Each number will comprise sixty pages of letter-press, double column, beautifully stereotyped, and printed on fine white paper; the whole corresponding in all respects, with the character of the other departments of the work.

Such is to be the character of the work at its commencement. If it is succersful, as it ought to be, and as is hoped and believed it will be,—improvement will be made as far as possible in the different departments, as they are suggested in the progress of the work.

The subscribers take pleasure in announcing to the public, that they have concluded arrangements with the Rev. Henry D. Moore, of Philadelphia, and Rev. Andrew A Lipscomb, Professor of English Literature and Belle Letters, of Raltimore, who will co-operate as Editors the of new Magazine. Under the management of those gentleman, the subscribers flatter themselves, abundant success will be secured in behalf of the enterprise.

TO PUBLISHERS.

The subscribers would also give notice to Publishers, at home and abroad, that there will be in connection with the work, an extensive review department. This will be made a feature of excelling interest. The department will be conducted fairly and honorably, and all works sent to the office of the subscribers, will receive such notices as their character may demand.

The first number will be issued on the first of January, 1847. Its contents and the name of contributors, will be published shortly.

TERMS—Three dollars per annum, in advance.

Editors of papers, copying this Prospectus, and sending a paper with it, to the office of the "Athenæum," shall receive the numbers of the work, and the thanks of the publishers.

All letters, containing orders for the work, post-paid, and enclosing the subscription price, will receive prompt attention. To be addressed to

F. C. WILSON & Co.

Philadelphio, Pa.

THE WEEKLY

CHRISTIAN WORLD;

An Independent, Comprehensive, and Impartial Newspaper; designed for welcome and useful circulation; Among all Friends of Christian Union, Christian Benevoleuce, and Christian Literature. To be published every Saturday, At the Reading-Room of the Christian Atheneum, over the Book-store of Mr. James Harmstead, Fourth St., between Market and Arch Sts., Philadelphia;

Price:—Two Dollors a-year invariably in advance.

T. H. STOCKTON,
J. G. WILSON,
THEOPHILUS STORR. } Editors.

W. S. STOCKTON,—General Agent.

TO persons who are acquainted with the character and objects of the CHRISTIAN WORLD, as they have been developed during the last six years, it is only necessary to say, that as soon as one thousand paying subscribers are secured, the paper will be put to press. The Old Subscription List ought to supply this number at once.

To other persons, it is proper to remark, that the Christian World, in print, is intended to reflect the Christian World, in action—in a word, daguerreotype it: and then, for purposes of common advantage, to compare the organized and operature Religion of the Age with the Religion of the Bible.

The enlarged literary and business agencies of the Establishment, are deemed amply sufficient to assure the public of successful management. Its immediate connexion with the CHRISTIAN ATHENEUM—an Institution which is to be furnished with many of the principal organs of Church and State, both in Europe and America,—will give its conductors early access to invaluable sources of universal intelligence.

DIRECTIONS

1. On receipt of this Prospectus, let the Old subscribers at every Post-office, appoint one of their number, or some other suitable person, an Agent. Let him send us, at once, as many names and as much money as possible. In cases where substantial agents make themselves responsible for their subscribers, this resposibility will be regarded as equivalent to payment in advance—provided they settle their accounts within six months. Even in such cases, however, immediate payments are decidedly preferable; and, to encourage them, the commissions to agants are arranged thus:—On cash orders, 25 per cent.: on deferred remittances, 12½ per cent.

2. As the Prospectus will be widely distributed, let all persons who see it, and feel an interest in it, act promptly in the manner described above. It is thought that a little effort will be sufficient to procure a company, or club, at almost any Post-office in the Union. The times increasingly demand just such a publication as is proposed.

Address,—W. S. STOCKTON, General Agent, Philadelphia, Pa.: or either of the Associate Editors. All orders will be punctually attended to.

T. H. STOCKTON,
Editor and Proprietor.

Philadelphio, December, 1846.

ATTENTION!!

Look Here, All!!

I HAVE JUST received from New York, a fine assortment of Foreign and Domestic DRY GOODS consisting of, Cloths, Casimeres, Sattinents, Tweeds, and Jeans, Cashmeres, Mouslin de Lains, Alpaccas, Morenoes, and Cloakings, Flannels, Checks, Linseys, Brown and Bleach-Muslins, Shawls and Prints of every variety, Men's and Boys' Caps Boots and Shoes. Also Coffee, Sugar, Tea &c. All of which I am offering to the public,

AT VERY REDUCED PRICES,

for cash, or in exchange for country produce of all kinds.

I would add, that those wishing to purchase cheap goods will find it to their advantage to give me a call, as I am determined to SELL my goods. W. B. GUTHRIE.

Putnam Ohio, October 31, 1846.

SNETHEN'S SERMONS.—Rev. Ulysses Ward of Washington City, has just published a volume of Sermons by the late Rev. N. Snethen. It comprises 480 pages, and is elegantly bound in cloth. Price $1,00 per single copy. Ten copies or more at the rate of $4. And for 50 or more copies, 84 cents apiece. Cash in all cases to be remitted when the books are ordered. "He, being dead, yet speaketh."

THE WESTERN RECORDER.

VOL. VIII---NO. 19. PUTNAM, MUSKINGUM COUNTY, OHIO, FEBRUARY 13, 1847. WHOLE NO. 383.

The Western Recorder,
Is Published every Saturday,
PUTNAM, OPPOSITE ZANESVILLE, OHIO.
OFFICE ON MAIN STREET.
A. H. BASSETT, Editor and Proprietor.
C. ALLEN, PRINTER.

TERMS.—Two Dollars per annum, in advance. Fifty at the close of the year. Payments within six months will be considered in advance.
All letters and communications must be addressed, to the Editor, post paid, except such as contain funds, and directed to Putnam Muskingum Co. Ohio.
Itinerant Ministers and others, who collect from subscribers and remit to us as much as ten dollars within a year, shall receive a copy of the paper free.
Itinerant ministers and preachers, not acting as agents, may have the paper at one dollar.
Clubs of ten or more, paying at the time of subscribing, may have the paper for $15, i. e. one dollar fifty, each.

THEOLOGICAL.

Written for the Western Recorder.

GOD IS LOVE.

NO. III.

BY DR. D. GIBBONS.

The perfection of God's system for the full and perfect salvation of man is such, that every candid and unbiased mind, in its contemplation, feels it the highest admiration. The system is absolutely perfect,—elegantly harmonizing. There is but one true, or infallible test, to demonstrate the reality, and perfection of any system. That is trial. A machine for instance is invented—it is a perfect machine for one certain purpose. If we wish to know whether the machine is good, or whether it will perform or answer the purpose, specified by the inventor. What plan will you adopt to find the desired knowledge? You would not ignorantly, and dishonestly declaim against the machine as good for nothing. Surely not. But you would test it as an honest and dignified man, according to the prescribed rules. If it answered the purpose for which it was made—if the performance was rapid and perfect, you would with pleasure announce your firm conviction of the perfection as a machine of great utility. You would not expect, however valuable and perfect the machine, that it would be of any service at all unless used according to the prescribed rules for its government. The conclusion is as plain, and as clear as the light of day, that every thing must be used or received in order to receive benefit from it. The machine is only perfect for one specified object, and for nothing else. The design for which it is made is perfectly answered. It is precisely so in regard to God's perfect system to redeem man. The design, of the Almighty in the permanent establishment, of this system, and its dissemination through the whole world, is to save man from the principle of moral evil,—to qualify him for usefulness, and thus be fully prepared to enjoy God on earth and in heaven. If man is saved from moral evil or sin, he is happy. Sin is the true, the only origin of misery. If sin were universally annihilated, pain, misery, and death, would no longer be. Now the question is whether God's plan is sufficient to save every man who honestly takes refuge under the healing wings of God's plan of righteousness? We answer yea—and amen we answer amen, from the deep and abiding conviction we feel, of its universal and absolute sufficiency. It will never perform the design in any man who is unwilling to receive its benefits. This is perfectly in accordance with the nature of things that God's system to renovate man is abundantly sufficient to save him with an entire perfection. It is so plain, and so clear, that all, both learned and unlearned, may fully comprehend it. It has the eternal impress or stamp of Heaven's own high and grand divinity upon it. This is in its elegant promulgation through the world, within the hearing of every man. Its light and beauty have been reflected upon all the human race. It has been and yet is offered, in the most inviting manner, to every soul of man. It comes with a tasteful elegance and an uncompromising majesty to every family, and separately, to every man. And beside all this, every man, whether learned or unlearned, bond or free; rich or poor; white or black, is sufficiently competent, by the assisting grace of God, to practice all the sublime, as well as simple principles of this incomparable system of human redemption. It is free for all—and most graciously offered to all. And whoever rejects it—by refusing its offered benefits, sins against his own soul, to his final destruction. This religion is not only offered to every soul on earth. But reasons clear, powerfully convincing, are presented, in the most elegant manner, why this religion should be embraced, and cheerfully and most cordially practised. Reasons enough, of weight and number, to charm the heart of angels, and stimulate them to every kind of holy and useful action. Reasons which conclusively show the pure and substantial enjoyment of all who with honest heart, and pure affection, seek and practice, the principles of this religion in the love faith and love of it. Reasons, so powerful and true that they cannot be gainsayed, nor resisted. Reasons for force and conclusiveness incomparable. Reasons that equally convince the judgment, and enlist the sympathies. And in short reasons that show, in the strongest light, the present and eternal interest religion is to all its faithful votaries. And not only so; but religion here is designed to qualify all its subjects for the full enjoyment of a future state of blissful immortality. This qualification includes a complete preparation for a happy death. There is perhaps no scene, on earth, more affecting and interesting, than that of a christian dying happy—in exulting strains rejoicing, to meet the coming Saviour—uttering his firm, unshaken confidence, and sweet-expressing, his animating hope, of being transported to the sublime abode, "of Glory and of God." If there be a scene on earth that angels delight in it is that of a christian's triumphant, happy death. There is no heart so cold, so unfeeling, as not to be seriously effected by the triumphant testimony, of the christian, as he dies happy in the image of his God. The marked design of religion, here, is to qualify mankind for the perfect enjoyment of heaven. It is but a meagre idea of the christian religion to suppose that the Almighty Saviour mainly designed to make man happy on earth, that God did intend man to be happy by religion in this life there can be no doubt. But the primary intention of the Supreme Being, in the redemption of our world, was doubtless, by various processes of faith, repentance, good works, and obedience to purify and fully prepare the sons of men to love and at last, enjoy Heaven. In the processes requisite to cultivate man for Heaven's enjoyment, it was surely intended that man should take pleasure in the performance of the duties he owes to God. It is seen by the delight we take in the duties of religion that we are becoming qualified for heaven. Let every christian look well to this point. If he take no pleasure, no delight, in performing the duties of religion, he may be sure that he is not fit for heaven. In proportion as we feel love to God here and serve Him in the beauty of holiness, will we be prepared to enjoy Heaven after death. We are then to be made meet fit for Heaven. Heaven is not made fit for our corrupt condition. If for instance the primary joy of Heaven consisted in elegantly enchanting visions, we in order to enjoy Heaven must, if blind, recover sight. If Heaven's chief joy consists of holiness, and love, we, to enjoy Heaven, must be transformed into love and holiness.

Western Sketches.

Written for the Western Recorder.

REMINISCENCES

OF THE FIRST SETTLEMENT OF OHIO.

NO. I.

Friend Bassett:—In as much as some, are enquiring into the early history of different parts of our State of Ohio, I propose to offer a few recollections of my own, and traditions, as I received them from older persons, who were personally concerned in the things I shall relate. And in doing so, I shall draw for most of the facts, previous to my own recollection, from a manuscript of my Father, the late Col. Ichabod Nye, (for I was myself a child of two years old, when my Father arrived at Marietta in 1788:) For subsequent events, from what I have heard from the actors, and from my own recollections; which reach to within about six months of the time of my arrival. What I may write may not be interesting to some of your readers as this splendid War with Mexico engages so large a part of their sympathies. This is upon so much larger scale, than the difficulties and trials that beset the Pioneers of our State, that the facts may not charm a large space in the estimation of the public, as our Indian War cannot boast, so large a destruction of Human life, or waste of pecuniary means, as at present grace the pages of our papers; still there was suffering distress, and alarm sufficient to interest the sympathies of many who are desendant of those, braved the trials "of the Far West," as it was at that day.

Gen. Benjamin Tupper of Chesterfield, Massachusetts, took an early part in our Revolutionary contest: He had served in what was termed the "French War" though then very young. His farm being on the west side of the Connecticut river, in comparatively a new country, far removed from the scene of contest. He offered his services to the State and served previous to Gen. Washington's appointment to the command of our Armies and served under him at Boston. He rose to the command of one of the Massachusetts Regiments and served to the close of the war; during the latter part of which his eldest son Anselm Tupper was an adjutant in a Regiment from the same State, commanded by Colonel Ebenezar Sproat. Those officers who served to the close of the war, were promoted by Brevitt, by act of Congress; by which he obtained the title of general. He had expended, to maintain himself and family during the war, most of his property, and in 1785 came out to Fort Pitt with a view to survey a part of the seven ranges of townships in the upper part of our State, under the Continental Congress; some difficulty with the Indians prevented; but I believe it was that year, he visited Fort Harmer a small Fort erected on the west bank of the Muskingum, by Maj. Harmer under the authority of the Continental Congress. He returned to his home in the winter of 1785-86. In June 1786 he returned to the western country and took with him his son Anselm Tupper, and surveyed a part of the 7 Ranges. He reached his home the second time, in January 1787, and was at Springfield at the time Shays' insurrection was at the highest, and under the orders of Gen. Shephard, repulsed the party that attempted to take the U. S. Stores at that place. After he was released from this duty, he went to Rutland, Worcester County Mass. to see Gen. Rufus Putnam, who had also commanded one of the U. S. Regiments during the war and urged him, to enter with him into the project of making a settlement in the West; and under a pledge to move his family out at once, obtained Gen. Putnam's concurance in the scheme; and they with their friends formed what was called the Ohio Company. Through the agency of Dr. Manassa Cutler and Winthrop Sargeant, who were delegates, purchased a tract of land, since called the Ohio Company's purchase: Which was to be paid for in Army land warrants, and final certificates, of money due by the Government to Officers and Soldiers. Several persons undertook to get subscriptions for shares, who were I believe between 11 and 1200 acres each. These were termed Agents, and mostly constituted the board of Directors. In some instances two, or more persons subscribed for one share; others subscribed for two, or more. This land was divided into different lots, such as 640 acres, 320, 160, 100, 3, 3 Acres, and a town lot. Each subscriber had to pay some money, to pay the expense of surveying, &c.

As soon as the Company was organized, Gen. Tupper began his arrangements for moving. My Father, who had married His eldest daughter Minerva, was induced to accompany him. His eldest son Anselm had remained at the west, and made preparations for the family. His other sons were Edward and Benjamin with one daughter, all single. That country was then so new, that they had to send to Connecticut to procure a man to make the wagons.

In the spring of 1788, Gen. Rufus Putnam, started for Ohio, and on the 7th day of April landed at the mouth of the Muskingum with about forty men, to build a fort, and prepared houses, &c. for the families that were to follow during the summer. He pitched his tent in the woods on the upper point, and immediately the work commenced. The first thing was to clear ground for corn and other vegetables. Gen. P. laid out the fort afterwards called Campus Martius, on an elevated bank of the plain, where it approaches the Muskingum; about three-fourths of a mile from the Ohio. About the last of April Judges Parsons and Varnum arrived, and with them, our fellow citizen Levi Chapman, then a lad. They found Gen. Putnam in his tent, and the next day commenced, with hands from the Fort Harmer, to put up the first hut on the upper point, built of logs, and covered with elm bark; with bark for door and bunks to lodge in. The building of the fort went on as fast as the other work would allow. The Judges who were also the legislature (with the Gov. Arthur St. Clair, and Secretary Winthrop Sargeant) organized the territorial Government; passed laws organized the Militia &c., during the summer.

On the 10th day of June, Gen. Tupper and family (including my Father, Mother, a sister and myself) left Chesterfield. About the first of August, they reached Charlestown, now Wellsburgh, where they remained about two weeks, waiting for Major Coburn and other families, to occupy a boat which had been built by Capt. Jonathan Devol for the company. Ichabod Nye with two hired men and a boy, started with the worn out horses by land, on the Virginia side of the Ohio, as there was no road or track, they had to follow the bank, heading the small Creeks, and were nine days in reaching the Muskingum where they had to swim their horses over the Ohio. They found Gen. P. still in his tent, but a number of the houses of the fort and around it partly built; two of the block houses at the corners were covered as were several private houses forming sides of the fort; in one of which Col. Battell was keeping a public house: his first meal was with Capt. Dana in a cabin near where the bank of Marietta is kept. At night he found lodgings on the floor of Col. Battells house, and the next day found quarters with Dean Tyler, until the families should arrive. There was one woman in the settlement, on the upper point, a Mrs. Owens, who with her husband come out to take care of Judge Varnum, whose health was bad. On the third day he was warned to do guard duty by Eben Cory; and had the guard committed to his charge. On the first Sabbath he found preaching at Col. Battelle's; so early had the institution of the gospel been established amongst them. He also formed acquaintance with Dr. True. There was no school there because there were no children; but where even the sons of the Pilgrims locate, there the institutions of the gospel and schools accompany them, and the doctor as well as the minister are amongst the early setlers.

I will here mention the names of some of the persons who were here the first season; but I am not able to give a complete list of those who came out with Gen. Putnam, or arrived during the summer either from my fathers notes, or my own knowledge; and probably may omit many whom I afterward knew amongst the early settlers. Of the agents were Gen. Putnam. Winthrop Sargeant secretary of the territory, Judges Parsons and Varnum of settlers, Capt. Dana, Capt. Johnathan Devol, Joseph Barker, Col. Battell, Major Tyler, Dr. True, Capt. Wm. Gray, Capt. Lunt. In a house called the Boston house was Moody, Russels, Leavens, Oaks & Wright. Clough and Green had a house out of the fort, also Shipman and Dorance. There were two brothers by the name of Bridge, brick masons, Ebenezer and Thomas Cory, Andrew McClure, Wm. Mason, a cabinet maker. Thomas Lord Esq. There was Wm. Gridley and a Mr. Frothingham, who had each a house some distance from the fort, Gilbert Devol I believe and some of the Maxsons, Well's and many others whose names I do not now recollect. Most of these, if not all were here before the families. All were exerting themselves to prepare for the families. Provisions were scarce, only wild meat and that poor, with green corn and vegetables out of a field called the big field, where several persons had patches of corn &c.

On the 19th of August the first boat load of families arrived at the landing packed in all most as slaves in the middle passage consisting of Gen. Tupper, Col. Cushing, Major Coburns, Major Goodale and Col. I. Nye's. In my next I may give some further account if you think these notes worthy a place in your paper. Horace Nye.

ECCLESIASTICAL.

Written for the Western Recorder.

CHURCH DIVISION.

Things to be Considered.

NO. VIII.

Mr. Editor:—The third, and last particular which we shall now notice as an advantage to be derived from the division from the South, is, That it will relieve us from the unpleasentness of a direct contact, face to face, with those whose conduct we cannot approbate.

Don't laugh at this, Mr. Editor, for it is a plain statement of a sober truth. Various causes combine to render such a collision unpleasant, and to incline us to wish to avoid them whenever we possibly can, with any show of consistency. The fear of wounding, or offending the feelings of others—the fear of creating an enemy, where a friend might be secured—the fear of arousing an invincible opponent—and the natural timidity of our natures, together with the strong predisposition of all men, to prefer the approbation and favor of their fellows, powerfully incline us to desire exemption from direct hostilities, whenever we can with honorable safety. This division will give us a position removed from where we shall be called upon to meet our erring fellows of the South, face to face, tell them of their wrong, and urge upon them our rebukes and condemnation for that wrong. After it has been effected, we can make our denunciations against slaveholding and slaveholders, as behind their backs, where they need not hear nor read them, unless they choose; as they will be far removed from our reach. The timid, and diffident of our number, can then speak out with unblinking courage when they feel confident that the condemned are not within speaking distance to hear and reply. And our feelings will not be so likely to be chafed by contradictions, or by having the correctness and propriety of our notion of things, called in question.—We can then have all they say to ourselves, and no one to dispute, or gain say our maledictions!

These strike my mind as being some of the most prominent advantages to be derived from such a division; and if they offer a motive adequate to the jeopardy to be incured by the movement, perhaps we may advance in the undertaking with propriety. But if our leading desire and aim is, to oppose sin—and especially the sin of slavery, in the most direct and efficient maner possible without regard to popular favor or frowns, we shall find that our present position affords us the best opportunity for so doing; and that division, will embarrass us with many disadvantages.

We will look at some of them, and discover, if possible whether they outweigh in importance the advantages to be derived.

1. All our christian, or ecclesiastical action against slavery, will then of necessity be of an indirect character.

We shall then posses neither power nor opportunity to meet it in direct contact in the church. This, I think every one must perceive upon a moments reflection. When this division shall have been completed, we shall become as spectators in the work of direct opposition to slavery as it exists within the pales of ecclesiastical organization, unless we conclude to become "busybodies in other men's matters." We yield the contest, and quit the field, by separation, In our present position, we are allowed to do all in our Annual Conference capacity, that we possibly could do in any way if divided: And then in our General Conference, we can now meet it face to face, with all the armor of truth which we can possibly bring to our aid. But the act of division, will inevitably bolt every door, of access to the south, by direct influence in the church, and thus most effectually curtail our power to benefit the enslaved. This, I think, no one acquainted with our church polity will pretend to deny. Hence, if we divide, will it not be to serve ourselves, rather than the cause of crushed and bleeding humanity at the South; or of a merciful, patient, longsuffering, and condecending christianty? There is a zeal, prompted by selfishness, which very much resembles, upon the ouside, that which is prompted by righteousness and benevolence. Let us examine ourselves.

E. A. W.

SCIENTIFIC.

On the discovery of New Planets and Especially the Last.

BY G. G. VALE, N. Y.

The old planets visibly move among the stars, and nearly in the ecliptic or apparent track of the sun: consequently they are discovered by observation, and their apparent motion recorded.

The discovery of the asteroids or new planets, a remarkable triumph of science, inasmuch as a large planet was sought for in the very region wher e Vesta, Juno, Ceres and Pallas were found. The expectance of the existence of a large planet in the neighborhood where these small ones were found, was based on an arithmetical proportion observed between all the then known planets with the exception of the distance between Mars and Jutpier; and the discovery of a planet between these two would make the series regular. The series, as we recollect, is 4, 12, 28, 60, &c., and is thus formed: Let 4 represent the distance of the first planet from the sun, then the next will be twice four, and 4 added, making 12; then the third planet will be twice the second, (or twice twelve,) and four added, making 28, &c. Based on this fact, the astronomers sought a planet between Mars and Jupiter, and expected a large one, because in general the planets had increased in size with the increase of distance. In search of this large planet Piazzi discovered the small one Ceres, in 1801; and in 1802, Dr. Olbers discovered Pallas, also a small planet, revolving near the orbit of Ceres. From this unexpected phenomenon of two small planets, near each other, and in the expected neighborhood where one large planet was sought, from the reasons before given, Dr. Olbers presumed that these two small planets might be but fragments of one large one; and thus stimulated, a further search was made, which resulted in the discovery of Juno and Vesta—the latter by Dr. Olbers—all moving in the same neighborhood, and that the region explored with the expectency of finding a large planet. It will be found afterward that the arithmetical series, before noticed, was a necessary element in the discovery of the last planet by Le Verrier.

Previous to the above discoveries, in the year 1781, Sir William Herschel had discovered Uranus, or, as it is more generally called, Herschel, a large planet, without the boundaries of Saturn, but preserving the relative distance, and though not the largest of the planets, yet nevertheless a very large one. This planet had been previously discovered, but for want of a large telescope its character was not known. To Herschel, therefore, belonged the discovery, for his telescope was made by himself, and for such purposes; but as Uranus had been noticed as a star in the old catalogues, his attention was already drawn to it, and his discovery was one of observation. He and his sister also discovered various satellites; and to him more than any other man is modern astronomy indebted. The brilliant theories of La Place are based on Herschel's discoveries, and are so acknowledged by that able French philosopher.

The phenomena of Uranus formed the principal elements in the discovery of the last planet, "Le Verrier."

The planets influence each other, and the satellites of each other, in the way of attraction, as magnets: indeed, the planets are magnets, formed in the most approved manner by the Galvanic fluid operating on the crust of the earth, aided no doubt by the metallic veins and ores; in evidence of which, the natural magnet is an iron ore, while our best artificial magnets, or electro-magnets, are formed in the same way. Galvanism being the agent, and attraction and repulsion being properties of magnets, the motions of the whole planetary system are easily accounted for, including the eccentricties of the comet; for this last when exhaused of its electricity, or in a negative state will seek the sun in rapid motion as it approaches that body, to which it will be attracted for a supply, and when received in superabundance, at the nearest approach to the sun, will be positively charged, and from that cause a mutual repulsion will take place, and it will be driven off; but having passed the nearest point in its orbit, it will go forward and form an elliptical orbit, on known natural principles.

The irregularities in the motions of the planets and satellites have long been known, and accounted for by the influence (magnetic) which they exert on each other; and where the exact position of a planet, the moon or other satellites, is required, these influences are allowed for.

The irregularities of Uranus long since attracted the attention of astronomers. It was early remarked, that they were not accounted for by the influence of the known planets; and it was suggested by Herschel and others, that possibly another exterior and large planet existed! This supposition, therefore, is not Le Verrier's; but it was his discovery to determine that if such planet existed, by calculating the known influence, he could determine where that planet was, its size, and orbit: this is glory enough for future fame; it implies a knowledge of and a belief in science, and in his own powers of skill and industry.

These, then, are the elements on which the calculations were made, and the discovery effected:

From the arithmetical series referred to, Le Verriee knew the distance of a presumed planet.

From the acceleration or retardation, or both, of the planet Uranus, he determined the direction of the new planet.

From the quantity of the influence of the unknown body, and knowing or presuming its distance, he determined its size or quantity of matter, as bodies attract in proportion to their quantity and distance.

From the direction of the influence at different times, and knowing the distance, he determined certain points in its orbit which would give him a section of that orbit, from which he would get the whole; and from the time the planet was performing a certain segment of its orbit, he would get the time necessary to complete it.

To make the subject popular and clear, draw two circles, or the orbits of the entire planetary system, incuding that of the new planet, according to the arithmetical progression before referred to: the dot in the middle will represent the sun or its centre; the third circle from the centre will represent the earth's orbit, which will be found so near the centre, or sun, in comparison to the orbits of the distant planets, as to show that the apparent situation of those distant planets, especially the last, as seen from the earth's orbit, will be nearly the same as the real situation as seen from the sun.

With this arrangement locate Uranus, or put a dot in its place, as seen from the sun on earth, (nearly the same,) on the date of the first recorded observation about its being under the influence of a supposed planet; then draw a line in the direction of that influence, estimated by comparing it with all the observations made, as to whether it accelerated or retarded the planet or draw it further from the centre, more or less than in other situations. Where the line thus drawn crosses the presumed orbit of the new planet, it will be its (the planet's) place for that day. In the same way find its place for each day (at distant periods) that the planets under influence was observed, and you get successive dots on the original circle, showing the planet's situation at each time, from which you can obtain the entire period of its circuit, and where it will be at any given time. And in this manner did Le Verrier predict its position, and direct his friend to apply his powerful telescope, when, within a degree of his calculation, the planet was found.—Albion.

Ministers' Department.

From the Western Christian Advocate.

Things that Grieve Me.

1. It grieves me to see a Methodist traveling preacher, whose fourth quarterly meeting for the year happens to come on six or eight weeks before his annual conference, quit his circuit, or station as soon thereafter as he can settle with the stewards. It gives the adversary occasion to speak reproachfully, and many who love the cause of God, are seriously tempted to fear had it not been for the quarterage, he would have left sooner; that is to say he is a hireling sheperd, who careth not for the sheep. Query: have not the presiding elder and the preacher whose fourth quarterly meeting comes off six or eight days before conference, as good a right to leave as soon? Or is the little matter of self-interest involved, the only tie by which Christ has bound the pastor to his flock?

2. It grieves me to see a preacher, after he has received an appointment at conference, rolling about in his buggy, visiting his friends, or hard at work on his farm, for three weeks or a month, instead of going directly to his work. By means of such men, some of our circuits are three months in the year without pastoral attention; and yet these men expect their full Disciplinary allowance, and it may be even clamor for it; and if they do not get it, go away and speak reproachfully of a people they should have served better. I should be pleased to see such preachers paid in proportion to the time they serve.

3. It grieves me to hear a preacher always harping about his quarterage. Excepting what may be said in the pulpit, I fear some talk more about their support than they do about holiness. Now I ask, is it true that most men speak most of what they think most? And do they think most of what they love best? Or is the saying of our Lord, "Out of the abundance of the heart, the mouth speaketh," a good rule by which to judge of a man's thoughts and affections? For a preacher to suffer the people of his charge to be uninstructed, in relation to the duty of supporting the Gospel ministry, would be culpable neglect; but to be ever and anon talking about quarterage, gives room to suppose that the preacher thinks this to be a matter of paramount importance. An old brother asked a preacher who was on his way to conference not long since, how he succeeded on his circuit the past year. The preacher replied, "First rate—I got all my quarterage."—The old brother thought had the same question been proposed to a preacher twenty years ago, a different answer would haae been given. In the first place, something would have been said about the number converted and added to the Church; and then if anything had been said about quarterage, it would have been spoken of as a secondary matter; but the answer of the preacher refered to was calculated to make the impression, that he thought all must be right if the quarterage was paid. Such preachers seldom collect much for educational or benevolent purposes.

4. It grieves me when I am passing through the country, to hear brethren saying, "Our preacher has been on our circuit nearly a year, and has never met our class more than once or twice."—If preachers neglect to meet class, leaders will neglect too, and then Discipline will not be administered; and with this away goes Methodist.

5. It grieves me to see a preacher when he first goes to a circuit, put on the airs of a little lord, and threaten to leave the people, to whom he is sent, if they do not provide for his support as he thinks they should. Such preachers suggest two questions to my mind: First, if the Methodist preachers had done so what would Methodism have been now? Secondly, when these brethren received their call to preach, did it run in these terms: "Go into all the world and preach my Gospel to every creature, provided they will support you; if not, let them be damned?" Such brethren should consider if people are able to support the Gospel and do not, it must be because they are not as good as they should be, and to make bad people good, and good people better, is, under God, the work of a Methodist preacher; and how is he most likely to do this? By putting on airs, or running off and leaving them? Believe it who can, I cannot.

6. It grieves me to see a preacher so full of jesting and fun, as to keep all around him convulsed with laughter. Few are benefitted by the society of such preachers while living, and none will care for them when they are dying.

An Itinerant.

December 30, 1846.

Beautiful Inscription.—During a recent visit to Laurel Hill Cemetery, near Philadelphia, while wandering around among the sculptured monuments, we saw on a plain slab of marble, these simple yet beautiful words:—

"Our Mother—
She taught us how to live and how to die."

THE MYSTERIES OF TOBACCO.

The Boston Chronotype alluding to a work recently published entitled "Tobacco and its Mysteries," makes the following observations, which, though homely in their way, are none the less true on that account:

The mysteries of tobacco! We tho't the weed was full of revelations. Spittoons, old chews, cigar stumps, do they shrowd themselves in mystery? Snuff, does it not reveal itself on the shirt bosom? Smoke, is it not the vital atmosphere of the most common place of mortals? Yet, come to think of it, there are mysteries about this subject. It is an unfathomable mystery why a man who is not overblessed with brains, should be willing to make the blessing less, and there are other mysteries which cluster around this. On the whole the more we think of the tobacco subject, the more mysterious it becomes. Alcohol is such a monopolizing old tyrant, that he overshoots himself. He carries is so far that his victim escapes at last, even in the agonies of despair. But tobacco is a cool, calculating, cunning slave master, who manages so as to boast that his slaves love him, and would not leave him if they could. He does'nt work them to death. True he keeps them forever grinding in his mill, grinding over the most villainous morsels that ever entered human lips, the liquid ever and anon escaping in little tell-tale streams at the corners of their mouths; but then the work is not hard: it is only dirty. There are few persons who would take their shirt bosoms from the laundress and blotch them over with nasty yellow spots before putting them on. Yet a man who is up to snuff will do what amounts to the same thing, immediately after he dresses himself. One would not expect a man to stupify himself with a stinking sort of smoke, which will smother bees as quick as that of brimstone, willingly, day after day, and at considerable expense, and to go spitting and puking about in every by cornor as if he were sick at the stomach and awful bilious. Yet thousands appear to do it voluntarily. Truly this is a mystery.

A man calling himself a gentleman, with all the outward apportionments of a gentleman, and every thing but the smell of a gentleman, will do in your house, in your parlor, in the presence of ladies, things which if not under the spell of tobacco, no money would tempt him to do. How does this come about? The god of tobacco takes the man in the gristle of youth; in the tender age of boyhood, while the chin is yet downy like a young goslins, and while brains are only in that state of forwardness which they reach in monkeys. He points him to the dignified lawyer smoking in his office, as he thumbs the revised statutes, and then gravely knocking the ashes from the end of his cigar delivers the precious lore to some consulting client. He points him to a number of first chop gentlemen smoking in the hotel, as the stage stops to change horses, and delivering at the same time the most striking views of their own importance. He even goes so far as to point him to some Reverend divine, who with great sanctity of manner smokes and chews. Thus the young man in the gristle is taught that the highest style of mortals do smoke, or chew, or both.—He sees the great men smoke.

As to the great men who do not smoke their example passes for nothing, of course, for they may smoke when he does not see them. He never hears them say no! or whew! to the business of smoking. If they don't smoke, they are smoked, and they don't resist. Their example and influence are only negative. The youth is carried away by the positive. That is something, that is great, that is manly. Is there anything which a noble and ingenuous boy more desires, in his exceeding verdure, than to become a man? Does he not long for a long-tailed coat? Does he not sigh for whiskers and a razor? Is there any drug, any detestable compound of villainous tastes and smells which he would not chew and roll as a sweet morsel under his tongue, to become a man? No. If you were to soak woolen rags in the common sewer, he would chew them with a serene face, to help him to become a man! He schools himself with little nips of the sickening narcotic, as his stomach can bear, and suffers like a martyr in secret. He smokes and throws away the stumps at a genteel length. Finally the rebellious nerves begin to give in and become manly. All smells and tastes begin to become more alike, a delightful quietness, stupidity, and devil-may-care begins to creep over him. And along with it all comes the great price, the high sense of being a complete man. And it is soon wondrous to behold with what a relish sang froid and matter of course manner the human tadpole will put on the frog in the art of using up his Havanas.

Poor fellow! he little knows that a god more cunning than all the heathen divinities put together, has bound him in his spell, and that he is destined to be an everlasting stench every where. That he is fated to declare his love to the angel of his affections, in the intervals of spewing upon the brass andirons, or into a lustrous spottoon, or out of the window, and that she will submit to his salutations as to a dreadful cross which must be taken up for the sake of the kingdom. He little thinks that he has taken upon his intellect, his imagination his memory, his reasoning faculties, a perpetual ass-load of lead. But he has. And there is no escape. He is to be a dirty fellow in spite of himself. If tobacco got him down among the swine, robbed him of every cent of his money, and turned all his friends to enemies, as alchohol does, he might get out of its clutches. But wo to it! It leaves him forever a respectable nuisance of whom no one complains—except behind his back.

But to the book. We cannot review it. It is enough to say that it contains the following noble and characteristic letter from Hon. John Quincy Adams, to the author of its preface.

Quincy, Mass. Aug. 19, 1846.

Dear Sir.—I have received your letter of the 13th instant, and shall deem myself honored by the inscription to me of your introduction to the proposed publication of the Rev. J. B. Lane's work on Tobacco and its Mysteries.—In my early youth I was addicted to the use of tobacco in two of its mysteries smoking and chewing. I was warned by a medical friend of the pernicious operation of this habit upon the stomach and the nerves, and the advice of the physician was fortified by the results of my own experience. More than thirty years have passed away since I deliberately renounced tobacco in all its forms, and although the resolution was not carried into effect without a struggle of vitiated nature, I never yielded to its impulses, and in the space of three or four months of self-denial, they lost their stimulating power, and I have never since felt it as a privation.

I have often wished that every individual of the human race afflicted with this artificial passion, could prevail upon himself to try but for three months the experiment which I have made! sure that it would turn every acre of tobacco land into a wheat field and add five years of longevity to the average of human life!

I am with great respect Dear Sir,
Your friend and Christian brother,
JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

Rev. S. Cox, D. D., Broklin, N. Y.

Religious Intelligence.

Steubenville, Feb. 14, 1847.

MY DEAR BR. BASSETT: Since my last communication, I have visited Ohio and Manchester circuits: the New Brighton Allegheny and Pittsburgh stations, and the Sharpsburg circuit. The first three, were in a good orderly condition, but not at the time of my visits in the revival state. The last three have been favored with refreshing seasons from the presence of the Lord, and a goodly number have been added to the church. Leaving all the Brethren to speak for themselves. I will only add, that the Sharpsburgh Ct. under the superintendance of Br. W. H. Doe, is rising far beyond the expectations of any one who knew any thing of their troubles, on the slave question, six months ago. I believe them a good, honest people, and hope they will have abundant prosperity. Yours truly,

GEO. BROWN.

Bainbridge Circuit, February 8, 1847.

DEAR BR. BASSETT: We are still trying hard on this (Bainbridge Ct.) to push the war into the enemy's camp, and put to flight the armies of the aliens. The battle seems to wax long and hard; but blessed be the name of the good Lord, that by the weapons of our warfare, which are not carnal, we have been the means of rescuing a few prisoners from the old arch enemy. Our second quarterly meeting is now in progress at Cove Spring; and last evening we enjoyed omens of good from the Lord. Four penitent souls united with the Church, as probationers. The Quarterly Conference adjourned, to meet at Hopewell, at the time of Brother Young's Presidential visit to this circuit. Brother Dobbins will see by this arrangement, that I will necessarily be prevented from attending his quarterly meeting at Cuba, as I had designed. Yours in love,

A. H. TRUMBO, Sup't.

Written for the Western Recorder.

NOVEL READING.

How often is it remarked by professors of christianity, that "novel-reading is so well calculated to correct and refine the taste, the language is so pure, the moral generally good," with a variety of other eulogizing expressions, design'd to encourage and promote its practice; at the same time desiring the universal spread of vital piety throughout the world, and praying with a degree of fervor, "Let thy will O! Lord, be done on earth, as it is done in heaven." Of the consistency of such a practice, the reader may judge; but before entirely condemning it, let us consider what a novel is. Is it the history of nations, families, or individuals, who have arisen to opulence and honor by their own industry and economy, or fallen by pride, indolence and contention? Is it even a statement of traditionary facts, transmitted from generation to generation, until there can scarcely be found a vestage of their original simplicity, grandeur or truth? No, it is none of this? It is a fictitious story, a collection of wonderful, and dreadful events, which never have, or will occur, most likely, while the world stands; founded on fancy alone, without reality, probability, or truth. If such be the character of novels, how can they go hand in hand with the Bible? How can they impart correct notions and refinement to christianity? Does reading them inspire the heart of the believer with love for God and his fellow-man? Does it direct the weeping penitent to the fountain of life, where he may wash and be cleansed from all his guilt? Does it discover to the sinner his awful wickedness and rebellion against his Creator, and point him to the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world? Or would all the beautiful language, the excellent moral, with all the pathetic, and striking manner of expression save one poor benighted soul from death? On the contrary, does it not destroy the taste for solid, useful reading, and unfit the mind for the retention of that, which would be profitable? If it does, why are professors so blind to this error? But some excuse themselves, by offering an apology for others, whom they conceive to be endowed with a less degree of intellectual strength than themselves. They readily admit that some are seriously injured because of the weakness of their minds, (which is not their fault,) but they themselves can read, or dispose of a novel at their pleasure, without losing their thirst for profound, and serious study. And even some christian ministers, who have been called of God to take care of, and feed his flock with the word of truth, have become so interested in the prevailing opinions of the day, that they not only give sanction to this evil practice by their voices, but also their examples; thus themselves using one of the most deadly weapons against the promotion of our holy religion.

I was deeply pained, and shocked, when once in conversation with a worthy minister, at hearing him remark that there was much information to be obtained by the perusal of such works; that he found them useful to him, and could lay down a novel, and take up a sermon, or the reverse, without feeling any remorse of conscience whatever. Christian ministers should beware how they mix such poison with the word of God; the flock is left in their care, and they look to them as their leaders. Their example will have its influence, and often accomplishes as much as their laudiable preaching. The Pastor cannot expect his people to "grow in grace, and the knowledge of the truth," so long as the novel is their daily companion—the rule and guide of their lives; while the Bible, like a worn out story is laid aside and forgotton. Christian parents, where are your children? do they not hear you read, or themselves handle those books? Your precepts may be good, but does not your example speak still louder, and say, Go child and do likewise? You could not consistantly suppose them to persue a different course, until you have first dismissed those credulous stories from the library, and the parlor, and placed in their stead the Bible, and other religious works which will enrich and elevate the mind.

It has been well remarked, that the mind is a store-house, and should be well guarded, lest it become filled with lumber, and that of more importance find no admittance. A.

Springfield, O.

"THE GATE OF DEATH."—On Thursday last at Hagerstown, an inquest was held on the body of Samuel Hackett, was found dead in a brothel.—Verdict, death from causes unknown. He was of Philadelphia.

An honest son of Hibernia was asked the other day how many children he had. "Faith," says he, "I have three sons and each of them has a sister." Quere—How many daughters has he?

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 1847.

☞ We commend to the attention of our readers, especially ministers, the article in another column, on novel reading. It is by a minister's lady.

TEMPERANCE ADDRESS.—We have appropriated an entire page of our paper this week to the Address of Rev. Mr. Smallwood, Rector of St. James Ch. Zanesville. It will be found to contain a very interesting exhibit of the Temperance reformation within 20 years past. We were requested to publish the accompanying addresses, in connection with the Bible Presentation, of which we gave some account last week, and would have done so with pleasure, but that we cannot consistently appropriate so large a space of our paper to any one subject. We take pleasure in saying that the order of the "Sons" is becoming quite prosperous in this place. They have called upon us to issue a handsome edition of the Addresses and proceedings in pamphlet form, which will be forthcoming in a few days.

REMINISCENCES.—We are gratified to place before our readers this week, the first number of a series of articles on the early History of Ohio by our friend Maj. Nye, a citizen of this place. These numbers will be found interesting and valuable, embracing many particulars never before published. Maj. N. was identified with the first settlement of Marietta. He is a man of discrimination, close thinking and good recollection. And numerous particulars given by him are corrobborated by aged persons still living, such as Col. Converse of Zanesville, and Dr. Matthews and J. C. Guthrie Esq. of this place. The articles have been prepared at our request. We shall send a copy to the Cincinnati Historical Society.

REV. J. A. DUNLAP, a Presbyterian minister, former, editor of the Presbyterian of the West, died at Springfield, Ohio, on the 26th ult. The last number of that paper brings us the intelligence that 'he died in peace, and as a Christian only can die, calmly falling asleep in Jesus.' Though his health was rapidly declining, his decease occurred unexpectedly soon. Our readers may recollect that little more than one month ago, we announced his resignation of his editorial charge.

SABBATH CONVENTION.—We see by our exchanges out west, that a very spirited Sabbath Convention was recently held at Xenia, O. A Committee was appointed to correspond with friends of the Sabbath at Cincinnati and other places on the railroad, for the purpose of uniting their influence, to check the violation of the Sabbath by railroad cars, and other modes of Sabbath desecration. A committee was also appointed to correspond with the board of Directors of the Little Miami Railroad, and urge upon them the propriety of ceasing to run the freight cars on the Sabbath, and also the passenger cars from Xenia to Springfield, on that day, as they do not carry the mail—and should they continue to run the cars, another committee, called the vigilance committee, are authorised to enforce the law against them. Still another committee was appointed to prepare a memorial, and forward it to the legislature of this State, praying them to pass a law, fixing the beginning of the Circuit Courts on Tues day instead of Monday.

IS SLAVERY A SIN? THE QUESTION ANSWERED.—The Editor of the Cross and Journal, a very good religious news paper published at Columbus, O. in the interest of the Baptist denomination, lately published a series of articles, embracing his views respecting slavery, in which he treated the peculiar institution, with entire disapprobation. One of his brethren, an Editor at Raleigh, N. C. rebukes him for taking this ground, and calls upon him to "show something like proof, that slavery is sin." The Editor of the Cross and Journal in his last paper, does up a response to his Southern brother, in pretty good style. Hear him:

"We know of no course that would be more convincing to our brother editor, and amount to "something like proof," than to send an armed band privately to Raleigh with instructions to seize him by force in some of his retired walks, bind him, gag him, transport him to this place, and set him up for sale to the highest bidder. We might be induced, just for the sake of the argument, to bid him off, shut him up in a back room, feed him on corn meal, and set him to writing abolition editorials, at the rate of a column a day. If two or three years such service did not convince him of the sin of slavery we would give him up as incorrigible."

THE GREAT WESTERN RAILROD.—We see by the Pittsburgh Gazette, that an increased interest has been excited at the Iron City, in the proposition to construct a continuous railroad through Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, to St. Louis. And as the Central Railroad from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh is to be built immediately, if the western project also goes into effect, it will open a direct communication between Philadelphia and St. Louis. The editor of the Gazette, and several of his correspondents are zealous for the measure.

DEATH BY LIGHTNING, IN WINTER!—Rev. W. W. Paul writes us from Mt. Tabor, Ia. that on the night of Jan. 25th ult. a violent thunderstorm visited that section of country. His neighbor, Mr. John Davis, being out, was found dead next morning, having been struck by lightning.

HEAVY PORK—AGAIN.—Our friend W. Smith Esq. of Tanner's Creek Ia. having noticed statements in our paper of heavy pork in this vicinity, tells us, he thinks they can beat it all in the Hoosier State. Six hogs from a lot fattened by one his neighbors, weighed, when taken to Cincinnati a week ago, in all, 2340 lbs, averaging 390 lbs. each. What! the Hoosier State beat Ohio?

LOSS OF ANOTHER MUSKINGUM BOAT.—We learn by the Zanesville Gazette that the Steamer May Queen, was consumed by fire on Friday of last week, whilst lying at the port of Marietta. Most of her cargo, also, including 1350 barrels of flour, was consumed.

THE DISTRESS IN IRELAND.—Additional testimonies and details of suffering and actual starvation in Ireland, continue to reach us. Those who have heretofore supposed that the accounts were exaggerated, now agree that the reports are fully confirmed, and we fear the half has not been told of the dreadful wretchedness which prevails, and the multiplying instances of starvation which daily occur. Awful to relate, it is doubtless true, that many whole families have died of starvation. Post mortem examinations have shown that both stomach and bowels were utterly vacant. And with the advance of winter, it is feared that these dreadful scenes are becoming more and more common.

We are gratified to see, that at last, the press of this country, is waking up to this matter—yea, & the pulpit too. Effective movements are being made in various parts of our favored country, for sending relief to the sufferers. Much will be done at some of the eastern Cities. And in parts of our own state, something is being done. The movement in this, County though somewhat tardy heretofore, will yet we trust, prove of some avail. We attended a second public meeting held at Zanesville on Monday evening last, in reference to this matter, and another is to be held on the following Monday evening. The place has been districted, and solicitors appointed to receive and store breadstuffs &c. for shipment. On last Sabbath, we had the pleasure of hearing a sermon by Rev. Mr. Kingsbury, in the Presbyterian Church, bearing upon the matter, from "For I was a hungered, and ye gave me meat," &c.

As we were about penning these lines, the following verses were handed us by a lady, which we here insert.

Written for the Western Recorder.

BREAD FOR IRELAND.

Have ye not heard their grief,
As over the main it comes?
Will ye not haste to send relief
To Ireland's famishing ones?

O, haste to send them bread,
Nor stay—for the dying are there,
Still clasping the forms of their kindred dead,
In the wildness of despair.

O, will ye not haste to give
Of the plenty, the wealth ye possess?
Your bounty shall cause the dying to live,
And with joy the sufferer bless.

Will ye haste to "cast your bread
On the waters?"—they'll bear it away
To that land, where woe and withering need,
Hold now their gloomy sway.

By the love ye bear your race,
Will ye help these suffering poor?
Will ye rescue a nation from death's embrace,
Ere the time for help is o'er.

O, "stop not your ear at the cry
Of the poor," tho' distant they be;
And the blessing of them that are "ready to die"
Will richly rest upon thee. P. B.

Putnam, Ohio, Feb. 11th, 1847.

Ohio Legislature, Additional Election of Judges.

Associate Judges for Lake County, W. W. Branch, J. Lapham, A. Wilcox.
For Washington County, B. Steedman.
For Portage County, J. Swift.
For Wyandotte County, S. Chaffe.
For Medina County, H. Hosmer, J. Piper.
For Ross County, J. Blacker.
For Logan County, W. H. M'Kinnon.
For Brown County, I. Carey.
For Holmes County, J. Darnell.
For Huron County, W. Sandford.
For Coshocton County, J. Le Reilly.
For Pike County, R. W. M'Clean, G. Porter.
For Fayette County, J. Manary.
For Ottowa County, J. A. Smith.
For Morgan County, N. Shepard,
For Pickaway County, M. E'Crea.
For Wayne County, S. Orr, N. M'Coy.
For Lawrence County, S. Reckard, A. Damfrey.
For Carroll County, J. S. Hunter.
For Butler County, J. Marston.
For Summit County, J. Hoy.

President Judge of 3d Judicial Circuit, B. F. Wade.

Of the 4th Judicial Circuit, R. Stillwell.

The Bill for repeal of the Black Laws, adopted by the House, failed in the Senate.

Both houses of the General Assembly adjourned on Monday morning last.

BRAITHWAITE'S RETROSPECT.—We are again indebted to the publisher, Mr. Daniel Adee, N. York, for the fifth and sixth parts of this valuable work in Practical Medicine and Surgery. They contain numerous valuable and useful papers pertaining to the various branches of Medical Science and Practice. When we get time to give thorough attention to the 'Retrospect,' we may become, at least our own physician. Each part is complete in itself, containing nearly 200 pages with index and table of contents. Only $1 per year.

THE ANNALIST.—By the same publisher we are furnished with the 5th and 6th numbers of this work. It is a Semi Monthly Record of Practical Medicine in the City of N. York, handsomely gotten up in the Magazine form. We have no doubt it would be found very interesting and valuable to the Medical Profession. Only $2, per volume of 24 numbers. Address, D. Adee, N. York.

DOCTRINE OF THE WILL.—By Rev. A. Mahan, President of Oberlin Collegiate Justitue. J. K. Wellman the N. Y. publisher, has sent us a copy of this work. It is a duodecimo volume of 235 pages, neatly executed, of course. We have not yet had time to read it, but acknowledge that we are prepossessed in its favor. The author is a thorough logician, and we apprehend that those who read this little work will find the doctrine of necessity quite overthrown. All we have read of the writings of Pres. Mahan, are eminently calculated to do good. Mr. Wellman has issued a cheap edition of the above work, 50 cts. bound in cloth, 25 in paper.

CONGRESSTIONAL GLOBE AND APPENDIX.—We have heretofore borne testimony to the value and convenience of this work, as a full and faithful record of the proceedings of Congress. It is issued in handsome numbers of 16 pages each, quarto form, suitable for binding. The National Intelligencer (of different political views) states that it is 'conducted with an honest impartiality.' The work is also patronised by Congress, without respect to party. By a slip received from the publishers, we learn that they have struck several thousand sarplus copies, and can still supply new subscribers with all the numbers. Terms, only $1, for a copy of the Globe—same for the Appendix. Six copies of either for $5. Address, Blair and Rives, Washington City, D. C. We state to the publishers that we somehow failed to receive No. 3 of the Globe, and No. 2, of the Appendix. Will they do us the favor to have them sent?

PUTNAM FEMALE SEMINARY.—One of the chief ornaments and attractions of our goodly village, is its Female Seminary. Its Building is very spacious and handsome, 110 feet in length, by 46 in width, and three stories high. It is situated upon a beautiful elevation, overlooking the town, the opposite city of Zanesville, and a pleasant portion of the valley of the Muskingum River. Two substantial bridges connect Putnam with Zanesville. We are gratified to say that the Institution is in a flourishing condition. Miss Mary Cone is Principal, and teacher of Moral and Mental Philosophy; Miss M. A. Bailey, teacher of Chemistry, Botany and Geology; Miss M. F. Sanborn, teacher of Mathematics, Astronomy and Natural Philosophy; Mrs. Ann Ward, teacher of Primary Department; Prof. F. Timmell, teacher of Languages, Music and Painting. The Trustees of the Institution are, Rev. A. Kingsbury, (Pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Putnam,) President; A. A. Guthrie, Secretary and Treasurer, J. C. Guthrie, A. Buckingham, S. Sturgess, C. C. Convers, and C. P. Buckingham, Esquires. There are two vacations each year. The Winter Term, commences in October, and lasts 26 weeks; the Summer Term (1847) commences, April 23d., and continues 16 weeks. The scholars are required to attend on the Sabbath such places of worship as their parents and guardians shall designate. When no choice is expressed, they attend the Presbyterian church, which is immediately adjoining. The teacher and all the pupils from abroad, board in the Seminary. The domestic arrangements are calculated to secure the health, comfort and happiness, as well as the improvement of the young ladies. It will be gratifying to friends at a distance who may be desirous to send pupils, to know that the Teachers and Managers of the Institution are professors of religion, that the village is a healthy and moral place, and that no ardent spirits are sold in it but for mechanical and medicinal purposes. We had the pleasure of spending, by invitation, part of an afternoon not long since, in the Seminary, and witnessed the review of a class. We were very favorably impressed with the qualifications of the teachers, and the proficiency of the pupils. We were desirous to give this statement at an earlier period, but were not heretofore furnished with the data which we have now given.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.—The last number of the American Messenger, gives an interesting account of the arrangements and operations of this Society. A lot at the corner of Nassau and Spruce Streets, N. York, upon which stood a tavern of the lowest class, was purchased, 22 years ago, for the erection of a permanent building for the purposes of the Society. One member of the Committee gave for this object, $5000, another $3000, another $1500, and other gentlemen in the city contributed sums, amounting in all to $25,000. An ample building was erected, five stories in height, exclusive of basement. It extends 80 feet on Nassau St. and 70 feet on Spruce St. This ample structure is well occupied. It contains the Society Store's General Depository, Offices, Committee Rooms, Bindery, and Printing Establishment. The bindery occupies the whole of the fourth story, and employs twenty eight men, whilst 63 females are employed in the folding, gathering & stiching department. The pleasing circumstance is stated that ever since the days of Harlan Page, who had charge of the establishment, the females in the bindery have held a daily prayer meeting. The fifth story contains the printing office. Skylights, as well as windows are used for the convenience of this important branch of the business. Five power printing presses, and two hand presses are constantly engaged, as well as 30 men and boys. The steam engines which propel the presses are in the basement, and yet so firm is the building, that scarcely a jar is felt from the motion of the presses in the fifth story. One hundred and thirty six are employed in the various departments of the establishment, and whose entire time is devoted to the business of the Society. Add to this, more than 150 colporteurs are employed in distributing its publications through the country. A mighty engine of usefulness is the American Tract Society. And who can conscientiously refrain from contributing, as God has prospered him, in aid of its holy and saving objects? God speed, to the blessed work of evangelizing the world.

RIGHT.—The papers state that a slave was recently tried at Charlesion for killing another slave. He was acquitted however, on the ground that the fatal blows struck by him were inflicted by direction of his mistress. The Court held that whenever a slave in the presence and command of his owners, committed an unlawful act, he was the mere instrument of his owner's cruelty, and having no will of his own, could not be amenable to the punishment of the law. In all such cases, the owner was the guilty party. The mistress is yet to be tried for killing Maria.

IN THE BALTIAORE PRISON there is an old negro who was convicted forty years ago of the murder of his master, and was sentenced to be hung, but which was commuted to imprisonment for life. Old Bob, as they call him, seems not desirous of liberty.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Muskingum Bible Society.

The Anniversary of this Society was held in the Presbyterian Church, Zanesville, on the evening of the 10th of January.

Rev. Mr. Smallwood, one of the Vice Presidents of the Society, presided.

For reasons unknown to us, Mr. Strickland, agent for the Parent Society, was not present.

After the introductory exercises, the annual report was read by the Secretary.

The meeting was then addressed by Rev. Mr. Crum, of the Methodist Church; also by Rev. Dr. Hoge, of Columbus. These addresses were good, and well calculated to interest the people in further efforts to supply the destitute with the Sacred Scriptures.

The exercises of the evening were rendered more interesting, by a number of pieces of music, performed by a select choir.

A collection was taken up to aid in the operations of the Society; after which the following persons were chosen as officers for the ensuing year,—viz:

Rev. J. Culbertson, President.
Rev. W. A. Smallwood, 1st. Vice President.
Rev. A. Kingsbury, 2d. Vice President.
R. P. Robinson, Treasury and Depository.
U. P. Bennett, Secretary.
Wm. Shultz, E. E. Fillmore, Rev. A. H. Bassett, G. Buckingham and J. Metcalf, Executive Committee.

The Treasurer and Secretary are ex officio members of the Board.

All persons contributing to the funds of the Society, thereby become members for one year; and those contributing one dollar, or more, are entitled to receive (if called for within a year) a common Bible in return.

Individuals wishing to supply themselves, or friends, with Bibles, may apply to either of the officers, or to R. P. Robinson, (Hardware Merchant, Zanesville,) Depositors.

B. H. BUCKINGHAM, Sec'y.

Written for the Western Recorder.

MR. EDITOR: I see by a communication from Brother Dalbey, in the Recorder, that a certain Reverend gentleman, of some note, has said that the Methodist Protestant Church is going down in Cincinnati, Steubenville, and Pittsburgh. Brother Dalbey has answered for Cincinnati, Steubenville may answer for herself, and I feel, for one, much inclined to answer for Pittsburgh. Lest a wrong impression may have gone abroad from the gentleman's report, and as a faithful witness, I must say, the gentleman has told the truth in part—but he has not told the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

Now, the full state of the case is this; we have only gone down to build up again; inasmuch as we have gone down 7 feet below the surface of the earth, to lay the foundation of a Parsonage-house on a solid rock, and the top stone is now laid on. Let me observe here, that in the midst of this afflictive going down, we have had some consolation; inasmuch as we have not gone down alone; as Cherry Alley, at the back of our meeting-house, is also going down, (though for our accommodation,) at least sixteen feet. And the street opposite our meeting-house is going four feet down, to make the grade the more convenient. All these cases of going down might be included in the report respecting our Church, notwithstanding they are all strong evidences of our prosperity.

I am happy to hear that my old friend, Brother Dalbey, stands firm in the cause of Methodist Protestantism. A MEMBER.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Feb. 8, 1846.

BR. BASSETT: We have had another admonition of the uncertainty of life, by the unexpected departure of our highly esteemed fellow-citizen, ISAAC ANDERSON, from the shores of time.

Br. Anderson embraced religion seven years ago at the Springfield Chapel, and we having no church in his neighborood, he joined the M. E. Church, and remained a member of the same until his death, which occurred on Sabbath evening last, at the residence of Br. Jeremiah Springer.

A few days since, we would have selected him as one likely to outlive most of his associates, and now he is cold in death. What a lesson!

His remains were escorted by a large number of relatives and friends, to Mt. Sterling, and there deposited, until the resurrection morn.

C. S. CALLIHAN.

Muskingum co., O., Feb. 10, 1847.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CANADA.—The New Project—A British Federal Union.—It is no longer "The Canadas" as formerly.—Upper and lower Canada are now united, and the British Government have under consideration the project of consolidating all the North America provinces under one federal government. The tapid growth and prosperity of our States have been properly ascribed to their sovereignty, their local laws and individual freedom; and it has been asked by British statesmen—"why not divide all your possessions on the American continent into States, after the form of the American government, giving to each State a Governor, Legislature and Judiciary chosen by the people? Why not allow them the privilege of raising money by taxation and establish a Government of free States, like the United States, with this difference only, that the General Government shall be vested in the crown?" Such a course corresponds with the enlightened spirit of the age and would render Canada, Nova Scotia, &c., of immense value to England, commercially and agriculturally, inasmuch as the shipping and productive exports of the Colonies admitted free of duty, would cement the Union. There is no finer wheat country than Upper Canada, and corn can be raised in any quantity, while in the eastern provinces, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, oats, rye and barley, are raised in abundance.—N. Y. Sun.

STUPENDOUS ROBBERY IN BOSTON.—A gang of villains broke into the store of Currier and Trot, Jewellers, in Boston, between Saturday and Monday morning, and swept it of every thing of value. The iron safe with three doors was broken open and rifled of its valuable contents, and nothing was left on the premises worth carrying away.—The loss in goods is estimated at $15,000, and $500 in cash. The rogues, it seems, went to work as deliberately as if they were taking account of stock. They entered through the cellar window on Saturday evening, and were all Sunday employed, and had their luncheon with them. It was a most cool and daring robbery, and our officers must keep a sharp look out for them. It is feared they may have gone to England in the steamer Hibernia, which sailed from Boston on Monday.

[New York Sun.

Horn & Sinclair's match factory, Roxbury, Mass., was destroyed by fire on the 29th ult.

HONG KONG, Oct. 28, 1846.—W. C. Melne and his wife left for Shanghia night before last, after a most delightful Christian Alliance meeting held at our house, of Episcopallians, Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists and Independennts, black white and yellow; Europeans, Americans, Indians and Chinese, were of the number; all of whom sat down to the table of our Lord, testifying their identity of "faith, hope and baptism," and their common union with one Lord and Master. Mr. and Mrs. Brown are about returning to America for the improvement of their health, especially that of Mrs B. They hope soon to return to the school for the education of the Chinese youth at Hong Kong under the care of the Morrison Education Society. The condition of the school continuous prosperous. In the absence of Mr. B., the management will be entrusted to Mr. Macy, a young gentleman from America, of superior talents and education, who has for some time been acting as an assistant to Mr. Brown. Mrs Macy the mother of young M. sailed for China a few weeks since, and will take the place of Mrs B. during her absence in America.—Correspondence New York Observer.

THE HIBERNIA left Boston on Monday, with 47 passengers, and thirty additional berths were taken at Halifax. Among the passengers were Alfred Douglass, Esq., of New York, bearer of despatches, and the Rt. Rev. Bishop Powell, of Toronto, Canada. The mail was by far the largest ever taken out by that line of steamers, or that ever left any port of the United States, says the Transcript. The number of American letters was upwards of fifty thousand, and the Canadian mail was very nearly as large. As for the newspapers, it is entirely impossible to estimate the number.—N. Y. Sun.

RELIEF FOR IRELAND.—Persons who wish to contribute to the funds for the relief of the starving poor in Ireland, are respectfully reminded that JOHN J. PALMER, Esq., president of the Merchant's Bank, continues to receive and remit all such sums as the benevolent are disposed to place in his hands. He sends these contributions to the committee of the "Society of Friends" in Dublin, feeling the utmost confidence that they will be applied in the most judicious manner. Those who are disposed to give their mite will not require a stimulus of a public meeting, and yet they may not knew through what channel to send their contributions, and it is to remove that difficulty we publish this notice. Out of the millions which Ireland's distress has added to our national wealth, we hope at least a small per centage will be returned to her starving peasantry!—N. Y. Sun.

GREAT FIRE AT SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS.—We announced yesterday, that a letter had been received in the city, stating that a destructive conflagration took place at Springfield on Saturday morning. This news was confirmed by the mail last night. We are yet without many of the particulars; but a letter from thence states, that the fire commenced about three o'clock on the morning of the 24th. It broke out in the stables attacent to the City Hotel. This hotel, and all the buildings connected with it were entirely destroyed—a considerable portion of the furniture, only, being saved. Johnson's stable was also destroyed, and seventeen horses were burned to death.

The whole of the buildings from Pomeroy's drug store down to Dickey's bakery, were consumed, including the Mayor's office, Billey's barber shop, a milliner shop, Jewett's store, and some cabins below, and all back of them on the same block. Hoffman's row was saved. There was dreadful excitement, and at one time there was a prospect of half the town being burned down, as the wind was high and the sparks flying in every direction. Fortunately the progress of the flames was stopped before they got across the street to Irwin's corner. The town, we understand, is without a fire engine of any description.—St. Louis Republican.

SALARY CURTAILED.—The Legislature of Maryland, at the last session, passed a bill reducing the salary of the Governor, after the expiration of the term of the incumbent, to two thousand dollars a year.

A FIRE AT UTICA.—A fire broke out at 12 o'clock on Thursday night in the foundry of the large establishment of Bailey, Wheeler & Co., Utica. The flames soon communicated to the main building, occupied as their Stove and Plough Factory, and in the machine shop of J. Puffer & Co. The third story of B. W. & Co's. building was occupied by E. K. Browning as a card manufactory. The dwelling house of Dr. Pomeroy was demolished by the falling of the walls of the burning building. Mr. Elizur Kirkland was partially buried beneath the ruins, and was badly though not fatally injured.

Bailey, Wheeler & Co's. loss is estimated at $10,000—insured for $5,000. Puffer & Co's. loss $2500—Dr. Pomeroy, $800.

Effects of the storm.—The blow of Wednesday was severely felt in our harbor, although less destructive than was apprehended. Castle Garden bridge was stripped of its covering, and a canal boat was dashed to fragments against the castle wall. In the East River, at the foot of Wall street, the bark Godfrey and brig Elizabeth dragged their anchors and came in contact. The sloop Two Brothers lost her bowsprit at Pier No 2; and the brig Sarah had bulwarks stove, stancheons broke and larboard side cut down, at Pier No. 3. The brigs Frances and Clara came in contact at Pier No. 10, and both were seriously damaged. The brig Salina lost her starboard fore chains.

The Storm seems to have only made an exchange by giving way to a furious gale, which kicked up its prances the whole night. Some roofs were stripped of their tin, and there was a general scattering of sign boards, which seemed to have lost their specific gravity for the time being, and taking advantage of their temporary light-headiness, danced all sorts of ærial capers on nothing. One of which aforesaid sign boards afflicted with the headiness of its companions, in malice prepense, struck Dr. Foster, the surgeon, and fractued one of his ribs. A four story, unfinished, brick house in Fifth st., between Avenues B and C, was blown down.—N. Y. Sun.

ACCIDENT.—At New Orleans, January 23d, as four men were crossing the river in a scow, laden with copper sheating, a tow boat passing filled the scow with water, and she immediately sunk, when about half way across the river. Three of the four were saved. The name of the man drowned was William Splane.

The Oldest Inhabitant died at Akron Ohio, on the 3d instant. His name was John Sheperd, aged one hundred and eighteen years, nine months and eighteen days. He fought in the battles of Brandywine and Germantown Flats, and was wounded in the former. He never received pension!—An ungrateful Congress denied him that boon, because he had the misfortune to lose his papers in a fire which consumed his dwelling. His children provided for him comfortably in his old age.

DEATH.—Robert Thom, Esq., British consul at Ningpoo died at that place in China on the 14th of Sept. last.

Railroad to the Ohio.—A bill to grant the ht of way through Virginia was being discussed Thursday, in the Legislature of that State. e bill was popular only with representatives m counties on the proposed line.

Keep off the Omnibus Steps.—In Boston, on ednesday, a boy six years old, fell from the step an omnibus, and was run over by another stage ming up. He was crushed to death. He was son of Wm. G. Cutter.

Doing it Thoroughly.—The teamsters of ilips, Me., have not only pledged themselves ainst drinking any intoxicating beverage, but o not to be instrumental in any way in bringing ent spirits into the place for others to drink.

Destructive fire in Milwaukie.—The east rner of the block opposite the U. S. Hotel, on ron and Main streets, Milwaukie, was burnt to ground on the 21st, ult. The thermome was 15 degrees below zero. The intensity cold was such that the machines and hose were eless.

Welsh Settlers.—Mr. Rawlings, who is con ted with an Immigration Society, has receiv orders from England to reserve 150,000 acres land he has in Western Virginia for settlers m Wales, who are expected out in the spring. ere are few immigrants more hardy, temper and industrious, than the Welsh.

M. Pelouze has announced an important dis ery by two of his laboratory pupils; it is that en kylodine has reached its greatest degree of losive power, then it is completely soluble in er. Hence a test of quality, and a proof of the y best make.

Fatal Accident.—A German by the name of ufman was suddenly killed a short time since St. Louis by a fall from an omnibus which he s driving.

A Large Penny Collection.—It is said that receipts during the year 1845, of the great nan Catholic Society of Lyons, for the propaga n of the faith, were $683,000. This large sum made up chiefly of penny contribution.

For Oregon.—The brig Emeline, Capt. Good n, sailed from Newburyport, Mass., on Thurs y, with ten passengers, a Printing Press, type l materials, to establish a second newspaper in egon.

The Storm of Wednesday was very severe at iladelphia. It tore down some of the poles of Pittsburgh Telegraph, unroofed several hou , blew down four wood sheds at the Camden ilroad depot each 150 feet long, the tide over wed the wharves, the Schulkill river overflow its banks and several vessels were driven from ir anchorage.

A Beautiful Idea.—The baptismal admonition the Hindoos is as impressive on the bystanders it is beautiful. "Little babe, thou enterest the rld weeping, while all around you smile; con ve so to live, that you may depart in smiles, hilest all around you weep."

Miss Dix, the benevolent Quakeress, has pre ated a memorial to the Illinois Legislature, in or of erecting a Lunatic Asylum it that State. ring the last year, she visited a large portion of nois on her mission of mercy, and in her mem al she gives the result of her investigation.

Frozen to Death.—A party of men from the ities arrived at Independence, Missouri, 9th uary, who lost three of their number frozen to ath on the plains.

Dead.—The Cincinnati Gazette of the 25th comes to us in mourning for the demise of chard F. L'Hommedieu, lately one of the pro etors of that paper.

Rev. L. D. Gibbs, a Methodist clergyman at hed to the Black River Conference, died at eresa, Jefferson Co, on the 15th inst. He s 46 years of age.

Fires in New Jersey.—English's Rising Sun tel in Trenton was burnt about 9 o'clock last esday night. Woodruff's corner, at Elizabeth wn, was burnt down yesterday (Wednesday) rning.

Big Day's job.—We are informed that a house this city made seventy-five thousand dollars in day, by the advance in flour occasioned by Hibernia's news.—Morning Signal, Cincin ti, 30th ult.

Trickery in Trade.—The last number of nt's Merchant's Magazine, contains an interes g memoir of Gideon Lee, from which we de e the following anecdote, illustrative of his own dealings. and of the usual effect of trickery trade. No man more thoroughly despised dis nesty than Gideon Lee; and he used to remark, trade can be sound, that is not beneficial to h parties, to the buyer as well as to the seller. an may obtain a temporary advantage by sel g an article for more than it is worth; but the y effect of such operations must recoil on nself, in the shape of bad debts and increased ks. A person with whom he had some trans ions, once boasted to him, that he had on one casion obtained an advantage over such a neigh ; and "To-day," said he, "I have obtained one r you." "Well," said Gideon Lee, "that y be; and if you will promise never to enter house again, I will give you that bundle of t-skins." The man made the promise, and k them. Fifteen years afterwards. he walked o Gideon Lee's office. At the instant of seeing him exclaimed, "You have violated your word; y me for my goat skins."—"Oh!" said the n, "I am quite poor, and have been very un tunate since I saw you." "Yes," said Gide "and you always will be poor; that miserable ire for over-reaching others must ever keep so."

The Railroad to the Pacific Ocean.—We e received for notice a proposal to build this d beginning at Lake Michigan, by Dr. Hart ll Carver. Dr. C. has apparantly the claim of ority in the suggestion of this magnificent eme.

The Dr. proposes that the cars shall be 16 feet de, and 100 feet long, that they shall have dining ls, cook shops, staterooms, and shall be to "all erests" bona fide hotels, travelling at the rate of miles an hour, which he proposes to accom h by doubling the diameter of the ordinary eels, so that at every motion of the crank a ble velocity must follow. This is all very l; and could it have been accomplished a few rs ago, might now be a source of prodigious lth to ourselves, and advantage to the whole mercial world. But time is as great a revo onist as the spirit of improvement. Our pres troubles with Mexico are not ended; and who tell what the end shall be?—N. Y. Sun.

Epidemic Disease in Ireland.—The Mayo nstitution says, "Typhus fever of a maligant aracter, rages; and also a disease—for which know no term, but of equally fatal consequen —has made its appearance. It attacks the first, which fester and then the stomach, ilar to English cholera so much so, that we e heard of a great number of persons having en victims to this latter disease."

NOTICES.

Tanner's Creek Ct. Ia. Con.—The second quarterly Conference will be held at the Stone Chapel, East Fork, on Saturday, March 6th ensuing. We most cordially invite any of our ministerial or lay brethren from adjoining circuits, or from Cincinnati, who can do so, to come to our assistance. We hope the brethren will not all excuse themselves but come, for we want help very much. Br. Paul, our minister, is detained ed away, as we fear by affliction.

WM. SMITH

[Br. Paul, has since sent us a notice of the above meeting, inviting Brs. T. Shipp, S. Morrison, C. H. Williams, G. Wheatley and others who can, to attend. ED.]

Connellsville Ct. Pitts. Con.—Br. G. Brown is informed that his meeting for this circuit will be held at Connellsville. H. Palmer.

Columbia Ct. Musk. Con.—Our President is informed that his appointment will be at Graham's station, on the Ohio river. We also purpose hol ding a two days meeting at Athens Bridge, March 20th and 21st. We invite Brs. H. T. Lawson, C. J. Sears, S. Means, W. Sears, J. W. Southard, F. Edwards, and any other brethren who can attend. S. Elliott.

Columbia Mission.—The second quarterly meeting will be held at Br. (somebody's) three miles north of Columbia, 20th, Feb. 1847.

G. Williams.

Twin Creek Circuit, O. Con.—Our second quarterly meeting will be held at Liberty, to commence on the 20th of Feb. We respectfully invite Brs. R. M. Dalbey, G. M. Hunt, O. P. Stephens, S. P. Kezerta, and J. Pelan to come over and assist us, and we will endeavor to return the favor. W. Pelan.

PRESIDENTIAL APPOINTMENTS.

Pittsburgh District.

Should it please God to spare my life, and give health to my family, I will try to fill the following appointments.

George Creek	"	14th	Feb.
Morgantown	"	21st	"
Union	St.	28th	"
Connelsville	Ct.	7th	March
Fayette	"	14th	"
Wheeling Circuit.		1st	Sunday in April.
Tyler	"	2d	" "
Harrisville	"	3d	" "
Mill Creek	"	4th	" "
Buchanon	"	1st	" in May
Braxton	"	2d	" "
Greenbrier	"	3d	" "
Huntersville	"	4th	" "
Valley	"	5th	" "

Br. Stillians is informed that I have seen his note in the Recorder, and shall expect him for one, to accompany me to the Circuits in the South. May be both Brs. Walker and Martin will go likewise—especially if there should be a camp meeting, or more, to attend during the trip. I wish the meeting for the valley, to be not lower down than Beverly, unless there should be something special in the case, to make it necessary. My own health is pretty good—my wife is improving—I shall trust all to the Lord and go on. Br. Prickett will please meet me at the Harrisville meeting, and Br. Collins meet me on Wheeling circuit. Geo. Brown.

Muskingum District.

Br. Bassett: Please insert in the Recorder, the following list of appointments which I will fill, if able so to do.

2nd	Sunday	March	Otsego Circuit.
3rd	"	"	Lancaster "
4th	"	"	Zanesville "
1st	"	April	Newark "
7th	Wednesday	"	Delaware "
2nd	Sunday	"	Frederick "
4th	"	"	Licking "
28th	Wednesday	"	Mt. Zion "
1st	Sunday	May	Coshocton "
2nd	"	"	Pleasant hill "

I have two requests to make, 1st that the superintendents will be prompt in giving me due notice of the point at which my meeting for each Ct. will be, and 2nd. as I suffer more from travelling, than from pulpit labors that my appointments will be so arranged as to give me as little necessary travelling as possible. Geo. Clancy, Pres.

Ohio Conference.

Presidential Visitation.

Washington Circuit,		February 13	& 14.
Bainbridge	"	" 20	& 22.
Buford	"	" 27	& 28.
Batavia	"	March 6	& 7.
Cincinnati	"	" 13	& 14.
Lebanon Station,		" 17.	Night.
Twin Creek	"	" 20	& 21.
Greenville Mission,		" 27	& 28.

J. M. Young.

Indiana District.

Mr. Editor: Please state that by divine permission, I will fill the following appointments.

Stotts Creek	Circuit	February	28th
Sugar Creek	"	March	14th
Laughrey	Mission	"	21th
Flatrock	Circuit	"	28th
White Lick	"	April	11th
Mill Creek	"	"	18th
White Rive	"	"	25th

Will Br. W. B. Evans inform me by letter or otherwise the place of the appointment on White River Ct. T. Shipp.

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT.

LETTERS RECEIVED.

R. Bowlby, A. Lister, 1 sub.; Z. Ragan, G. Brown, J. Hill, F. Swift, C. J. Sears, 1 sub. and pay; J. I. Stillians, H. Palmer, Z. Beatty, 1 sub.; W. W. Paul, C. Craig, A. H. Trumbo, T. Shipp.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS.

From.	For.	Pays to Vol.	No.	$ cts
R. Bowlby, Pa.,		8	26	1 00
J. Hill,		8	42	1 00
C. J. Sears,	N. Gray,	8	52	2 00
"	T. Rivers,	8	20	1 00
"	H. Sealock,	8	44	1 00
H. Palmer,	S. Freeman,	8	52	2 00
W. W. Paul, Ia.,	S. Motz,	8	52	2 00
A. H. Trumbo,	J. Rockhold,	9	52	3 00
"	B. Wentworth,	8	26	1 00
E. Y. Reese, Balt.,	M. W. Smith, Ga.,	9	26	2 00
T. Shipp, Ia.	C. Howell,	9	34	4 00

Received for Annual Register.

Z. Ragan, (in full,)	$2 00
T. Shipp, "	2 00
W. W. Paul,	3 00

Br. C. Craig informs us that the parcels of pamphlets sent for Brothers Helmick and Scott, are still at his house. We are sorry those brethren do not find it convenient to obtain them from Pittsburgh.

As requested, we state, that G. W. Corn owes Br. Springer, for 95 numbers, Western Reborder. He has paid us in full for Vol. 7, but not for Vol. 8.

Br. Shipp, C. H. is first rate pay.

Br. Ragans, we will be pleased to send the books if we find a safe opportunity.

New Subscribers this week, 5. Discontinuances, 1.

PROSPECTUS OF THE OHIO CULTIVATOR,

Vol. III---For 1847.

A semi-monthly Journal, devoted to the promotion of Agriculture, Horticulture & Domestic Industry.

PUBLISHED AT COLUMBUS, OHIO,

By M. B. Bateham, Editor and Proprietor,

Assisted by the contributions of a very large number of practical and scientific writers,—farmers, horticulturists, &c.

Illustrated with numerous Engravings.

TERMS— OeDollar per year—Four Copies for Three Dollars: payments invariably in advance.

THE OHIO CULTIVATOR has new become so well known to the farmers and friends of agriculture in Ohio. that it is unnecessary to say any thing of its character or design. Grateful for the encouragement he has thus far received, the editor and proprietor takes this occasion to inform his friends and patrons, that he is determined to put forth new efforts in their service, and make his paper for the coming year still more deserving of their continued liberal patronage. Besides improvement in the matter for its columns, the mechanical appearance of the paper will be improved by the use of new type, and more illustrations. It will contain the latest and most reliable intelligence respecting the crops and the markets, both in this country, and in Europe, so as to aid the farmer in deciding at what time and price to dispose of his productions. This information alone will be worth, to most farmers, many times the price of subscription, especially now that prices are so much effected by foreign intelligence. In addition to all this, the editor believes that his increased experience and knowledge of the agricultural condition of the State, together with his extended correspondence, will enable him to make each succeeding volume of the Cultivator more valuable than the one that preceded it.

The influence of the paper, wherever it has been generally read, is admitted to have been highly salutary. It has began to awaken a spirit of inquiry and improvement among the farmers, and inspire them with more just and elevated conceptions of the character, duties and pleasures of their noble occupation. As evidence of this it may be stated, that during the past year, Agricultural Societies have been organized in twenty counties of this State; and there is reason to believe that as many more will be formed during the year to come. These associations, in connection with the State Board of Agriculture, and the Cultivator as an organ for the diffusion of intelligence, cannot fail to exert such an influence on the minds and the practice of the farming community, as will in a few years place our young Giant State in that position which she is by Nature designed to occupy—the first State of the Union in agricultural wealth and lasting prosperity.

Farmers of Ohio! Who among you are willing to have no part in this onward march of improvement? Who among you are willing to deprive yourselves and your families of that 'knowledge which is power,' and the great means of progress and elevation, for the sake of the small pittance which that knowledge may cost? And who of you that desire to see this work advance, will not make an effort to arouse your neighbors from the mental torpor that rests upon too many of them? The work is not difficult—pursuade them to read papers devoted to their interests—☞send on their names, with your own, as subscribers to the Ohio Cultivator, and you may rely upon it they will soon begin to awake—to inquire and think—and not only become better farmers, but more intelligent and agreeable neighbors.

Address, M. B. BATEHAM,
Columbus, Ohio.

THE CHEAPEST AND BEST.

New Prospectus for the Year 1847.

FORTY-EIGHT large octavo Pages, and Fifteen Engravings in each No. Published on the first of every month.

Fourth Volume cammences in January, 1847.

The No. for Jan. contains a "Pictorial Description of the State of Ohio," elegantly Illustrated with American views, &c. &c.

Other States will appear in subsequent Nos. of the Work.

Robert Sears, 158 Nassau-street, New York, will hereafter furnish his new

Pictorial and Illustrated Family Magazine for 1847, in all respects equal to the Three-Dollar Magazines, at the low price of only one dollar and a half per annum.

Any person sending Five Dollars, shall receive five copies of the magazine for one year, as he shall direct.

All subjects which will admit of it, will be illustrated with engravings. The whole number of the engravings at the conclusion of the volume will amount to several hundred.

Great inducement to subscribe.

We offer to all persons becoming subscribers, a copy of our new work, just published, entitled the Pictorial Description of Great Britain and Ireland.

Containing 262 Views of the Principal Cities, Towns, Castles, Abeys, Costumes, &c. &c., of the Fatherland: a larger number of Engravings than can be found in any book of double the price.

WELLMAN'S ILLUSTRATED BOTANY.

VOL. II., 1847.

EDITED BY J. D. COMSTOCK, M. D.

Author of Botany, Natural Philosphy, Chemistry, Mineralogy, Geology, Natural History, Phyliology, etc., assisted BY J. C COMSMOCK, ESQ.

THE success of the Illustrated Botany is no longer an experimont, for altho' it has been in existence but one year, it already has a circulation of about five thousand, a sufficient number to warrant its support, which cannot be said of any other work of the kind. Indeed, it is the only work of this character published in this country, which promises stability and a long life. We think the prospects of the second year of the Botany are very flattering. One reason for this opinion is, the fact that it is now very popular, having a large circle of friends. Another very important reason is, the securing of an Editor for the ensuing year, whose popularity as an author in the various branches of Natural Science, is so extensive as to leave his name familiar to every student in the sciences in this country. We are fully satisfied that the Botany will, under its present Editors, bear the severest criticism, and we intend that it shall become the standard work.

In the course of its publication, it will contain an Introduction to the Natural System of Botany, a thorough Treatise on the interesting and important branch of Vegetable Physiology, Notices on Fossil Botany, and descriptions, both scientific and popular, of numerous species of plants, the properties of which, medicinal and useful, will be fully explained. In short it is intended to present a complete view of the latest and most important facts, discoveries, and theories, in every department of the science.

The whole illustrated by splendid colored engravings, taken from Nature, full size, and finished the highest style of modern art.

This work is designed to be eminently popular in its application, and there is enough of that which is stranger than fiction about it to render it, in no ordinary degree, interesting and instructive.

We do not intend to confine ourselves to the botanical descriptions of each plant, but to make it a thoroughly scientific work, in all the departments of Botany. It will also give information on the cultivation of plants and flowers. In a word, it will comprise the whole science.

TERMS.

This work will be published monthly, with from six to ten flowers, handsomely painted, in each number. Price, $3,00 a year, or two copies sent to one address for $5,00.

☞A very liberal discount allowed to Agents.

J. K. WELLMAN, Publisher and Proprietor,
Febraury 13, 1847. No. 116 Nassau-st.

Horse Stolen.—$20 Reward.

REV. J. I. STILLIANS, requests us to state that on the night of Jan. 19th a large dapple gray horse, 16½ hands high was taken out of his stable on Hacker's Creek, Lewis Co. Va. Said horse is 6 or 7 years old this srping, a little crease fallen, with a white mark 5 or 6 inches long on one of his shoulders, caused by the collar a wind gall on the out side of his left hind leg, near the pastern joint, a horse of good carriage. Any person finding him, and returning him to the owner, or where he can get him will receive the above reward.

NEW FIRM.

A. A. GUTHRIE, G. BUCKINGHAM and G. N GUTHRIE announce that they have formed partnership for the transaction of Mercantile business under the firm of

GUTHRIE, BUCKINGHAM & CO.

They respectfully invite their friends and the publi generally, to the old stand of A. A. GUTHRIE & Co (recently GUTHRIE'S & LARGE,) where it is the purpose to keep a large assortment of the CHEAPEST an BEST goods in the market.

Putnam, O. January 1, 1847.

Post Office Address of Itinerant Ministers and Preachers of the Western Conferences.

Pittsburgh District.

G Brown, Steubenville, O.
Jos Burns, Port Homer, Jefferson, O.
A Lister, Beverly, Randolph Co. Va.
V Lucas, Farmington, Fayette, Pa.
R H Walker, Big Skin Creek, Lewis, Va.
S Hazlett, Beeler's Station, Marshall, Va.
P T Laishley, Morgantown, Va.
N Gillespie, " "
D R Helmick, Fairmont, Marion, Va.
J I Stillians, Lorentz Store, Lewis, Va.
H Reger, West Milford, Harrison, Va.
G G Collins, Middlebourne, Tyler, Va.
N Watson, Wheeling, Va.
A J Waren, Glady Creek ✕ Roads, Barbour, Va.
G Nestor, Frankfort, Greenbrier, Va.
J P Prickett, Ravenswood, Jackson, Va.
Wm Reeves, Pittsburgh, Pa.
Mrs. Asa Shinn, Allegheny, Pa.
J Robinson, " "
W H Doe, Sharpsburgh. Allegheny, Pa.
G B M'Elroy, Fallston, Beaver, Pa.
Wm Boardman, Washington, Pa.
J C Hazlett, " "
J Cowl, Eldersville, Washington, Pa.
W A Porter, Waynesburgh, Green, Pa.
R T Simonton, Cookstown, Fayette, Pa.
W Browning, Buchanon, Allegheny, Pa.
H Palmer, Connellsville, Pa.

Muskingum District

W L Baldwin, Gnadenhutten, Tuscarawas. O.
N Linder, Harrisville, Harrison, O.
M Scott, Oak Hill, Jackson, O.
W B Moody, Richfield, Summit, O.
A R Brown, Fowler's Mills, Geauga, O.
E S Hoagland, New Athens, Harrison, O.
J Hambay, Warsaw, Coshocton, O.
W W Tipton, Jackson, Jackson, O.
S H Heath, Bricksville, Cuyuhuga, O.
J Jack, Lodi, Seneca, O.
W Hatfield, Centerburg, Knox, O.
C S Callihan, Putnam, Muskingum, O.
J Myres, " " "
C Springer, Meadow Farm, Muskingum. O.
W H Marshall, Zanesville, O.
R Andrew, Steubenville, O.
D B Dorsey, " "
Z Ragan, " "
J W Case, Plainfield, Coshocton, O.
John Baker, " " "
J H Hamilton " " "
I Thrap, Tiffin, Seneca, O.
G M Scott, " " "
A S Robinson, Bucyrus, Crawford, O.
J Nichols, Cambridge, Guernsey, O.
W Remsburg, " " "
O V Warren, M'Connellsville, Morgan, O.
J M Piper, " " "
T B Cushman, New Lisbon, Columbiana, O.
A Tracy, Mallet Creek, Medina, O.
N Burgess, Berlin, Mahoning, O.
D Richardson, " " "
C Caddy, Vienna, Trumbull, O.
S Gee, Youngstown, Mahoning O.
W Duling, Otsego, Muskingum, O.
W Maynard, Adams Mills, Muskingum, O.
J K Duffy, Perryton, Licking, O.
J M Winn, Fairview, Guernsey, O.
H T Lawson, Woodsfield, Monroe, O.
J W Southard, Malta, Morgan, O.
John Burns, Mt. Pleasant, Jefferson, O.
W Munhall, Brownsville, Licking, O.
C J Sears, Chester Hill, Morgan, O.
T Potter, Mt. Vernon, Knox, O.
A Channel, Homer, Licking, O.
T Foster, New Hagerstown, Carroll, O.
S Elliott, Lee, Athens, O.

Ohio District.

R Dobbins, Washington, Fayette, O.
R K Davis, Rosedale, Madison, O.
J H Webster, South Solon, Madison, O.
W Tipton, Waterville, Lucas, O.
O Warrington, Wilhamsville, Clermont, O.
J White, Spring Valley, Green, O.
J Dalbey Jr., Cincinnati, O.
J B Peat Richwood, Union, O.
A M'Guire, Springfield, Clark, O.
O P Stephens, " " "
W Pelan, West Alexandria, Preble, O.
R Rose, Port William, Clinton, O.
D Moore, Carysville, Champaign, O.
A H Trumbo, Greenfield, Highland, O.
W G Fowler, Hamersville, Brown, O.
I Hunt, Fletcher, Miami, O.
J L Borton, Gilboa, Putnam, O.
R M Dalbey, Lebanon, Warren. O.
L Ensminger, Russelvania, Logan, O.
S P Kezerta, Hollensburg, Darke, O.
J M Young, Spartansburg, Randolph, Ia.
Jonathan Flood, Fairview, Randolph, Ia.
A H Bassett, Putnam, Muskingum Co. O.

Indiana District.

W B Evans, Spencer, Owen, Ia.
W W Paul, Mt. Tabor, Monroe, Ia.
C H Williams, Millroy, Rush, Ia.
T Shipp, Edinburg, Johnson, Ia.
S Morrison, Freeport, Shelby, Ia.
H Brenton, Cataract, Owen, Ia.
G Wheatley, Graham, Jefferson, Ia.

Wabash District.

J Alter, Middle Fork, Clinton, Ia.
S W Widney, Peru, Miami, Ia.
R R Bailey, Prairieville, Clinton, Ia.
Jos. Shipp, Frankfort, Clinton, Ia.
Patterson Smith, Wabash, Wabash, Ia.
G Williams, Auburn, Dekalb, Ia.
J C Wright, Northfield Boon, Ia.
F Outcalt, Wilkshire, Van Wert, O.
H Beal, Monroe, Tippecanoe, Ia.

Michigan District.

L Smith, Pine Lake, Oakland, Mich.
J B Jewel, Rose, Oakland, Mich.
L Warren, Commerce, Oakland, Mich.
M Munn, Romeo, Macomb, Mich.
J Gay, Kingsbury, Laporte, Ia.

Illinois District.

J Clarke Jr., Rushville, Schuyler, Ill.

North Illinois District.

W E Martin, Newark, Kendall, Ill.
M Jared, Greenbush, Warren, Ill.
W H Miller, Peru, La Salle, Ill.
P J Strong, Magnolia, Putnam, Ill.
D Bagley, Princeton, Bureau, Ill.

The above list we have made out from our book, indicating the post offices to which the paper is sent for the respective brethren. It does not include all the travelling preachers, but those only who receive our paper. We have made it out, partly for our own conveniance, but chiefly to accommodate the request of a member of brethren, and we perhaps owe them an apology that, for want of time, we have not done it sooner. If any names are omitted it is accidental, and unintentional.

Whilst on the subject, we will state, that all the above named brethren are authorised to act as agents for the Western Recorder, and to collect the dues therefor.

Every itinerant minister or preacher, of any Annual Conference whatever whether embraced in the above list or not can have our paper at half price, i. e. one dollar per year. And every such minister or preacher who will collect for us as much as ten dollars shall have the paper for a year free of charge. These terms to itinerents are just twice as favorable, as the terms of the Methodist Protestant, or any other religious paper, within our acquaintance. And we had much rather the brethren would be active agents, and have the paper free, than to pay us the dollar. Every brother who collects $20 or more for the paper, within the year, shall not only have our warm thanks, but shall receive some literary premium, at least worthy of his acceptance, or if he choose, we will send a copy of our paper for a year to any friend he may design ate, provided such friend is not already a subscriber.

JACOB THORN,

WHOLESALE dealer in all kinds of NOTIONS, No. 91, Wilson's Row, the first store below the Court House, is now opening a new and complete assortment of

NOTIONS AND DRY GOODS,

which will be sold wholesale, at prices a little below what they have ever been sold in this place.—Country Merchants and Pedlers, visiting the city are respectfully invited to examine my stock before purchasing elsewhere, among which may be found the following articles:—

800	Packs American solid head Pins.
200,000	Drilled Ey'd Needles, Sharps and Betweens.
2000	Doz Spool Thread.
500	Lbs. Patent do.
800	do. Cotton do.
3000	Doz. Side Combs.
600	do. Fine Ivory do
500	do. Dressing do.
100	do. Woolen Comforters.
100	Brass Clocks.
1500	Prints (Engravings,) high col'd.
100	Doz. Chapman Strops.
5000	Almanacks.
300	Shawls, different patterns.
100	Gross Kitting Pins.
4	Bbls. Blacking.
30	Doz. slates.
50	Gt. Gro. Agate Shirt Buttons
200	Coils Bonnet Wire
50	Gross Boot Laces.
500	do. Hooks and Eyes on Cards
100	do. Wood Combs.
200	do. Sherred and G. E. Suspenders
12	Boxes Fire Crackers
12	Doz. Looking-Glasses.
100	Gross Pearl Shirt Buttons.
6	Bales Brown Muslin.
200	Doz. Mitts.

Combs of every description, Buttons, Penknives, Razors, Table and Tea Spoons, Tapes, Eyeletts, Jewsharps, Pencils, Shaving Boxes, Gloves, Ladies cotton Hose, Matches, Dress Handkfs., Laces and Edgings, Spectacles, Thimbles, Beads, Candle Wicking, Night caps, Primers, Calicoes, bleached Muslins, Wafers, &c.

WANTED in exchange for goods at wholesale prices, Feathers, Beeswax, Ginsang, Rags and Hogs Bristles tied up in small bunches, for which will be given twenty-five cents a pound for all that can be brought in good order

Zanesville, O. Nov. 7, 1846.

NOTICE.

THERE will be a petition presented to the trustees of Newton Township, Muskingum county, at there annual meeting on the first Monday in March next, praying for a Township Road to commence at a stone bridge on the old Lancaster Road at Kent's run at the foot of John Williams's hill, thence to run a Northwardly direction to the corners of land owned by G. M. Crooks and Lewis Stine.

January 23d, 1847.

NOTICE

IS hereby given, that a petition will be presented to the Commissioners of Muskingum County, at their March session, praying for a county road, beginning at a point in the Cooper Mill Road in Springfield township, and where the west line of Barnett Workmans land crosses said Cooper Mill road, from thence running north-eastwardly thro' the lands of B. Workman and William Vansant to the lower end of William Vansant's field, (known as the middle meadow,) thence northwardly to the north-west corner of John Vansant's orchard, from thence north-eastwardly on the nearest and best route through the lands of John Vansant and James Vansant, so as to intersect the Flint Ridge Road (so called) near the west end of Cornelius Starkey's farm.

January 15, 1847.

NOTICE

IS hereby given that a petition will be presented to the Commissioners of Muskingum County their March session, praying for an alteration in so much of the county road known by the name of George Norman's road as lies between the Cooper Mill Road and William Vansant's barn. The proposed road to commence at said Cooper Mill road, where the west line of Barnett Workman's land crosses said road. Thence eastwardly to the lower end of William Vansant's field, (known as the middle meadow,) thence north to the lane, thence west so as to intersect the original road east of William Vansant's barn, all in Springfield township.

January 12, 1847.

JAMES K. LOGAN,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

FOREIGN & DOMESTIC DRY GOODS

No. 83 Wood St., (One door from Diamond Alley,) Pittsburgh, Pa.

COME AND SEE!!

THE SUBSCSIBERS offer very low for CASH, STONE WARE or COUNTRY PRODUCE,

35 pieces	assorted Cloths, very low,
20 "	Jeans,
300 "	Prints, cheaper than ever,
100 "	Merinos, Alpaccas, De Laines, &c.,
50 "	Tweeds and Cassinets,
25 "	Flannels,
22 "	Check.

Boots, Shoes, Queensware, Groceries, and a great variety of goods not mentioned.

In a word, they have on hand a LARGE STOCK of goods, which they

WISH TO SELL.

To sell them, they must be sold CHEAP, this they will do. J. C. GUTHRIE & SONS, successors to Guthrie's & Buckingham.

P.S. We will say to Potters engage not your ware before calling on us. We are dealing EXTENSIVELY in that article, and are determined to buy it on such terms as will prove satisfactory. J. C. G. & S's.

Putnam, O. Jan. 1, 1847.

New History of Texas, pages 532. 25 cents. A few copies to be had at the office of the Western Recorder. Published by G. Conclin Cincinnati.

PUTNAM BOARDING HOUSE.

THE SUBSCRIBER having been for the last sixteen years keeping Tavern and Boarding House, would respectfully acquaint the public—that he has established a Bording House in Putnam, and hopes by strict attention to business he will merit a share of public patronage. His accommodations shall be good, and his table, for variety not surpassed by any Hotel or Boarding House in the West. R. Putnam.

October, 31st, 1846.

N. B. Application for boarding should be made soon R. P.

Something New.

JUST PUBLISHED

By GEORGE CONCLIN, 39 Main st. Cincinnati,

A NEW HISTORY OF TEXAS.

INCLUDING an account of the late WAR WITH MEXICO, together with other interesting matte relating to that country. This history is published i pamphlet form, 12 mo., containing 152 pages and will b sold cheap.

Also—A NEW HISTORY OF OREGON AND CALIFORNIA, (By Lansford Hastings) containing minute description of the different routes to those countries—a description of the soil, products of the soil, Towns, Bays, Harbors, Rivers, Lakes, manners and customs of the inhabiants, &c. &c.

DISSOLUTION.

IT is nearly two years since the firm of A. A. Guthrie & Co., was dissolved, so far as the selling of Goods is concerned. It is this day fully dissolved by mutual consent all debts date the concern are to b epaid to A. A. Guthrie —who earnestly requests ear y payments & especially urges all wo have suffered thei accounts to stand open thus fur, to come immediately an dsettle.

A. A. GUTHRIE,
G. N. GUTHRIE.

Putnam, Dec. 14th, 1846

GEORGE CONCLIN,
BOOKSELLER AND PUBLISHER,
Stationer, Binder, and
BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURER,
No. 39 Main Street, Cincinnati.

KEEPS on hand Books published by the Methodist Protestant Church—such as
CHURCH HYMN BOOKS,
REVIVAL " "
DISCIPLINES,
EVANS' QUESTIONS & ANSWERS, &c.

Also—Just received—A supply of the Christian World in 3 Vols. with Portraits of the Wesleys, &c., by Rev. Thos. H. Stockton.

PROSPECTUS OF THE LITERARY ATHENÆUM,

A NEW AND SPLENDID MONTHLY MAGAZINE,

TO BE EDITED BY THE

Rev. Henry D. Moore, of Philadelphia,—and Rev. Andrew A. Lipscomb, Professor of English Literature and Belle Letters, in the city of Baltimore.

ON the first of January, 1847, the subscribers intend issuing the first number of a spendid Monthly Magazine, to be called the "Literary Athenæum," to be devoted to the interest and circulation of a mind-refining, soul-inspiring, spirit-stirring literature; such a literature, in a word, as the progressive taste of society seems to demand.

Between the magazines of the day, which are devoted almost exclusively to the circulation of Christian Literature, and those devoted to the light, and in too many instances, tasteless and corrupting literature—there is a wide and deep chasm, to fill which successfully and profitably, very few attempts have been made. To supply this void, to some extent at least, is the intention of the subscribers, in issuing the "Literary Athenæum."

The general cast and character of the contents of the proposed magazine will be fixed according to the standard of the most sterling intellect, and the most liberal appreciation of the wants of the common mind. Its pages will ever present a feast and a glow, to feed and illumine the loftiest and purest taste and spirit of the admirers and lovers of refining and exalting literary walks and research.

To secure this grand design, effectually and honorably, no pains or expenses will be spared.

The contents will be purely original; consisting of Lectures, Addresses, Essays, &c., on the most popular and exciting literary and scientific subjects, from the most able writers that can be secured—interspersed and relieved by beautiful poetic composition.

Science, Art, and government, in their almost infinite variety development and interest, will be liberaly and honorably discussed in its pages.

Arrangements are in progress for an extensive and important European correspondence, which will be a feature of great interest in its varied connections.

In addition to such articles, there will be presented occasional tales of unexceptionable character and style, differing essentially from the weakish romances which fill the pages of the many magazines of the day. Writers in this connection, can be secured, whose productions are the embodiment of life, true to itself,—and which will kindle and glow with the loftiest and purest sentiment, and thrill with the beauties of morality and religion in their loveliest forms.

Each number of the Athenæum will contain four embellishments of the first artistical merit, One of them will be a portrait of some distinguished personage in this country or in Europe, accompanied with an interesting biograpical sketch. Another will be a view of the buildings and grounds, of some one of the popular Universities, in this or the old world, accompanied with a historical, biograpical and statisical sketch in this body of the work. The portraits will be fine mezzotint, and the college views, beautiful line engravings. Then will follow richly colored specimens of flowers and fruit; in connection with which, there will also be presented interesting notices—floral and botanical—of climate, habits, culture, &c. All of which cannot but secure interest and favor.

Each number will comprise sixty pages of letter-press, double column, beautifully stereotyped, and printed on fine white paper; the whole corresponding in all respects, with the character of the other departments of the work.

Such is to be the character of the work at its commencement. If it is succersful, as it ought to be, and as is hoped and believed it will be,—improvement will be made as far as possible in the different departments, as they are suggested in the progress of the work.

The subscribers take pleasure in announcing to the public, that they have concluded arrangements with the Rev. Henry D. Moore, of Philadelphia, and Rev. Andrew A Lipscomb, Professor of English Literature and Belle Letters, of Raltimore, who will co-operate as Editors in the of new Magazine. Under the management of those gentleman, the subscribers flatter themselves, abundant success will be secured in behalf of the enterprise.

TO PUBLISHERS.

The subscribers would also give notice to Publishers, at home and abroad, that there will be in connection with the work, an extensive review department. This will be made a feature of excelling interest. The department will be conducted fairly and honorably, and all works sent to the office of the subscribers, will receive such notices as their character may demand.

The first number will be issued on the first of January, 1847. Its contents and the name of contributors, will be published shortly.

Terms—Three dollars per annum, in advance.

Editors of papers, copying this Prospectus, and sending a paper with it, to the office of the "Athenæum," shall receive the numbers of the work, and the thanks of the publishers.

All letters, containing orders for the work, post-paid, and enclosing the subscription price, will receive prompt attention. To be addressed to

F. C. WILSON & Co.

Philadelphio, Pa.

THE WEEKLY CHRISTIAN WORLD;

An Independent, Comprehensive, and Impartial Newspaper; designed for welcome and useful circulation; Among all Friends of Christian Union, Christian Benevolence, and Christian Literature. To be published every Saturday, At the Reading-Room of the Christian Athenæum, over the Book-store of Mr. James Harmstead, Fourth St., between Market and Arch Sts., Philadelphia;

Price:—Two Dollors a-year invariably in advance.

T. H. Stockton,
J. G. Wilson,
Theophilus Stork. } Editors.

W. S. Stockton,—General Agent.

TO persons who are acquainted with the character and objects of the Christian World, as they have been developed during the last six

Written for the Western Recorder.

TEMPERANCE ADDRESS,

Delivered at the Presbyterian Church in Putnam, O. on the evening of February 2d, before the Putnam, Olive Branch, and Muskingum Divisions of the Sons of Temperance, on the occasion of the presentation of a Bible by the Ladies of Putnam to the Putnam Division, No. 64, S. of T. by,

REV. WM. A. SMALLWOOD.

A great change has taken place in regard to the use of intoxicating drinks within the last twenty years. And he who contrasts the present habits and opinions of the community on this subject with those then universally prevalent, cannot avoid being struck with surprize at the occurrence of so vast a change in so short a space of time.

But the consideration of the subject may well do far more than excite surprize. This change shows what may be done, by the use of proper means, in favor of the moral and religious improvement of mankind. And it is useful to meditate upon it, in order that our hopes may be confirmed, and our efforts excited,—those hopes and efforts, which look to the extension and predominance of truth and holiness throughout the earth. In this respect, the example of what has been done for the promotion of temperance is of the highest utility.

The great change, however, in the community with regard to temperance, teaches directly lessons, which make it an appropriate and instructive theme for the present occasion. It must be remembered that the work of reformation is not yet complete. Extensive as its progress thus far has been,—astonishing as is the revolution in public habit and opinion,—wonderful as are the triumphs, that this cause has won,—the friends of temperance are yet very far from having arrived at the end of their labors,—very far indeed from having consummated their conquest. The enemy is yet in the field. Not only are immense numbers of his fortresses yet untaken, but their fire is active and incessant, and their wounded and dying victims are on every side of us. Look at the many factories, that are making intoxicating drinks,—look at the numerous taverns and shops, that are vending them,—look at the frequent cases of unhappy subjection to this awful appetite, that exist among us,—look at the hundreds of temperate drinkers, who are going through the degrees, that lead to intemperance,—and look at the countless multitudes, who are dead to the importance of this subject, and consequently thoughtless of the tremendous dangers, to which they are exposed, and then say, whether we have accomplished all, we had to do? The view of existing circumstances, greatly improved as they are, abundantly indicates that our work is scarcely half done. Any relaxation of our efforts, doubtless, would soon reduce us to the miserable state of vassalage to this fearful enemy, in which we so recently were. This must not be contemplated for a moment. On the contrary the magnitude of our remaining work loudly calls upon us, not only to avoid any rest from our toils, but to come up to it with increased exertion. And we must strike, whilst the iron is hot, and the faster, that it may not cool before we have bent and fashioned it to our will. Now is the time to do it; now, when our enrolment is complete;—now, when our discipline is perfect;—now, when our hearts are flushed with victory;—now, when our enemy is depressed by repeated defeats. And for the stimulating of us in the enterprizes, that yet invite our labors, and for the instructing of us in the measures most conducive to our success, it is of the first importance to contemplate our past victories on the one hand, and the instrumentalities, on the other, by which they have been won.

I. What then are our victories? We see them, first, in the changes of the habits of the community.

Twenty years ago, intoxicating drinks were found in every family. They were regarded as an useful article of house-keeping. They were esteemed both a necessary and a luxury. And care was taken by the head of each household to have them duly provided.

They were provided and presented with no little "pomp and circumstance." The side board, a showy and costly piece of furniture, was appropriated to their especial accommodation. Salvers of various sizes were kept in constant attendance upon them; capacious pitchers, and a glittering array of china and glass furnished the means of their preservation and convenient use. The old punch bowl, perhaps an heir-loom in the family, stood like a plethoric alderman, or a well-kept and venerable domestic, who had held the same respectable place among a former generation, amidst a host of humbler companions. The well-filled decanter, plain like the Doric, or else beautifully ornamented like the Corinthian column, invited the appetite. The honest, open-faced tumbler, the gay and lively wine glass,—the airy and graceful champaign, combined to satiate the taste, or tempt the palates of the family and its guests. Not every one had all of these conveniences for the keeping and drinking of the cherished poison. The poor man had nothing but his brown jug and black bottle for the holding of the whiskey or the rum, which were all, that his means enabled him to procure, whilst those of somewhat advanced circumstances had their plain decanters and tumblers, and out of them drank their brandy and gin; but the rich stored their cellars with pipes of the finest wines, and quaffed them from the most beautiful fabrics, that glass can be made to assume.

The expense of all this was enormous. It would be a low average to allow to each family in the country at that time two drinks daily at a cost of twelve and a half cents; yet such an average would amount to fifty dollars per annum for each family. Supposing that we had then two millions of families in the land, we arrive at the outrageous expenditure of one hundred millions of dollars by the American people for intoxicating drinks. We leave out every concomitant outlay, and look at the bare cost of the article, and we see here the amount. The estimate is, no doubt, far below the truth, and yet we have a sum many times exceeding the whole revenue of our national government. What an astonishing waste does this extremely moderate and restricted estimate display!

And to what purpose was this waste? How were such immense quantities of intoxicating drinks disposed of? The use was universal and excessive. Spirituous and vinous liquors were deemed essential for every kind of occasion and every description of persons. Competency for every emergency, relief from every evil, consolation under every disaster, were sought from them. They were treated as if they were "ministering spirits, sent forth to minister unto" men.

From infancy to extreme old age, through all the stages of their earthly pilgrimage, men resorted to the excitement of drink, under an impression of its salutary and sanatory tendency. Children in their cradles, the weak and sick on their beds, and the aged, leaning, like Jacob, on the top of their staffs, were drugged with these stimulants for the purpose of eliciting health and strength, and even those, who were already abundantly blessed with health and strength, thought that stimulants were still necessary to preserve their powers. The laborer in the fields, the mechanic in the work-shop, the student in his closet, could not toil, could not contrive, could not think, could do nothing without the inspiration of an intoxicating beverage. The physician was not equal to the fatigues of his practice,—the lawyer could not command the full force of his powers,—the clergyman could not dive into the depths of sacred lore, and bring up its glorious treasures, without the friendly aid of the bowl. The candidate for public office was a mean fellow, if he did not drink, and still meaner, if he dod not treat, and meanest of all, if he did not pour out an ample libation to his success. And if a poor hanger-on had done a service so slight that it had no value in money, he was remunerated with a dram.

The occasions of the use of the poison were as universal, as the persons, who used it, were numerous. In all conditions of the mind and the body,—at all seasons of the year, —under all the varieties of the weather, and at all parts of the day,—no matter when, or how, or where,—there was still a reason for its application. If one was cold, he had to drink for the purpose of getting warm, and if warm, to get cool. In the morning, drink was necessary to wake up a man's powers, and in the evening, to put them to sleep. It was taken before dinner to procure an appetite, and again after dinner to guard against the evil consequences of the indulgence of that appetite. Men first quarreled over their cups, and then made friends in a fresh one. Old acquaintances, when they met, had to drink to "Auld Lang Syne," and new ones, when introduced, sealed a promised friendship in the flowing bowl. The rites of hospitality were not duly observed, without o sacrifice on the altar of Bacchus: the gentleman guest was led to the side-board, and offered with a graceful courtesy the intoxicating inventions of three nations,—the brandy of France, the gin of Holland, and the whiskey of America, whilst the cheeks of the lady-visiter were made to glow with the wines of Madeira and Sicily. Weddings and social gatherings were dull, unless enlivened by the jolly god; political discussions thinly attended, without the attraction of strong drink; and the most distinguished feature of military assemblages was a war against the principles of temperance. A man showed his patriotism on the Fourth of July by getting drunk, and his gratitude and piety at New-Year, Christmas, and Thanksgiving by doing the same. Even sitters up with the sick must be supplied through the night with hot toddy and punch; watchers with the dead were not expected to perform that solemn duty without similar appliances, and at last when the affecting rites of sepulture were discharged by assembled friends, their grief was deadened, and their improvement of the occasion drowned in the stupifying influences of strong waters. The clergyman himself, who attended on these mournful occasions, it is feared, too frequently yielded to the prevailing custom, and closed his labors with a glass, at least, of wine. I myself, when a boy, remember to have observed the officiating minister indulging in this way, at the funeral of a little sister, and I remember too that the incident struck my child's mind as an inconsistency at the time. At the beginning of my own ministry, I have attended funerals, where guests were invited to partake of wine and ardent spirits in a room, adjoining that, in which the corpse was. A clerical friend, many years ago, told me, that in an early part of his ministry, living in a sickly region, and having many funerals, he was at first delighted by the apparent effects of his funeral sermons, especially the copious tears shed by his hearers on these occasions, but meeting with no corresponding fruits in the lives of the weepers, he was led to inquire into the matter more closely, when he discovered that his hearers were partially intoxicated, and wept because it is easy for a man to weep when excited by drink. It is truly astonishing, when we look back, to see how closely and constantly the use of intoxicating drinks was twined in with all the duties, —all the charities,—all the enjoyments of life. They were every where present. It seemed as if man could not live in comfort,—could not live at all, without them.

Now, here are our victories. Such things were, but are not. They were the habits of the community twenty years ago,—they are the habits of the community no longer. In how few families, comparatively, are ardent spirits, which a celebrated English physician, Sir Astley Cooper,—called most appropriately evil spirits:—in how few families, comparatively, are these evil spirits found? Men, who drink, are ashamed to do their drinking in the sacred precincts of home, and in the presence of their wives and children. Not a few, doubtless, would like to have the old state of things back again, but public opinion restrains the hand, that would restore the idol to its former seat, and hence their habitations are no longer like a cage of unclean birds, but the evil spirit having been cast out, they are swept and garnished.

And all the furniture of the drinker, where is it? Echo answers,—where. Gone, I trust, "to the tombs of the Capulets." Perhaps, we may sometimes encountre a broken and deserted remnant of the grandeur and glory of former days, or if not broken or deserted, employed in a better way. The side-board now is the respectable steward, not of the cellar, as of yore, but of the larder;—the tumbler is a cold water man;—the salver knows which side its bread is buttered, and confines itself to that; whilst the punch-bowl, I rather think, has died of a broken heart,—the whiskey barrel no longer pretends to be a Christian, but wears the crescent,—the blood-red crescent, stained on its forehead, and the once long array of pipes, and demijons, and wine-glasses, and wine-coolers is reduced to some miserable skeletons, lying "few and far between." "The glory is departed."

The immense expense, in the first place, of providing furniture for the keeping of the article, and then of buying and using it, is a clear gain to men's pockets. In one year after Temperance Societies became general in this country, —the second year of the twenty, to which I have been alluding, the quantity of foreign distilled spirits, used in the United States, fell from nearly five millions of gallons to two and a half millions, or almost one half, at a saving of not less than two millions of dollars, which were previously sent abroad to enrich the Frenchman, who made brandy for us, and the Dutchman who distilled our gin. So said the American Almanac, an universally acknowledged authority. And the editor of that work estimated, from information collected by him, that, within the same year, the use of home-made whiskey had been lessened one third, at an annual saving of nearly eight millions of dollars. Thus we see that, in the very dawn of this blessed change, ten millions of dollars were saved to the people in the purchase of the article alone. This fact speaks for itself. The dollar is a mute,—but an eloquent mute.

We seem to live in another atmosphere, and infinitely a better. A man is now unwilling to be seen with a jug or a bottle in his hand. The old Bacchanalian songs, that once cheered the convivial board, are buried in oblivion, and it would dishonor the individual, who should attempt to disinter them, as it would degrade the poet, who should seek to renew the species. Toasts on festive occasions can be, and are drunk in pure water, and songs are sung, not in praise of the ruddy grape, or in honor of the jolly God, but to the crystal fount. Children are better nursed without stimulant, and better relieved of pain, and put to sleep, without being made drunk. Old men are as strong in the absence of spirits as formerly they were under their influence, and far more clear headed. The young and middle-aged do more work as a regular thing, and do it greatly better on cold water than they could on brandy or rum. They can sustain both cold and heat,—work in the harvest field or on the ice-pond,—endure the blazing suns of summer or the freezing blasts of winter, more comfortably without intoxicating drinks than with them. Not using ardent spirits so extensively, people do not quarrel so frequently as in days by gone, and of course need no seal to the settlement of their disputes. And when they meet an old friend, or make a new one, they have a vastly more friendly way of showing their regard than that of intoxicating their friends, or becoming intoxicated themselves. A guest can be received,—a gentleman entertained,—a lady welcomed, in our dwellings with no less mutual pleasure in the absence of every excitement than with it. No one looks for such things. Sometimes, you may hear of wine being introduced at parties, but so rarely as, when it does occur, to excite universal surprise, and awaken a pang in the bosoms of those who are alive to this subject. Now and then, the report is circulated that a lady, on such occasions, has drunk a glass of wine, but the narration of an incident of this nature now sends a thrill of horror through the public mind, whereas but lately these things were matters of course. All social, and other gatherings, whether political, or military, require no artificial aid for making them subservient to their objects. As for clergymen, the use of any kind of intoxicating drinks, by them has passed almost entirely away.

Looking then at the past, and comparing it with the present; reviewing the last twenty years, and reflecting on what was the state of things in relation to this subject at the beginning of that space of time, and on what is the state of things now, we see a most wonderful change in the habits of the community. And on its very face, obviously to every eye, it is a change of so exceedingly beneficial a character, that all, who wish well to their race, may, with the utmost reason, rejoice in this change of the habits of the community, as a great and glorious victory in favor of the cause of Temperance.

2. But, secondly our victories do not end here. The change on this subject in the community is not confined to their habits. What is more important is that this change in their habits is based upon a corresponding change in their opinions.

We esteem this latter change as more important than the other, because it indicates that the existing state of healthfulness in the practice of the public will be lasting. We might change the public habits, but we should have no guarantee that the change would be permanent, if there were no parallel change in public opinion; but when the opinions of a people have been changed contemporaneously, and in harmony, with a change in their practice, we may feel a good degree of confidence of their continuing to act right, because it will be acting agreeably to their opinions. Great, then, as our reason is for congratulation on the change in the public habits, we have still greater cause for thankfulness on the change, which has occurred in public opinion, favorable to the glorious interests of Temperance.

People think differently in regard to the utility of intoxicating drinks from what they did twenty years ago. Then, the occasional, and even habitual daily use was believed to be necessary to the health of the human system. It was thought to be conducive to bodily and mental vigor to use them every day, provided they were used in moderation. And all of that vast amount of intemperance, which once prevailed in this country, grew out of a belief in the usefulness of spirits for the preservation of health. But the Temperance Reformation has knocked this idea in the head. And that, too, by throwing the light of physical science in upon the subject. Sir Astley Cooper, the great English Surgeon, held in so many words, that "spirits and poisons are synonymous terms," and the learned Dr. Mussey, of Cincinnati, that "a healthy laboring man no more needs alcohol, than he needs arsenic, corrosive sublimate or opium." The latter gentleman also says that ardent spirits predispose the system to disease. Instead of being calculated to do good, then, they are calculated to do evil. Possessing no nutriment, they cannot give strength, and are only competent to stimulate what strength there is previously in the system. The consequence is that their use will be followed by an exhaustion corresponding with the previous excitement. Hence they are really to be regarded only as a medicine, and should be cautiously administered at the prescription of a Temperance physician, and then only when substitutes cannot well be found, for men in this way there is danger of producing a pernicious appetite. Such is public opinion generally at the present time.

People think differently also with respect to what was once called temperate drinking, or drinking in moderation. The time was not long ago, when no one ever thought of censuring this practice; but now it is dreaded as the direct road to intemperance. A man, who drinks at all, is considered to be in danger. If an individual is seen to go into a place devoted to drinking purposes, the sober part of the community suspect him at once, as one, who has begun the fatal journey. The public mind is sensitive, and slight things make an impression upon it. Intemperance is an appetite. He, who is drinking moderately, is forming that appetite. When it is formed, who possesses the power to restrain it? Every body thinks he does, but past experience and observation prove that no one does. Safety is to be found alone in never forming the appetite. Thus, temperate drinking, and moderate drinking, and all that sort of thing, have been left behind in the regions of "Old Night," and total abstinence from all, that can intoxicate, has been adopted as the true rule of morals. Public sentiment sees too much danger, and too awful, in every thing beyond that, to allow of its indulgence.

When this reformation began, young men occupied a position of extreme danger in consequence of the general opinion's giving a sanction to their occasional intemperance; but now the general opinion by its change places them in a condition of comparative safety. It was rather thought that aberrations sometimes from the paths of temperance might be conceded to young men. Such deviations were looked upon with much allowance. Departures by the young from strictly correct habits were called "the sowing of their wild oats." It seemed to be acknowledged that these "wild oats" had to be sown, and that, not till they had been completely sown, should persons be severe in rebuking the dereliction. But a "change has come over the spirit of our dream." Now, the public see that these wild oats are a perfectly useless crop, and that there is no reason for sowing them at all, and that they are not only worthless but poisonous to the soil, and when once in it, are hard to be removed. This juvenile intemperance, unnecessary, and injurious at the time, generates an appetite, destructive in its final results of every thing valuable to man, and in its progress almost beyond the reach of arrest. Hence intemperance by the young ought not to be indulged more than intemperance by the aged,—ought not to be indulged at all. Like every other class the young should abstain totally. Instead then of inculcating upon the minds of young men moderation, as parents and friends once did, public opinion urges, as the only rational and safe course, the great rule of total abstinence, and by the peremptoriness of the exaction, places them in a state of comparative safety. The dangers, which beset the path of a young man twenty years ago, are almost vanished in consequence of the prevalence of this sentiment. Knowing that he will loose his character by indulgence, he refrains from indulgence.—at least, he is under a powerful motive in favor of abstinence. What a blessing is this change in public opionion to young men themselves! And O! what an unspeakable precious consolation it is to their parents. We, who lived under a different state of prevailing sentiment, can estimate, in some good degree, the richness of the consolation to the one, and of the blessing to the other.

Until recently, it was not believed to be practicable to reform a confirmed drunkard. He was given up as a hopeless case, and nothing looked for but that he should stagger and stumble on through life, to the ruin of every earthly interest, and the misery of every earthly connection, and at last tumble into a drunkard's degraded grave, and through that, into "the lake, that burneth for ever and ever." And certainly, when we look at the only remedy, that public opinion offered, we can see little hope of any other result. The drunkard was told to drink moderately, but he could not drink moderately. Put him once under the impulse of drink, and he could not stop short of the brink of the precipice.—He had too much way on him, as seamen say, to avoid going over. Dr. Johnson, the great English moralist, wisely declared:—"I can abstain, but I cannot drink moderately." Of late years, people have come to see the truth of this remark, and have abandoned the old remedy, and now urge upon the drunkard, as the only adequate one,—total abstinence. And the operation of the new opinion has confirmed and abundantly illustrated its truth. The reformation of drunkards under its auspices is a common occurrence.—Thousands stand this day reclaimed. An astonishingly great work has been done in behalf of this once hopeless and abandoned class. Some of the best men are its subjects. And they are witnesses to the verity of the reformed public opinion, which holds that the intemperate may be reclaimed by entire abstinence.

A change in the public mind has likewise supervened, even subsequently to the origin of the temperance reform, in regard to the articles, on which the ban of abstinence should be placed. At first, it was thought that the object of promoting temperance would be attained by excluding the use of distilled, and allowing that of fermented liquors. Soon, however, it was discovered that this plan resulted in little more than the transfer of the habits of the community from one article of drink to another. The intemperate were reclaimed from the use of one liquor, it was seen, only by the substitution in the place of it, of a different one;—their appetite was still kept alive, and in all its original strength, and the consequence was, that, by the incessant cravings of that appetite for something more stimulating than these weaker drinks, the intemperate were brought back to the original article, and to all their original intemperance. The temperate, too, on these milder drinks, formed the appetite, which, increasing gradually in strength, would be satisfied with nothing short of the most ardent excitements. Nothing was, therefore, accomplished effectually by the original temperance pledge, which excluded distilled, but allowed fermented liquours. The progress of reform under that pledge was like that of a man journeying up hill by a slippery road, who steps forward, but, at each step, instantly slides back to the spot, on which he had previously stood. By such experience, the friends of temperance were forced into the measure of total abstinence from all, that intoxicates. They had no choice. They were forced either to abandon the reformation, or to take this ground. They took this position, because it was the only alternative to the abandonment of the cause in despair. The result has shown the wisdom of the measure. It is what has secured their triumphs.—And the public mind is now well settled down upon the principle, that to be temperate, and to promote temperance, men must abstain from wines and all fermented, as well as from distilled liquors.

The time was when the making and selling of strong drinks were employments, that brought no disgrace. They were prosecuted ignorantly,—without a correct view of their real character. Persons supposed that they were pursuing a right and useful occupation. But a beam of truth has been thrown upon this subject. A distinct and close connection has been shown between the maker and seller on the one hand, and the miseries and ruin of the intemperate on the other. In this way an appeal has been brought up to a man's conscience, whether for dollars and cents he was willing to destroy bodies, minds, souls,—all, that a human being is, and might be, to himself, to his family, to society, and to God. On such as resist that appeal,—on such as are willing to sacrifice all those high interests of their fellow-beings for "filthy lucre's sake," the public sentiment has concurred in looking with a frown, and pointing "the slow, unmoving finger" of indignant scorn. He, who makes, or sells, the intoxicating fluid, except as a medicine, is not a fit companion for his fellow men. His hand is against every man. If he can but accumulate wealth, he thinks not, he cares not, for the consequences he brings down upon others. Perish every one, in order that he may swim. He climbs on men's shoulders, and sinks them, for the purpose of keeping his own head above water. Is not such a man a common enemy—a pirate of the land? So long as he continues his murderous business, is he not to be shunned? Let him turn from it, and the community will receive him as a man and a brother; but so long as he clings to his foul occupation, they are compelled, in justice to themselves, to turn from him as a rock in the ocean of life, which no one can safely approach.

Now, here again we see our victories. We have taken a degraded and most vicious public sentiment, and we have elevated, and cleansed, and directed it aright. For the most part, the public mind is now healthful, and fruitful, and still growing more so every day. And herein we have abundant ground for encouragement and rejoicing,—rejoicing over the past, and encouragement for the future. These changes in the general opinion assure us that our work will stand firmly, and they are the morning stars, that inspire our hearts with blessed hopes of a still brighter and more glorious day.

II. But how have these great and glorious victories been won? What are the means, by which this immense change in the habits and opinions of the community has been wrought?

We are undoubtedly bound to ascribe the praise and glory of it to God. There are plain indications of its having originated with Him, in the fact that so many minds in different places were led to the contemplation of the dreadful evils of intemperance at about the same time, and to an anxious inquiry into the best means of arresting them, and in the further facts, that these earliest sympathizers in the sufferings of the intemperate were ministers of the gospel, and that the pulpit was the first point, from which any attempt for their relief came. And in every subsequent stage of the Reform, it has been the hand-maid of religion, seeking at every meeting the blessing of God in prayer, and then throwing large numbers of those rescued from the dark sea of intemperance into the bosom of the church, as the "haven," where they should be. In every stage, too, we have seen man completely at fault as to the means of farther advancement, and then, "man's extremity was God's opportunity,"—and by what at first was merely "a little cloud."—"like a man's hand," He made us equal to our work. When Dr. Beecher and others began to sound the temperance tocsin, who could have expected the results that have come? When the Washingtonians of Baltimore started their ball of reformation, temperance interests were almost prostrate, and who looked that these reformed drunkards would be the means of reviving them, and giving them greater success than ever? And when Washingtonianism had lost its power, and the cause was again sinking, who anticipated that the few Sons of Temperance, met in New York, would raise the great principles of temperance from their ashes, and impart to them new vitality? This cause and the efforts for its promotion would have perished long since, had they been of man. But they were of God. From him came the success, and to Him be ascribed the glory.

And God's great law for the intercourse of man with man, —the law of love, was a main means, under Him, employed for the prosecution of the work. The temperate looked at, and sympathized with the intemperate, and those, whom their intemperance aggrieved, and those, likewise, who were exposed to a similar fate, and they recognized the obligation on themselves to do all, they could for their help. The sublime principle of love started, and has continued to sustain the enterprize down to the present day. It was a pure atmosphere of benevolence, in which the temperance cause originated. Those, who set it in motion, acted under that noble impulse. And those, who have succeeded to their labors, have labored, because they felt the same high influence. The preacher in the pulpit urged a subject, often unpleasant to his hearers,—the temperance lecturer travelled up and down through the land, having no certain dwelling place;—the old Washingtonian entered the fetid grog-shops, and threaded the alleys, where were the haunts of the drunkard; and the Son of Temperance now offers the olive-branch to his erring fellow-men, under the pressure of a compassion, which will not allow the benevolent heart to be idle and careless, whilst our brethren are suffering around us. Love has been eminently instrumental in our past victories, and upon it we rely for victories yet to come.

Associated with the principle of love in the pursuit of our great object, as a means of its attainment, has been the diffusion of moral light. Whilst we have prayed, and whilst we have sympathized, we have used, as our instrument for reaching the hearts and minds of men, and drawing them to our standard the lever of truth. The best intellects have searched, with intense interest, and unremitting persevrance, the whole subject. The student, and the practical man both, have fixed upon it their keenest scrutiny, intent upon the discovery of duty. The results have been thrown broad cast upon the world. The pulpit, the press, the lecture-room, the street-debate, the fire-side conversation have united to carry them every where. The light of truth on this subject has penetrated, like the light of day, the palace and the cottage,—the halls of affluence and the dens of misery. No place so close, but what it has been pierced,—no spot so dark but what it has been illumined. And that such changes have taken place in habit and opinion, and such innumerable masses have been attracted to this cause are effects, that must be ascribed to the fact that men's enlightened consciences could not resist a sense of truth and duty.

Eminent among the means, under God, employed for the prosecution of this great work, and eminently conducive to its success, is the system of organization, under which the measure has been urged onward. Formerly every thing for the promotion of temperance was done individually. With what success is well known. These individual efforts amounted to nothing. Each one fought for himself, without unity of action, and without the confidence inspired by associated effort. Hence he saw little effect of his exertions, and soon becoming disheartened, ceased to fight at all. It appeared to him to be a hopeless work, and he abandoned it. All are aware how little thousands of men can do against an enemy, if they are unorganized and unconnected. Only when they are banded together, in one mass, and moving under one governing impulse, do they become "mighty to the pulling down of strong holds." It was a happy, and, doubtless, heaven-taught, idea, adopted by the originators of the Temperance Reform, to do the work before them, not, as had been previously attempted so often in vain, by individual, but by consolidated effort,—by societies. The consequences have shown the wisdom of the plan. The temperance societies have been a main, an essential spoke of the wheel, that has borne our cause triumphantly through the land. Every one sees that little or nothing would have been effected but for this organization. And it is obvious that now, if the societies were taken away the cause would droop, and gradually all, that has been done, would perish.

Such are the principal means of our past success;—such the instruments, with which our victories have been gained. And in them we see the agencies, upon which we are to depend for future and final triumph. Modifications of them may occur, as they have occurred. Changes in form and circumstance may be required, as they have been required. A superintending Providence will suggest such modifications and changes, we may trust, at the proper times. But the success of these measures, in times past, in our conflicts, is an animating earnest of complete success in future conflicts by a substantial adherence to them.

III. It is in the character of combatants in this great strife, and for the attainment of this glorious end, and by a substantial adherence to these well-proved instrumentalities, that the Sons of Temperance stand before this assembly.—We are a Temperance Society. Our organization differs somewhat from previous temperance societies, but, in all essential matters, we are such. 1. We have precisely the same object in view. Our design is to guard the temperate on the one hand, and redeem the intemperate on the other;—to carry the shield in one, and the olive branch in the other, and, whilst inviting all to an ark of deliverance, to hold over them an arm of protection. 2. We adopt precisely the same principles. Total abstinence from the use, the purchase, the sale, the manufacture of all, that can intoxicate, is our pledge,—the key-stone of our arch of union. 3. We work with precisely the same instruments. God, we look and pray to, for every success: love is what has drawn, and binds us together, and impels us onward in our work: truth, as we read it in the only book, we are always contemplated to have in our Divisions, the Bible, and as our minds have collected it from the sage and good, is the stream we are laboring to pour upon the world, as the means of promoting its purity: and associated effort, where numberless individuals toil together with an enthusiasm, inspired by a confidence in each other's fidelity, is the most striking feature of our organization. The Love of our species and of each other; the Purity, which springs from the control of truth; and the Fidelity, which binds us to our common enterprize, indicate the measures, we pursue, under God, for the accomplishment of our object. They are the words of our Motto. Thus, we are substantially identical with the Temperance Society.

The slight discrepancies in our organization are the lessons of experience, and give us an advantage over every previous form of association. There has been a regular progress in these matters. The first Temperance Societies were defective in the extent of their pledge, leaving out wines and the weaker drinks, and were changed, not without opposition. The second stage of advancement in organization was before long found incomplete, not aiming sufficiently at the reformation of the intemperate, & a change was made to meet this end, all becoming Washingtonians, a name, till then, never known. That organization covered ground enough, and was zealous enough for the intemperate for the time, but it wanted a capacity of continuance. When the narratives of the reformed had become old and familiar to the public ear, the interest was lost, and apathy supervened.—Indeed, none of these plans had frequency of presence sufficient to keep the effort alive. They died during the summer, because meetings were not then held. Our organization is made for continuance. It is closer in its fabric.—There is a more intimate connection, also, among its extended parts throughout the country. And its presence is perpetual, through the weekly meeting. Summer or winter, all is the same,—our object is constantly in view, and our work going on. The ground we once gain, we never lose, and we are always gaining. Our charitable feature adds, likewise, to our stability. It is like a magnet;—it attracts, and it holds;—it draws persons to us, and it keeps them with us. People see us aiding each other, when disabled,—nursing each other on beds of sickness,—taking each other to a decent grave, when death has interposed,—and ministering to the comfort of the bereaved families of our departed brothers, and the sight commends our pledge to them, and when the pledge has been taken, the thought of the benefits, to which it entitles them, keeps them steadfast to their pledge. It is therefore manifest that we have strong safeguards for the continuance of our organization, and of its prosperity, and that herein, whilst we are strictly a Temperance Society, we are an advance and an improvement upon all the forms of Temperance Societies, which have preceded us.

It is surprising to me that a part of the religious community should stand opposed to us. Or rather, it would be surprising, if we did not find professedly religious men opposing every benevolent enterprise. The Jewish church, with the High-priest at its head, crucified the Lord of life and glory. But, certainly, our object ought to enlist the sympathies of good men, and bind them all to us. Look at that object,—the promotion of temperance;—look at the success, we have had in prosecuting it, having reached many men, that never were reached before, there being in Zanesville, some twenty or thirty reformed men,—reformed by us, to testify to our efficiency, and so in other places;—look how we have originated a new era in the Temperance Reform, and raised up the cause, when it was thoroughly down;—and look how we have some of the best of the old pioneers of temperance, and numbers of the clergy at our head. This latter consideration should inspire the minds of religious men with confidence in this movement. Glorious old Dr. Beecher,—he, who sounded the first call to this Reform, is with us. One of his talented sons, a clergyman in Indiana, presides over one of our Divisions. Many clergymen, from a sense of duty, and in a spirit of benevolence, have entered our ranks. In Zanesville, both of the Baptist ministers, one of the Methodist, and myself of the Episcopal Church, are members. And if my humble testimony may be admitted, it is freely given in favor of the usefulness of our association, and its great capacities for good, and the absence from it of hurtful properties. Cordially do I say to it,—"esto perpetua," live for ever!

I am aware that this association is objected to as a secret order. The preservation of our funds for those entitled to them requires that we should have some way of discovering who are really entitled to their use. For this purpose we have two signs, one of which is frequently changed. Surely there is nothing wrong here. And this is the substance of our secrecy, and its exclusive object. We are under no manner of obligation of favoritism to each other, except so far as funds are concerned, and these are our common, not our individual funds. But if any one suspects that we have any other object or design, let him come, and join us, and see for himself, and then if dissatisfied, he may leave the next day. Thus every man may convince himself whether there is any thing wrong.

But we are not strictly a secret society. Our object is well known. Our rules and general order of proceeding are published to the world. Our forms of doing business are necessarily unseen by the public eye, because our doors are closed to all but ourselves; yet we invite all men to unite with us. We are no more a secret society, than an army is with its counter-sign. We are no more a secret society than the session of a church is, when it sits, as it generally does, with closed doors. Let not then this charge be brought against us, unless you mean to bring it also against our churches.

I am also aware that it is objected, the church can and will do all this, and there is no need of other societies. But I like not the source, from which this principle comes. It is from Rome, and smells of her intolerance, who will admit of nothing, that is not under her control, and cannot be pierced through and through with the auger of the confessional. I see not how the church is to do this work, divided as she is. I admire not a principle, which must dissolve our Bible Societies, our Temperance Societies, our Howard Societies, our Orphan Asylums, and all the host of voluntary societies, which have been manifestly approved by God, and have proved great blessings to the world. This principle is too exceptionable as to its origin,—too wide-spread in its destructive consequences, and too impracticable in its application, to merit public favor. But still, if the church can, and will, do this work, let her do it, and God speed her in it. Surely however, she will not refuse our assistance, nor will she, nor can she reasonably, to men, (who are unwilling to do all she wishes them,) deny permission to do a part. If the world will not go with the church in all things, it is wise to get them to go as far as we can.

But one thing is clear,—if the temperance cause is to advance, and obtain new victories, and win a final triumph, these glorious results must be done by our Society. All other organizations are lifeless and prostrate. Were it not for us, the cause would be retrograding. It was so, when we arose. Take the Sons of Temperance out of the way, and the maker and vender of ardent spirits are in the field without an opponent, and the land is their prey. You must then help us,—you must join us, or you can do nothing effective. The question is between Sons of Temperance, and no Temperance Societies at all. Decide then which you will have.

Brothers: we have a great work before us,—mighty enemies are in our way. Let us look to God, encouraged by what He has already done for us. Let us open our bosoms to the impressions of love for our suffering fellow-men. Let us proclaim the great precepts of truth. Let us stand in all the firmness of our organization, shoulder to shoulder. Let us advance and scale every battlement, and level every fortress of intemperance. And let us never cease in our great warfare, until the eagle of victory shall rest upon our standards.

THE WESTERN RECORDER.

VOL. VIII---NO. 20. PUTNAM, MUSKINGUM COUNTY, OHIO, FEBRUARY 20, 1847. WHOLE NO. 384.

The Western Recorder,
Is Published every Saturday,
AT PUTNAM, OPPOSITE ZANESVILLE, OHIO.
OFFICE ON MAIN STREET.
A. H. BASSETT, Editor and Proprietor.
C. ALLEN, PRINTER.

TERMS.---TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, in advance. TWO FIFTY at the close of the year. Payments WITHIN THREE MONTHS will be considered in advance.
All letters and communications must be addressed, the Editor, POST PAID, except such as contain funds, and directed to Putnam Muskingum Co. Ohio.
Itinerant Ministers and others, who collect from subscribers and remit to us as much as TEN DOLLARS within a year, shall receive a copy of the paper free.
Itinerant ministers and preachers, not acting as agents, will have the paper at one dollar.
Clubs of ten or more, paying at the time of subscribing, shall have the paper for $1.5, i. e. one dollar fifty, each.

THEOLOGICAL.

Written for the Western Recorder.

GOD IS LOVE.

NO. IV.

BY DR. D. GIBBONS.

The religion of christianty is a religion of love: not only in word, and in truth, but eminently in successful action. The action of living, captivating love. One striking reason why religion does it more prominently, and effectually, prevail among mankind, is, that there is not more of an active life-exhibition, of the love of it. It cannot be reasonably expected that men will feel much to devoting themselves to the services of religion, in a religious community, unless they feel a strong conviction, that professors of religion give effectual exhibition, of the deep reality of religion in them, by the strongest evidences of it, in their general conduct. It may be, and no doubt it is, quite different from this in regions where christianity has not been disseminated. In these regions they listen with profound interest, to the glowing truths, and sublime precepts of religion, as detailed by its ministers. But this is not our subject, and of course we freely pass it by, as we live on a christian land. There is, and there has been, a great deal said of the evil of infidelity, and how this infidelity operates against the onward march of christianity through the world. For my part I am not inclined to believe that, even the poisonous infidelity, referred to, does so very much mischief, out of its own appropriate neighborhood. It unquestionably does immense injury to its own advocates and supporters, in the ranks of this infatuated infidelity.—And occasionally it leads a few ambitious spirits astray, who are strongly biased that way. But this is small, compared to the effects of another species of infidelity. It is the infidelity, the hypocrisy, the lukewarmness, the deceitful slandering, and the divisions in the church membership, that operate tenfold more against the christian religion, than open bold infidelity, in all its open and secret schemes, and mighty efforts can ever accomplish. When men show by the whole tenor and temper of their lives the religion of Christ, infidelity with all its boasted might, and talent, is not able to gainsay or resist it. The only effectual argument, infidelity has ever wielded against religion to apparent advantage, is the infidelity in the church. It is this, as a weapon, that infidelity has so boldly, and apparently so successfully, hurled against the christian church. A striking illustration of this truth is seen in the causes leading to the French Revolution. Had it not been for the destruction of vital piety in the church, and that too by the church itself, the apparent destruction of the christian name would not have been one of the consequences, of the French Revolution. It was very easy to remove the name after the quality had fled. Long before the Houses of worship were dedicated to the "Goddess of reason" the holy animating spirit of religion had taken its final leave. But more directly to the point we have in view. While the membership of the church adorn their profession by unwavering faith, glowing love to God and man, and good works, there is not the slightest danger of infidelity, doing any mischief whatever to such church. It is not the infidelity of the infidels, in particular that injures the church. The evils within the church do the church more harm than all the evils without are able to do it.

It has uniformly, been the fact, that when the church suffered blasting & spiritual mildew its true origin was found in the hidden infidelity lurking within the pales of the church.

Unsullied holiness, pure living love, displayed in good works, have a controlling influence upon all mankind, even infidels themselves being the judges. Faithfulness, constancy of devotion, and untarnished holiness, deep rooted love to God and man, persevered in, lead to the full and final obliteration of every kind of infidelity, in our world.

A firm conviction, by christians, of this sentiment, would lead to honorable motives, in the formation of permanent resolutions, to be carried out, by brilliant examples of piety and virtue, with the noble design, of exhibiting the superior excellence of the Bible's christianity. These resolutions, in perfectly honest action, would completely banish the kind of infidelity referred to from the christian church. Infidelity as before stated, has never been able, by all its supposed talents, and boasted ingenuity to raise one single argument, effectual, against the christian religion, but the argument founded on the infidelity in the church. And this in reality is as poor as their other arguments. It is, in effect, killing a dead man. After the church died by its own infidelity : while preceding the bursting forth of the French Revolution, then they desecrated the temples of religion, elevated their Goddess: and exultingly shouted, "we have killed christianity; lets bury her, and she will sleep in eternal repose." This was killing the dead man; killing before by his own hands. Religion is not and cannot be killed. It is a living power, marching forth through the world, in its own native majesty and lovliness. Some of its firm and unflinching, as well as its nominal, votaries may sometimes physically suffer. But religion, by the hardest, and the severest tests, will only prove the firmer and the brighter.

PLANK ROADS IN CANADA.—The Editor of the Poughkeepsie Journal writes to his paper thus:

"A ride on these roads is so delightful that we took care to improve all the time we could spare to that business. They are almost as smooth as a floor, very straight and nearly level, so that farmers can transport on them almost as heavy a load as they choose, without difficulty."

Over six hundred of the Chase family, heirs of the great Townley estate, assembled at Newbury, Mass., on Friday week. Descendents were present from Missouri, from Canada, from Maine, New Hampshire, and various parts of Massachusetts.

Western Sketches.

Written for the Western Recorder.

REMINISCENCES

OF THE FIRST SETTLEMENT OF OHIO.

NO. II.

MR. EDITOR: In my last communication I mentioned the arrival of the first boat load of families at Marietta; consisting of General Tupper's, Ichabod Nye's Col. Cushing's, Major Coburn's, and Major Goodale's. As my father had been anxiously waiting for the boat, on its arrival he took his family immediately up to the stockade, as the fort was the sometimes called, and of consequence we were the first family that lodged there. The next day the other families found shelter there.—Gen. Tupper, with Mr. Secretary Sargeant, his house not being ready, as there were no chimneys up, they cooked out of doors, against the stumps. Immediate measures were taken to make the houses tenantable, and soon Gen. Tupper moved into his own house, with Col. Cushing, who had helped him to get it in order. My father assisted Esq. Lord in putting up his chimney, and when the weather became too cool to cook out of doors, and the family below him moved their fire into the house, where the place for a chimney was left, the smoke drove them from the chamber above, when he removed into Lord's house. In this house my recollection has the first distinct object; that of seeing a party of Indians in the lower room, amongst whom was a female with a Poppouse (child) tied to a piece of bark, set up against the wall of the house. This must have been late in the winter, for I recollect the sun shone pleasantly, and the door was left open. They had put me up stairs, (which was a ladder) and I had to lay down to see under the floor. The Indians were friendly, and brought in meat to sell, as well as skins for moccasins, &c. In the fall many other families arrived, and provisions became scarce; as the stock which had been provided by the Ohio Company, was exhausted. They sent Major Tyler up to the Youghegeny river with the boat for flour, but it took him so long to push it up, that the river froze up, and he did not get back until the next March. During the winter the settlers were suffering for bread; two hand-mills being the only means of manufacturing the little corn they had, into bread-stuff. In the mean time another settlement had been made on the Ohio, called the Point. Here the defences were not regular, but block-houses were erected at the different angles of the plot, covered by dwellings; which occupied much more ground than Campus Martius, which afterwards was called the Stockade; distinguishing the three different places thus;—the Stockade, the Point, and Fort Hamer. By these names I shall hereafter call them. The boat returned in March, and the sufferings of the people for this time were relieved.

In the spring of 1789, settlements were pushed out, to Belpre, Waterford, and Duck Creek; where they began to clear and plant the land, build houses, and stockades. At Waterford, amongst the first who received their donation lots, and settled there, were, Benjamin Converse, Gilbert Devol, Sen., Phineas Coburn, Wm. Gray, Col. Robert Olliver, Major Hatfield White, Andrew Story, Samuel Cushing, John Dodge, Allen Devol, Geo., Wm., & David Wilson, Joshua Sprague, with his sons William and Jonathan, Capt. D. Davis, Gideon Devol, Phineas Coburn, Andrew Webster, Eben Ayres, Doctor Farley, David Brown, a Mr. Kelley, (afterward killed at Belville,) James Converse, and our present citizen Daniel Converse, to whom I am indebted for this list, (and who was afterwards taken prisoners by the Indians.)

At Belpre there were three stockades, called upper, middle, and lower; the middle was also called Farmer's Castle. Amongst those at the upper, was Capt. Dana, Capt. Stone, Col. Bent, Wm. Browning, Judge Foster, John Rouse, Mr. Keeppel, Israel Stone. At the middle stockade, or Farmer's Castle, Col. Cushing, Maj. Haskel, Aaron Waldow Putnam, Col. Fisher, Mr. Sparowhawk; and, I believe, Israel Putnam, Jun., and George Putnam. At the lower, Major Goodale, Col. Rice, Esq. Pierce, Judge Israel Loring, Deacon Miles, Major Bradford, and Mr. Goodnow. Every exertion possible for men in their circumstances, was made to secure food and prepare for future difficulties. Colonel Oliver, Major White, and John Dodge, of the Waterford settlement, began Mills on Wolf Creek, about three miles from the fort, and got them running; and these were never destroyed during the subsequent Indian war, though the proprietors removed their families to the fort at Marietta. Colonel E. Sproat and Enoch Shephard began mills on Duck Creek, three miles from Marietta;—from the completion of which they were driven by the Indian war. Thomas Stanley began mills higher up, near the Duck Creek settlement; these were likewise unfinished. The Ohio Company built a large horse mill near Campus Martius, and soon after, a floating mill. In April, Ichabod Nye and Thomas Lord explored the lands below Belpre, now called Newberry, and determined to make up a company, to secure their donation land there. During the summer they made up the company, and located their donation lots, and in September, Ichabod Nye, with some others, went down and built a block-house, &c. Ichabod Nye sold his lot to Aaron Clough, who, with Stephen Guthrie, Truman Guthrie, Joseph Leavins, Joel Oaks, Eleazer Curtis, Mr. Dunham, J. Littleton, and a Mr. Brown, were located there during the subsequent war. These names I mostly received from our neighbor, J. C. Guthrie, who, with his brothers, are children of Stephen Guthrie. I do not pretend to enumerate all who were Pioneers in these settlements, but such as occur to me now.

Amongst those who earliest built on the upper Point, were, Dr. True, Joseph Lincoln, Dudley Woodbridge, Captain Prince, Esq. Munroe, Col. Stacey, Capt. Mills, Wm. Burnham, and others; and Mr. Buell and Munson put up the first frame tavern. I also recollect, as a very early settler there, Mr. Therie, a Frenchman. When these settlements were made, the three military companies which were organized the fall previous, were disorganized by the removal of Capt. Cushing and Goodale, who had commanded two of them, and a new organization took place. Col. Ebenezer Sproat was appointed to command all the Militia of Washington county, which included about one-third, or half, the present State of Ohio. Indeed, I believe there was then only Hamilton county, besides. Captain Mills was appointed to command the Infantry company. Ichabod Nye and John Russel were declared Sergeants on grand parade; Senior company, Capt. Kroll or Throll. In this company R. J. Meigs, Jun., was appointed Ensign,—his first military office. (He was afterwards Governor of the State of Ohio.) The Sergeants were frequently shifted.

The Artillery, Captain Prince and Lieutenant Ingersol retained their commands. Gold and Mason, Sergeants. Anselm Tupper acted as town Major, for the Stockade. Major Stanley was one of the Sergeants of the Infantry. The first Anniversary was celebrated at the Stockade, on the 7th of April,—an oration by Dr. Drown, and a ball in the evening by Wm. Burnham, in his log cabin, on the Point. Gen. Parsons, one of the judges and agents, had, the fall before, gone to what is now called the Reserve, to look at lands he owned there. On his return, he came down the Big Beaver river in a canoe, with several men. At the Falls, he, with one hand, attempted to run them, and both were drowned. I believe Gen. Rufus Putnam, afterwards was appointed in his place,—at all events, he was one of the territorial judges. His family did not come out, I think, until 1790, or 1791, and he was part of the time in Massachusetts. This season every one seemed to exert himself to forward the prosperity of the colony. The forest was cleared away, and the ground planted. Each one seemed determined to secure the means of subsistence. Most of the settlers were poor, and many of them had served their country in the revolutionary war, either as officers or soldiers, and had nothing but their wild lands in the shape of property. "Work or starve," seemed the only alternative. A few could hunt, but this yielded a precarious living. Our first blacksmith, Gilbert Devol, Jun., was peculiarly qualified for hunting or fishing; and with his canoe and gig, in clear water, seldom ever let a fish escape his pursuit: or with his gun a Deer or Bear. It will be observed that a large portion of those named had Military titles. This arises from the fact that they were officers in the revolutionary war. This season much of the corn was cut off by frost, west of the Allegany mountains, and corn rose to $1,75 per bushel, and many suffered in consequence. Several fields were cleared, from one to three miles from the fort, which were abandoned during the war, and grew up to bushes. I remember several such. Tupper's on the Muskingum, about three miles; Lord's on the hills, one and a half miles; Russell's, about two; Varnum's, three. The first child born in the settlement, was said to be St. Clair Kelley; the second, Grovner Converse.—Schools were established as soon as there were those to be educated, and a room in one of the block-houses was fitted up for that purpose, and for public worship. The surveying of the lands of the Company was being made in different directions. During this season the first settlement began at Cincinnati. In my next number I may give some incidents of the Indian war.

HORACE NYE.

Putnam, O. Feb. 1847.

SCIENTIFIC.

MINUTENESS OF ANIMAL LIFE.—Take any drop of water from the stagnant pools around us, from our rivers, from our lakes, or from the vast ocean itself, and place it under your microscope; you will find therein countless living beings, moving in all directions with considerable swiftness, apparently gifted with sagacity, for they readily elude each other in the active dance they keep up; and since they never come in rude contact, obviously exercise volition and sensation in guiding their movements. Increase the power of your glasses, and you will soon perceive, inhabiting the same drop, other animals, compared to which the former were elephantine in their dimensions, equally vivacious and equally gifted. Exhaust the art of the optician, strain your eyes to the utmost, until the aching sense refuses to perceive the little quivering movement that indicates the presence of life, and you will find that you have not exhausted nature in the descending scale. Perfect as our optical instruments now are, we need not be long in convincing ourselves that there are animals around us so small that in all probability human perseverance will fail in enabling us accurately to detect their forms, much less, fully to understand their organization! Vain, indeed, would it be to attempt by words to give anything like a definite notion of the minuteness of some of these multitudinous races. Let me ask the reader to divide an inch into 22,000 parts, and appreciate mentally the value of each division: having done so, and not till then, shall we have a standard sufficiently minute to enable us to measure microscopic beings. Neither is it easy to give the student of nature, who has not accurately investigated the subject for himself, adequate conceptions relative to the numbers in which the infusoria sometimes crowd the waters they frequent; but let him take his microscope, and the means of making a rough estimate at least are easily at his disposal. He will soon perceive that the animalcule inhabitants of a drop of putrid water, possessing, as many of them do, dimensions not larger than the 12000th part of a line, swim so close together, that the intervals separating them are not greater than their own bodies. The matter, therefore, becomes a question for arithmetic to solve, and we will pause to make the calculation. The Monas Termo for example—a creature that might be pardonably regarded as an embodiment of the mathematical point, almost literally without either length, or breadth, or thickness—has been calculated to measure about the 22,000th part of an inch in its transverse diameter; and in water takes from the surface of many putrid infusions, they are crowded as closely as we have stated above. We may therefore safely say, that swimming at ordinary distances apart, 10,000 of them would be contained in a linear space one inch in length, and consequently a cubic inch of such water will thus contain more living and active organized beings than there are human inhabitants upon the whole surface of the globe.

COAL IN ILLINOIS.

Mr. Lyell, the geologist, says the State of Illinois contains more coal than all Europe. The authority is certainly as good as any on such a subject, for Mr. Lyell is a very enlightened geologist, and geology furnishes the means of ascertaining the constitution of any region. And whoever will examine the valley of the Mississippi with a geological eye, will say that it ought to contain coal in large quantities, and that the portion bounded by the Lakes, the Mississippi and the Ohio ought to be especially fertile in that geological production. The whole State of Illinois must have been covered by the sea of which Lake Michigan is a remnant, and therefore must have received part of the forests torn by floods from the uplands. As the Lake gradually receed, Illinois must have been left a marsh, subject to periodical inundations from the Lake, the Mississippi and Ohio; and as such it would receive the forest brought down the Lake by these rivers, in these inundations. As the ocean is older than the lakes, so the great rivers must be older than the small; and therefore we take for granted that in the subsidence of waters from the great valley of the Mississippi, that river and the Ohio were the first perennial drains. As the waters continued to subside, and inequalities in the surface of the valley augmented, whether from drifts, deposits, or any other causes, the Wabash and Illinois became perennial drains; and thus the region of Illinois became bounded by one great reservoir, Lake Michigan, and three great drains, the Wabash, Ohio and Mississippi, with two other great drains, the Kaskaskia and Illinois, in the middle. All these continuing to rise and fall periodically, would convey and deposit on the adjoining regions large quantities of drift wood. And as ridges continued to rise between any two of these rivers, they would produce vegetation, which would be swept away by the periodical floods, and be deposited in the low lands by the tributary rivers, or carried by them to the great rivers, to be so deposited in their inundations. And after this periodical destruction of forests had ceased, the periodical inundations of all the streams, great and small, would overlay these ligneous deposits with earth, and thus produce the present region of Illinois, an alluvial soil deposited upon coal beds, and washed by great rivers. All the elements of carbonic formation have been applied to Illinois; and if such formation be not the result, then that region is an extraordinary exception from the operation of geological laws.—Dol. Newspaper.

BIBLE CAUSE.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Annual Report, Muskingum Bible Society.

Your Committee, respectfully beg leave to submit the following report, of their labors since the last meeting, and the present state of the society.—

The last general meeting of this society was held on Feb. 27, 1843, at the old Methodist Church,—since that time the work of distribution has been gradually going forward.—That work has been better done than formerly, Colporteurs having been employed generally, instead of relying upon benevolent individuals in the different townships.—15 townships have been visited, and Bibles donated or sold to their residents—some of these townships were thoroughly examined, and the destitute supplied. The remainder were only partially examined. The following is a list of those visited, so far far as they have reported, viz. Hopewell Tp. where 38 bibles were disposed of.

Bluerock	19		Harrison	24
Perry	27		Washington	49
Brushcreek	1		Newton	45
Highland	6		Adams	11
Zanesville	17	&	Jackson	20
Salem	8		Licking	42
Union	9		Falls	52

The last report stated 138 Bibles on hand. Since that time 312 more have been added making 450, there are now in the Depository 13 Bibles showing 437 to have been disposed of by sale, donations and memberships. 874 Bibles have been sold and donated by this society since its formation in 1842. As a specimen of the way in which the work is done, we give a few extracts from the agents, reports. Mr. Ward says, "I first visited Union Townwhip, on arriving at Norwick, I was strongly solicited to form an auxiliary to the Musk. County Bible Society, which I consented to do the next week. The day of meeting was rainy, and few present, but a constitution was adopted, officers elected, executive committee appointed, which agreed to explore the Township, and supply it, all seemed to take an interest in the cause. I explored townships as shown by the follwing exhibit.—

Townships Vis.	Families visited	Destitute	Bibles given	Bibles sold	sold to be paid for	Cost	Amt. received
Union	59	4	3	—	—	1 05
Perry	30	2	—	—	1	35
Washington	20	2	1	—	—	35
Harrison	200	50	7	8	8	8,45	3,00
Hopewell	250	24	8	20	10	13,30	8,94
Bluerock	49	8	3	3	2	2,80	1,44
Falls	12	1	1	—	—	35
Brushcreek	6	1	—	1	—	35	50
	608	92	23	32	21	26,60	13,88

Donations $,148 expenses 72.

"Those which were sold to be paid for, were sold to persons who wished to buy, had not the means to pay, and I had either to sell in this way, to give, or leave destitute, the last would not do, and if I gave, the society would get nothing and by selling in this way, we might get something.

Though I do not expect they will pay all, for some were very poor, but exceedingly anxious to possess a bible.

"The following anecdote will illustrate it.

A man destitute, told me he had no money & nothing that would fetch money; but he wanted a bible. He proposed several kinds of trade, and at last proposed giving another book for a Bible, offered any one he had, (and he had several.) He gave me a new looking one, which cost him 1 12, and seemed much pleased with his trade. The Book is now in the depository. Another gave his note for stone ware. A third had a fee due from the sheriff, and gave me an order for it. Mostly I found distributing very pleasant, wherever I went, I was treated with the utmost kindness, even by non-professors and the profane, I do not recollect of but one instance of profane language being used, after my business was known. That instance was, the swearing of a man to the goodness of his wife.

"One person destitute of the bible refused to take one, saying it was useless, he being one of the best men in the township, as good as any body need be. I proposed giving one to his wife, but this was refused, for the same reason, he swearing that she was the best wife in the township, and anything to make her better was useless. Another person (a miserly fellow) who had hundreds of dollars at interest, refused to buy one though entirely destitute.

"In Licking I left but one family unsupplied. The man owned two farms well stocked, was ploughing with a team worth $150, but would not purchase, though offered three months to pay in. The wife appeared to posses about as much interest as he did.

"Some two or three years since, an effort was made to form a sort of Township Bible Society in Licking Township, and two individuals took a list of those who wished to have bibles, and received the money to purchase them. For some reason they were not bought, one man refunded the money he had received, while the other moved to Illinois, taking his collections with him. This made a very bad impression on the minds of many toward the society. Some time last Spring, a man pretending to be an agent of this society, passed through Adams Township, soliciting names of those who wished to buy a bible. He proved to be a most abandoned character, left in haste, and had better never be seen there again. Wolves will sometimes appear in sheep's clothing. But I will turn to scenes and incidents of a pleasanter kind. "A man and wife, both very aged, dwelt in a log cabin, every thing in it was not worth $5, They were destitute of a bible, and far from any church. They had the precious volume once, but when their son left, they gave it to him, and had not been able since to buy one, I said, I had brought them one, at which they appeared overjoyed. The old lady got her specks, and began to read with as much delight, as one would examine a document conveying an immense fortune to him. They seemed to forget their poverty, and when I left followed me to the yard and with eyes streaming with tears, invoked the blessing of God on the society and its agent." * * *

Thus you see many families destitute of the precious word of God have been supplied, who no doubt would have passed down the stream of life, and droped into the ocean of eternity, without a knowledge of the glorious truths contained in the book, had not your agent carried it to their door.

Many a heart sick and faint has been made to rejoice by a perusal of that holy word of God, sent them by you.

The work however is not finished, many are yet destitute of the words of eternal life. All of the townships are not yet supplied, or even thoroughly examined.

Families have moved into those which were once supplied, and new families have been formed, causing a re-examination to be necessary. We need a new supply of Bibles. In order to have the work done thoroughly; it is necessary to employ agents, and they are had at a very trifling expense.

One part of the design of this society has never been carried into operation, viz. supplying each destitute child under 15 years of age, with a copy of the new testament, sell it to them when they will buy, or if not able, give it to them. May not much good, yea more, be done toward the spread of true religion, and the best welfare of our country, than by the distribution of one Bible to each family.

Shall it be said that Muskingum County, containing a population of more than 40,000 souls, and possessing $800,000 of taxable property is unable to supply each destitute family with the pure word of God.

The Depositors account is as follows:

Received for Bibles sold by himself and agents	125,52
Sundry expenses 38,79 sent parent Soc. $75	113,79
Balance in Depositors hand	11,73

All of which is respectfully submitted by your committee.

B. H. BUCKINGHAM, Sec.

Putnam, Jan. 1847

MISSIONARY INTELLIGENCE.

From the Missionary Herald.

CONSTANTINOPLE.—Under the date of November 7, Mr. Dwight says, "The churches here are now enjoying peace, and we pray that numbers may be added to them of such as shall be saved. Three or four Catholic Armenian vartabeds in this city are on the point of leaving their church and coming over to the Protestants, one of them has actually come.—He was yesterday for the first time, at the public preaching service in my house; and was a serious and attentive listener."

NESTORIANS.—In the month of August Messrs. Stocking and Stoddard made another excursion to Gawar, a mountain district in Koordistan about seventy-five miles from Oroomiah. At the first village where they stopped in Gawar, they found a stranger from Jeloo, who "appeared to have a knowledge of himself as a lost sinner, and to have renounced all righteousness of his own, and to be clinging to Christ as his only hope." As they approached the village of deacon Tame, they were met by nearly all the male population of the place, who eagerly seized their hands and bade them a cordial welcome. The message of the missionaries was listened to with eager delight, and the change in the external aspect of the inhabitants was found to be very remarkable. "Nine or ten are considered as giving decided evidence of regeneration." Our brethren returned to Oroomiah, after an absence of eight days, "impressed with the conviction that the Lord had commenced a work of grace" in the region which they had visited.

Mr. Stocking subsequently spent a few days at Geog Tapa. The fruits of the revival which has been in progress there, as heretofore mentioned, are very obvious and gratifying. "The moral and religious aspect of that village," says Mr. Stocking, "appears to have totally changed from what it was a year ago. The Sabbath has a stillness and quiet which strongly reminds one of a New England village." "About seventy, including those who are connected with the two seminaries, furnish decided evidence of regeneration, and exert a happy Christian influence over the whole place."

BOMBAY.—The mission at Bombay held missionary meetings on Thursday, September 10, being the third day of the last annual meeting of the Board. The native Christians seemed to be much interested in the exercise designed for them.

AHMEDUGGUR.—Messrs. Fairbank and Wilder, with their wives, arrived at Bombay, September 20. Mr. Fairbank writes, September 25, "We have been much pleased with the evident sympathy and co-operation of the various sects of Christians and societies, and with the cordiality manifested in welcoming the new comers. Those who hold the highest offices of the government, interest themselves deeply in whatever pertains to the evangelization of the Hindoos; and they have received us with many wishes for our success, and in various ways have favored us. It is surely a cause of thankfulness, that the disposition of this government towards American missionaries has undergone such a revolution, and that the natives can see among the rich and the rulers of the land examples of Christian humility, devotedness and zeal.

MADRAS.—A letter from Mr. Winslow, dated October 10, mentions the baptism of a young man who was brought up a Raman Catholic. Another young man, about to be admitted to the church, had been seized by a mob and carried away. The exertions of the missionaries to effect his restoration, had proved unavailing. A lad in the English school, having exhibited an inquiring spirit of late, was driven from the mission by two of his older brothers. He was immediately put in irons, and confined in a dark room; and subsequently he was taken to a place which is about thirty miles from Madras. The enemies of Christianity in that important city appear to be unusually active. They lately held a mass meeting, attended by some eight thousand persons; and a proposition was made to assemble a general convocation of the people, which Mr. Winslow thinks would have been little else than "a monster mob." It was at length agreed, however to hold a regular meeting, under the direction of the sheriff. Resolutions were passed, asserting that the government had violated its pledge of neutrality in respect to religion, by encouraging missionaries in the attempts to convert the natives, and by favoring Christians in their courts.

MADURA.—From a letter of Mr. Lawrence, dated August 27, it appears that seven persons had been lately received into the church at Dindgul. In January, 1846, fifteen were admitted to the same privilege. At an out station, also, five had been received into church fellowship, though no opportunity of administering the Lord's Supper to them had occurred.

CHEROKEES.—One of the principal hinderances to missionary success among the Cherokees, for some time past, has grown out of their dissensions. Last winter a treaty was made at Washington, in accordance with a basis proposed by commissioners appointed to inquire into the rival clams of the different parties; and there is good reason to believe that harmony will be restored. Mr. Worcester says, November 13, "A general convention of the people met this week to hear the new treaty. The people of all parties, so far as I can learn, acquiesce in the treaty, as the best thing which can be done. Only a few of 'the old settler party,' I understand, express some dissatisfaction with their own delegation. But a counsel of that party is soon to be held; which, it is hoped, will remove dissatisfaction; and if not, I suppose it is not likely to affect materially the general tranquillity.

Sabbath School Department.

From the Sunday School Journal.

THE PEN OF IRON.

When Bishop Latimer was on trial, he at first answered very freely. But presently he heard the pen going behind the tapestry, which was taking down his words. Then he was very careful what he said.

There is an all-recording pen behind the curtain of the skies, taking down our words and acts for judgment.

It is a pen of iron. "The sin of Judah is written with a pen of iron, and the point of a diamond." It graves deep its record on the imperishable tablets of eternity—a record of every thought, and word, and act. How ought we to live, since we can almost hear the all-recording pen going every hour, since we know that every day we are filling a page in the books that shall be opened at the judgment, and the record is imperishable as eternity.

A rich landlord in England once performed an act of tyrannical injustice to a widowed tenant. The widow's son, who saw it, became a painter, and years after succeeded in placing a painting of that scene where their oppressor saw it. As his eye fell on the picture, the rich man turned pale and trembled, and offered any sum to purchase it, that he might put it out of sight. If every scene of wickedness through which a man passes, should be painted, and the paintings hung up about him, so that he would always see the portrait of himself with the evil passions expressed on his countenance, and himself in the very act of wickedness, he would be wretched. Such a picture-gallery there is; and in eternity the unpardoned sinner will dwell in it: for every feature and lineament of the soul, in every feeling and act of wickedness, is portrayed imperishably, and will be exhibited to the gaze of the universe for ever.

By the discoveries of modern science, the rays of the sun are made to form the exact portrait of him on whom they shine. We are all living in the sun-light of eternity, which is transferring to plates more enduring than brass the exact portrait of the soul in every successive act, with all its attendant circumstances.

Interesting to the antiquarian is the moment when he drags out from the sands of Egypt some obelisk on which the "pen of iron, and the point of a diamond" have graven the portraits, the attitudes, the dress, and the pursuits of men who lived and died 3000 years ago. But none can describe the interest of that moment when from the silence of eternity shall be brought out tablets thick-set with the sculptured history of a sinful soul, and men and angels, with the sinner himself, shall gaze appalled on the faithful portraiture of a life of sin. Remember, then, unpardoned transgressor! you must meet the record of your sin in eternity.

SABBATH SCHOOL INCIDENT.—We cannot give our readers a more interesting theme for Sabbath meditation, than that suggested by the following beautiful incident illustrative of the utility and importance of Sabbath-schools, both of a civil and moral point of view. While one of the trials was progressing before the present term of the Common Pleas, in this town, a little girl was called, among other witnesses, by the district attorney, on the part of the Commonwealth. When placed on the stand, her extreme youth induced the counsel for the defence to question her competency to testify; upon which the following questions and answers occured between the parties:—

Counsel. How old are you?
Witness. Nine, sir.
C. What did you come here for?
W. To tell my story.
C. Have you taken an oath?
W. Yes, sir.
C. For what?
W. To tell the truth.
C. What is the consequence of not telling the truth under oath?
W. I shall be punished hereafter.
C. Who taught you that?
W. I learnt it in the Sabbath-school.

At this point the Court interposed; said that was sufficient, and directed that the examination on the part of the government should proceed.

During the examination both by the district attorney and counsel for the defense, the little girl acquitted herself with much credit for one of such tender years.

An incident of this character needs no comment. It imparts a lesson worthy of serious and solemn reflection, and one that should be treasured up by every child whether in or out of the Sabbath-school.

Religious Intelligence.

PITTSBURGH DISTRICT.

Greenbrier Ct. Va. Jan. 27, 1847.

Br. Bassett: In compliance with the discipline of our church, permit me to say through the Western Recorder to our much esteemed President, (G. Brown) and all who feel interested in hearing of the out pouring of the Holy Spirit upon Zion in the conversion of sinners in this part of God's vineyard. On the 9th of Oct. we commenced holding a camp meeting, including our first quarterly meeting for this year, which lasted 5 days. Four miles from and South of Frankfort, Greenbrier Co. Va. At this effort we expected several of our ministerial brethren from other circuits, but all from some cause or other failed to come. But in the help of the Lord we commenced operations against the mighty, although a dark and chilling cloud of discouragement appeared to hang over us. Nevertheless christians entered earnestly into the spirit of the meeting from its comencement. They began to view the rich promises of the Gospel through the telescope of faith the influence of the spirit began to blow the slumbering embers of love in the breasts of the lukewarm to a flame, the gentle beams of the sun of righteousness gave healing to the backslider. So that singing, praying and preaching became easy because when the Holy Spirit helps, the work is easily done. As the meeting progressed, it grew in interest until its close. As near as I could ascertain, fifteen souls were converted, and ten added to the M. P. Church on probation. The church much revived. The sons and daughters of Zion shouted for joy, her light being come.

Our second quarterly meeting for this circuit was held on Anthony's Creek at Br. E. Mays, the ninth and tenth of Jan. Here Br. H. Lucas came to my aid and preached two sermons which had a salutary impression upon the people. One sister from the E. P. Church, joined at this meeting, and her daughter on the following Saturday the 16th. I commenced a protracted meeting in the Organ Cove, which lasted three days. Considering every thing, this was one of the best meetings I ever attended. We have a small society in this place, surrounded by five other religious denominations and besieged by Satan. After preaching Sunday evening the mourner's bench being prepared and mourners called to come forward. Several ventured, kneeled down before God as seekers of religion, and blessed be the good Lord, before some of them arose their souls were happified in God. On Monday night at our love feast we had a strengthening, consoling, and a refreshing time. Several of the members of the E. P. C. were with us. We were all of one mind and were all edified. How condescending is God to permit hell-deserving rebels as we are to commune with him so sweetly. What on earth can equal the love of Jehovah. After love feast I closed the meeting. Several souls were converted. Twelve joined the M. P. Church at this meeting. Some that were converted did not join. Among those that did, were men of influence who will give stability to the church in this place if they prove faithful. Twenty-four have joined the M. P. C. on this circuit during my labors this year. We have some worthy members on this little circuit, if all on the circuit were like them, in a few years this Ct. would be one of the best frontier appointments in the Pitts. District. Then would our ministry be respected and supported. Then, how would the church flourish, and the world awaken in this part of the work. Pray for us that grace and peace, love and thankful joy may ever attend us, is the wish of your brother and friend in Christ,

G. Nestor.

Fairmont, Va. Feb. 7, 1847.

Br. Bassett: After writing a few lines on business I would say a word in reference to the condition of Fairmont circuit. We have had no special revival of religion and but few accessions this year; but we are still laboring and praying for a gracious outpouring of the Spirit. And we are looking for a gracious revival of the work of the Lord among us, notwithstanding the love of some of the membership have waxed cold. Yet I must say we have a permanent membership. Many who are as pillars in the church, and whose prayers to God continually are, O Lord revive thy work. We have peace generally throughout our borders. May the good Lord send us prosperity.

D. R. Helmick, Supt.

OHIO DISTRICT.

Springfield, O, Feb. 9, 1847.

Br. Bassett: I will for the information of the brethren, just state through the Recorder, that I have visited Clarksville, Washington, Port William, and Union circuits, and continued our exercises from two to six days. We have cause to praise the good Lord that our labor was not in vain. The members at each place, were generally much revived and some few sinners were converted and added to the church. I have also labored with Br. Stephens on this Springfield Ct. at Clifton, Pleasant Hill, and in the town. At Catawba, Union Ct. we commenced on Friday, Christmas evening, Br. Moore's first Qr. meeting. Br. Smith and I continued the meeting until New Year, Br. Moore the Supt. having to leave on Tuesday morning. The members were made to rejoice and shout Glory to God in the highest, and three sinners professed to find peace with God, and four joined the church.

Yours in the old bonds,

A. M'Guire, Con. Miss.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The Steamship Sarah Sands, which left Liverpool on the 20th ult., arrived at N. York on the 10th inst. We take the following abstract of the foreign news by this arrival, from the N. Y. Daily Sun. It will be seen that the first, and principal thing spoken of by the Queen in her speech is the distressed state of Ireland.

The new measures proposed by the government are of the utmost importance. The ports are to be immediately opened for free admission of foreign corn of every kind by which the duty of four shillings sterling will be abolished.—The navigation laws are to be suspended, by which corn will be admitted in vessels of every nation; and the use of sugar as a substitute for grain is to be allowed in distilleries. These measures will be carried, as the protectionists have promised to give them their support. They have been forced from the government by the awful condition of the people of Ireland.

The appalling accounts of the misery among the Irish will be read with the most painful interest. A private subscription was recently opened in London for the Irish, and fifty thousand pounds were subscribed in ten days.

Food of every kind is scarce and dear in England, Ireland and France, notwithstanding the immense quantities shipped from the United States.

The corn and provision markets in Ireland and England are exceedingly animated, and prices are still kept up at the extreme rate quoted by previous arrivals.

The European Times says, however, that "The whole of the available British navy will be occupied in bringing food from every quarter of the world where it can be had, to arrest the starvation of which Ireland is the scene. "The promptitude with which the government is determined to act in this matter is already making itself felt on the food markets.

The Sirius steamer was lost on the Irish coast on the 15th ult. Twelve of the crew passengers were drowned in attempting to get on shore. The Sirius was the first British steamer that ever crossed the Atlantic to America.

H. M. steamship Sphynx, of 1,056 tons, and 500 horse power, was totally lost on the 15th ult., on a reef of rocks near the Isle of Wight.

Joseph John Gurney, who has been so long before the world in the character of a philanthropist, died at Norwich on Monday, 4th January.

It is discovered that the city of London has been sinking gradually for some years. The water in the Thames is rising in the same ratio.

Opening of Parliament.

House of Lords.—Tuesday, Jan. 19.—The opening of Parliament by the Queen in person, induced large numbers of persons to assemble in the vicinity of the House of Parliament, St. James's Palace, and along the route of the royal procession a more than ordinary interest being manifested on the occasion, from the many important questions about to occupy the attention of the Legislature. Her Majesty arrived at the House of Lords, accompanied by the Duchess of Sutherland and various officers of State, about two o'clock. The following is The Queen's Speech.

"My Lords and Gentlemen:

"It is with the deepest concern, that upon your again assembling, I have to call your attention to the dearth of provisions which prevails in Ireland, and in parts of Scotland.

"In Ireland, especially, the loss of the usual food of the people has been the cause of severe sufferings, of disease, and of greatly increased mortality among the poorer classes. Outrages have been more frequent, chiefly directed against property; and the transit of provisions has been rendered unsafe in some parts of the country.

"With a view to mitigate these evils, very large numbers of men have been employed and have received wages in pursuance of an Act passed in the last Session of Parliament. Some deviations from that Act, which have been authorized by the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, in order to promote more useful employment, will, I trust, receive your sanction. Means have been taken to lessen the pressure of want in districts which are most remote from the ordinary sources of supply. Outrages have been repressed, as far as it was possible, by the military and police.

"It is satisfactory to me to observe, that in many of the most distressed districts, the patience and resignation of the people have been most exemplary.

"The deficiency of the harvest in France and Germany, and other parts of Europe, has added to the difficulty of obtaining adequate supplies of provisions.

"It will be your duty to consider what further measures will be required to alleviate the existing distress. I recommend to you to take into your serious consideration, whether by increasing for a limited period the facilties for importing corn from foreign countries, and by the admission of sugar more freely into breweries and distilleries, the supply of food may be beneficially augmented.

"I have likewise to direct your earnest consideration to the permanent condition of Ireland. You will perceive, in the absence of political excitement, an opportunity for taking dispassionate survey of the social evils which afflict that part of the United Kingdom. Various measures will be laid before you, which, if adopted by Parliament, may tend to raise the great mass of the people in comfort, to promote agriculture, and to lessen the pressure of that competition for the occupation of land which has been the fruitful source of crime and misery.

"The marriage of the Infanta Luisa Fernanda of Spain to the Duke of Montpensier, has given rise to a correspondence between my Government and those of France and Spain.

"The extinction of the Free State of Cracow has appeared to me to be so manifest a violation of the Treaty of Vienna, that I have commanded that a protest against that act should be delivered to the Courts of Vienna, Petersburgh, and Berlin, which were parties to it. Copies of these several papers will be laid before you.

"I entertain confident hopes that the hostilities in the River Plate, which have so long interrupted commerce, may soon be terminated, and my efforts, in conjunction with those of the King of the French, will be earnestly directed to that end.

"My relations generally with Foreigh Powers inspire me with the fullest confidence in the maintenance of peace.

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

"I have directed the Estimates to be prepared, with a view to provide for the efficiency of the public service, with a due regard for economy.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"I have ordered every requisite preparation to be made for putting into operation the Act of the last Session of Parliament, for the establishment of Local Courts for the Recovery of Small Debts. It is my hope that the enforcement of civil rights in all parts of the county to which the Act relates may, by this measure, be materially facilitated.

"I recommend to your attention measures which will be laid before you for improving the health of towns, an object the importance of which you will not fail to appreciate.

"Deeply sensible of the blessings which after a season of calamity have been so often vouchsafed to this nation by a superintending Providence, I confide these important matters to your care, in a full conviction that your discussions will be guided by an impartial spirit; and in the hope that the present sufferings of my people may be lightened, and that their future condition may be improved by your deliberate wisdom."

Ireland.—Outrages on the public works are rife. The public works have been suspended in the parish of Ruan, County Clare, in consequence of an attack having been made upon Mr. Harrington, the principal overseer.

The statements made with respect to the purchase of fire-arms are quite unfounded; the only trader who is engaged in the sale of these articles in the Skibbereen Union, comprising a population of nearly 100,000 persons, has of late sold but 15 guns and two pistols, which were disposed of to men in the highest ranks.

The condition of the country around Cork is most appalling, starvation being universal, deaths from want of food frequent, and fearfully on the increase, whilst despair has seized upon the public mind from the apparent indisposition of the government to exert itself for the preservation of the people.

The prices of food have now risen to a point which places it far beyond the reach even of those amongst the laboring classes who are employed, and this most unfortunate condition is mainly attributed to the obstinate refusal of the goverment to establish food depots throughout the country, and to the procuration of food from funds raised by private subscriptions and by its refusal to aid any funds applicable to the object of lowering the prices of food even to the poor and the destitute.

A Roman Catholic clergymen (the Rev. Mr. Begley,) at a recent meeting in Branty, said,—"When I call to my recollection the scenes that I have witnessed within the last six weeks—when I have seen those who were hale and strong struck down by famine and disease, the young and the old hurrying on to eternity, and that induced and brought on, I will say, by the unfortunate misgovernment of this country, by the want of paternal sympathy for the people, by not timely interfering and rescuing a generous, a noble, and a devoted people—when I see all those sacrificed—when I see that we are placed in this position, that even the men employed upon the roads, scanty as that labor is, cannot sustain themselves by their daily hire, even for one day, when I remember all this, I cannot but be deeply affected I have record of the facts, and I could give you the names of the individuals—I know men to be working two entre days upon the public roads without ever tasting a morsal of food (great sensation)—I know many of their families obliged to go to bed for two successive nights without tasting a morsel of food, and I know that, not many days since, Tim M'Carthy on the Strand, and his family, for 48 hours had not eaten a morsol of food, but, as they said themselves, they drank the cold, black water; and when some charitable hand reached some assistance, two of the children fainted on tasting the food.

Twenty-eight deaths—at least, 20 funerals, went to Kilnaconage within the last week and 20 more went to the Abbey, and out of that 48 I will say, and it is my firm conviction that thirty persons have died by the sliding scale of starvation.

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1847.

Herald of Truth.—This is the title of a Monthly Periodical recently commenced at Cincinnati. The February number has been sent us by the publishers. Really, we are gratified to see that we western folks are not to be dependent entirely upon the eastern cities for one monthly literature. And this new Monthly is to be a Herald of Truth, —not of fiction then, we suppose, like most of our eastern Monthlies. Surely, we should like the Herald, all the better for this. The Editor, L. A. Hine, Esq. sets forth that there are fifteen hundred serial publications in the country, nearly all of which are under the influence of sectarian or partisan interests. To supply a desideratum, the present publication is projected as a "Herald of Truth, on all subjects, without reference to the interest of any exclusive sect, Party or Society, or to popular considerations." It is to be devoted to the interest of Religion, Philosphy, Literature, Science and Art. The Editor proposes to review the new publications which are of substantial value, and canvass all questionable doctrines published. He promises also to engage vigorously in all the reforms of the day, which are founded in Truth. Let Mr. Hine this do, and he will render a useful service to community. We shall desire the privilege however to watch over him a while, till we get better acquainted, verily hoping that we shall not find that his Truth is Error sometimes. From an examination of the present number we find it to contains some valuable papers, and a number of things which please us, and have not thus far lighted upon anything to which we have to enter exceptions. Each number of the Herald contain 80 octavo pages. Two volumns of 480 pages each, per year. Terms $3,00 per annum. Two copies for $5,00. Five copies for $11,00. Published by a company.

The Bible Society and the Evangelical Alliance.—An Address proposed for the—State Bible Society, By Thomas H. Stockton. This is a neat pamphlet of 16 pages, 8vo. in which the writer declares his preference of the American Bible Society, to the Evangelical Alliance. We too would ardently cherish the Bible Society, and ever give it our earnest co-operation. But we have to regret that our esteemed brother has seen cause to discard the Evangelical Alliance. We have verily regarded its formation as one of the most important movements of the present age. We regretted that the author of the Address was not enabled to attend the London Convetion. Should not our brother co-operate with the Alliance in view of procuring a modification of its plans, where he deems them wrong? His chief objection to it is that whilst it professes for its chief object the cultivation of Christian Union, it has adopted a Creed, which necessarily rejects a number of sects which doubtless embrace many Christians. We regret with Br. Stockton that so unfortunate a circumstance should have been connected with this movement. And with him we rejoice that those who cannot at present be embraced in the Alliance, can be embodied in the Bible Society. But let our brother speak for himself. We give the following passage from the Address.

What, then, is the conclusion of the whole matter? I can speak only for myself. I, for one, fall back on the Bible Society. I proclaim and applaud it, as a Grand Evangelical Alliance, more genuine and trust worthy than that which has so recently and triumphantly assumed the name.

I prefer its Principles—The Bible and Private Judgment.

I prefer its Plan—"the circulation of the Scriptures, and the Scriptures alone, without note or comment."

I prefer its Assurance—that, "presenting nothing but the inspired volume, it will—circulate truth, and truth alone."

I prefer its Association—because it embraces persons "of all religious persuasion." Here is not only the contemplation, or even the cultivation, but, also, the consummation of Christian union. Here is action, at once vigorous and comprehensive, without necessity for the exclusion of a single Christian.

Finally, I prefer its Hope—the pious, humane, elevating hope, that, in addition to counteracting the influences of "ignorance, superstition, idolatry" and "infidelity," beyond the church it will, at the same time, within the church, "avoid the occasion of controversy"—"allay bitter disputes"—and, instead of perpetuating, "put an end to those unhappy divisions which have so long tarnished the credit of the Christian world."

☞Godey's Reprint, of London World of Fashion The February number of this work is received. It is neat and interesting as usual. L. A. Godey publisher, Philadelphia, $1, year.

Marietta Vessels.—We learn by the Marietta Intelligencer, that two schooners, the Ohio, and the Grace Darling, built last season by the Marietta Ship Company, left the port of that place on the 7th inst. for Cincinnati. Their cargo is there to be completed, and they then depart for Boston. Both these vessels are built of the best white oak, and are heavily iron fastened.

We are gratified to see that the Watchman of the Valley, Cincinnati, in expectation of the arrival of the Marietta vessels, is urging the citizens of that city and county to have in readiness a cargo of provisions for the Irish sufferers, in view of chartering one of the vessels for its transportation. What an errand of mercy that would be, for the first voyage of a Marietta vessel. But what a pity that our supplies for Ireland from Muskingum, have not pre-occupied those vessels.

Death of another Minister.—We learn by the Urbana Gazette, that the Rev. Thomas Palmer, Pastor of the Associate Reformed Church of that village, died on Monday last, (15th inst.) He was but about 26 years of age, but was, says the Gazette, a most estimable and useful citizen, and a brilliant ornament of the church.

Revivals in Colleges.—We have remarked that interesting revivals of religion have recently been experienced in various Institutions of learning. In Danville College, Ky. in South Hanover College, Ia. and Ohio University, Delaware, O. this has been the case. The last number of the Watchman of the Valley, gives information that a gracious revival has recently taken place in the Knox College, Ill. over which Rev. Mr. Blanchard formerly of Cincinnati now presides. From 40 to 50 profess to have experienced a saving change in the last named Institution.

Young People's Magazine.—We had verily thought that this interesting monthly had passed away, as we received no number for January. But we have just been surprised with the arrival at our desk of No. 2, for February. It is very prettily improved. Edited and published now by John L. Holmes, Nassau St. N. York, at the low price of $1 per year. This work ought to be patronized for the benefit of youth.

The Souvenir.—The third number of this little monthly is received. Published at our neighbor village of Roseville, O. by Brinkley & Taylor, at 50 cts. per year.

Ohio Statesman.—We are under obligations to Mr. Medary for his daily issues during the entire session of the Legislature. We have just received a new prospectus of the Statesman. Terms, Weekly, for a year $2,00. Tri-Weekly–4,00. Daily during the session of Legislature, and tri-weekly, balance of the year, 5,00 Address S. Medary, Columbus, O.

Zanesville Circuit.—We had the pleasure of spending last Sabbath at the Quarterly Meeting of this Circuit. It was held at Springfield Chapel. Brs. Marshall and Callihan seem somwhat encouraged in their labors. The lovefeast occasion, on Monday was a very interesting one. Four persons united with society, and we understand that the number was afterwards doubled.

Frozen to Death.—The body of a man named Robert Gorden, was found frozen to death a few miles south of this place on Thursday of last week. He was some 20 or more miles from home—had good property, and respectable standing, save that he was addicted to intemperance. This was the sad occasion of his death, according to the rendering of the Coroner's Jury.

Scott's Weekly Paper.—This publication, though heretofore very neat, has lately been enlarged and much improved in appearance. It is now amongst our finest and most interesting exchanges. It is a large size Family Newspaper, Neutral in Politics and Religion, devoted to Literature, Truth, Sciences, Health, Temperance, Morality, Mechanics, Education, Agriculture, Markets &c., Subscription price only $1 a year. Clubs of eight, can have it at 75 cents. A very fine paper is Scott's Weekly.

Columbian Fountain.—This paper also comes to us enlarged, and furnished with a new head. The Fountain has been chiefly devoted to the Temperance Cause, but now embraces general intelligence and other matters of general interest. We only regret that the conductors of the Fountain being ministers, are going to make their paper popular by consulting the popular taste, in publishing fictitious tales. Respectfully we must say, we had hoped better things of the Fountain; especially after reading some decided sentiments by its editor a few months ago, on the necessity of a reformation of the press. It is a way we have to speak candidly. We are friendly to the Fountain, and are pleased with it generally. Terms $1 per year. U. Ward Publisher, S. T. Ward Editor.

Ohio Penitentiary.—We see by the Annual Report of this Institution, a copy of which has been furnished us with many other favors by Gen. Goddard of the Senate, that the number of prisoners now in confinement is 498. Of these, 173 are from Hamilton County, 46 from Cuyahoga County. 333 were intemperate, 165 temperate. The Report of the Moral Instructor, Rev. J. B. Finley, is quite interesting, as are the other accompanying reports. Public worship is held every Sabbath. To this, great attention is paid by the prisoners. Prayer is attended to every morning at breakfast, and in the hospital when convenient. A Sabbath School is kept up, which is well attended.

Cincinnati Protestant.—This is now the name of the weekly paper, heretofore called the Anti-Papist. Rev. E. Goodman is now Editor and Publisher. In his hands the paper will do good. It is an interesting, useful sheet at $1 per year.

Rev. L. Garrett.—This aged minister writes us that he has lost his companion, and is living with his daughter in Yazoo City, Miss.

[☞We like the spirit of the following letter of a leading minister of the Wesleyan Methodist Connection, and bespeak a reading for it, by the several branches of Methodists named.

Ed. W. R.]

From the True Wesleyan.

Episcopals, Protestants and Wesleyans.

"READ AND YOU WILL KNOW."

Such was the language of the mother of Sir William Jones, in his boyhood when he would be asking questions on topics in which he felt an interest. And such advice is not applicable to children only, but should be given and heeded by many who assume to be teachers in Isreal. I was reminded of this saying a short time since, while riding in a stage-coach, in company with an old acquaintance, an official member of the M. E. Church, and who for the thousandth time, spoke of the wonderful working of the government of the M. E. Church, and failures of other plans, especially the Protestant Methodist.

Having so generally heard this same representation from preachers and members of the M. E. Church for a few years since, I am brought to the conclusion that by relying upon bare report, they seriously believe that the Methodist Protestant organization have proved an entire failure—that it has long since "gone to seed." That this church has accomplished so much with the millstone of slavery dragging them down, speaks volumes, in favor of the principles of their government. Their discipline, aside from its tolerating slavery, is a monument of truth, and primitive-sanctioned usage, that will continue to challenge the approval of their bitterest opposers, as it has done already.

But to show the kind of failure the M. P. Church has met with, it is worth while to compare their history, with the history of the M. E. Church. The M. E. Church contained a membership of 14,988 when she was organized into her independent form, in 1784, and her traveling ministry numbered 83. These were the results of 18 years, as the first page of the discipline dates the period of their origin to 1766. And, it should be remembered, that in these eighteen years they had no competing denomination in the field of this country, holding the same religious views, and maintaining the same usages as they did. This, all must see, gave them a most decided advantage.

Now let us look at a few facts in the history of the Methodist Protestant Church. It is now nineteen years since individual churches were organized, and a trifle over sixteen years since the Convention was held in Baltimore at which the church was formerly organized. The records of that church show the following results viz: 27 Annual Conferences, 58 Stations, 329 Circuits, 65 Missions, 720 itinerant ministers, 645 unstationed ministers, and preachers, 60,086 members, and 708 Meeting-houses.

Now who were most successful, the M. E. Church, who in eighteen years collected 14,988 members, and 83 traveling ministers, or the M. P. Church, who in that time, collected 60,086 members, and 720 traveling ministers? Let the truth be admitted, and all must see that the membership in the M. P. Church four-folded the M. E. membership in the same number of years, and in the traveling ministry the M. Protestants have nearly nine-folded them. And, yet, when the Methodist Protestants entered the field, it was preoccupied in every part of the land, by the M. E. itinerants, preaching the same doctrines, maintaining the same religious usages, with the single exception of the structure of their government. Now if these historical facts constitute data from which to deduce conclusions, we are brought to this result; that, had the Methodist Episcopal Church at her commencement, adopted the form of government that the Methodist Protestant did, she would have been to-day, four-fold what she now is in number, and certainly been saved from an untold amount of contention, disaffection and trouble. Of such results I have little doubt. And if we carry our conclusions one step farther, and look at the result of the Wesleyan Methodist organization, which dates back less than four years and yet numbers her 20,000 members, and 300 or more traveling preachers, we are conducted to the conclusion that, had the Methodist Episcopal Church adopted this form of government, excluding slavery from her fellowship, before this time the nation would have been born unto God, and we might now have been making successful efforts in heathen lands, worthy the armies of the living God. I need hardly say, that had the M. P. Church originated really upon the principles of mutual rights, as she professed to do, and excluded usurpers from her communion, she would have enjoyed the advantages now contained in the Wesleyan organization,—had those in her communion now included in theirs, and by such a position, have superceeded the necessity of this organization. Indeed, so identical are these two denominations, that were the M. Protestant Church to adopt a rule precluding slaveholders from communion and fellowship, I should be ready for one to give up my present denominational name, and unite with them at once. This I should have done years ago, had they been right in relation to slavery. But to belong to a church tolerating slavery, would in my view, be periling my own salvation, by sanctioning what I know to be evil.

C. Prindle.

Keesville, Jan. 16th, 1847.

Journal of the President of the Muskingum District.

New Alexandria, O, Feb. 6, 1847.

Dear Br. Bassett: Suffer me to say through your worthy paper, that after a severe tour, upon which I was absent 8 weeks, I got home on the 26th of Jan, 1847, but in very poor health. I was very feeble all the time of this tour, and over 5 weeks I was afflicted with fever every day, and some days chill and fever both. Sometimes it was light, at others quite severe. A strong solicitude to meet the expectations of the District—a desire to have my mind called off from the melancholy of sore bereavements, and the urgency of pecuniary necessity, were inducements to pursue, this tour before health was equal to its hardships.

I was prevented from leaving home to meet my appointment on the Belmont Ct. 1st Sunday Dec. As high waters, bad roads and ill health, all operated in hindering me from getting to my appointment on Woodsfield Ct. on the 2d Sunday. I spent that day at Belmont, concluding to go to Woodsfield Ct. at another time. The clay roads being so extremely bad, and having no reasonable grounds to expect an appointment at any point of Summerfield Ct. I availed myself of the pike so far as Cambridge, and made my way safe to M'Connellsville, the place of meeting for Pisgah Ct. 3d Sunday in Dec. Thence to Chesterfield, place of my appointment for Pennville Ct. 4th Sun. Dec. While here the chill and fever got hands fairly upon me. What little labor I did was through much affliction of both body and mind. On the 30th Dec. I returned to my brother's at M'Connellsville, where I was confined for two weeks under the care of Dr. M'Laughlin. Thus was I prevented from meeting my appointments on Morganville Ct. 1st and Cambridge Ct. the 2d Sunday of Jan. 1847. On 12th Jan. I left my brother's and on next day got to Cambridge. Being so very feeble, I thought it not prudent to attempt to meet my appointment on Pleasant Hill Ct. I carried at C. about one week, tried to preach 4 times. My health seemed much improved, and surely I never spent a more agreeable week in my life. I thought at the time it was too good to last; and sure enough soon after leaving Br. C. Scott's, 3 miles east of C. I heard a whisper of my old companion chill and fever—like bad character it would not stay behind. By way of Br. Winn's, S. W. Laishley's and Charles Barkhurst's, (who keeps a kind of a preacher's heaven,) I met my appointment at Rehobeth on Mt. Pleasant Ct. but in quite poor health. I left this meeting on Monday and afforded myself the pleasure of spending a nigh with old Br. M'Coy, an unstationed minister of this Ct. who is richly deserving the character of one of the faithful, talented and useful ministers of Christ. He is in very poor health, confined nearly all the time to his house, To this old father I owe much both of high esteem and gratitude, for, from him I have received benefit in other days. I got home on next day, so very feeble that, I could not meet my appointment at Steubenville and Wellsville. In this affliction I need both the indulgence and prayers of my brethren of the District.

My health during the last ten days is much improved, and I think it to be a permanent improvement; so that I flatter myself that by resting this month, I shall be able to resume my labors by the first of March.

Touching the circuits I have visited in this tour, I would say in brief, that I was kindly treated by all—preachers, members and others, and was glad to find the preachers without an exception, at their posts, well received and bidding fair for usefulness,—and withal omens of christian prosperity were manifest on each Ct.

I omitted to state in my last, that W. S. Sears was appointed to labor as an assistant preacher on Pennville ct.

I am glad to learn from Br. Lawson that he has will and opportunity to supply Summerfield Ct.

Yours in love, Geo. Clancy.

THE MARKETS.

The latest intelligence we have in relation to the markets, we take from the Zanesville Courier

Feb. 1847.

We quote Wheat at 75c., Flour $4,50, Oats 16c., Corn firm at 25a31c., Potatoes 25c.

We hear of sales of Bulk Pork, hog round, at 4a4¼c.,—perhaps the latter figure is nearer the true price here. Cloverseed $3,25a3,50.

Philadelphia, Feb. 13, 8 P. M.

The flour market is less active, though holders generally are firm at $6,50, with small sales of Pa. brand, at this price. Buyers are not much inclined to operate. There is still a good demand for corn meals; sales were made this morning at $4,75; it is held higher by some.

New York, Feb. 13.

Small sales Genesee flour at $7,37½, rather dull. Sales also of Southern brands at $6,56¼a6,68¾.

Sales Genesee wheat at 1,71 cts.

Sales of white Corn at 100a102 cents. About 50,000 bushels changed hands at 103a105c. for yellow.

Oats sold at 50 cts. per bushel.

Pittsburgh, Feb. 15.

There was 5 feet 6 inches water at dusk last evening—weather pleasant.

For Bulk Pork there is a very active inquiry. Sale 3000 lbs. Hams, Shoulders and Jowls, at 5c.; 4000 lbs. at 5¼c., and 10,000 lbs. in other lots at the same.

Cloverseed continues in good demand—sale of 12 bbls. at $3,90; 12 bags at 3,87¼a3,90; 45 bu. at 3,87¼; 50 at 3,90 and one lot, quantity not reported, brought $4.

A fair demand exists for Lard with moderate sales.—Holders are firm. Sales 235 kegs, bbls. and half bbls. at 7a7¼c., and some half bbls., but principally kegs, at 7¼a7¼c. Prime shipping lots only realize the latter.

150 bu. Peaches (halves) at $1,37½; 25 bu. at $1,50 from 2nd hands.

Cincinnati, Feb. 13.

Flour—Yesterday additional sales were reported, made on previous evening, of 500 bbls. from store at p. n. t., 100 bbls. at $5,20; 150 bbls. from river at $5,25; 500 bbls. city mills at $5,10, and 500 do. do. at $5,25. Yesterday the transactions were moderate, amounting as far as reported, to only about 700 bbls. at $5,10a5,12½, showing a less firm market.

Provisions—Of Lard there were considerable sales reported yesterday, mostly made a day or two since. On Tuesday 1000 kegs and 140 bbls. No. 1 steam rendered, at 7¼c.; 100 bbls. No. 2 at 6¾c.; on Thursday 1100 kegs and 20 bbls. city rendered, gut, at 7¼c.; 115 bbls. steam, head, at 7c.; 20 bbls. No. 2 at 6¼a6¾c. A sale of 25 bbls. thin mess Pork at $12,50; 6,000 lbs. bulk Sides at 6c.; 50,000 to 60,000 do. at 6¼c.

Molasses—A sale of 125 bbls. old N. O. at 30c. cash.

Clover Seed—A sale of 70 bu. from store at $4,50; 21 bbls. do. at $4,60 per bu., bbls. extra.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Terrible Catastophe.—We learn from the Mobile Journal of the 29th ult. that a terrible catastrophe occurred at that place on the Thursday previous, in the explosion of the Tuscaloosa, by which some ten or 12 persons were killed, and a number wounded. The following is the account given by the Journal:

The steamboat Tuscaloosa left the wharf about 8 o'clock on Thursday evening, on her way to Tuscaloosa, and after proceeding about 10 or 12 miles up the river, an explosion of two of her boilers took place, which instantly killed several of the passengers, and many of the boat's crew and officers.

On landing, it was found impracticable to obtain a dry footing, as the banks of the river were overflowed. In this condition those who were able climbed trees, &., where they remained in view of the burning ruins for about three hours, when fortunately the steamboat James Howitt hove in sight, and was shortly alongside the wreck, when assistance was immediately given to all within reach. The Howitt returned to the city with all of the survivors.

The number of killed and wounded has not as yet been ascertained, but it is feared that of the former there are not less than twenty, and of the latter a like number. The body of Lieut. Inge was on board and was lost.

Since the above was in type we have learned the names of the following persons, killed and wounded:

Killed.—Wm. Tanneyhill, C. Chiles and P. F. Beasly, or Eutaw; W. R. Hassel, of Greensborouge; Blue Pastier, second clerk;———Clark, 1st mate, and Arthur McCoy, 2d engineer; Abraham Flynn, volunteer from Green co—and several negro deck hands.

Badly Wounded.—Capt. E. P. Olive, (not expected to survive,) George Kirk, 1st clerk and acting captain of the Tuscaloosa, and Col. Wm. Armstead.

The Picayune, giving an account of the explosion, says there were some thirty kegs of powder on board, which, when the vessel took fire, exploded. It is supposed there were near one hundred passengers on board at the time of the accident. Different statements put down the number of lives lost as between thirty and fifty!

On the person of Mr. Beasly was said to be $22,000 in bills at the time of the accident. His body was afterwards found, but burnt to a crisp, and the money is supposed to have been destroy-

In the safe of the Tascaloosa, it is said, was $47,000 in bills, besides gold and silver, great many letters with money in them. safe was dug from the wreck by the captain Winona, and brought down to Mobile, but ould not ascertain whether the paper money destroyed or not.

large portion of the cargo, which was valuas of course destroyed, while the passengers nearly every thing they had. Among them he Rev. Mr. Root, of Kentucky, with his y, on their way to settle at Crentreville,

Not a portion of their furniture or baggage saved.

Explosion at Baltimore.—An explosion rred at the Linseed Oil Mill of Messrs. T. M. Smith, in Baltimore, of which the Sun s the following account:

he mill was driven by two boilers, about ty inches in diameter by twenty-two feet in th, one of which parted about the centre, one being carried about 400 feet into the adjoinfield, while the other was driven quite through all frame house in the rear of the mill, occuby Mr. Medner, making an ugly breach in front wall, and lodging in shed room in the of the house. The wife of Mr. M. was ding near a window, in another part of the se, and was struck by a piece of wood, thrown the window, which injured her on the shoul-young man, named Filney, was slighly ded, and a little girl, daughter of Mr. Coon- was also slightly injured. The walls of the ace were completely demolished, and in all bability there would have been some lives lost for the fact that, a few moments before the osion, the roof of the Emory Chapel, in the ediate neighborhood of the mill, was blown by the violence of the wind, which was blowa gale at the time, and the workmen about the were out looking at the damage done to the rch, and thereby escaped the effects of the losion.

---

ire at Utica.—A fire occurred at Utica, N. on Thursday night, in the foundry at the e establishment of Bailey, Wheeler & Co. e flames communicated to the main building, upied as their stove and plough factory, and to machine shop of J. Puffer & Co. The third- y of B. W. & Co.'s building was occupied by K. Browning, as a card manufactory. The lling house of Dr. Pomeroy was demolished the falling of the walls of the burning building. Elizur Kirkland was partially buried beneath ruins, and was badly though not fatally injured.

---

uffocation from Coal Gas.—The Boston rnal of Friday says:—A melancholy accident, lting from the inhalation of anthracite coal occurred in Fuller street, in this city, yester- . Mrs. Mary Emerson, together with her ghter, twenty years of age, and her son, aged lve years, retired to bed on Wednesday eve- g at about half past 9 o'clock. Previous to ring, the stove, (a common cooking stove) was enished with coal, the damper was closed, the covers left partly off. At about 11 ock yesterday forenoon, the mother of Mrs. erson visted the house, and, after repeatedly cking at the door, it was opened by the boy, had just strength enough left to crawl to the r from the bed. On opening the door, it was nd to be filled with coal gas to such an extent, t it was some minutes before it could be enter- Mrs. Emerson, whose health has recently n very poor, was quite dead. The daughter partially risen from the bed, as if in the act dressing, and was senseless. Her limbs were y much swollen, and it is doubtful whether she recover. The boy is quite ill, but is thought dangerously.

Relief for Ireland.—In pursuance of a call n the Rt. Rev. Bishop Fitzpatrick, a large and pectable meeting of the parishoners of the rch of the Holy Cross was held last evening he basement of the church. The meeting s called to order by the venerable Thomas rphy, the Rt. Rev. Bishop was appointed chairn, and Andrew Carney Treasurer. It was n decided to open a list for subscription forthh, and gentlemen were appointed to act as secraries.—Over three thousand dollars were subibed. Mr. Carney gave $1000, Patrick Moo- $200, John J. Mahoney $100. The other scriptions varied from $1 to $100.—Boston nscript.

The Reason.—Persons of thoughful minds are hetimes led to wonder why the best intellect of age should be wasted in ephemeral efforts to nance, instead of contributing to the more solidepositories of thought for after ages.

The great reason may perhaps be gathcard m the following statement:

"Fifteen cents a line is the pay Dumas gets the romance he publishes peace meal in the wspapers."

We have very little doubt that "Dombey & n," now appearing from the pen of Charles ckson, will yield its author an equal amount. d these authors chosen another path, they ght have been more useful and have secured ual reputation; but their pockets would hot have en so well lined.—Meth. Protestant.

A Hint to Postmasters.—A postmaster in the erior of Pennsylvania had judgment given inst him for the price of a subscription of sevl years to a distant newspaper, on the plea that had not given sufficient legal notice to the blisher to stop it, and had continued to receive numbers for several years and sell them for postage.—The magistrate decided that mere- returning a copy of "John Smith's" papers h "stop this" written on it, without postmark, other indication of locality, was not sufficient legal notice, but a written notice, with name, ce, date, and reason, must be sent to the pubher, and "franked," that it may be taken out by n.

Drowned While Saving Another.—During e late severe gale at New Orleans, a seaman l overboard from the barque Bothschild, and ck Jones, a Welshman, well known on the levee, plunged in the river to rescue him. He succeded in his generous purpose by attaching a pe to the sailor, by which he was drawn out. t before Jones could himself regain the vessel, sunk and was drowned.

Smithsonian Institute.—We are now officily informed by the proposals, what are to be the mensions of the new College. There is to be entre building 200 feet long, 56 broad, and 56 t high. East wing 80 feet long, 50 feet broad, l 42 feet high. West wing 76 long, 30 broad, l 42 high. The towers, as shewn in the ns, very from 60 to 140 feet in height. It ll be a costly building.

The late Rev. Dr. Wilson, of Cincinnati, is d to have made it a religious duty to vote at all ctions, and invariably threw in an unfolded ket. He regarded the elective franchise as a emn act: involving as far as his single vote ended, the political, civil, and moral welfare of country.

Relief for Ireland.

Washington, Tuesday evening.

An immense and enthusiastic meeting was held this evening at Odd Fellows' Hall. Hon. George M. Dallas presided, assisted by a vice president from each state and territory. Six secretaries were appointed. While the committee on resolutions were absent, Mr. Dallas made a short but able speech. The committee presented resolutions, prepared by Hon. Daniel Webster.

Mr. W. prefaced the reading of these with a spirited and eloquent speech. The resolutions recommended immediate contributions throughout the country, and requested the collectors of customs and Mayors to receive and transmit donations. Rev. Dr. Dewey presented an address, which was adopted by the meeting. Hon. Mr. Maclay, Robert Dale Owen and J. J. Crittenden made eloquent speeches. Meeting adjourned.

Two Slaves, one of them belonging to J. Tumbleson Esq., and one to G. Henderson Esq., of Wood Co. Va., escaped into Ohio on Saturday night last. It is alledged that they were concealed in the house of D. Putnam jr., in Harmar, over Sunday. At any rate his house was watched,—and late in the evening of that day quite a number of men assembled about it, avowedly for the purpose of preventing their escape. A good deal of disturbance was made, and it is also alleged that threats were uttered. At any rate, the alarm was given through Harmar, that a mob had assembled at Mr. Putnam's house, and had threatened to destroy it: that a large number of men were there from Wood County, and more were coming; and, finally, that word had been sent to Parkersburg for help from there. As might have been expected, a multitude soon collected, and dispersed the 'watches' in double quick time.

Whether all who aided in "keeping the peace" would have done so had they credited the report that the negroes were really in Putnam's charge, is questionable. We hear that some of them felt not a little vexed upon learning, subsequently, that during the hubbub the negroes were dressed up in cloaks, marched through the crowd, furnished with horses, and started, post haste, for Queen Vic's dominions!—Marietta Intelligencer.

The London Shipping Gazette estimates that it will require a weekly importation of one million bushels carcal food to supply the loss of the potato crop in Ireland, England and Scotland, up to August or September next; and with the French ports open, this quantity will not be obtained, unless prices should rise considerably, so as to draw food into the country, and retain it there. It is found that the starving millions in Ireland are sufficient to consume more grain than is arriving in the different ports of the kingdom; that the mills throughout the country cannot keep pace with the demand for meal; and that all the tonnage which can be procured in the ports of America is insufficient to throw in a timely supply.

Mexico.—The New Orleans Bulletin of the 3d inst. says:—"We have seen letters of 7th January, from the city of Mexico, and from parties having access to high sources of information, which express, in decided terms, a belief that the differences between the two nations will very speedily be amicably and honorably settled."

"Send the Free Negroes to the Free States," is the cry of the Governor of Virginia. We can suggest a better course. Make Virginia herself a Free State, and there will then be no motive for the removal of the class referred to. This would accord with Justice and Humanity, while the course recommended by the Governor is left to be an outrage by the whole civilized world. Thus, and thus only, can Virginia escape from the curse which blights every foot of her soil and sits as an incubus upon her prosperity.

An exchange paper says:—"A friend informs us that he could send us a marriage notice, but as the young gentleman does not take the paper, he does not consider editors under any obligation to publish his marriage." That's to the point; but the mystery of it is, how any young lady in this age could afford to marry a chap who takes no paper.—Genesee Evangelist.

Mr. Robert Owen publishes in the Washington National Era, his plan for the abolition of slavery, viz: that all slaves born after 1st January, 1850 shall be educated by the State governments and prepared to become good and useful citizens, and after serving an apprenticeship equal to their assumed value to their owners, they shall be colonized in some territory set apart for them by the government; those in servitude at the date named to remain in servitude, or otherwise at the pleasure of the owners.

Freshet.—The Northampton, Mass., Herald, says that during the outpouring of wind and rain last Wednesday, the ice broke up in the Mill River, carried away the bridge of the Woollen Factory village, flooded the streets, and carried off several hundred dollars' worth of cloth, broke away some fifteen or twenty feet of both the upper and lower mill dams, carried off Welch end bridge, tore away the stone pier under the centre of South street bridge, besides other damage on that river.

The Hon. John Quincy Adams left this city yesterday afternoon for Washington via Springfield, accompanied by his wife and son.—Boston Atlas.

Indiana Debt.—The Butler bill, so called, to enable the State of Indiana to pay the principal of her public debt, has passed both houses of the Legislature, and is a law. Indiana is, from henceforth, a debt-paying State.

Premature Interments occur so frequently that hasty burials will have to be guarded against. A French paper (Le Rhone) states that a stone cutter had been buried alive, and the sound of the earth as it fell on his coffin awoke him from his lethargic sleep. The impression produced by this event was so great, as to overturn the reason of the sufferer, who, animated by a supernatural strength, burst open the coffin lid and fled from the country. He was overtaken with great difficulty, after having been pursued a considerable distance. Another case is mentioned, of a female interred alive at Lourac, but when rescued was so far gone that she perished before medical assistance could be rendered.

Mortality in Marietta.—The number of deaths in the corporation of Marietta in the year between February 1, 1846 and February 1, 1847, was only 35. More than one third of this number (13) were under the age of five years. Less than one third of the number (12) were between five and forty years of age; nearly one third (10) were over the age of 40 years; more than one sixth (6) were over the age of sixty; and nearly one eighth (4) over seventy.

For the last twenty years Marietta has been wonderfully exempt from sickness, and the number of deaths has probably been relatively smaller than in any town in Ohio.—Marietta Intelligencer.

A Relief fund for Ireland is being established in England. Of twelve names, the subscriptions amount to about $60,000. The Queen heads the list with $10,000.

Terrible Accident.—A workman in the Brooklyn Distillery fell into a large boiling vat of molasses, and could not be rescued until all the flesh was boiled off the bones, leaving nothing but his skeleton.

Suicide.—Mr. Joseph A. Whitney, broker, committed suicide at Boston on Wednesday, by hanging himself in his office. He has left a wife and three children.

A Murderer Loose.—$100 reward is offered for the arrest of Watkins Reynolds, an overseer of Montgomery, Ala., who most brutally murdered a slave by flogging him to death

---

They tell a good story at Northampton about the editor of the New Orleans Picayune. He stopped at the stage house, with the intention of spending some days in that beautiful town. After a reasonable time he became dry, and called for a glass of brandy. 'No,' says the landlord, 'we have no license to sell spirits—we don't keep the article.' The Editor visited the other public houses,—looked into the groceries and cellars, made close inquiries but found them all tetotal. He returned to the stage house with a long face—'Landlord,' says he, 'tell me the nearest place where I can get a glass of brandy, for I'm too dry to stay here any longer.'—'I guess you can get it at Greenfield, for they grant licenses there, and it said they sell spirit.' 'How far is it?'—'Twenty miles.' 'What time does the stage start?' 'Twelve o'clock at night.' 'Well, landlord, book me for Greenfield.'

So it has grown into a proverb, that when one calls for liquor he says, 'Book me for Greenfield,' and when he is corned he is said to be 'Booked for Greenfield.—Hampton Washingtonian.

Quakers.—The society of Friends in Philadelphia have very charitably and very quietly, sent three remittances of £500 each, ($7,200) for the suffering poor in Ireland, and another of £400 has been sent by one of the committee.

Attempt at Suicide.—A sister of Mrs. Elizabeth Ferguson, who committed suscide on Saturday last, yesterday asked one or two persons if they knew the exact spot wherein her sister had thrown herself; on its being shown she leaped from the bridge into the Basin. She was rescued. —N. O. Delta, Feb. 4.

Horribly Brutal.—A wealthy man here had a boy named "Reuben," almost white, whom he caused to be branded in the face with the words, "a slave for life." The man who perpetrated this act is an Englishman.—St. Louis Gazette.

From the Methodist Protestant.

POPERY.

Mr. Editor: I herewith send you a fine delineation of Popery—an excerpt from the writings of the late Rev. Robert Hall:

"Popery, in the ordinary state of its profession, combines the form of godliness with a total denial of its power. A heap of unmeaning ceremonies, adapted to fascinate the imagination and engage the senses—implicit faith in human authority, combined with an utter neglect of divine teaching—ignorance the most profound, joined to dogmatism the most presumptuous—a vigilant exclusion of Biblical knowledge, together with a total estimation of free inquiry—present the spectacle of religion lying in state, surrounded with the silent pomp of death. The very absurdities of such a religion render it less unacceptable to men whose decided hostility to truth inclines them to view with complacency whatever obscures its beauty, or impedes its operation. Of all the corruptions of Christianity which have prevailed to any considerable extent, Popery presents the most numerous points of contrast to the simple doctrines of the Gospel; and just in proportion as it gains ground, so the religion of Christ must decline."

I see, or think that I see, a threat looking out of all their public buildings. Is it true that one of them assailed, or rudely struck a man in Cincinnati, because he would not bow his knees as they were carrying the host along the street? Is it true that they burnt a number of Bibles in the State of New York in a public fire? Is it a fact that a Roman Catholic told all those falsehoods about the Messrs. Breckenridges? Is it a fact that Gen. Taylor has imprisoned a Popish priest for advising soldiers to desert their country's cause? Is it a fact that at one of their recent meetings they determined to take all their children from the schools of the Protestants—representing them as institutions calculated to demoralize their children? After this what must we think of the Protestants who will send their children to a Papal school? What Protestant would not rather have an unlettered child, than to have a child debased with the fooleries of priestcraft? Is there not a design in the emigration of so many ignorant Catholics to this country? Ought not measures to be taken to prevent their ill-effects at the ballot-box? Ye rulers of these United States, would not you do well to look about you? F. Stier.

January 2, 1847.

NOTICES

Zanesville Circuit.—The President Br. Clancy will be expected to attend a meeting at Brownsville, on the last Saturday and Sunday in March, as per his appointment.

Tanner's Creek Ct. Ia. Con.—The second quarterly Conference will be held at the Stone Chapel, East Fork, on Saturday, March 6th ensuing. We most cordially invite any of our ministerial or lay brethren from adjoining circuits, or from Cincinnati, who can do so, to come to our assistance. We hope the brethren will not all excuse themselves but come, for we want help very much. Br. Paul, our minister, is detained ed away, as we fear by affliction.

Wm. Smith

Columbia Ct. Musk. Con.—Our President is informed that his appointment will be at Graham's station, on the Ohio river. We also purpose holding a two days meeting at Athens Bridge, March 20th and 21st. We invite Brs. H. T. Lawson, C. J. Sears, S. Means, W. Sears, J. W. Southard, F. Edwards, and any other brethren who can attend. S. Elliott.

PRESIDENTIAL APPOINTMENTS.

Pittsburgh District.

Should it please God to spare my life, and give health to my family, I will try to fill the following appointments.

George Creek	"	14th	Feb.
Morgantown	"	21st	"
Union	St.	28th	"
Connelsville	Ct.	7th	March
Fayette	"	14th	"
Wheeling	Circuit.	1st Sunday	in April.
Tyler	"	2d	" "
Harrisville	"	3d	" "
Mill Creek	"	4th	" "
Buchanon	"	1st	" in May
Braxton	"	2d	" "
Greenbrier	"	3d	" "
Huntersville	"	4th	" "
Valley	"	5th	" "

Geo. Brown.

Muskingum District.

Br. Bassett: Please insert in the Recorder, the following list of appointments which I will fill, if able so to do.

2nd	Sunday	March	Otsego Circuit.
3rd	"	"	Lancaster "
4th	"	"	Zanesville "
1st	"	April	Newark "
7th	Wednesday	"	Delaware "
2nd	Sunday	"	Frederick "
4th	"	"	Licking "
28th	Wednesday	"	Mt. Zion "
1st	Sunday	May	Coshocton "
2nd	"	"	Pleasant hill "

Geo. Clancy, Pres.

Ohio Conference.

Presidential Visitation.

Washington	Circuit,	February 13	& 14.
Bainbridge	"	" 20	& 22.
Buford	"	" 27	& 28.
Batavia	"	March 6	& 7.
Cincinnati	"	" 13	& 14.
Lebanon Station,		" 17.	Night.
Twin Creek	"	" 20	& 21.
Greenville Mission,		" 27	& 28.

J. M. Young.

Indiana District.

Mr. Editor: Please state that by divine permission, I will fill the following appointments.

Stotts Creek	Circuit	February	28th
Sugar Creek	"	March	14th
Laughrey	Mission	"	21th
Flatrock	Circuit	"	28th
White Lick	"	April	11th
Mill Creek	"	"	18th
White Rive	"	"	25th

Will Br. W. B. Evans inform me by letter or otherwise the place of the appointment on White River Ct. T. Shipp.

Buford Ct. O. Dis.—Our second quarterly meeting will be held at Liberty Meeting House, commencing March 13th, 1847. Ministerial aid is solicited.

W. G. Fowler, Supt.

Otsego Circuit.—The second quarterly meeting will be held at Hopewell M. H. 10 miles north east of Zanesville, including the 2d Sabbath, 14th of March. The visit of Br. Clancy, is expected at that time and place.

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT.

LETTERS RECEIVED.

G. Clancy, A. M'Guire, T. Forshee, W. Munhall, 4 subs.; H. Cullers, F. Swift, A. Dalbey, G. Nestor, 1 sub. and pay; J. W. Arnold, W. G. Fowler, F. Madera, J. M. Byarlay, D. R. Helmick, J. F. Bane, G. Richey, J. B. Bass, J. N. Coleman.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS.

From	For	Pays to Vol.	No.	$ cts
G. Nestor, Va.,	Jos. Wronk,	9	18	2 00
Wm. Hibbs,		9	17	2 00
N. Lake,		8	52	2 00
J. B. Irwin,		8	52	2 00
C. Springer,	D. Griffith,	9	21	2 00
R. Wilkinson,		7	52	2 00
J. W. Arnold, Va.,	W. Beau,	8	13	50
W. G. Fowler,	J. M'Neal,	8	34	1 00
J. M. Biarlay,		8	26	1 00
J. F. Bane,	C. Layton,	8	26	2 00
J. Taylor,		8	52	2 00
J. B. Bass, Ia.,		8	19	1 00
A. S. Hursey,	J. Shunk,	8	26	3 00
J. Myers,		8	52	1 00

A paper sent to W. Hamilton, Brandonville, Va., has been returned to us. Our due from him is for about 2¼ volumes of our paper. Our agent in that vicinity, will please collect this for us, immediately.

The P. M. at Peel Tree, Va., informs us that the paper we send to W. Bean, was never subscribed for nor ordered by him. Why, Br. Stillians, what means this? Hope it is not so with the rest of the fourteen subscribers you gave us at Conference. Come, Br. S., send us the pay for these subscribers, and then we will see that all is right.

Br. Helmick, 75 cts. from that Br. would be right, for 19 numbers.

H. Myers, Brownsville, is credited in full for Vol. 8, as per E. L. C.

Br. Fowler, O. T. should pay you $1,50 for ¾ of a year.

Married,

On the 28th ultimo, by Rev. Wm Duling, Mr. James King to Miss Eliza Kinney; both of Muskingum Co., Ohio.

On the same day, by the same, Mr. Samuel V. Shafer to Miss Sarah A. Duling; both of Coshocton Co., Ohio.

On the 4th instant, by the same, Mr. Gasper Bradford to Miss Margaret Wortman; both of Muskingum Co., O.

PROSPECTUS

OF THE LITERARY EMPORIUM.

A COMPENDIUM OF

Religious, Literary and Philosophical Knowledge

IN the first place, light literature will find no place in its pages, i. e., love tales, literary trash, &c. Secondly, sectarianism will not be admitted into the Emporium; or, in other words, it will favor no particular sect; but it will advocate the religion of the Bible in the strongest terms, and will urge the necessity not only of a change of heart, but a virtuous and holy life, in order to be truly happy in this world and to be prepared for that which is to come.—In regard to its literary character, it is designed to be of such a nature, as to water the thirsty soul that is studiously endeavoring to acquire a knowledge of man in his past and present condition; also some information in relation to the different sciences and arts, and the variety of the works of nature, with such miscellaneous reading as will invigorate the faculties of the mind, give scope to the imagination, while it shall address itself to the good sense of all who desire to be truly elevated by reading.

Our object in the beginning was to establish a sound literature, which we deem of much importance to the future destiny of this country. We bless God that he has smiled on our efforts: for although the Emporium has been in existence but two years, and has just entered upon the third, it has already attained a circulation of fifteen thousand, which is unequalled in the history of Magazines. It is got up in better style, and contains more reading, and from abler pens, than any other magazine of its price in the United States.

Christian Friend, we hope you will aid us in the extensive circulation and support of a work, which we think calculated to enrich the mind, and inspire the soul to the love of virtue and its Divine Author. The very extensive circulation of light and frothy literature, as it is called, is taking by wholesale, the very life blood of the morality and religion of the youth of our country. Is it not time for Christians to act in this matter?

 Contributors.—The Literary Emporium contains articles, original or selected, from the following, among other distinguished authors:

J. G. Whittier, Seba Smith, R. S. St. John, Mrs. Judson, Rev. J. N. Danforth. Mrs. E. O. Smith, Miss Welby, Mrs. F. H. Green, Mrs. Stewart, Rev. S. Olin, Prof. McClintock, Rev. J. P. Durbin, Elihu Burritt, Wm. C. Bryant, N. P. Willis, S. Galloway, A. M., Washington Irving, Rev. Dr. Bethune, Rev. L. L. Hamline, Rev. E. Thomson, Rev. T. Dick, D. D., Rev H. Winslow, Rev. Wm. B. Sprague, Rev. T. H. Stockton, Rev. Rob't. Lee, Rev. B. F. Teft, Mrs. L. H. Sigourney, Mrs. E. C. Embury, Miss Sedgwick, Emeline Smith, Eliza Cook, Miss Baker.

The Emporium is published monthly, at $1,00 a year; $5,00 allowed to any person who will obtain fifteen paying subscriber, and at the same rate for a greater or less number. One hundred enterprising and honest Agents wanted for the Emporium and other valuable works. All letters, orders, &c., should be addressed to

J. K. WELLMAN,
Editor and Proprietor, No. 116 Nassau-st, N. Y.

Post Office Address of Itinerant Ministers and Preachers of the Western Conferences.

Pittsburgh District.

G Brown, Steubenville, O.
Jos Burns, Port Homer, Jefferson, O.
A Lister, Beverly, Randolph Co. Va.
V Lucas, Farmington, Fayette, Pa.
R H Walker, Big Skin Creek, Lewis, Va.
S Hazlett, Beeler's Station, Marshall, Va.
P T Laishley, Morgantown, Va.
N Gillespie, " "
D R Helmick, Fairmont, Marion, Va.
J I Stillians, Lorentz Store, Lewis, Va.
H Reger, West Milford, Harrison, Va.
G G Collins, Middlebourne, Tyler, Va.
N Watson, Wheeling, Va.
A J Waren, Glady Creek ⋈ Roads, Barbour, Va.
G Nestor, Frankfort, Greenbrier, Va.
J P Prickett, Ravenswood, Jackson, Va.
Wm Reeves, Pittsburgh, Pa.
Mrs. Asa Shinn, Allegheny, Pa.
J Robinson, " "
W H Doe, Sharpsburgh, Allegheny, Pa.
G B M'Elroy, Fallston, Beaver, Pa.
Wm Boardman, Washington, Pa.
J C Hazlett, " "
J Cowl, Eldersville, Washington, Pa.
W A Porter, Waynesburgh, Green, Pa.
R T Simonton, Cookstown, Fayette, Pa.
W Browning, Buchanon, Allegheny, Pa.
H Palmer, Connellsville, Pa.

Muskingum District

W L Baldwin, Gnadenhutten, Tuscarawas. O.
N Linder, Harrisville, Harrison, O.
M Scott, Oak Hill, Jackson, O.
W B Moody, Richfield, Summit, O.
A R Brown, Fowler's Mills, Geauga, O.
E S Hoagland, New Athens, Harrison, O.
J Hambay, Warsaw, Coshocton, O.
W W Tipton, Jackson, Jackson, O.
S H Heath, Bricksville, Cuyuhuga, O.
J Jack, Lodi, Seneca, O.
W Hatfield, Centerburg, Knox, O.
C S Callihan, Putnam, Muskingum, O.
J Myres, " " "
C Springer, Meadow Farm, Muskingum, O.
W H Marshall, Zanesville, O.
R Andrew, Steubenville, O.
D B Dorsey, " "
Z Ragan, " "
J W Case, Plainfield, Coshocton, O.
John Baker, " " "
J H Hamilton " " "
I Thrap, Tiffin, Seneca, O.
G M Scott, " " "
A S Robinson, Bucyrus, Crawford, O.
J Nichols, Cambridge, Guernsey, O.
W Remsburg, " " "
O V Warren, M'Connellsville, Morgan, O.
J M Piper, " " "
T B Cushman, New Lisbon, Columbiana, O.
A Tracy, Mallet Creek, Medina, O.
N Burgess, Berlin, Mahoning, O.
D Richardson, " " "
C Caddy, Vienna, Trumbull, O.
S Gee, Youngstown, Mahoning O.
W Duling, Otsego, Muskingum, O.
W Maynard, Adams Mills, Muskingum, O.
J K Duffy, Perryton, Licking, O.
J M Winn, Fairview, Guernsey, O.
H T Lawson, Woodsfield, Monroe, O.
J W Southard, Malta, Morgan, O.
John Burns, Mt. Pleasant, Jefferson, O.
W Munhall, Brownsville, Licking, O.
C J Sears, Chester Hill, Morgan, O.
T Potter, Mt. Vernon, Knox, O.
A Channel, Homer, Licking, O.
T Foster, New Hagerstown, Carroll, O.
S Elliott, Lee, Athens, O.

Ohio District.

R Dobbins, Washington, Fayette, O.
R K Davis, Rosedale, Madison, O.
J H Webster, South Solon, Madison, O.
W Tipton, Waterville, Lucas, O.
O Warrington, Wilhamsville, Clermont, O.
J White, Spring Valley, Green, O.
J Dalbey Jr., Cincinnati, O.
J B Peat Richwood, Union, O.
A M'Guire, Springfield, Clark, O.
O P Stephens, " " "
W Pelan, West Alexandria, Preble, O.
R Rose, Por ;William, Clinton, O.
D Moore, Carysville, Champaign, O.
A H Trumbo, Greenfield, Highland, O.
W G Fowler, Hamersville, Brown, O.
I Hunt, Fletcher, Miami, O.
J L Borton, Gilboa, Putnam, O.
R M Dalbey, Lebanon, Warren. O.
L Ensminger, Russelvania, Logan, O.
S P Kezerta, Holensburg, Darke, O.
J M Young, Spartansburg, Randolph, Ia.
Jonathan Flood, Fairview, Randolph, Ia.
A H Bassett, Putnam, Muskingum Co. O.

Indiana District.

W B Evans, Spencer, Owen, Ia.
W W Paul, Mt. Tabor, Monroe, Ia.
C H Williams, Millroy, Rush, Ia.
T Shipp, Edinburg, Johnson, Ia.
S Morrison, Freeport, Shelby, Ia.
H Brenton, Cataract, Owen, Ia.
G Wheatley, Graham, Jefferson, Ia.

Wabash District.

J Alter, Middle Fork, Clinton, Ia.
S W Widney, Peru, Miami, Ia.
R R Bailey, Prairieville, Clinton, Ia.
Jos. Shipp, Frankfort, Clinton, Ia.
Patterson Smith, Wabash, Wabash, Ia.
G Williams, Auburn, Dekalb, Ia.
J C Wright, Northfield Boon, Ia.
F Outcalt, Wilkshire, Van Wert, O.
H Beal, Monroe, Tippecanoe, Ia.

Michigan District.

L Smith, Pine Lake, Oakland, Mich.
J B Jewel, Rose, Oakland, Mich.
L Warren, Commerce, Oakland, Mich.
M Munn, Romeo, Macomb, Mich.
J Gay, Kingsbury, Laporte, Ia.

Illinois District.

J Clarke Jr., Rushville, Schuyler, Ill.

North Illinois District.

M E Martin, Newark, Kendall, Ill.
W Jared, Greenbush, Warren, Ill.
W H Miller, Peru, La Salle, Ill.
P J Strong, Magnolia, Putnam, Ill.
D Bagley, Princeton, Bureau, Ill.

The above list we have made out from our book, indicating the post offices to which the paper is sent for the respective brethren. It does not include all the travelling preachers, but those only who receive our paper. We have made it out, partly for our own convenience, but chiefly to accommodate the request of a member of brethren, and we perhaps owe them an apology that, for want of time, we have not done it sooner. If any names are omitted it is accidental, and unintentional.

Whilst on the subject, we will state, that all the above named brethren are authorised to act as agents for the Western Recorder, and to collect the dues therefor.

Every itinerant minister or preacher, of any Annual Conference whatever whether embraced in the above list or not can have our paper at half price, i. e. one dollar per year. And every such minister or preacher who will collect for us as much as ten dollars shall have the paper for a year free of charge. These terms to itinerents are just twice as favorable, as the terms of the Methodist Protestant, or any other religious paper, within our acquaintance. And we had much rather the brethren would be active agents, and have the paper free, than to pay us the dollar. Every brother who collects $20 or more for the paper, within the year, shall not only have our warm thanks, but shall receive some literary premium, at least worthy of his acceptance, or if he choose, we will send a copy of our paper for a year to any friend he may designate, provided such friend is not already a subscriber.

PROSPECTUS OF THE

OHIO CULTIVATOR,

Vol. III---For 1847.

A semi-monthly Journal, devoted to the promotion of Agriculture, Horticulture & Domestic Industry.

PUBLISHED AT COLUMBUS, OHIO,

By M. B. Bateham, Editor and Proprietor,

Assisted by the contributions of a very large number of practical and scientific writers,—farmers, horticulturists, &c.

Illustrated with numerous Engravings.

TERMS—One Dollar per year—Four Copies for Three Dollars: payments invariably in advance.

THE OHIO CULTIVATOR has now become so well known to the farmers and friends of agriculture in Ohio, that it is unnecessary to say any thing of its character or design. Grateful for the encouragement he has thus far received, the editor and proprietor takes this occasion to inform his friends and patrons, that he is determined to put forth new efforts in their service, and make his paper for the coming year still more deserving of their continued liberal patronage. Besides improvement in the matter for its columns, the mechanical appearance of the paper will be improved by the use of new type, and more illustrations. It will contain the latest and most reliable intelligence respecting the crops and the markets, both in this country, and in Europe, so as to aid the farmer in deciding at what time and price to dispose of his productions. This information alone will be worth, to most farmers, many times the price of subscription, especially now that prices are so much effected by foreign intelligence. In addition to all this, the editor believes that his increased experience and knowledge of the agricultural condition of the State, together with his extended correspondence, will enable him to make each succeeding volume of the Cultivator more valuable than the one that preceded it.

The influence of the paper, wherever it has been generally read, is admitted to have been highly salutary. It has began to awaken a spirit of inquiry and improvement among the farmers, and inspire them with more just and elevated conceptions of the character, duties and pleasures of their noble occupation. As evidence of this it may be stated, that during the past year, Agricultural Societies have been organized in twenty counties of this State; and there is reason to believe that as many more will be formed during the year to come. These associations, in connection with the State Board of Agriculture, and the Cultivator as an organ for the diffusion of intelligence, cannot fail to exert such an influence on the minds and the practice of the farming community, as will in a few years place our young Giant State in that position which she is by Nature designed to occupy—the first State of the Union in agricultural wealth and lasting prosperity.

Farmers of Ohio! Who among you are willing to have no part in this onward march of improvement? Who among you are willing to deprive yourselves and your families of that 'knowledge which is power,' and the great means of progress and elevation, for the sake of the small pittance which that knowledge may cost? And who of you that desire to see this work advance, will not make an effort to arouse your neighbors from the mental torpor that rests upon too many of them? The work is not difficult—pursuade them to read papers devoted to their interests—☞ send on their names, with your own, as subscribers to the Ohio Cultivator, and you may rely upon it they will soon begin to awake—to inquire and think—and not only become better farmers, but more intelligent and agreeable neighbors.

Address, M. B. BATEHAM,
Columbus, Ohio.

THE CHEAPEST AND BEST.

New Prospectus for the Year 1847.

FORTY-EIGHT large octavo Pages, and Fifteen Engravings in each No. Published on the first of every month.

Fourth Volume commences in January, 1847.

The No. for Jan. contains a "Pictorial Description of the State of Ohio," elegantly Illustrated with American views, &c. &c.

Other States will appear in subsequent Nos. of the Work.

Robert Sears, 158 Nassau-street, New York, will hereafter furnish his new

Pictorial and Illustrated Family Magazine for 1847, in all respects equal to the Three-Dollar Magazines, at the low price of only one dollar and a half per annum.

Any person sending Five Dollars, shall receive five copies of the magazine for one year, as he shall direct.

All subjects which will admit of it, will be illustrated with engravings. The whole number of the engravings at the conclusion of the volume will amount to several hundred.

Great inducement to subscribe.

We offer to all persons becoming subscribers, a copy of our new work, just published, entitled the Pictorial Description of Great Britain and Ireland.

Containing 262 Views of the Principal Cities, Towns, Castles, Abeys, Costumes, &c. &c., of the Fatherland: a larger number of Engravings than can be found in any book of double the price.

WELLMAN'S ILLUSTRATED BOTANY.

VOL. II., 1847.

EDITED BY J. D. COMSTOCK, M. D.

Author of Botany, Natural Philosphy, Chemistry, Mineralogy, Geology, Natural History, Phyliology, etc., assisted

BY J. C COMSMOCK, ESQ.

THE success of the Illustrated Botany is no longer an experiment, for altho' it has been in existence but one year, it already has a circulation of about five thousand, a sufficient number to warrant its support, which cannot be said of any other work of the kind. Indeed, it is the only work of this character published in this country, which promises stability and a long life. We think the prospects of the second year of the Botany are very flattering. One reason for this opinion is, the fact that it is now very popular, having a large circle of friends. Another very important reason is, the securing of an Editor for the coming year, whose popularity as an author in the various branches of Natural Science, is so extensive as to leave his name familiar to every student in the sciences in this country. We are fully satisfied that the Botany will, under its present Editors, bear the severest criticism, and we intend that it shall become the standard work.

In the course of its publication, it will contain an Introduction to the Natural System of Botany, a thorough Treatise on the interesting and important branch of Vegetable Physiology, Notices on Fossil Botany, and descriptions, both scientific and popular, of numerous species of plants, the properties of which, medicinal and useful, will be fully explained. In short it is intended to present a complete view of the latest and most important facts, discoveries, and theories, in every department of the science.

The whole illustrated by splendid colored engravings, taken from Nature, full size, and finished the highest style of modern art.

This work is designed to be eminently popular in its application, and there is enough of that which is stranger than fiction about it to render it, in no ordinary degree, interesting and instructive.

We do not intend to confine ourselves to the botanical descriptions of each plant, but to make it a thoroughly scientific work, in all the departments of Botany. It will also give information on the cultivation of plants and flowers. In a word, it will comprise the whole science.

TERMS.

This work will be published monthly, with from six to ten flowers, handsomely painted, in each number. Price, $3,00 a year, or two copies sent to one address for $5,00.

☞ A very liberal discount allowed to Agents.

J. K. WELLMAN, Publisher and Proprietor,
Febuary 13, 1847. No. 116 Nassau-st.

Horse Stolen.—$20 Reward.

REV. J. I. STILLIANS, requests us to state that on the night of Jan. 19th a large dapple gray horse, 16¼ hands high was taken out of his stable on Hacker's Creek, Lewis Co. Va. Said horse is 6 or 7 years old this srping, a little crease fallen, with a white mark 5 or 6 inches long on one of his shoulders, caused by the collar a wind gall on the out side of his left hind leg, near the pastern joint, a horse of good carriage. Any person finding him, and returning him to the owner, or where he can get him will receive the above reward.

NEW FIRM.

A. A. GUTHRIE, G. BUCKINGHAM and G. N GUTHRIE announce that they have formed partnership for the transaction of Mercantile busines under the firm of

GUTHRIE, BUCKINGHAM & CO.

They respectfully invite their

POETRY.

ADVERTISEMENT OF A LOST DAY.

BY MRS. L. H. SIGOURNEY.

Lost! lost! lost!
A gem of countless price,
Cut from the living rock,
And graved in Paradise.
Set round with three times eight
Large diamonds, clear and bright,
And each with sixty smaller ones,
All changeful as the light.

Lost—where the thoughtless throng
In fashion's mazes wind,
Where thrilleth folly's song,
Leaving a sting behind;
Yet to my hand 'twas given
A golden harp to buy,
Such as the white-robed choir attune
To deathless minstrelsy.

Lost! lost! lost!
I feel all search is vain;
That gem of countless cost
Can ne'er be mine again;
I offer no reward,
For till these heart-strings sever,
I know that heaven-entrusted gift
Is reft away forever.

But when the sea and land
Like burning scroll have fled,
I'll see it in His hand
Who judgeth quick and dead;
And when of scathe and loss
That man can ne'er repair,
The dread inquiry meets my soul,
What shall it answer there?

[Columbian Mag. for Feb.

From the Guernsey Times.

TO REV. J. ROWCLIFFE.

BY EDWIN GALLAWAY.

I saw a young star unusually bright,
Mount up and move off on the concave of night,
It pierced the deep gloom, that crowded its way,
And reflected afar an imperishable ray;
A ray, that will live, and onwardly roll,
Till leaven'd with light by the gloom of the soul,
Till error abash'd on swift wings shall depart
And Truth re-assume her lost seat in the heart.

It mov'd in its glory; diffusing its blaze,
O'er a slumbering waste a spiritual maze,
Beating back the dull mists, that obstructed its way;
With shafts that bore forth the effulgence of day.
High up, the blue vault increas'd the strong light,
For it blazed in its splendor, a gem of the night;
Its path-way still glooming, as onward it roll'd,
With the lustre of gems it had won to the fold.

But it verged nigh its setting, Oh! how calm was its sky;
All the storm clouds of time had forever pass'd by,
While a heaven of glory before it unroll'd
Its cities of jasper, and temples of gold;
With fountains and flowers, and crystalized streams;
And thrones that were grac'd with their kings and their queens;
Broke forth on the vision, and fill'd the young soul
With ecstacy full—to the mortals unknown.

But tis gone—the material frame has sunk to decay,
Yet the soul in its vigor hath flit'd away,
To the land of its father's where sweetness shall roll,
And fill up each longing desire of the soul,
Ah! happy the thought that a moment below,
If properly used, may so largely bestow;
May bring to the soul an inestimable joy,
That heif with its agents can never destroy.

Happy, thrice happy if we in life's day,
May remember that we too, are passing away—
Secure to our souls, Heaven's wisdom and light,
To guide and direct through the labyrinths of night;
That we as our brother, may pass from life's shore,
With our sorrows behind, and our glory before;
Enter the eternal portals of rest,
Where millions already, and yet shall be blest.

Cambridge, Ohio, Dec. 8, 1846.

ECCLESIASTICAL.

Written for the Western Recorder.

CHURCH DIVISION.

THINGS TO BE CONSIDERED.

NO. IX.

MR. EDITOR:—Among the disadvantages with which we shall embarrass ourselves, as a church, by division we notice,

2. That by adopting this measure, we shall expose ourselves to the just reproach of being most extravagantly inconsistent, unless we continue to carry the work of separation to a far greater extent.

This would be but the beginning of division. And if we should proceed in the work, as to be consistent with ourselves, we should find its name to be "Legion," and its end interminable. Why seperate from those in the South who allow of slavery, and not from those in the North who do the same? Most certainly, to be consistent with ourselves after such a division, we must go on, and separate from all the whigs and democrats of the north, and that for the same reasons which lead us to separate from the south. For neither of those parties are anti-slavery, as a party; but they are both connected with slavery, and slave-holders.—And we should separate from all who do not "love God with all the heart"—for certainly injustice to God, must be as criminal as cruelty to men!—And from all who are passionately fond of dress, fine horses, splendid farms and buildings, &c. &c. For they have an object on which their affections are strongly placed, and to which they are ardently devoted, which is not God, neither is it God-like. And we should separate from all who love money—for they possess the "Root of all Evil"!—And from all who are in any way covetous for they are IDOLATORS! And we should seperate from all those who use vain repetitions of God's name in prayer, or in any other way—for they take God's name in vain. And from all who do not "pray without ceasing, and in every thing give thanks"—for they disobey God. And from all married men, who do not "love their wives as their own bodies":—And from all married women who do not obey their husbands, and submit themselves unto their own husbands as unto the Lord—for they break God's Commandments. And we should separate from all such as disobey, and dishonor their parents in any way for they break God's law. And from all such as indulge in unfriendly, bitter feelings, or hatred, towards any one of the human family—for they are murderers!! And we should separate from all who may look upon female beauty with lustful desires—for they are adulterers! And from all who withhold in any way, or degree from God, their sacrifices of piety, or take to themselves praise—for they rob God, and dishonor him. And we should separate from all in whose bodies the Holy Ghost dwelleth not—for they are rebrobates! And from all who are worldly minded, and lukewarm—for they have not the spirit of Christ, and consequently are none of his—Alas—alas for us! But the end is not yet.

I may be told in answer to all this, that public opinion does not demand such action upon the subjects referred to, as it does upon the subject of slavery. Very possible, it does not. But what has public opinion to do with us, unless we are governed by worldly expediency? Surely, if we set out in reform, for perfect purity, among all our coadjutors, we should persue it, until we find it, if it is attainable, regardless of consequences. And if division is the proper way to attain to it. let us carry on division to the last extremity, if necessary. But we shall do well to thoroughly consider whether, in this instance, division will prove the most effectual means for attaining to the end desired, before we unsheathe the segregating sword. It may be there is "a more excellent way." If the "leaven" which we have is good, it may yet leaven the whole lump, only give it time to work. We shall do well to remember that every deviation from the perfect law of God, may be made to appear, as it verily is, a grievous and fearfully sinful thing; and if we lose sight of all but one, and constantly dwell, in our thoughts, upon that, it may become so magnified as to appear truly a terrible and horrible thing! But——We have two eyes, and there is more than one thing to be looked after.

E. A. W.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Government---its Administrations.

MR. EDITOR: In ecclesiastical affairs especially, the nature of a government, and the possibility of corrupt and oppresive administration, are too frequently overlooked—or their importance too little regarded, by persons who, in simplicity and sincerity connect themselves with religious communities.

When the "United Societies" of Methodists, in this land of freedom, were made, "an independent church"—"the Methodist Episcopal Church"—how few enquired into the nature of the government, or warily considered how it would be, or might be administered, in the lapse of years, and by a change of men. The principal, if not the only disciplinary provisions known to those who became members, were "the general rules of the United Societies." As early as the general conference of the year 1800, of which the writer was a member, a disposition was manifested, to set up new standards of fellowship, and establish new terms of communion. All the functions of government, being loosely vested in the itinerant ministry—unrestricted by any chart, or formal constitution—the number of those eligible to a seat in the General Confeence, rapidly increasing—the power to make, alter or amend rules &c., being without limit, over which the local ministry and laity had no control. The signs of the times were ominous—the ship was at hazzard—the shores and coasts were not marked—the early pioneers, whose sole object was, to spread scriptural holiness, and save as many souls as possible, were passing from the itinerant ranks. To perpetuate institutions deemed vitally important, and to guard against excessive legislation, as well as the infraction of the privileges of the ministry and membership, six articles were devised, and settled by the General Conference of 1808, styled "limitations and restrictions." These articles were evidently designed. 1st. To limit the number of those who should compose the General Conference. 2nd. To invest that body with "full powers to make rules and regulations for the church. 3rd. To limit and restrict those powers. The prudent old men of 1808, deemed it vitally important, to guard against prejudice and partiallity, in the exercise of executive power—therefore they said, in the 5th article "they (the General Conference) shall not do away the privileges of our ministers and preachers of trial by a committee and of an appeal &c." So also of members. The only mode, then settled, by which this article could be altered has never been resorted to—and it is a fair inference, that the forms of trial, for the trial of immoral traveling and local preachers, provided in the form of discipline, are predicated on the fifth restrictive article. It need not be disguised however, that the privilege of selecting a committee, or packing a jury, has rendered this provision, as to its salutary influence dubious—as the right of remonstrance, or challence, to any portion of the committee, is disregarded. But "limitations and restrictions," are feeble barriers, to the inroads of innovation, in an arbitrary government—especially when "episcopal decisions," are relied on with almost "explicit faith." As evidence of this, an article headed, "Decisions of Bishop Morris," is recently published, in two official church papers, endorsed by the editors of course, as no exceptions are taken to the doctrine. An Annual Conference propounds a question, and the Bishop decides, that a quarterly conference has original jurisdiction in the case of local preachers charged with immorality"—"they have it (authority) independently of a committee!" And he asks, "Who does not know the annual conference, when in session, has authority to try any of its members without a committee?" And I ask, does not this episcopal decision contravene the fifth restrictive article—and at one fell swoop "do away the privilege of trial by a committee?" And does it not, claim for a quarterly, and annual conference, "authority to try," without law, or forms of trial—leaving the adjudication of cases "on a charge of immorality," to the caprice, or arbitrary will of a conference. The privileges of ministers and members, in the M. Protestant Church, are held by a very different tenure, for the constitution, article 14. says that "in all cases of accusation against a minister, preacher, or member, the accused shall be furnished by the proper authorities, with a copy of the charges and specifications, at least twenty days before the time appointed for the trial"—and no minister or member can be expelled, "without an impartial trial before a committee." Moreover, no one who has "pre-judged the case; being prejudiced against the accused; or of being interested in the decision," can act on such committee. Here are regulations and checks, calculated to secure the faithful and impartial use of power, in the administration of discipline, which should be appreciated, by those who set a proper estimate on the value of privileges and character. Such checks upon hasty and partial administration, are wanting in the M. Episcopal Church. And the bishops "opinion," or decision, if carried out by executive officers—might deprive local preachers, whatever their grade, or standing, not only of "trial by a committee," but also of trial by their peers, because a quarterly conference may be composed of the executive officer, and a few class leaders, and perhaps a steward—all, or a majority of whom may have pre-judged the case, or be biased by the prejudice, or other influences. And thus may a useful local preacher fall a victim to the caprice, or vindictiveness, of a weak, or tyranical administrator—and that the execution of discipline, has, and may fall into such hands, under such circumstances, need not be doubted. The permanency and safety of church privileges, and the security of ministerial and christian character, depends much on disciplinary provisions, or the form of government, and still more on the administration, or the quality or qualification of those who govern. Perhaps the primitive christians were aware of this, when according to Mosheim, they exercised the right, of "choosing their own teachers and rulers"—when "the people were first in authority"—"invested with the sovereign power"—and did not rely, on the decision or opinion of a bishop, or a particular class of the clergy, for the right of trial, or the exercise, and enjoyment of their privileges. Local preachers, must hold their office, and their ministerial character, by a feeble tenure, if they are to rest on a bishops opinion—or a quarterly conference—which may be composed of inferior offices—and the mere creatures of the executive. By a rule, established, and published, in the form of discipline, in the year 1836, a local "elder, deacon, or preacher"—might be deprived "of his ministerial office"—without trial by committee, or any form of trial—"if they (the quarterly conference) judge it proper."—Alas for local preachers, should they be the objects of envy, or prejudice, with those who create, and govern the quarterly conferences. Happily local preachers, in the M. Protestant Church, are not thus exposed. L. G.

Yazoo City, Miss. Jan. 1847.

OBITUARY.

Written for the Western Recorder.

MARY ANN ORCUTT.

Departed this life, January 2d., 1847, Mary Ann Orcutt, consort of Baruch Orcutt, in the 49th year of her age. She was afflicted for something near three years, but was not confined to her bed until the last few months of her life.

She appeared to have a strong desire to live, until a few days before she died. But when death came, all dread of it was taken away. She became a member of the Methodist Protestant Church, while it was yet in its infancy, and remained a member in it, until the society, to which she had her name attached, broke up, after which she attached herself to no church. She was a warm friend of humanity, and a sincere lover of liberty, and the peaceful doctrines taught by Christ. In the latter part of her life she had happy seasons; showers of divine grace comforted her in all her troubles,—though in this world she had tribulation, in Christ she had peace. In her dying moments she had her perfect senses. Death was so divested of its terrors, that she would look at her fingers to observe the blood stagnating or congesting in the vessels. Death, to her, was a mere metamorphose—only a change; and this a change only from a world of mortality, misery and woe, to a world of immortality, life and happiness. She is gone! She is freed from a world of hatred, bickerings, and strife. Like the morning cloud that passes to its evening rest, she has retired to her blissful abode. With all the blood-washed throng she sings,—

"Salvation to Jesus, our Priest and our King,
Who hath freed us from sorrow, his praises to sing:
His goodness and mercy deserveth our praise,
Therefore, in this chorus our voices we'll raise.
Hallelujah! to the Lamb that was slain,
To redeem poor man from sorrow and pain;
His name shall be praised in the great congregation,
By the redeemed coming up from every nation."

Hope, oh, glorious hope,—it lifts our troubled spirits up! It bids us look forward to that day, (if faithful,) when we shall meet all our friends who have gone before, and washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

February 6th, 1847. A. DALBEY.

LIST OF ACTS,

Of a general nature, passed during the late session of the General Asssembly of this State:

GENERAL LAWS.

An act to authorize suits upon contracts of insurance to be brought in the county in which the contract may be made.

Making appropriations for purposes therein named.

To amend the act entitled "an act prescribing the duties of supervisors and relating to roads and highways," passed march 20, 1837.

To amend the act entitled "an act to extend the time of payment to the purchasers of school lands in this State, and an act amendatory thereto."

To provide for the payment of certain claims against the State of Ohio.

To repeal an act entitled "an act to provide for the inspection of salt manufactured in the State of Ohio, and creating the office of Inspector and defining the duties thereof," passed March 5, 1834, and for other purposes.

Authorizing subpœnas to run into any county in civil cases in which the State is a party in interest.

To amend the "act for the protection of purchasers at judicial and tax sales," passed March 2, 1846.

To amend the "act to provide for the settlement of the estates of deceased persons," passed March 23, 1840.

To amend the "act in relation to the interests of husbands in the estates of their wives," passed February 28, 1846.

Relative to the distribution of Laws and Journals.

Regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors.

Making appropriations for the year one thousand eight hundred and forty-seven.

To amend the act for the better regulation of the Surplus Revenue passed February 27, 1846.

To amend the "act for levying taxes on all property in this State according to its true value," passed March 2, 1846, and relative to levying road tax in certain counties.

To exempt Revolutionary Soldiers from taxation.

To regulate the receipt of Delinquent Taxes, and to repeal Section 12, of a certain act therein named.

To amend the act defining the powers and duties of Justices of the Peace and Constables in Civil cases.

To amend the act for the distribution and safe keeping of the Laws and Journals, passed March 12, 1831.

To establish the price of the Miami, Wabash and Erie and Ohio Canal Lands, and to secure their sale to actual settlers.

Relating to the Records of the Board of Public Works.

To amend the act to provide for a uniform standard of Weights and Measures, passed February 21, 1846.

To fix permanently the salaries of State Librarian and private Secretary to the Governor.

To facilitate the construction of the Electric Telegraph.

Relating to insurance on life for the benefit of Widows and Orphans.

To encourage Teachers' Institutes.

To create a permanent agricultural fund in the State of Ohio, and for other purposes

To amend the act allowing and regulating writs of replevin before Justices of the Peace, passed Feb. 14, 1846.

To amend the act regulating judgments and executions, passed March 4, 1831.

To amend the several acts relating to the militia.

To amend an act entitled an act for the partition of real estate, passed Feb. 17, 1831.

To amend an act entitled an act creating the office of county surveyor, and defining his duties.

Restraing the power of county commissioners to remit fines, penalties and judgments in certain cases.

To amend the act entitled an act for the relief of insolvent debtors.

Further to amend the act entitled an act for the support and better regulations of common schools, and to create permanently the office of superintendent.

To authorize the making of roads and drains in certain cases.

Further to amend the act entitled an act securing the benefits of the of habeas corpus, passed Feb. 2, 1811.

To amend an act entitled an act for the encouragement of agriculture, passed, Feb. 27, 1846.

To regulate the compensation of Associate Judges and other officers therein named.

Providing for the examination of the books, of county auditors and county treasures.

For the relief of the creditors of turnpike companies in which the State is stockholder.

For the relief of creditors on the National Road.

To provide for the payment of interest on county orders.

To provide for funding debts of the Ohio University.

To provide for the appointment of County Superintendents of Common Schools, and defining their duties, in certain counties therein named.

To encourage the organization of Fire Companies, and to repeal former acts.

To dispose of two escheated lots in the town of Mansfield, Richland county.

To amend an act entitled an act to amend the act to provide for the vacating of town plats and other purposes, passed Feb. 19, 1840.

Repealing portions of the act passed January 13, 1846, entitled an act to reduce the compensation of the members of the General Assembly, Clerks, Assistant Clerks and Sergeants-at-Arms.

SMOKE.—We se it stated that $20,000,000 are annually consumed in the United States, in cigars. We suppose that this does not include pipes; and if it do not, we add a few millions, considering the number of Dutchman about. Mynheer Von Ten Breeks from Der Neberlands, and Mynheer Von Sour Krawt from Vaterland, luxuriate over long-tailed pipes and short-tailed meershaums, and despise such trifles as cigars, things fit only foe Spanish and Mexican ladies. But by whomever, and in whatever mode this tobacco is puffed, we may well say of it that, ten or more millions end in smoke, leaving no traces behind, excepting dingy walls, begrimmed furniture, abominably scented clothing, sallow and muddy skins, damaged teeth, intolerable breath, and diminution of intellectual, digestive and reproductive power.

Upon the last, not the least in the train of evils produced by tobacco, we have bestowed some investigation, led to it by considering that all undue stimulation must diminish all kinds of nervous energy, and thus wear out evey function too fast, especially all those requiring the greatest amount of nervous energy in their healthy exercise. And we were led to this investigation by considering that all powerful narcotics, as opium, hemlock and others, break down nervous energy sooner than anything else, excepting lightning, and that tobacco was one of the most powerful narcotics. And we found additional hints in the pale and muddy complexion, trembling hands, tottering gait, mental instability, and alternations between excitement and depression, common to chewers and smokers of opium and excessive smokers of tobacco, and the victims of other excess, solitary or social. Such things lead to inquiry among enlightened physicians, concerning their experience among the class of victims last named; and the answer to such inquiries was that, the principal and worst symtoms in such cases were aggravated by the smoking of tobacco. We therefore give hints to all smokers, referring them to enlightened and experienced physicians, and telling them that if this pathology be correct, they are prematurely exhausting more than one source of life, health, duty and legitimate enjoyment.

And if ten or more millions of dollars be exhausted in smoke, how much of things more valuable would they purchase? And to purposes how infinitely better for humanity, could be applied the land and labor now appropriated to the production and sale of all this poison? When the smoke is blown away by scientific and moral investigation, the subject appears in hideous deformity, physical and moral.—Dollar Newspaper.

FUTURE PUNISHMENT.—Certain religionists, of modern times, cannot find the doctrine of future punishment in the Bible; and they have displayed no little zeal in searching and enquiring whence it originated. What is the meaning of the following language of our Savior to his apostles? "And I say unto you, my friends, be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do. But I will forewarn you whom ye shall fear: Fear him which, after he hath killed, hath power to cast into hell; yea, I say unto you, fear him." The Savior gives a reason why his apostles should not fear men, viz: because they only kill the body, and can do nothing more. He gives a reason why they should fear God, viz:—because, after he has killed the body, he can cast men into hell. Then there must be such a place as hell; and it must be a place where sinners are punished after death. If not, there is no meaning in our Savior's language. If there is no danger of being punished by God after death, what is the force of his reasoning? You may try to throw dust in the eyes of men by critical dissertations on the words hades dan gahena; but every man of common sense, unless strangely blinded by prejudice, sees that there is a hell which is a place of punishment after death.

Take a parallel passage: "And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." Math. x. 28. Observe, men can kill the body; but they cannot kill the soul, that is immortal. But God can destroy both soul and body in hell. We have seen, that hell is a place of punishment after death, and here we learn, that it is a place of punishment for the soul as well as the body; and, moreover, that the punishment will be eternal, for both soul and body are destroyed. This is a strong word; and it must mean literal annihilation, or the destruction of all that is dear to man—the ruin of his peace and happiness.

It matters little, then, by whom this doctrine was first taught. It was certainly taught by Jesus Christ, and this is enough.—Presb. of the West.

THE PRAYER OF A MISER.—Among many curious papers found after the decease of John Ward, a member of the British Parliament for Hackney, there was one in his own handwriting, of which the following is a copy. It is an admirable satire, and we commend it to certain persons who must be nameless:

"Oh Lord, thou knowest that I have nine houses in the city of London, and likewise that I have purchased an estate in fee simple in the county of Essex; I beseech thee to preserve the counties of Middlesex and Essex from fire and earthquakes, as I have a mortgage in Hertfordshire, I beg of the likewise to have an eye of compassion on that county; other counties thou mayst deal with as thou pleasest. Oh Lord, enable the banks to answer all their bills, and make all my debtors good men. Give a prosperous voyage and return to the Mermaid sloop, because I have insured in it; and as thou hast said that the days of the wicked are but short, I trust in thee thou wilt not forget the promise as I have purchased an estate in reversion, which will be mine on the death of that profligate young man, Sir J——— L———.—Keep my friends from sinking, and preserve me from thieves and house-breakers, and make all my servants so honest and faithful that they may attend to my interest and never cheat me out of my property, night or day."

MISS DIX, the benevolent Quakeress, has presented a memorial to the Illinois Legislature, in favor of erecting a Lunatic Asylum in that State. During the last year, she visited a large portion of Illinois on her mission of mercy, and in her memorial she gives the result of her investigation.

JACOB THORN,

WHOLESALE dealer in all kinds of NOTIONS, No. 91, Wilson's Row, the first store below the Court House, is now opening a new and complete assortment of

NOTIONS AND DRY GOODS,

which will be sold wholesale, at prices a little below what they have ever been sold in this place.—Country Merchants and Pedlers, visiting the city are respectfully invited to examine my stock before purchasing elsewhere, among which may be found the following articles:—

800	Packs American solid head Pins.
200,000	Drilled Ey'd Needles, Sharps and Betweens.
2000	Doz Spool Thread.
500	Lbs. Patent do.
800	do. Cotton do.
3000	Doz. Side Combs.
600	do. Fine Ivory do.
500	do. Dressing do.
100	do. Woolen Comforters.
100	Brass Clocks.
1500	Prints (Engravings,) high col'd.
100	Doz. Chapman Strops.
5000	Almanacks.
300	Shawls, different patterns.
100	Gross Kitting Pins.
4	Bbls. Blacking.
30	Doz. slates.
50	Gt. Gro. Agate Shirt Buttons
500	Coils Bonnet Wire.
50	Gross Boot Laces.
500	do. Hooks and Eyes on Cards
100	do. Wood Combs.
200	do. Sherred and G. E. Suspenders
12	Boxes Fire Crackers
12	Doz. Looking-Glasses.
100	Gross Pearl Shirt Buttons.
6	Bales Brown Muslin.
200	Doz. Mitts.

Combs of every description, Buttons, Penknives, Razors, Table and Tea Spoons, Tapes, Eyeletts, Jewsharps, Pencils, Shaving Boxes, Gloves, Ladies cotton Hose, Matches, Dress Handkfs., Laces and Edgings, Spectacles, Thimbles, Beads, Candle Wicking, Night caps, Primers, Calicoes, bleached Muslins, Wafers, &c.

WANTED in exchange for goods at wholesale prices, Feathers, Beeswax, Ginsang, Rags and Hogs Bristles tied up in small bunches, for which will be given twenty-five cents a pound for all that can be brought in good order

Zanesville, O. Nov. 7, 1846.

NOTICE.

THERE will be a petition presented to the trustees of Newton Township, Muskingum county, at there annual meeting on the first Monday in March next, praying for a Township Road to commence at a stone bridge on the old Lancaster Road at Kent's run at the foot of John Williams's hill, thence to run a Northwardly direction to the corners of land owned by G. M. Crooks and Lewis Stine.

January 23*d*, 1847.

NOTICE

IS hereby given, that a petition will be presented to the Commissioners of Muskingum County, at their March session, praying for a county road, beginning at a point in the Cooper Mill Road in Springfield township, and where the west line of Barnett Workmans land crosses said Cooper Mill road, from thence running north-eastwardly thro' the lands of B. Workman and William Vansant to the lower end of William Vansant's field, (known as the middle meadow,(thence northwardly to the north-west corner of John Vansant's orchard, from thence north-eastwardly on the nearest and best route through the lands of John Vansant and James Vansant, so as to intersect the Flint Ridge Road (so called) near the west end of Cornelius Starkey's farm.

January 15, 1847.

NOTICE

IS hereby given that a petition will be presented to the Commissioners of Muskingum County their March session, praying for an alteration in so much of the county road known by the name of George Norman's road as lies between the Cooper Mill Road and William Vansant's barn. The proposed road to commence at said Cooper Mill road, where the west line of Barnett Workman's land crosses said road. Thence eastwardly to the lower end of William Vansant's field, (known as the middle meadow,) thence north to the lane, thence west so as to intersect the original road east of William Vansant's barn, all in Springfield township;

January 12, 1847.

JAMES K. LOGAN,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

FOREIGN & DOMESTIC DRY GOODS

No. 83 Wood St., (One door from Diamond Alley,) Pittsburgh, Pa.

COME AND SEE!!

THE SUBSCSIBERS offer very low for CASH, STONE WARE or COUNTRY PRODUCE,

35	pieces assorted Cloths, very low,
20	" Jeans,
300	" Prints, cheaper than ever,
100	" Merinos, Alpaccas, De Laines, &c.,
50	" Tweeds and Cassinets,
25	" Flannels,
22	" Check.

Boots, Shoes, Queensware, Groceries, and a great variety of goods not mentioned.

In a word, they have on hand a LARGE STOCK of goods, which they

WISH TO SELL.

To sell them, they must be sold CHEAP, this they will do. J. C. GUTHRIE & SONS, successors to
GUTHRIE'S & BUCKINGHAM.

P.S. We will say to Potters engage not your ware before calling on us. We are dealing EXTENSIVELY in that article, and are determined to buy it on such terms as will prove satisfactory. J. C. G. & S's.

Putnam, O. Jan. 1, 1847.

NEW HISTORY OF TEXAS, pages 152. 25 cents. A few copies to be had at the office of the Western Recorder. Published by G. Conclin Cincinnati.

PUTNAM BOARDING HOUSE.

THE SUBSCRIBER having been for the last sixteen years keeping Tavern and Boarding House, would respectfully acquaint the public—that he has established a Bording House in Putnam, and hopes by strict attention to business he will merit a share of public patronage. His accommodations shall be good, and his table, for variety not surpassed by any Hotel or Boarding House in the West. R. PUTNAM.

October 31st, 1846.

N. B. Application for boarding should be made soon R. P.

Something New.

JUST PUBLISHED

By GEORGE CONCLIN, 39 Main st. Cincinnati,

A NEW HISTORY OF TEXAS.

INCLUDING an account of the late WAR WITH MEXICO, together with other interesting matter relating to that country. This history is published in pamphlet form, 12 mo., containing 152 pages and will be sold cheap.

ALSO—A NEW HISTORY OF OREGON AND CALIFORNIA, (BY LANSFORD HASTINGS) containing a minute description of the different routes to those countries—a description of the soil, products of the soil, Towns, Bays, Harbors, Rivers, Lakes, manners and customs of the inhabiants, &c. &c.

DISSOLUTION.

IT is nearly two years since the firm of A. A. GUTHRIE & Co., was dissolved, so far as the selling of Goods is concerned. It is this day fully dissolved by mutual consent all debts due the concern are to be paid to A. A. Guthrie—who earnestly requests ear y payments & especially urges all who have suffered their accounts to stand open thus far, to come immediately and settle.

A. A. GUTHRIE,
G. N. GUTHRIE.

Putnam, Dec. 14th, 1846

GEORGE CONCLIN,

BOOKSELLER AND PUBLISHER,

Stationer, Binder, and

BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURER,

No. 39 Main Street, Cincinnati.

KEEPS on hand Books published by the Methodist Protestant Church—such as
CHURCH HYMN BOOKS,
REVIVAL " "
DISCIPLINES,
EVANS' QUESTIONS & ANSWERS, &c.

ALSO—Just received—A supply of the CHRISTIAN WORLD in 3 Vols. with Portraits of the Wesleys, &c., by REA THOS. H. STOCKTON.

PROSPECTUS OF THE

LITERARY ATHENÆUM,

A NEW AND SPLENDID MONTHLY MAGAZINE,

TO BE EDITED BY THE

Rev. Henry D. Moore, of Philadelphia,—and Rev. Andrew A. Lipscomb, Professor of English Literature and Belle Letters, in the city of Baltimore.

ON the first of January, 1847, the subscribers intend issuing the first number of a spendid Monthly Magazine, to be called the "LITERARY ATHENÆUM," to be devoted to the interest and circulation of a mind-refining, soul-inspiring, spirit-stirring literature; such a literature, in a word, as the progressive taste of society seems to demand.

Between the magazines of the day, which are devoted almost exclusively to the circulation of Christian Literature, and those devoted to the light, and in too many instances, tasteless and corrupting literature—there is a wide and deep chasm, to fill which successfully and profitably, very few attempts have been made. To supply this void, to some extent at least, is the intention of the subscribers, in issuing the "Literary Athenæum."

The general cast and character of the contents of the proposed magazine will be fixed according to the standard of the most sterling intellect, and the most liberal appreciation of the wants of the common mind. Its pages will ever present a feast and a glow, to feed and illumine the loftiest and purest taste and spirit of the admirers and lovers of refining and exalting literary walks and research.

To secure this grand design, effectually and honorably, no pains or expenses will be spared.

The contents will be purely original; consisting of Lectures, Addresses, Essays, &c., on the most popular and exciting literary and scientific subjects, from the most able writers that can be secured—interspersed and relieved by beautiful poetic composition.

Science, Art, and government, in their almost infinite variety development and interest, will be liberay and honorably discussed in its pages.

Arrangements are in progress for an extensive and important European correspondence, which will be a feature of great interest in its varied connections.

In addition to such articles, there will be presented occasional tales of unexceptionable character and style, differing essentially from the weakish romances which fill the pages of the many magazines of the day. Writers in this connection, can be secured, whose productions are the embodiment of life, true to itself,—and which will kindle and glow with the loftiest and purest sentiment, and thrill with the beauties of morality and religion in their loveliest forms.

Each number of the Athenæum will contain four embellishments of the first artistical merit, One of them will be a portrait of some distinguished personage in this country or in Europe, accompanied with an interesting biograpical sketch. Another will be a view of the buildings and grounds, of some one of the popular Universities, in this or the old world, accompanied with a historical, biograpical and statisical sketch in this body of the work. The portraits will be fine mezzotint, and the college views, beautiful line engravings. Then will follow richly colored specimens of flowers and fruit; in connection with which, there will also be presented interesting notices—floral and botanical—of climate, habits, culture, &c. All of which cannot but secure interest and favor.

Each number will comprise sixty pages of letter-press, double column, beautifully stereotyped, and printed on fine white paper; the whole corresponding in all respects, with the character of the other departments of the work.

Such is to be the character of the work at its commencement. If it is succersful, as it ought to be, and as is hoped and believed it will be,—improvement will be made as far as possible in the different departments, as they are suggested in the progress of the work.

The subscribers take pleasure in announcing to the public, that they have concluded arrangements with the Rev. Henry D. Moore, of Philadelphia, and Rev. Andrew A Lipscomb, Professor of English Literature and Belle Letters, of Raltimore, who will co-operate as Editors the of new Magazine. Under the management of those gentleman, the subscribers flatter themselves, abundant success will be secured in behalf of the enterprise.

TO PUBLISHERS.

The subscribers would also give notice to Publishers, at home and abroad, that there will be in connection with the work, an extensive review department. This will be made a feature of excelling interest. The department will be conducted fairly and honorably, and all works sent to the office of the subscribers, will receive such notices as their character may demand.

The first number will be issued on the first of January, 1847. Its contents and the name of contributors, will be published shortly.

TERMS—Three dollars per annum, in advance.

Editors of papers, copying this Prospectus, and sending a paper with it, to the office of the "Athenæum," shall receive the numbers of the work, and the thanks of the publishers.

All letters, containing orders for the work, post-paid, and enclosing the subscription price, will receive prompt attention. To be addressed to F. C. WILSON & Co.

Philadelphia, Pa.

THE WEEKLY

CHRISTIAN WORLD;

An Independent, Comprehensive, and Impartial Newspaper; designed for welcome and useful circulation; Among all Friends of Christian Union, Christian Benevolence, and Christian Literature. To be published every Saturday, At the Reading-Room of the Christian Athenæum, over the Book-store of Mr. James Harmstead, Fourth St., between Market and Arch Sts., Philadelphia;

Price:—Two Dollors a-year invariably in advance.

T. H. STOCKTON,
J. G. WILSON,
THEOPHILUS STORK. } Editors.

W. S. STOCKTON,—General Agent.

TO persons who are acquainted with the character and objects of the CHRISTIAN WORLD, as they have been developed during the last six years, it is only necessary to say, that as soon as one thousand paying subscribers are secured, the paper will be put to press. The Old Subscription List ought to supply this number at once.

To other persons, it is proper to remark, that the Christian World, in print, is intended to reflect the Christian World, in action—in a word, daguerreotype it: and then, for purposes of common advantage, to compare the organized and operature Religion of the Age with the Religion of the Bible.

The enlarged literary and business agencies of the Establishment, are deemed amply sufficient to assure the public of successful management. Its immediate connexion with the CHRISTIAN ATHENEUM—an Institution which is to be furnished with many of the principal organs of Church and State, both in Europe and America,—will give its conductors early access to invaluable sources of universal intelligence.

DIRECTIONS

1. On receipt of this Prospectus, let the Old subscribers at every Post-office, appoint one of their number, or some other suitable person, an Agent. Let him send us, at once, as many names and as much money as possible. In cases where substantial agents make themselves responsible for their subscribers, this responsibility will be regarded as equivalent to payment in advance—provided they settle their accounts within six months. Even in such cases, however, immediate payments are decidedly preferable; and, to encourage them, the commissions to agants are arranged thus:—On cash orders, 25 per cent.: on deferred remittances, 12½ per cent.

2. As the Prospectus will be widely distributed, let all persons who see it, and feel an interest in it, act promptly in the manner described above. It is thought that a little effort will be sufficient to procure a company, or club, at almost any Post-office in the Union. The times increasingly demand just such a publication as is proposed.

Address,—W. S. STOCKTON, General Agent, Philadelphia, Pa.: or either of the Associate Editors. All orders will be punctually attended to.

T. H. STOCKTON,
Editor and Proprietor.

Philadelphia, December, 1846.

M. P. DISCIPLINES—NEW EDITION.

WE have on hand a supply, lately received from the Book Agent, Baltimore, which we will be pleased to furnish to brethren of surrounding Circuits, at wholesale or retail prices. For sale at the office of this paper.

SACRED MELODEON.

WE have received from the publishers, 50 copies of this excellent collection of Spiritual Songs, compiled by Brs. Joel Dalbey and J. B. Peat of the Ohio Conference, and lately published at Cincinnati. For sale at the office of the Western Recorder, by the dozen or single.

DISSOLUTION.

THE partnership of GUTHRIES & LARGE is this day dissolved by mutual consent. All matters pertaining to the closing up of the business will be transacted at the old stand.

A. A. GUTHRIE.
W. P. LARGE.
GEO. N. GUTHRIE.

Putnam, O. January 1, 1847.

THE WESTERN RECORDER.

VOL. VIII---NO. 21. PUTNAM, MUSKINGUM COUNTY, OHIO, FEBRUARY 25, 1847. WHOLE NO. 385.

The Western Recorder,

Is Published every Thursday,

AT PUTNAM, OPPOSITE ZANESVILLE, OHIO.

OFFICE ON MAIN STREET.

A. H. BASSETT, Editor and Proprietor.

REVERDY H. WHITE, PRINTER.

TERMS.—Two Dollars per annum, in advance. Two fifty at the close of the year. Payments within three months will be considered in advance.

All letters and communications must be addressed, to the Editor, post paid, except such as contain funds, and directed to Putnam Muskingum Co. Ohio.

Itinerant Ministers and others, who collect from subscribers and remit to us as much as ten dollars within one year, shall receive a copy of the paper free.

Itinerant ministers and preachers, not acting as agents, can have the paper at one dollar.

Clubs of ten or more, paying at the time of subscribing, shall have the paper for $15, i. e. one dollar fifty, each.

THEOLOGICAL.

Written for the Western Recorder.

RESURRECTION.

Mr. Editor: The belief in the resurrection of the dead, at a future period, I conceive to be of great importance. For, as the apostle Paul argues, "If there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen: And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain." The whole system of Christianity is founded on the truth of the resurrection of the dead: and he who rejects this doctrine, at once discards the plan of redemption, the propriety of preaching, and the remission of sins; and, also, the genuineness of the faith of the saints, both ancient and modern. There is, however, sufficient evidence, to satisfy the candid enquirer after truth, that the Lord Jesus did actually arise from the dead.

There is no controversy among men of any known denomination, that the Lord Jesus was fixt on the cross till his enemies became satisfied he was really dead. He was then taken down, being severed from the transfixed beams, and laid in a new sepulchre, hewn out in a rock, and a great stone rolled against the door. At the request of the Jews, the bitter enemies of Christ and his followers, there were placed around the tomb a band of Roman soldiers; who were bound by the peril of their lives, to keep awake, and prevent any person from removing the dead body of the Lord Jesus. Nothing was omitted to prevent the imposition the Jews appeared to apprehend; namely, that of the disciples stealing the body of their Lord, and then proclaiming that Christ had risen from the dead. Here, now, is the body of the Lord Jesus, inactive and lifeless, in a tomb from which there is no way for a living man to escape by any apertures, but the door; and this closed by a great stone, which would require the strength of several men to remove; to prevent which, and the removal of the body, here stand the faithful, watchful Roman soldier. Nothwithstanding all this precaution, the deciples, the soldiers, and the Jews all declare that after the third day, the body of Jesus was no longer in the tomb.

There are, as far as I can discover, only three possible ways, under the the then attending circumstances, by which, the body of the Lord Jesus, could have left the tomb of Joseph of Arimathea. The Jews affirmed that the disciples came, and while the soldiers slept, stole away the dead body of Christ. This is one way in which the body of the Saviour, if there had been nothing to prevent, might have been removed from the tomb. But to enable the disciples to accomplish this, the soldiers must, truly, all have been asleep; and if asleep, they did not know that the disciples stole the body: and if awake, why did they suffer it to be done. It will, also, be recollected, that the disciples, when their Lord was apprehended, were cowardly, that they all forsook him and fled; and Peter—the courageous Peter, followed afar off: and when interrogated by a maid about his connection with Jesus of Nazareth, he became so alarmed, that with cursing and swearing, he denied having any knowledge of him. What, then, could operated upon these cowardly men so suddenly, that they would now, in the face of armed men, for no prize, venture to attempt to steal the body of Christ? I said for no prize: for of what utility could the dead body of Jesus be to them, only, continually to bear testimony, that they had been imposed upon by one in whom they had, previously, placed implicit confidence? And further; no threats, no sorrows, no sufferings, nor even death itself, could make the disciples, or any one of them, ever make any other declarations than that, "The Lord is risen indeed." "We have seen the Lord." Let all men of common sense say wether the conduct of the disciples, if they stole the dead body of Christ, is not at variance with the conduct of all other men; and especially dishonest men; for dishonest they must have been, if they had stolen the body of the Saviour, and yet proclaimed he was alive, when they well knew he was dead. It is then, not to be supposed, that the disciples stole the dead body of their Lord, while the soldiers slept at the door of the sepulchre.

Another way, and if it did not arise from the dead, the only probable way in which the dead body of Jesus left the tomb, is, the Jews themselves might have had it removed, as there were no obstructions, and then, when the disciples proclaimed that Christ had risen from the dead, to present the body, and thus offer indubitable evidence that the declaration was false, and forever silence the disciples and all others. The disciples will declare that the Lord Jesus had risen from the dead; but the Jews never pretended they had the body of the Saviour in their possession, and could convince any, by presenting it, that the disciples were deceivers; which it is known they would have done, if they could. Then, it cannot be supposed, that the Jews removed the dead body of Christ to a place of concealment, for the purpose of refuting any declarations the disciples might make.

If the disciples did not steal the body of the Lord, and the Jews did not remove it from the tomb, there is only one more probable way in which the body of Christ could have left the place in which it had been deposited; and that is, by arising to life again, as the soldiers at first said, and all the disciples, always, afterwards declared it had done. If the body of the Lord Jesus, arose from the dead, of which no reasonable doubt can exist, then, agreeably to Paul's mode of reasoning, there will be a ressurrection of the bodies of all men, from Adam to his youngest child.

There have been various conjectures, as to what parts of the human system, will be raised at the last day. Some, no doubt, to obviate philosophical difficulties as they conceived, have satisfied themselves that there is, in every human body, an indestructible germ; which, alone, will be raised in the resurrection. This germ, if I remember correctly, they contend cannot, as it is well known our present systems. after dissolution may enter into other bodies, and constitute a portion of them. How any man can demonstrate to the satisfaction of himself and others, that such a germ really exists, is more than I am competent to decide. No man has ever heard, smelled, tasted, felt or seen anything which was known to be a germ of this kind. That a germ of this nature exists, is no where revealed by the word of God, so far as I have any knowledge. The only grounds possible, from which a remote inference that a germ of this character exists can be drawn, is that, in which the apostle, in the fifteenth chapter of his first epistle to the Corinthians, elucidates the resurrection by grain, as a figure; the whole force of which, is to demonstrate, that it will be the essential properties of the identical body that will be raised, which here died; just the same as it is the identical body that here dies, which was born into this world; that is, as the germ of the grain is all the essential properties which are necessary to form a new stock of the same species, so all the essential properties of our bodies necessary to form a new body, will be raised in the resurrection. Others have perplexed themselves to decide how the Deity can, in the resurrection, sever the particular portions of bodies from others, after the first has been food for the latter, and formed a part of these. Can any man tell how the Lord performs any work by the exertion of his omnipotence? I think not; yet I have always remained entirely satisfied that He, who is omnicient and Almighty, can never be at any loss to effect all that is necessary in the resurrection of all the dead at the last day.

In the resurrection, the righteous shall rise first; and then the unrighteous shall come forth to the resurrection of damnation. Subsequent to the resurrection, all, of every grade, shall stand before the judgment seat of Christ, and the secrets of all hearts be disclosed, and every one be judged according to his works, with inflexible justice and impartiality. What an eventual period! How different will the characters of many, in that day appear from that given them in this world by their fellow men. Many, who in this world, have been contemned and vilified, will there shine as the sun in the firmanent; and, by the Judge, be acknowledged to be the Sons of the of the Living God, and be crowned with glory ineffable. Many, who here were esteemed by men, as valiant soldiers of the cross, and highly honored and respected as the most pious, will there be discovered to have been men who were actuated by the basest passions and motives. They will then say—: "Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works?" Deluded souls, you must depart—your Judge never knew you! You may have prayed in public—may have preached the gospel—may have been the channel through which truth flowed to the hearts and consciences of others—these may now stand on the right hand of God, and with astonishment discover your real character; and while these are saved, you are forever and forever lost. An eternal separation will now take place between the just and the unjust, the righteous and the unrighteous, the holy and the unholy. The sentence is never to be reversed. The righteous will be crowned with glory, the unrighteous through their own fault, are forever lost.

John Hill.

Batavia, O. Feb. 2, 1847.

Western Sketches.

Written for the Western Recorder.

"THE WAY THEY DO HERE."

NO. I.

Having a few leisure minutes I will give you a few hints to let your readers know how things are "done up" in our parts. We are a peculiar sort of people, situated in a peculiar part of the world, peculiarly adapted to vice and immorality. And denominated "The devil's reserve."

Toward the close of the past year (1846) there were a few Balls in our neighborhood to work up the ambition of the young folks that delight in dancing, that "Christmas times" might pass over with a good portion of glee and activity as well as a great deal of pleasure. A pretty general turn out of the younger part of this and the surrounding settlements adorned the rooms fitted out for the occasion. When congregated, they commenced their frolicking which consisted in dancing, drinking, other scenes, not suitable to mention, holding out for some two or three days according as they could stand it. Having (as was stated) a real Christmas frolic, that it might be a time long to be remembered. But when the frolicking broke up and the company began to disperse, I had the heart sickening sensation of beholding some of this pleasure seeking, ideal happiness enjoying part of community. And such a sight! Drooping, moping and half sleeping about, entirely disqualified for sociability of every discription even among themselves. This is the less strange however when we consider the amount of physical exercise necessary on such occasions, the loss of sleep, &c. Add to this the reverence due (from such assemblies) to King Alcohol and we might with propriety suppose it was to such sensual beings as these that the Saviour said "Ye are of your father the devil and the lusts of your father ye will do." "As therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire so shall it be in the end of this world."

But this pleasure-seeking, fashion-worshiping, whisky drinking assemblage, not satisfied with the performance just past immediately set about preparing for another that was to supercede the Christmas times in all its bearings, and in every particular, so much so that there was scarcely any thing to be heard of but Balls, parties, frolics, &c. And these were to take place on the evening before the advent of the New Year and to continue till all were satisfied or at least bring in the New Year with frolic and dance. And when the times appointed had fully come the younger part of the community, both male and female repaired to the several places of rendezvous, and the old men to the doggeries, groceries and other places of intoxication, that they might satiate their unquenchable thirsts and see some "pleasure" in their old days. There they continue pouring in the liquid streams of woe and misery until they become insensible to surrounding objects and nothing is to be heard but the drunken hurra of inebriates and the clamorous noise of those whom intoxication has deprived of reason and self-control. By degrees they sink down like some inert mass, helpless and unconscious as a "millers bag." But ere long they triumph over "Captain Whisky" and prepare for another and more desperate combat by coming forward to the Bar in a solid phalanx and the keeper (always ready) again unstops the den of the "fiery flying serpent" and each quaffs his petition with greediness. But as New Years day has at length appeared they determine to use a little more prudence that they may last all day or that they may not be overcome before night.

In the meantime, the fiddling and dancing is kept up by the young folks at a vigorous rate, each putting forth all their powers to excel in the performance, until a considerable part of the day is past and being overcome with weariness and frequent potations they desist from a further continuation of hard earned pleasure to seek other and more extended enjoyments.

The ladies were received into wagons that were in waiting for the purpose and conveyed to their respective places of abode, through the unwelcome mud, and torrents of rain that was coming down without any respect of persons or places.

The young gentlemen came forth and soon found their respective sires in the groggeries &c. and encountered no difficulty in commingling with the armies of Bacchus already in these out posts of Satan. In this situation, they (probably) reflecting on the scenes they had just passed through and thinking themselves in some respects deficient, began laying plans for making dancing a part of their business; that is, hire a teacher and have a school conducted scientifically. By that means they would not only become perfect but from the practice obtained thereby they would be enabled to continue much longer with less fatigue in the ball-room.

Thus was the carousing protracted till a late hour of the night, and they were compelled to seek their homes for refreshment and repose, and those that were so far overcome with the poisonous effects of strong drink as to disable them, seeking a place of shelter, were turned out into the mud, to do the best they could for themselves. And thus I might describe time after time and "days without number," but I forbear. If you think this "sketch" worth an insertion I will try to furnish you with a sketch of our morals for the last sixteen years.

Yours respectfully, Nem. Con.

"Farther West." Jan. 10, 1847.

Ministers' Department.

Preaching without Study.

"Preaching without study," said an eminent divine, "is presumption." And presumptuous it must be for an erring mortal to enter upon the discharge of so important a duty without study; nor is it possible for such a man to "bring out of his treasury things new and old." Alas! treasury he has none who never studies. The venerable Wesley has said in his advice to a preacher, "Study the most useful books, and that regularly and constantly. Steadily spend all the morning in this employ, or at least five hours in four-and-twenty." Anticipating the objection, "I read only the Bible," he replies, "then you ought to teach others to read only the Bible, and by a parity of reason, to hear, only the Bible; but if so, you need preach no more. If you need no other book but the Bible, you have got above St. Paul. He wanted others too. "Bring the books," said he, "but especially the parchments." Contract a taste for study by study, or return to your trade."

We are persuaded that an attention to this rule would strike at the root of much of the prevailing fanaticism of the times; and that if the trouble and pains of inquiry were more frequently rendered than they are, we should be presented with less religious novelty and religious distraction. The insisting upon this requirement would keep out many of the unqualified from the Christian ministry; and were it attended to in all cases, we should see less of the presumption and disputation which, in these days, is found to disturb the religious world. Such a study, too, as Mr. Wesley recommends—not merely of the Bible, but of sound interpretations of the Bible also, those for instance which are furnished in the Christian writers of the earlier and purer ages—would remove the leading cause of that diversity of sentiment which has presented our common Christianity, not in the strength and beauty of its intended unity and concord, but disfigurded by a multitude of conflicting sects.

Levity in the Pulpit.—The gospel ought to be solemnly preached. The habit of jesting (to say nothing of filthy communications) is of doubtful propriety in a minister of Christ any where; but when he mingles jokes and facticious stories with the truths of the ever blessed gospel, he is guilty of a gross impropriety. He diverts the minds of men from serious thoughts upon the most serious of all subjects. He gives the enemies of religion a pretext to blaspheme, and, in multitudes of cases, we believe he quenches the Spirit of God, and destroys the influence of the gospel which he preaches. Wit and fun are as much out of place in the pulpit, as they would be in the chamber of death, or the house of mourning. That which will be to multitudes "a savour of life unto life, or of death unto death"—which will be the means of raising immortal souls to the blessedness of heaven, or sink them deeper in the perdition of hell—ought to be seriously performed.

"He that negotiates 'twixt God and man,
As God's Embassador, the grand concerns
Of judgment and of mercy, should beware
Of lightness in his speech. 'Tis pitiful
To court a laugh, when he should woo a soul;
To break a jest, when pity should inspire
Pathetic exhortation; and to address
The skittish fancy with facetious tales,
When sent with God's commission to the heart."

[Chris Obs.

A Story with a Moral.—When Charles the Second chartered the Royal Society it is narrated of him that he was disposed to give the philosophers a royal, but at the same time a wholesome lecture. "Why is it, my lords and gentlemen," said he, "that if you fill a vessel with water to the very brim, so that it will not hold a drop more yet, putting a turbot into the water, it shall not overflow the vessel?" Many were the sage conjectures—that the fish would drink as much water as compensation for his own bulk—that he condensed the water to that amount—that the air-bladder had something to do with the phenomena—and a hundred others, which were propounded in their turn, much to the amusement of the 'merry monarch.' At length Mr. Wren (afterwards Sir Christopher) modestly asked, "but is your Majesty sure that such would be the case?" 'Aye, there,' exclaimed his Majesty, laughing, "you have it; always, gentlemen, find out whether the thing be true before you proceed to account for it; then I shall not be ashamed of the charter I have just given you."

TEMPERANCE.

The Science of Perpendicularity.

One of our exchanges treats its readers to an article on the danger of falling in icy times, and closes with the ejaculation, 'Oh, they are perilous things, these practical demonstrations of 'attraction of gravitation,' and number many martyrs about these time."

There is one consolation, we think, which may be indulged by the sober at such times, which is, that he has the decided advantage over those who partake of those fashionable beverages which have more to do with the fall of men than "slippery pavements" have. We should not be surprised at the following scene, which our brother editor describes, if we looked at the subject in its true light.

"Here you see a stripling pursuing his course 'in hot haste,' suddenly brought to by the force of attraction of a certain part of the side-walk." It is well enough to lay the blame in such cases on the slippery side-walk, but how often are such little incidents attributable to indulgence in a very bad habit upon the part of the "stripling."

If a man wishes to perfect himself in the science of perpendicularity he must forsake his cups. The man of sobriety can walk more safely upon ice than the drunkard upon the best pathway.—We would not by any means contend that a sober man will never get a fall in "icy times," but we do assert that it is almost certain, if a drinker ventures a dozen rods from home on a "sleety day or at any other time, he may expect to find himself, every now and then—where drinking brings its votaries—in the gutter. To avoid danger then touch not the glass!—Columbian Fountain.

"Not a Drop, Sir!"—As we were passing through Portland one day last week, we stopped at the Elm House, which has been converted from one of the worst drinking places in the city to a strictly teetotal house. While waiting for our dinner, we heard an old gentleman from Salem, a very tidily-dressed and respectfully-appearing man, call the bar-tender into the hall, and ask him for a glass of liquor; and were greatly pleased to hear the bar-keeper reply, "Not a drop, sir! not a drop!" Oh, that all the keepers of all the hotels in our land, could say to the poor drunkard, when he called for the poison, "Not a drop, sir! not a drop!"

General Taylor a Teetotaler.—The Norfolk Courer says—'It will be gratifying to the friends of "Old Rough and Ready," to know that he is a "staunch teetotaler," and has not drank a glass of 'the ardent' for twenty years past. This we state upon authority that we believe to be unquestionable, and come from an old friend of General Taylor, and one who has recently seen and conversed with him."

Ladies' Department.

Suffering Ireland.

ADDRESS TO THE LADIES OF AMERICA.

The Christian Ladies of America are earnestly called upon by their Irish sisters to assist them in saving alive in famine and its attendant pestilential diseases, the utterly destitute men, women and children of God-smitten Ireland. In former times, it was said in Ireland, that the best potato in the bowl was for the widow, the fatherless & the houseless wanderer; and for the hungry, the Irish cotter was ever ready to share his last. But now there is not one to divide the daily morsel—if he even has, such is consumed at once and he has nothing left to save the starving neighbors from dying at his door.

Oh! that our American sisters could see the laborers on our roads, able bodied men, scarcely clad, famishing with hunger, with despair in their once cheerful faces, staggering at their work, yet striving to earn the meal which is to keep life in them to earn another—too probably having tasted no food since the day before. Oh that they they could see, on the post mortem examination of hundreds who have died of hunger on the roads, where they work almost to the last gasp, that not a particle of food is found in their contracted stomachs.

Oh! that they could see the fever and famine stricken family huddled together on their bundle of straw, with one or more corpses among them, which the survivors have not strength to drag from beside them.

Oh! that they could see the dead father, mother, or child, lying coffinless, and hear the screams of the survivors around them, caused, not by sorrow, but in the agony of hunger, they whose hands and hearts are ever open to compassion, would unite in one mighty effort to save the inhabitants of Ireland from such misery. If you, dear lady, into whose kind hands this may fall, would collect among friends and neighbors, sums, however small, and transmit them to Benjamin H. Warder, No. 179, Vine street, Philadelphia, through whom they can be remitted to any of the undersigned committee, such aid will save many lives in a country which the Lord, in righteous judgment, has so severely stricken, and cause the blessing of them who are ready to perish to return upon the heads of the donors. The enormous price of Indian meal and provisions of every sort, puts it beyond the reach of the poor to buy, and those who would gladly give to them, from the same cause have it not in their power.

Fever and other deadly diseases have followed in the train of famine, and unless some extraordinary aid can be obtained, Ireland must soon become one vast lazar house of the dying and the dead.

Dummanway, County of Cork, Ireland, December 28, 1846.

MARTHA D. COX,
KATHARINE A. COX,
HARRIET SHULDAM,
ANNA MARIA GALBRAITH,
ISABELLA SULLIVAN,
ELLEN JAGOE.

The Gourd and the Palm Tree.—A gourd wound itself around a lofty palm, and in a few weeks climed to its very top.

"How old mayest thou be?" asked the new comer.

"About a hundred years," was the answer.

"A hundred years! and no taller! Only look, I have grown as tall as you in a fewer days than you can count years."

"I know that well," replied the palm. "Every summer of my life a gourd has climbed up round me, as proud as thou art, and as short lived as thou wilt be."

The stockholders of the Fall River Railroad, nearly 400 present, have voted that no alcoholic liquors should be carried over the Railroad.

SCENE IN THE HYDE PARK.

Hyde Park is a place of renown and favorite resort for the gay, and the great, and the pleasure-loving people of London. Years ago we wandered over its beautiful grounds, which contain 395 acres, and among the trees along the pleasant banks of its Serpentine River. Hyde Park is the great promenade ground of London. Here the nobility and the elite of the world's metropolis assemble in a summer's afternoon, in splendid carriages, with liveried servants, and ride or drive in dazzling luxury or regal magnificence along these beautiful walks or carriage ways. Amid these scenes of gaiety and splendor, not a few seem utterly forgetful of the mortality of their bodies and the immortality of their souls.

Some months since an American clergyman, a friend of ours, was present, as he informed us, as a spectator of one of these scenes. On the occasion referred to he was conversing with Lady——, with whom he was acquainted, while all the spendors of nobility and worldly glory were rolling or riding with carriages and horses by hundreds past them. He asked her Ladyship, "How many of these gay and noble people do you suppose are prepared for another world?" She answered, promptly, "Not one of them, as far as I know them well. Not a lady here who would not prefer to have her daughter distinguished at court, and well married, to having her fitted for heaven. I make no exception, sir, not even of myself. We are all alike, our clergy included. If I were to go to my clergyman, and tell him that I felt anxious in mind, he would laugh at me, and prefer to talk about the next play; for these clergymen (meaning those then passing) all go to the theatre." Her Ladyship said this with a tearful eye.

This serious conversation was occasioned by her Ladyship's asking questions about America, and among other things, how certain actresses, then favorites in London, were esteemed on the boards in this country. The clergyman replied, "I cannot inform your Ladyship, as I know nothing about them." She said, "Why, are they not known there? I have seen them several times, and liked them much." He said, "I never go to the theatre. I consider it all wrong and contrary to the interests of the kingdom of God; and for other very substantial reasons." She looked at me with suprise, while the tears started in her eyes. I continued the conversation, and told her of regeneration. She asked, "What is it? Can you tell me, sir, exactly what it is?" It was explained to her briefly, and the conversation was continued. "I commented," said the clergyman, "more on the gaieties of that crowd," of whom she said, in a manner and tone which I cannot describe, "Oh, they never think of any other world than this—not they."

A third person in company—and three were all—inquired, "Surely your Ladyship would not censure them for driving and riding in this beautiful park! These actions, though splendid and imposing, seem innocent enough."

Lady ———answered, Oh, truly! These are some of the best things they ever do—even that Bishop;" pointing to a superb prelatical display then en passant near us; "they go to the theatre, clergy and all; and these are some of the best things they ever do. But we are all alike; we have no religion, we never think of heaven or at least we never prepare for it, God knows!"

The clergyman then wisely and kindly rebuked her for her too frequent and even irreverent use of the Divine name. She owned its justice, answering with a tear, and invited him to a private dinner with herself and husband, which he accordingly accepted, and endeavored suitably to improve.

In a multitude of cases, doubtless, this witness is true, as our friend thinks, save that now and then truant and solemn thoughts disturb their minds with apprehensions of the dread future, which they seek the more to dispel from their bosoms amid the gaieties of earth's dazzling splendors.—N. Y. Evangelist.

An Incident of the Greek Revolution.

A stray leaf from Niles' National Register for 1823, fell into our hands a few days ago, from which we make the extract below.—Ed

A late Smyrna paper contains the following narrative of an extraordinary event that had recently taken place at Cognia, a place in the interior. A Turk who was present at the sacking of Scio, brought away with him, to this isle, a Greek female whom he had espoused, after having compelled her to embrace Mahometanism.

One night, while the Musselman was enjoying the sweets of repose, she seized a cutlass, and in a moment of phrenzy, occasioned by the most horrible recollections, plunged it in the bosom of her ravisher, and then withdrew it in order to decapitate him. From that moment her revenge was satiated; and nature, re-assuming its empire over a heart she had formed for love and not for crime, the young Sciote fell and remained a long time in a state of insensibility.—After having recovered her senses, the spectacle before her eyes chilled her heart and deprived her of the faculty of escaping; she swooned a second time, and remained in that state long after day-break. At length some persons, being uneasy, resolved to force the door of the fatal chambers. On one side they perceived the dead body of the Turk; on the other, a female, apparently waiting for some one to arrest her. "You can dispose of me," said she; "it was I who murdered him." They seized upon her and brought her before the Pacha. "Is it you who have murdered your husband?" "Yes," she replied; "it was I who killed the monster, who, in my house, at Scio, had the barbarity to murder my father, mother, husband, and infant—who then carried me off, brought me hither, and thought to make a Turk of me, while I am, in fact, and only wish to remain a Greek." The populace had assembled in order to behold the punishment that awaited this Sciote; but the Pacha, after having listened to her attentively, granted her a pardon and sent her back home, to the great astonishment of all the Musselmen, who nevertheless, on this, as on many occasions, have submitted to the will of Providence.

The Fifteenth Century.—They had neither looked into heaven or earth, neither into the sea or land, as has been done since. They had philosophy without experiment; and mathematics without instruments. Geometry without scales; and astronomy without demonstration. They made war without powder, shot, cannon, mortars,—nay, the mob made their bonfires without squibs or crackers. They went to sea, without compass, and sailed without a needle. They viewed the stars without telescopes and measured altitudes without barometors; learning had no printing presses, writing nor paper, nor ink.—The lover was forced to send his miss a deal board for a letter, and a billet-doux might be the size of an ordinary trencher. They were clothed without manufactures, and their robes were the skins of the most formidable monsters. They carried on their trade without books, and their correspondence without posts. Their merchants kept no accounts, their shop-keepers no cash books. They had surgery without anatomy, and physicians without materia medica,—they gave emetics without ipecacuana, and cured agues without bark.—Exchange Paper.

SHAKING HANDS.

We stop not to inquire when, or where, or how this good old custom originated. It is so common that it has become almost instinctive. Some people pretend to tell a man's character by his walk; others by his countenance; others by the tone of his voice. We think as good a criterion is his manner of shaking hands.

1. There is the warm, earnest shake—not too tight, not too feeble—yet quick and energetic, and soon released. Such a man will be generally found to be of sanguine temperament, warm in his attachments, and sincere in his professions. You may look right into his eye as you talk to him, and there will be no wincing, but his countenance will be as frank and unsuspecting meanwhile as his heart is generous and ardent.

2. There is the tight squeeze that almost makes you roar again. You are so gratified when released from the pressure, that you are ready to do almost anything for your friend, in very gratitude for the deliverance he has granted you.—Such a man is generally a good-enough sort of fellow, but sadly out of place if he has not learned to beat the anvil or fell wood. Nature designed him for the rougher professions, and he has mistaken his calling if he has not chosen a corresponding manner of life.

3. We have again the protracted grasp; gentle enough, but slow to release, and by a sort of periodical convulsion, tightening and relaxing its hold, until you feel almost constrained to be rude, and withdraw your hand per force. Such a man is generally either a sentimentalist or a flatterer. If the former, he is very liable to possess a correspond ng softness of head with the softness of his hand; if the latter, he will be very likely, in his own innocent way, to throw dust into the eyes of those who have never studied the science of shaking hands.

4. Then there is another shake, so called, which is in fact no shake at all. You extend your hand, and in return you receive the tips of two or three fingers. You attempt to grasp, but the flabby substance, the end of which is thrust toward you, does not contract a muscle, but is perfectly passive. You feel a queer sort of emotion, as though you knew not what to make of it; but asking no explanation, you receive none, and the only effect produced is that you become more reserved and chilled. We are somewhat at a loss to define the character of such a shake. It generally indicates a cold place in the heart, and an empty one in the head; a well-lined pocket and a "touch me not" conceit that poor people are but little better than brutes. We have never known more than one such man that was not what we would call a sneakish somebody, with very few warm friends.

We do not publish our theory as indisputable. We have not attempted to trace the subject in all its philosophical varieties. But we scarcely ever fail to form our idea of a man by the manner in which he shakes us by the hand. Give us a warm, earnest shake—but one that says as plainly as a shake can say it, "My good fellow, I really am glad to see you!"—Methodist Protestant.

The Right sort of Stuff.—The Boston Traveler says: Some fifteen years ago two strangers met on Charlestown bridge. One was a young man fresh and green from the country, with his wardrobe in a bundle under his arm, and the other a resident of the city. For some reason not easily explained, they halted and held something like the following conversation:—

Country Lad.—"Sir, do you know any place where I can get anything to do?"

Citizen.—"I don't know that I do. What sort of employment are you seeking for?"

Country Lad.—"Well, I'm not particular. I calculate d on teaching school, when I left home; but they told me back here, that they thought I couldn't get one about here. Do you know of any stables where they want a hand?

Finding the countryman was ready for anything in the way of work, the gentleman told him where he thought he might get employment as a hand-cart man and chore-man, and bid him good-bye.

It was not long after this casual interview that the young man sought out his adviser, and thanked him for helping him to a place. He had found the place to which he had been recommended, and had then full employment in a retail grocer's store, in carting packages and doing jobs of different kinds. From this humble condition he worked his way along in the world, to be clerk in the store, then into a wholesale establishment, and finally to be a partner in the same concern. He is now reputed to be worth from 50,000 to 75,000 dollars.

So much energy and perseverance, with a willingness to do any honest work for a living. Men of such sort of stuff, who, if they can once do what they would, will do what they can, with the ordinary blessings of Providence, are quite sure to succeed in the world.

Go ahead.—At it Jim; off coat and go to work. You will be something yet, if you start right and and go ahead. No matter if you break down occasionally; hard thumps make the man for this world. Always have an eye open, your mouth shut, and your hands employed. Sleepy-headed drones and open-mouthed nincompoops never set the world on fire or do anything worthy of newspaper record. A name and a glorious one you shall win, if you are faithful to yourself and never stop for trifles. If you break your plough don't cry; if you pi a stickful or make a doublet, don't fret and growl; if you get tumbled heels over head into a snow drift or into a dock, jump out as soon as you can and push on. If you spend time to growl or to fight at every lubber you meet with, you'll never gain an inch of ground. Remember our advice, Jim, and be a faithful boy. You'll never want for friends, for money or for sweethearts.—You will gain a good name, secure property and find an excellent wife.

A man said that ale was an excellent drink; that taken in large quantities, it always made him fat. 'I have seen it make you lean,' said a bystander.

Religious Intelligence.

PITTSBURGH DISTRICT.

Cookstown, Pa. Feb. 16, 1847.

Br. Bassett: I wish to communicate something concerning the spiritual condition of this, Brownsville circuit, through your excellent periodical. Our presidential meeting which was held in this place has just closed. Our worthy President, brother Brown, was with us, and labored with, I think, more than his usual zeal, much to the satisfaction of the people. He left on Thursday morning. The meeting was still protracted until last evening we wound up by a love-feast. This was an interesting meeting, and altho' we had no great revival, yet the Lord was with us indeed. At the close of the love-feast, when invitation was given, one woman of good standing in the M. E. Church, whose husband is a member of the M. P. Church came forward and gave us her name. In this place we have a good society of faithful members who have manifested a great amount of kindness to me, and my family since we have lived here. In Bridgeport, also we have a good society. Here I found the church very much discouraged. I began to inquire after the cause, and among others I found that there was a debt of $100 against the house of worship which they thought they could not easily pay. I got up a subscription paper, and at this time the money is nearly all subscribed. The debt will soon be paid, and the house will be out of debt. Surely the Lord will bless these people for such a noble act. I have been holding protracted meetings at most of the other appointments on the circuit. At Belview we had a protracted meeting in the beginning of the present winter, and altho' it was a stormy time, and very cold weather, we had good congregations and great attention was given to the preaching of the word of life and at the close of that meeting we had an accession of one member, a lady of good standing in community. The prosperity of this circuit I think is increasing. We have peace in our borders, and altho' we have not had any extensive revivals, the Lord has been with us in great mercy, and we are still looking up to him for better times.

Yours in the bonds of a peaceful gospel,

R. T. Simonton.

Evansville Ct., Feb. 15*th*, 1847.

Br. Bassett: Permit me just to say through your worthy paper, to Br. Brown, and the friends of Zion generally, that the Lord has greatly revived his work on this circuit. Since last Conference some 30 have joined the Church, while a number that belonged to the Church yet destitute of religion have been made to rejoice in a Saviour's love. We are still looking and praying for greater displays of the power of God.

Yours in Christ,

A. J. Waren. Supt.

MUSKINGUM DISRICT.

Port Washington, O. Feb. 16, 1847.

Dear Br. Bassett: Our meeting at Bird Run resulted in an addition of 12 to the society and about as many professed religion. The second Quarterly meeting is now in progress in this place. It bids fair for the accomplishment of much good in Port Washington. On yesterday there were twelve forward at the anxious seat. On last night there were eleven, none as yet have been converted but we pray that there may be many. We will be apt to report soon.

In haste, yours &c.,

J. H. Hamilton.

Cambridge, Feb. 19, 1847.

Br. Bassett: Our 2nd Qt. meeting has closed. God in his mercy was with us to own and bless. 7 united with the church, making in all this year about 60. Harmony and piece prevail through out our borders, Yours,

J. Nichols.

Vienna, O. Feb. 12, 1847.

Br. Bassett: I would inform Br. Clancy Pres. of M. District, and the friends generally that Vienna Circuit is still numbered among the living. We risk nothing in saying that our congregations all round the circuit have been improving up to this time. This we regard as a favorable indication. I have taken in a number of extra appointments which with the regular ones, render it necessary for me to be absent from home three fourths of my time. Our 2nd Quarterly meeting was held in the North part of the Ct. at which we were assisted by Br. J. Heath whose zealous efforts were useful and well received. This was a good meeting to the church, and could we have protracted it over the 2nd Sabbath, much good might have been done. But being alone on the Ct. we were compelled to close on Wednesday, and attend to other appoinments. An aged man about 60 years old professed to experience a change of heart at this meeting. Truly God is merciful. Five gave their names to the church. We deem it proper to say that there are members on this Ct. of sterling worth who exhibit practical evidences of their interest for the prosperity of the cause of Christ. May the Lord pour out his spirit abundantly upon us. Remember us in your petitions to the throne of grace. C. Caddy.

Bucyrus, O., Feb. 12, 1847.

Mr. Editor: I wish to say through your Excellent paper that the Lord has remembered us in our low estate, and graciously visited us in time of great need. All who are acquainted with this Circuit know that trouble and war agitated the church to such a degree that our congregations had almost entirely forsaken us. From 24 to 50 hearers was the amount of my congregation when I first come on this field of labor. But through the mercy of God and faithful prayer, in a short time our number of hearers increased and our second Quarterly meeting was appointed for this place. It commenced January the 23d, under unfavorable circumstances. There was no omen of good to be seen by mortal eye, yet we remembered what prayer had done in days of other years, when Elijah the prophet in faith prayed for rain on the Earth, and being not discouraged he continued to lay his case before the Lord. Yea he told the Lord that infidelity had torn down his altars. God heard and was entreated to send rain. So in this case we commenced the worship of God. A good turn out of the members of conference. Brothers Scott and Earl were with us and labored like men working for God and immortal souls. May the God of all grace reward them for their labors of Love. Sabbath morning a good Lovefeast, also a good congregation, Sabbath evening, house full to overflowing, some little hope, members some what revived, prayers increased, tears seen fall from the sinners eyes. Faith begins to spring up in the armies of Israel. Visiting from house to house, and prayers with each family. The cloud is gathering. One came to the altar for prayer and there found peace in believing ere she arose. Meeting every day for some days. Mourners increasing, good attendance every night, the house full when it was not storming—increased attention. The slain of the Lord were many. But here I must say that some who felt the keen arrows of conviction were hindered from seeking their souls' salvation. And I regret to say that those profess to be Methodists who hindered their children from seeking their salvation, saying they would have a meeting soon and then they might get Religion. Mr. Editor, suppose their children were to die before their meeting comes on, will not those fathers and mothers have to answer to God for this? What will not bigotry do! Out of the many who were convicted, 12 were converted to God, and, others are still enquiring of the watchman on the walls, saw ye him whom my soul loveth? We continued our meeting two weeks. My brethren in the Lord, join with us in prayer that God may carry on his work; five gave us their names and and among them some who I think will be pillars in the church. Upon the whole, it was as good a meeting as I ever enjoyed in my life. Praise the Lord, O my soul; and you, my brethren, shout aloud the Savour's name for what he is doing in the earth. We are looking for a gracious harvest ere this conference year shall close; members are being received in different parts of the circuit.

A. S. Robinson.

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1847.

Day Changed.—We date and issue our paper this week, and henceforth, on Thursday instead of Saturday. We have for some time past found this arrangement desirable, chiefly for the reason that many are anxious to receive the paper the same week that it is issued, who could not so receive it, so long as we issued on Saturday. We are very happy to be enabled to comply with the request of many in thus altering our arrangement, and trust that with the present increased mail facilities, a major part of our friends at least, will now hear from us more readily than heretofore.

To Correspondents.—"An easy Catechism" shall have place next week. We have also, "Letters from the Western Woods, No. 4," and a letter from Rev. Geo. Richey, which shall appear soon.

Death's Doings.—We are called upon to chronicle in our paper this week the deaths of several ministers, of considerable repute in their respective denominations. "Sic transit, gloria mundi."

Rev James Culbertson, for many years formerly pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Zanesville, departed this life on Tuesday morning last. He was a highly respected, and very useful man, and is much lamented in his death. His funeral takes place this day, (11 o'clock,) at the Presbyterian Church, Zanesville. Rev Dr. Hoge, of Columbus, is expected to officiate. We trust we shall be prepared to give some interesting particulars next week, respecting the life and death of Mr. C.

Death of Rev. J. H. Overstreet.—We are pained to learn by the last number of the Methodist Protestant, of the death of this brother. He was one of the oldest citizens of Louisville, Ky. and was identified with the first organization of the Methodist Protestant Church. We have enjoyed an agreeable acquaintance with Br. Overstreet for many years, and shall not soon forget the kind hospitalities of his dwelling which we have repeatedly enjoyed in years gone by. We have felt a warm attachment to Br. O. and the intelligence of his death, we feel to be afflicting. But grace has fitted him for glory, and he has been called away to be with Christ. We tender our christian sympathies to the surviving widow and family. Sister Overstreet has long since learned to trust in God. Below we give the account from the M. Protestant.

From the Methodist Protestant.

Departed this life on the 20th of January, '47, in the city of Lousville, in the 65th year of his age, the Rev. James H. Overstreet.

He was born in Virginia, and emigrated to Kentucky in 1806, and was a resident of this place since 1812. He was endowed by nature with ardent feelings, and possessed quick and sound powers of discrimination, a correct judgment, with an inflexibility of purpose, but rarely exhibited by mankind. He was devoted to his friends and scrupulous in regarding the just rights of others.

In the early part of his manhood he, like too many of our young men, was greatly devoted to the gaieties and pleasures of the world; but in 1809 it pleased our heavenly Father to afflict him with a very severe attack of sickness; and when all of his friends despaired of his recovery, he cried unto the Lord, in his deep agony, and found deliverance, in the pardon of his sins, by powerful and bright manifestations of the witness of the Spirit: and from the time he found peace in the Lord Jesus Christ, his disease abated, and he recovered. Some short time afterwards Brother Overstreet felt it to be his duty to proclaim to others, that redemption he had so mercifully experienced; and he continued to do so as long as his health and opportunity offered.

Brother Overstreet seceded from the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1828, after having been a member of it from 1809. He did so, because he regarded the Rules in some respects too strongly anti-Republican, and not in conformity with the best models of Church government.

During his last illness, which was protracted for some six months, and at times, when his friends in the room thought him near his last moments, he would rejoice in the God of his salvation, and by most indubitable evidence, show that he was ready to quit a world of trial, for the glorious splendors of eternal life. He had no fears of death. He spoke freely and tenderly to his family and friends, and on all occasions, when speaking of his approaching death, gave assurance, that he had nothing to fear, that he was redeemed and saved by the blood of the Lamb of God.

Brother Overstreet had been for many years a highly influential citizen of Louisville, and was generally known for the integrity of his character and elevation of his principles: if he erred, it was an error of the head and not of the heart.

His remains are now resting in hope of the resurrection of the just. May all be prepared for that awful day. J. H.

Louisville, Jan. 25, 1847.

Ladies' National Magazine.—The March number has already reached us. It contains a neat mezzotint, The Surprise, and a Fashion Plate. As usual the reading matter is original. C. J. Peterson, Publisher, Philadelphia. Terms, $2 per year.

Preacher Departed.—We learn by the Pittsburgh C. Advocate that Rev. C. W. Scoles, who was stationed in Brownsville, Pa. M. E. Church, died recently at that place. He testified in his last moments that God had cleansed his soul from all sin, and that he had a home in heaven. While a brother was writing his will, he requested him to be as expeditious as possible, because he expected soon to be walking and talking with God. O, that we may die the death of the righteous.

Another Revolutionist Gone.—Died at Chateauga, N. Y. Jan., 22d., Nathan Beman, in the 90th year of his age. He was from Shoreham Vt. but was one of the first settlers of Franklin Co. N. Y. having resided there for half a century. When but a youth of 18 he entered the service of his country, and was engaged till the close of the revolutionary war. He was the guide of Ethan Allen at the taking of Ticonderoga.

Honors-Titles.—The Pittsburgh C. Advocate, proposes to confer honorary degress and dignities upon its best agents and patrons. Any one who becomes a subscriber is M. S., a Man of Sense. If he pays punctually, he is M. S. H., a Man of Sense and Honesty. The man who obtains five new subscribers for year, is M. R. A., a Man of Respectable Abilities. He who gets ten, is M. S. A., a Man of Superior Abilities. Twenty five or upwards, entitles one to the degree of V. D. M., Very Distinguished Man.

Now, we are gratified to say that we have many who have taken one or more, and some who have taken all those degrees except the last. But some how we are surprised that the H. I. Highly Intelligent, Office of the Advocate, should confer titles upon agents for getting new subscribers, unless they also collect the pay. Now we have been so unfortunate as to have agents in some instances disoblige us by sending names of subscribers, which proved not to be responsible. We have sent our paper for months, or a year or more, and finally those irresponsibles have given us the slip, without sending us either money or thanks. Sometimes a paper is returned by a Post Master, with the endorsment refused, or removed or something else equally outrageous. And in one instance lately, one whose name had been given us as a subscriber at last conference, after a lapse of 4 or 5 months, sent us word that he never had subscribed for our paper, nor ordered it. We are glad however that these instances are rare. Now, if the Advocate office concur, we propose to confer the title M. C., when the Money is Collected to the amount of ten dollars in a year; and D. D. for the Distinguished Diligence of that Agent, when he collects $20 or more in a year. Already we have a number of these dignitaries on our list, and others are likely soon to have the honor conferred upon them. And we are happy to say that for the most part our agents now send us good subscribers, and oftentimes, the pay in advance accompanying.

Rev. Dr. Keller—President of Wittenburg College, Springfield, O. We were favored with a call from this gentleman a few days ago. He has been spending several days in Zanesville, holding a series of religious services in the English Lutheran Church, in connection with the Pastor, Rev. Mr. Hour. We had the pleasure of attending on one occasion and of hearing an excellent and profitable discourse by Dr. K.

Home Missions.—A Disciplinary Question.—A worthy brother who was appointed to a Mission by last Annual Conference, wrote to us a few weeks ago for our opinion whether he was authorized or prohibited in the Discipline to hold Quarterly Meetings and Quarterly Conferences. We regret that partly through inadvertance, and partly through want of time, we did not sooner give attention to our brother's enquiry. Some modification of the Discipline at page 70, respecting Home Missions, was made at last General Conference, and the revised Discipline is not yet generally circulated. Heretofore it was provided that, when, in a Home Mission, "three or more Societies, containing in the aggregate not less than thirty members, shall be formed, they shall have power to elect three stewards, who with other official members on said Mission, shall have authority to hold a Quarterly Conference." This entire provision was struck out of the Discipline by the last General Conference, and an article substituted, authorizing the Annual Conference "to employ and appoint ministers to serve as Home Missionaries—to prescribe their duties," &c., and "to prescribe such rules and regulations for the temporary government of Societies (raised by the Missionary) in conformity with the Constitution and Discipline,—as the Conference shall deem best,—until the Conference shall, in its judgment of their circumstances, decide to set them off, and organize them into regular Stations or Circuits." We apprehend, therefore, that it is the prerogative of the Annual Conference to determine whether its Home Missions shall or shall not hold Quarterly Conferences, for the Annual Conference is to make "regulations for their temporary government."

Ireland—Ireland.—We give numerous items this week, from our exchanges, respecting the doings of the benevolent in this country for sending relief to the perishing. We rejoice that the work in many places, goes bravely on. The meeting at Washington City was an honor to the nation. In our county of Muskingum, committees are at work, and a number of public meetings have been held. But let not the benevolent slack their hand.

"Nem Con."—This correspondent, we think, from the moral aspect of his locality, should have taken for his signature, "Antipas," because he "dwells where Satan's seat is." We hope, however, he will not be "slain," as was that "faithful martyr." What an undesirable "Reserve" that must be, "farther West." Do tell where it is, that school books, and Bibles, and Missionaries may be sent, if indeed any of these are willing to be sent to the "Devil's Reserve."

Mnemonics.—This surprising art of improving the memory is exciting much interest at the present day. We are gratified to find that the Rev. L. D. Johnson, after a labor of three years, has produced a compendious book upon the subject, adapted to the use of schools. We learn that it has already been introduced into the schools of Boston. We see that this publication of Mr. J's. is highly commended in various eastern prints. A decided preference is given to this work, above others on the same subject. We have seen it stated for instance that the "cumbersome system taught by the Misses P." who recently held forth in our town, on their western tour, is in comparison, "like going six miles after the horse, to go three miles for the doctor." We expect to have a supply of the "Memoria Technica," for sale at the office of the Western Recorder, for 50 cents a copy, and will procure them, so soon as we find there is a demand for the work. Meanwhile, we give the following notice of it from the Anglo Saxon, published in Boston.

MEMORIA TECHNICA:

Or, the Art of Abbreviating those Studies which give the greatest labor to the Memory; including Numbers, Historical Dates, Geography, Astronomy, Gravities, &c.; also Rules for Memorizing Technicalities, Nomenclatures, Proper Names, Prose, Poetry, and Topics in general.—Embracing all the available Rules found in Mnemonics, or Mnemotechny of Ancient and Modern Times. To which is added a Perpetual Almanac for Two Thousand Years of Past Time and Time to Come. Adapted to the use of Schools. By Lorenzo D. Johnson. Second edition, revised and improved.

Price—50 cents.

In presenting to the public the "Memoria Technica," which, in some respects, may be said to contain a new theory of instruction, the publishers beg leave to direct attention to some of its peculiarities.

The art of Aiding the Memory, and the deduction of Rules by attention to which it may be made infinitely more available, has been a subject of public interest, and has received the particular attention of a high order of minds in almost every age of the world.

Yet this is the first work of the kind which has ever been prepared in this country for the use of Schools. Whelpley and Worcester in their Compends of Universal History, (for the want of something better,) introduced an abstract of Gray's System of Mnemonics, which like Gourand's, relates only to the memory of figures.

In preparing this work for the press, it has been the object of the author to adapt his illustrations to Common School instruction, and if possible, to lessen some of the difficulties in acquiring useful knowledge, without lessening mental culture. And the hope is cherished that it may be generally adopted as a text-book in schools, by which every teacher of youth may be made a "professor" of all the rules for aiding Memory, that can be made available to a student while acquiring an education.

Should it be asked, does this system really improve the memory? or is it an arrangement by which we lessen the labor of memory? the true answer is, it does both.—In substituting words for numbers, an immense amount of labor is saved to the memory, and consequently of time also. But it will be impossible for the pupil to run through the System in the several sciences to which it is applied, without giving vigorous exercise and additional strength to the power of recollection.

"I mention," says the author, "as illustrative facts, that by this new art, I once committed to memory in a single morning, the whole of the propositions contained in the first three books of Euclid, and with such perfection, that I could for years afterwards specify the number of the book on hearing the proposition named, and could recite the proposition on hearing the number and the book; and I have frequently, in mixed companies, repeated backwards and forwards from fifty to an hundred unconnected words, which have been but once called over to me. I may also add, to prove the simplicity of the plan, that I taught two of my own children to repeat fifty unconnected words in a first lessen of not more than half an hour's continuance."

The work is not intended to take the place of any school book now in use, nor is the system calculated to supercede any study now pursued in schools, but introduced as an auxiliary to them all; for aside from its application to numbers, an acquaintance with the theory of prompter cannot fail to aid the learner in the pursuit of every branch of useful knowledge.

The work contains a vast number of facts so classified and arranged, as to render it as a book of reference, merely, richly worth its cost.

Written for the Western Recorder.

AN INQUIRY.

Mr. Editor.—In your absence last fall, the Editor pro tem, to obviate the necessity of a new periodical, proffered the columns of the Recorder to those who might secede from the M. P. C., will you please state, for the satisfaction of those concerned, whether this proposal has your approval?

Yours, C.

In answer to the above, we remark, our friend C. refers, we presume, to a note by our pro tem, in the last number of vol. 7. We think he somewhat misapprehends the "proposal," forasmuch as the note makes no reference to "those who might secede." We however freely say to our brother, that though we would not strive to "obviate the necessity of a new periodical," we will cheerfully publish judicious or useful articles sent us by those who may secede, especially if they be, like yourself a patron of our paper. We will certainly more than accept of their co-operation with us in doing good, and opposing moral evil. We only claim to exercise the same supervision here, which we would over articles from those who do not secede. Your paper which we have in hand, is not only acceptable, but we are grateful to you for it. Ed. W. R.

Fires in Cincinnati.—We see by the Cincinnati Commercial, that on Thursday afternoon, 16th inst. the large and ancient builing, called the Mahard Pork House, at the corner of Walnut and Water Streets was mostly consumed by fire, with a large amount of meat and corn. Mr. E. Wilson, had his left arm broken by the falling of a porch. Several others were also burnt. The Covington Fire Co. come over with their apparatus to help. But a few days before, a short distance from the same spot, a large cigar and Tobacco Store, owned by W. S. Johnson, Jr., & the Produce and Commission House of J. A. Skiff, were entirely consumed with most of their contents.

That's Right.—The Editor of the Ohio State Journal has been treated to some choice specimens of "Ambrosia Tobacco" from some Cincinnati establishment, for his taste and opinion. In acknowledging the receipt of the present, the Editor, observes that he is not among the creatures who feed on such food, and that he is not disposed to 'turn customer' in the case. He however parcelled out the stuff to certain animals frequenting his office, and who seem fond of it. He does not say whether they were green worms or bed bugs. We are glad that our brother editor, does not spoil himself with the vile thing.

Sacred Melodeon.—This excellent Book of Spiritual songs, takes well amongst those who have acquainted themselves with it. Our lot of 50 copies is exhausted. Will the publishers send us 100 copies more, soon as possible?

Hymn Books.—We have frequent enquiries respecting Hymn Books. The Book Agent, Baltimore, has had a new edition in press, for many weeks past. The last number of the Methodist Protestant announces that the work will be ready in a few days. We have stated our intention to keep a supply on hand for the benefit of surrounding circuits. The Book Agent will please consider us one of the first to apply, and send us twelve dozen copies, soon as convenient.

Disciplines, M. P. Church.—We still have on hand a supply of the latest edition.

NEW ENGLAND CORRESPONDENCE OF THE WESTERN RECORDER.

Boston, February 17, 1847.

Dear Br. Bassett:—Having not hardly been out of Boston since I last wrote you, I can give your readers no account of any new place. But I have sometimes thought that since the facilities for traveling and the great number of newspapers, offered all classes of society such abundant means for knowing all about the different parts of our common country, it is quite doubtful, whether it is space well occupied in a newspaper, to give discriptions of places. But what do you think of characters? Do you not like to read of men, as well as things?

Let me give you one. We have living in the town of Pelham Mass. a Protestant Methodist Minister, by the name of Joseph Snelling, who combines the following points of interest in his history & character. He was present at the organization of the first Methodist Class in Boston, and became one of its members. He was the first Boston boy who became a Methodist preacher. He is now the oldest Methodist preacher in New England; having been in the public service, more than a half a century. He is small in stature, falling below the middling size. He is well informed, possessing a love of intelligence and might be regarded as having large intellectual and perceptive faculties and of the nervo-sanguine temperament as phrenologists call it. Being well built, nearly eighty years has not very much diminished the elasticity of his frame and the quickness of his action.

His style of preaching is peculiar. I have listened to him when he has made me think of Solomon, delivering his proverbs. His sentences are short and his style clear and full of point. His tone is animated, flowing from warm emotions, and a heart full of good will and unaffected amiability. I never heard him preach but what he would carry me with him to a far higher degree of religious enjoyment than I possessed when he began his discourse. His preaching is peculiarally experimental and practical, just that kind which is calculated to secure attention, and reach the heart, and make this wicked world better.

We have here in Boston a new system of instruction adapted to the use of schools, which is fast gaining upon the public mind, and is now beginning to be used in some of the largest and best shools in the city; I refer to the "Art of memory" applied to those studies generally pursued by pupils. I think, should the teachers of your select & public schools, know the time saving policy which it introduces in acquiring a great amount of useful knowledge, with a small amount of labor, they would feel that it is peculiarly adapted to benefit those whose employment leaves them but little time for study and just the thing for the busy West as well as the East. Although it resembles some systems of Mnemonics which have been propagated, yet it differs from them all, many parts of it being entirely original. No one can learn it without becoming very familiar with the sounds of the letters, and classification of all the articulations of our language. It so combines the elementary principles of a primary education that it teaches just the things which a pupil ought to learn irrespective of aiding the memory; so that no pupil can study the book without being profited in many ways. Its peculiar adaptation to the study of the historical parts of the Bible makes it peculiarily useful to the ministers of religion. It also contains a point of considerable interest for business men. I will drop the subject here, as I hope you will, in the plenitude of your wisdom, see good reason to give your readers some further account of it, in more extended notices which I will furnish you from the papers here, and from the work itself, which will accompany this letter.

Now that I am on the rail road to science, will you allow me to introduce to your readers the names, by which our writing and printing Reformation is to be known and propagated, namely, Phonography and Phonotopy. Phonography is writing by sound, that is a character for each sound in the language. The result of learning it is that when you know how to read the characters all the endless perplexity of learning to spell is done with. Phonography is writing and phonotopy is printing. Take, for instance, the little primary school reader, and in Phonotopy you can learn a child to read in one fifteenth part of the time you can, by the usual method. This seems quite too much to believe, yet is true. Take an example. If we would learn a child to read or spell the word though the child must learn to put t h o u g h together, and pronounce it. In Phronotopy, you have two characters only to represent th and o, tho. But more anon.

L. D. J.

A Relief Ship for Ireland.—The Irish Relief Committee of this city have chartered the fine bark Victor, to take out grain, provisions and clothing for the Irish poor. Her cargo is being received into Mr. Naylor's large store No. 18 Broadway, where all having donations of food or clothing are requested to send them immediately. Every thing should be marked "Relief for Ireland." The Committee will be in attendance to register the names and the articles. Donations in money are received by the Relief Committees at 54 Wall street, up stairs.—N. Y. Sun.

Relief for the Scottish Poor.—We understand that collections are being made for the relief of the poor Highlanders, whose food has been destroyed by the same plague that has visited Ireland. Although the distress is not so general as in Ireland, owing to the fact that Highland landlords reside on their estates, yet many are suffering all the horrors of famine, and call loudly for our sympathy.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

FUNERAL OF GEN. HAMER.

The funeral escort yesterday, accompanying the remains of General Hamer from the residence of Mr. Jolliffe to the steamer appointed to bear them to his late home in Brown county, was one of the largest ever witnessed in this city. At a quarter past eleven the procession, composed of the Masonic brethren, Odd Fellows, Sons of Temperance, Firemen, Members of the Bar, and a vast number of citizens, moved from the house of Mr. Jolliffe. The coffin was carried in a hearse, drawn by two black horses,—the pall bearers on either side, near to which was led the white horse, which the General rode at Monterey, with all his war-trappings complete. With slow and solemn step, the bands, with muffled drums, playing funeral airs, the procession passed up Race to Ninth, along Ninth to Walnut, and down Walnut to the Masonic Hall, into which the coffin was borne by the pall bearers. The immense Hall was, in a few moments, filled to the uttermost, and during the address of the Rev. Mr. Strickland, many a tear was started, and the saddened countenances of the multitude plainly indicated deep and heartfelt sorrow. Mr. Strickland was followed by Judge N. C. Reed, who delivered the eulogium with his usual force and feeling, and commanded the deepest attention of the audience. From the Hall, the procession took up the line of march to the river, and there deposited the remains on board the steamer—minute guns firing and all the bells of the city tolling during the march, and until the boat departed.—Cincinnati Signal, 13*th*.

Remains of General Hamer.

The remains of this distinguished Citizen, arrived at Georgetown on Saturday the 13th instant, and were interred on Monday the 15th. One who was present at the funeral, writes as follows:

"An intimation that the remains of the lamented Hamer, were then to be deposited in their resting place, was all that was required to assemble thousands of his fellow citizens and friends to view the melancholy proceedings. By the hour of 11 o'clock, not less than five thousand persons had assembled. The immense procession was formed near the Court House, and moved to the late residence of the deceased.

"The body of General Hamer was there delivered into the possession of the Masonic Fraternity according to his dying requets, by J. H. Thompson, Esq., the State Commissioner, with a few appropriate remarks. The order of the procession was as follows: 1st, the Masons; 2d, the Members of the Bar; 3d, the Military; 4th, the hearse, drawn by six black horses; 5th, the relatives; 6th, the citizens. The procession, conducted by Dr. Buckner, then marched to the Baptist Church, where an appropriate prayer was offered by Rev. Mr. Rowe. After which, an eloquent address was delivered by David T. Disney, Esq., of Cincinnati. The body was then interred in conformity with the rules of the Masonic Fraternity. Every thing was conducted in the most solemn and imposing manner. Thus ends the career of General Thomas L. Hamer. Peace to his remains."—Batavia (Ohio) Sun.

The Debate on Slavery.

The debate on slavery, growing out of the introduction of the three million bill, has been continued through the week, in good temper and with great spirit. In the Senate, the subject of slavery itself has not been discussed, but allusions to it, as the element to which paramount reference must be had in the settlement of our differences with Mexico, have been constantly made. In the House, the nature and effects of the system have come under consideration. Not only has the constitutional question been debated, not only have the relations of slavery to territorial extension been examined, but its economical bearings, its influences on the social and political system, and on the destinies of the States, have been freely canvassed. The Bible question itself has been opened by slaveholding members. We were not a little surprised, on entering the Hall Saturday morning, to find Mr. Seaborn Jones, of Georgia, with his Bible in hand, expounding from the word the divine character of the institution! One might have thought himself in a school of the prophets, assembled to settle a grave question in ethics, had it not been for the mischievious leer, or broad laugh, with which the speaker's dissertation was greeted.

A few years ago, the Representatives of the South left the hall in a body, to concert measures for a dissolution of the Union, because Mr. Slade, of Vermont, dared to exercise the right of free speech in discussing the question of slavery. At a still later period, Mr. Giddings was subject to constant contumely and abuse for exercising the same right, and every device of despotism was adopted to suppress freedom of speech. Last winter the gag was taken off, and petitions were received; and this winter, discussion on the subject of slavery has become almost common place. No matter what the particular bill under consideration, like Banquo's ghost, up starts the "spectre of anti-slavery agitation," as a venerable neighbor calls it, and it will not down; and for the best of all reasons—Southerners themselves are constantly provoking it. By them, more frequently than by the members from any other section, is the question brought into debate. The effects are salutary. The morbid sensibility of the slaveholder is wearing away. The spell thrown around this delicate domestic institution, which so long charmed men to silence, is broken. Nobody thinks now of claiming for slavery exemption from discussion. And why? It has been made a question for national deliberation by the South! The war against Mexico, for the acquisition of territory, has necessarily involved the question, What shall be the character of the institutions in the new territory? Shall slavery be introduced there? But these questions cannot be discussed rationally without inquiring into the law of slavery, the relations of the system to the Constitution, its nature, policy, and every incident connected with it. Certainly the South could not ask its brethren of the North and West to spread the ample ægis of the Federal Government over slavery in California, without giving them some good reason, drawn from the system itself, why such an act should be assented to. But to bring such an evil into discussion, is to expose its wrongfulness, its impolicy, and to weaken its hold upon the social system. These congressional debates are rapidly inoculating the public mind with wholesome sentiment.

Mr. Brockenbrough, of Florida, in his speech last Saturday on the three million bill, expressed himself in a manner rather extraordinary for a Southern politician. "Let Southern men," said he, continue to diffuse it, (slavery,) and in time the institution would cease to be mentioned upon that floor. People of all classes were gradually settling in the Southern States: free labor was becoming more and more prevalent there; and he believed, with the increase of Northern institutions there, slavery would eventully cease." No man would utter such sentiments, who was not favorable to the extinction of slavery.—National Era.

Fatal Accident.—On Monday, Mr. H. Arnold of West Hartford, while felling a tree, slipped on the ice, and the trunk falling, killed him.

R. ADAMS'S RECEPTION.—Saturday morning while Washington Hunt was addressing the committee of the Whole in the House on the e million bill, the venerable John Quincy ms made his appearance at the door of the . Mr. Hunt stopped; the whole House rosc; yes were turned upon the form of one risen were from the grave. Mr. Holmes, of South olina, and Mr. Moseley, of New York, con- ed him to his seat, which, having been occu- d through the session by Mr. Johnson, of Ten- see, was gracefully yielded to the man who honored it so long. Mr Adams, much affec- by this striking demonstration of respect, made itable acknowledgment, but in so low a tone few could hear him. Many were the cordial- tings he received from members of both par- , who crowded about his seat, and no one shook more heartily by the hand than Charles J. ersoll!

How strange that there are so few honest, fear- s, and independent men, when honesty, fear- ness, and independence, can command res- t like this!—National Era, 18th.

RELIEF FOR IRELAND.—The relief meeting ich we announced last week, as in contempla- n, was numerously attended at the Merchant's change. Mr. Spencer, the Mayor, was called he chair, who briefly addressed the meeting. dresses by the Rev. Dr. Brooke, Mr. Schon. bishop Purcell, Dr. Dodge, and others. The best rit, is said, prevailed at the spot. R. W. e offered $1,000 in provisions, on condition ie others would do the same. Committees re appointed for each ward, to canvass the ole city and give every one an opportunity aid in this labor of love. The prospect is that s movement will result in something substan- l and opportune for the poor Irish, many of om, alas, will have gone to their graves for nt of it, before it can reach them. Dr. Dodge, we are not mistaken, started this benevolent vement. Without ostentation or noise he pre- ted a call to a number of our citizens for their nature, and procured its publication in the wspapers. The result was as we have descri- d. Many a poor sufferer will be snatched from e jaws of death, in consequence of this move- ent. What a large amount of good a very little ell-directed effort may accomplish! Let the ader try it and see.

A. Mr. Heran, of this city, has accompanied a nation of $100 with a tender of the services of e mercantile houses with which he is connected New Orleans and New York, free of charge.

We should like to jog our Flour and Pork Mer- ants, who have done a lucrative business this ason, and ask them how much they are willing spare of what Providence has so bountifully bured into their hands, to save their poor fellow en from dying by starvation.—Cin. Protestant

THE PRICE OF FOOD IN IRELAND makes it very sirable that donations from this country, should principally in breadstuffs or provisions, rather an in money. For instance, Indian corn was lling at 74 shillings per quarter, which is more an two dollars per bushel. Now $20,000 in eland would purchase little more than 10,000 shels of corn; but in this country it would buy ore than double that quantity, and as soon as e corn or meal is ready for shipment we shall nd no difficulty in getting ships to take it out free f all charges.

H. B. M. minister plenipotentiary at Washing- n, the Rt. Hon. Richard Pakenham, has presen- ed £100 to the Washington Committee for the re- ef of Ireland. In a letter to the Hon. Daniel Web- er, Mr. Pakenham says:—"As an Irishman tem- orarily resident in the United States I hope that shall be allowed to contribute to an object of uch pure charity and benevolence toward my na- ive country. I accordingly beg leave to enclose draft on London for one hundred pounds, paya- le to your order as a member of committee, which ou will oblige me by applying to the general urposes of the subscription."

DONATIONS FOR IRELAND.—The Officers and Cadets of the United States Military Academy at West Point have sent Three Hundred dollars to the Irish Relief fund. The workmen in the em- loy of Peckham & Rumrill and H. P. Kennedy & Co., manufacturing jewellers of this city, have given seventy-six dollars and twenty-six cents for the relief of Ireland. The ship La Grange, load- ing for Newry, Ireland, at Pier No. 6, North Riv- er, will take twenty-five barrels free of charge for any benevolent person who will give them for the relief of the needy. J. & J. Stuart & Co. have offered to give that amount of wheat and flour. A gentleman in Brooklyn paid $50 for a ticket to Mr. Giles' lecture on behalf of Ireland. Mr. Worcester has presented one of his excellent Pianos, to be sold for the benefit of the Irish poor; and A. T. Stewart & Co., of Broadway, offer to take the instrument and negotiate for its sale.

MEETING FOR IRELAND IN NEW ORLEANS.—A large and highly respectable meeting of citizens of New Orleans was held on the 4th inst, A- mong the speakers was the Hon. Henry Clay. He addressed the assemblage, says the Delta, with all the grace, ease, fervor and pathos, and in that incomparable voice, still retaining its wonted rich, varied and dulcet tones, which thirty years ago, wielded the reason and the feelings of the people, and of the people's representatives. He spoke for about fifteen minutes, in most excellent taste, and to the purpose. His speech was re- ceived with the most rapturous expressions of delight and satisfaction by the audience.

MEETING FOR THE RELIEF OF IRELANE, AT AL- BANY.—A great meeting was held in Albany, on Friday evening, at which his Excellency, Gov- ernor Young, presided. The Vice Presidents were Chief Justice Bronson, Chancellor Wal- worth, A. C. Flagg and several other distinguish- ed citizens. John Van Buren, Ira Harris, the Chancellor and others addressed the meeting with the happiest effect. This important meet- ing will be followed by many others throughout the Empire State.

Bishop Doane, of New Jersey, and Bishop Pot- ter of Pennsylvania, have appealed to the clergy and laity under their charge on behalf of the Irish poor, and the latter has appointed the first Sunday in March for taking up collections in all the Pro- testant churches of Pennsylvania.

ABUNDANCE OF GRAIN.—We wish that the grain merchants of England or the starving population of Ireland were here to have their wants supplied in the superabundance of our harvests. The a- mount of grain and flour coming to our large towns from the surrounding country excites general sur- prise. The only difficulty is to find means to carry away, the abundance, which has so accumula- ted as to fill all the warehouses that can be hired. One day last week fifty rail road cars came into Baltimore loaded with grain. From Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Western New York we have similar accounts. We have an abundance for the supply of Europe's famishing millions. The on- ly difficulty is to get it to them, but we hope that the proposed employment of the British Navy will remove this difficulty in good season.—N. Y. Sun.

THE FAMINE IN IRELAND.—The distress in Ire- land has opened the purses of all classes of the community. Subscriptions, public and private, are going on upon a very liberal scale. The Board of Brokers of New York have given $2000 from their funds to aid the supplies to Ireland. Pittsburgh sends $2000. The sum of $100 was subscribed in a few minutes on Wednesday by the reporters in Congress, for the relief of the poor of Ireland.

In Rochester, on Tuesday, a meeting was held, and subscriptions to the amount of $363 31, of which $276 were paid down in cash, were col- lected before the adjournment. In Boston, at a meeting of the parishioners of the Church of the Holy Cross, on Sunday evening, $3000 were sub- scribed. The following table will show at a glance some of the results of efforts made in this cause throughout the country. There have been raised:—

By general subscription in N. York city,	$12,269 50
New York Stock Exchange Board,	2,000 00
Church of the Holy Cross Boston,	3,000 00
By subscriptions in Pittsburgh, Pa.,	2,000 00
Do do Jersey city,	1,000 00
Do do St. Louis, Mo.,	1,230 00
Do do Rochestor, N. Y.,	363 00
Society of Friends, Philad.,	7,200 00
A member of Society of Friends, Philad.,	1,777 09
Reporters in Congress,	100 00

Besides these amounts already contributed, ac- tive efforts for relief are making over the whole country, which will greatly increase the fund. The churches have not been behind in this char- itable work. Bishop Doane calls upon those of the Episcopalian Church in New Jersey to give them aid, and Bishop Potter, of Pennsylvania, has sug- gested to the clergy of his diocess, that the first Sunday in March be set apart as a day of special prayer and for raising of contributions for the starving poor of Ireland. These calls will doubt- less be liberally responded to.

The benevolent spirit of our own citizens has not been appealed to in vain, and a large sum will no doubt, be raised in this city. A public meet- ing will take place this, Wednesday night.—Dol. Newspaper.

RAIL ROAD ACCIDENT.—On the Tonawanda Rail- road, while a train of one passenger and fourteen very heavy freight cars laden with wheat in bulk, was proceeding with great rapidity, the engineer discovered, too late to stop the cars, that the axle of the tender was broken. The cars were thrown off the track and precipitated some fifteen feet down the embankment and overturned, but strange to say, although all were bruised, none were se- riously injured.

Baltimore, Tuesday, Feb. 16—1 P. M.—There were no less than seven thousand persons present at the ball for the benefit of the suffering poor of Ireland, which was given last night. The ball took place at the Holiday street theatre.

THE RIGHT SPIRIT.—A young lady, whose name we are not at liberty to mention, hearing that Mr. Giles would deliver a lecture on Tuesday even- ing, at the Brooklyn Institute, for the relief of the starving poor of Ireland, generously forwarded the price for the room to the directors.—N. Y. Commercial.

GREAT FIRE AT CHICAGO.—On the evening of the 2d inst., seven buildings, including the Thea- tre and Eagle (Hotel,) were consumed by fire in Chicago, Illinois. Loss $20,000, partly insured. Names of losers; Farmers' Bank of Michigan, J. Cook, A. Garrett, Andrus & Doyle, Fullerton, J. Nash, B. Jones and P. Law. The fire was the work of an incendiary—one man was burnt, re- port said in the Theatre.

FIRE IN BUFFALO.—On Wednesday of last week, two stores belonging to the estate of Elisha Haywood, and a boarding house over them, kept by G. G. Thomas and the Tobacco store of of Mr. L. H. Kimball were consumed by fire. Partly insured. Loss considerable.

A QUARREL.—The editor of Memphis are in a pretty snarl all about advocating certain Canal routes. One of them is in favor of Wolf river canal—He is decidedly wolfish in his remarks.

WHITE WATER CANAL.—The Milton, Ind., Times of the 3d inst., says we have just been in- formed by one of the Directors, who has just returned from a meeting of the Board, that a prop- osition was made by the Millers at Lawrence- burgh, to furnish a considerable sum of money to repair the Feeder Dam at Harrison, and the Ca- nal from there down. The Board thereupon passed an order, authorizing the issue of $10,000 in bonds payable in one, two, and three years, upon their paying to the Company the same amount in cash, to be appropriated to the above repairs, which will about complete the same. The Company pledges the tolls and water-rents that may accrue on that part of the Canal for the prompt payment of the debt. A similar order was passed for the benefit of the mill owners, to repair that portion of the Canal between Brook- ville and Laurel, including the Feeder Dam at the latter place, pledging the water rents between those points for the payment of the bonds. The cost will be about $7000. Arrangements were also made for the repair of the Williams Creek Acqueduct, and some other damages below Con- nersville.—Cin. Com.

THE MAGNETIC TELEGRAPH.—Morse's Electro- Magnetic Telegraph is rapidly threading the country in various directions. A line is at pres- ent being constructed, between Washington and Petersburg, Va. and a contract has been entered into, we believe, for a continuous line thence through to New Orleans. We also notice the construction of a line between this city and Read- ing and Pottsville. This will be a great conve- nience, as well as great economy of time and expense to our friends engaged in the coal busi- ness and to the citizens generally of the region, as well as to the Railroad and Canal Companies. It is to be hoped that this line will be pushed for- ward with all convenient despatch, and it may be made ready for the opening of the trade the en- suing season.—Dol. Newspaper.

ABOLITION OF SLAVERY IN DELAWARE.—A se- lect Committee of the Delaware Legislature has reported a bill agreeably to the wishes of a num- ber of petitioners, for the abolition of slavery in that State. Any sympathy with political abolition is disclaimed by the Committee, who consider it a subject belonging exclusively to the State in which slavery exists. For many years slavery has been merely nominal in Delaware, and the Committee is of opinion that if not now abolished, in a few years it will necessarily become ex- tinct.

A LITERARY NEGRO.—At a recent Presbyterian Synod, held at Watumpka, Alabama, a negro na- med Ellis, was admitted to the ministry. He is to be sent as a missionary to Liberia. The Eu- faula Shield says his wife and children have been purchased by the Presbyterian church at a cost of $2,500. He has acquired his education by his own exertions, and upon examination proved him- self a good Latin, Greek and Hebrew scholar, but better versed in Greek. His examination in the- ology was highly satisfactory.

CIVIL WAR IN ILLINOIS.—They are beginning to realize in Illinois what every state must expect when the laws are not enforced viz: rebellion and civil war. The Governor has transmitted to the Legislature a copy of the proceedings of a public meeting held in Messac County, which set forth that the Regulators are still pursuing their works of cruelty and villany in that afflicted country. They are beating, torturing, and abusing in every way men, women and children, turning them out of doors in the night time, and destroying their habi- tations. The people composing the public meet- ing say that they have lost all confidence in the Legislature, and they call upon the Governor to come to their aid on his own responsibility, and threaten that if something is not done to their re- lief that they will take the law in their own hands This is a very distressing state of affairs, but not unexpected. When a band of notoriously well known rioters organised to drive the Mormons out of the State and confiscate their property; when they assembled with cannon and arms at Warsaw with the determination to make war upon inno- cent men, women and children, Governor Ford took no energetic measures to support the laws and punish the rioters. The consequence was that from 12,000 to 15,000 citizens under the protec- tion of the State were driven into the wilderness from their comfortable homes, farms and poses- sions, and are now wanderers on the road to Oregon or California. The success in the murder of Joe and Hyram Smith and many of their followers, together with the banishment of all the Mormons emboldened the men or their colleagues to new out- rages, which nothing but the strong arm of the law can possibly put down. Illinois it may be said is the only state in the Union which encourages civil war within its borders.—N. Y. Sun.

TEARING OFF ENVELOPES.—There is a merchant in New York who has long been in the habit of sending newspapers to his customers, after having drawn a pen around his advertisements, contin- ued to do so, notwithstanding the order of the Postmaster General to tear off wrappers, and prosecute every one who should make any mark on a newspaper sent by mail. A few days ago the merchant received a note from the New York Dis- trict Attorney, inviting him to call. The invita- tion was complied with, when the District Attor- ney produced several of these newspapers which had been wrongly abstracted from the mails, by order of the Post-master General, and enquired whether the merchant had made these marks, or caused them to be made. The merchant said yes, and the Attorney informed him that he had been ordered to commence a prosecution for this violation of Post-office orders. The merchant addressed the Post-master General, requesting that functionary to inform him where the provis- ion of law could be found, he was charged with having violated. The answer was a discontinuance of the suit. The New York Courier is of the opinion that a suit against the Post-master Gene- ral for ordering the envelopes to be taken off, and the papers withheld from their proper owners, would be likely to find not only law, but public opinion to sustain it.—Cincinnati Commercial.

GREAT FIRE IN COVINGTON.—A fire broke out in the large and extensive pork house, owned by the Northern Bank of Kentucky, in Covington, opposite the city, between 4 or 5 o'clock Thurs- day afternoon, which was entirely destroyed to- gether with several out-houses, and the principal part of their contents owned by Mr. Morgan, late of the firm of Clarkson, Campbell & Co., being a loss of from 50 to $70,000! The whole covered by insurance. There were a great many barrels of pork and kegs of lard saved. Four or five of our fire companies went to the assistance of our neigh- bors and did good service.

We regret to state that three of the firemen, be- longing to Washington Company No. 1, were se- verely though not dangerously injured by the fall- ing of a wall. We learn the name of but one, Mr. Sheldon, who was injured in the foot and hip. A member of Wave Hose carriage was run over, but not seriously hurt. The fire caught, it is sup- posed, in the department used for rendering lard. The Mayor and citizens of Covington displayed their usual liberality in preparing ample refresh- ments for the firemen.—Cincinnati Commercial.

PERPETUAL IMPRISONMENT.—A bill has passed the Assembly of the Wisconsin Legislature to sub- stitute perpetual imprisonment for capital punish- ment in this State. The bill was ordered to a third reading in the Council by a vote of 7 to 6.

The Boon's Lick (Mo) Times of the 30th men- tions the arrival of Mr. Merrit, from Santa Fe, out of whose company, thirty in all, which started the 30th of November, three were frozen to death and several others crippled by frost. The names of the men frozen to death were Bartlett, Long and Thompson, from Buchanan county. The company came in on foot and were 57 days on the rout—about four hundred miles of the journey through snow eight inches deep.—Baltimore Sun.

RECENT LOSSES BY FIRE.—N. P. Ferris's flour- ing mills at Versailles, Indiana, valued at $4,000 or $5,000, Lorgan and Campbell's Pork House, Covington, Kentucky, were $10,000 to $5,000, and insured for $30,000; Hotchkiss's store, Long Wharf, New Haven a total loss; Marshall Print Works, near Hudson, N. Y., loss two hundred thousand dollars, and no insurance.

MELANCHOLY ACCIDENT NEAR NORWICH CT.—Amos H. Allen, aged 16, lately broke through the ice of the mill pond at Ledyard. His mother and an older brother aged 18 ran to his aid, but also fell in. Mr Joseph Morgan hastened to rescue them, and succeeded in saving the mother and her oldest son, who were much exhausted. Amos was taken out dead.

DEATH OF DR EDSON.—The living skeleton has had but a short stay amongst us. He died on Sat- urday of consumption. Dr Edson was an inteli- gent physician, a regular graduate from Vermont, and was in good practice. While weighing 140 pounds, and being in good health, he commen- ced decaying gradually in size without the least diminution in health, and in 19 years he fell off until he weighed no more than 49 pounds, yet con- tinuing his practice and riding his medical circuit and delivering lectures as usual. There was no decay of strength, vision or appetite, yet to all ap- pearances he was a walking skeleton.—N. Y. Sun.

A GERMAN PAPER.—As one of the signs of the times, it may be mentioned that the type and ma- terials for a German paper have been removed to Milwaukie, Wisconsin. This shows the pro- gress of emigration. American papers are print- ed in Mexico, Spanish papers in Louisiana, and French papers in several cities in the Union.

A GREAT BRIDGE.—The new Rail Road Bridge across the Susquehanna at Harrisburg, is an im- mense structure. It is about four thousand feet long, built upon the improved double latticed plan. There are twenty-three spans, averaging one hun- dred and seventy-three feet each; and two arched viaducts, one fifty-three feet, and the other eighty- four feet long. The entire cost of this immense structure is short of $100,000.

DARING ROBBERY AT MAYSVILLE.—We learn from the Maysville Eagle of the 9th, that on Sunday Morning, during service in the Churches, some daring villains had entered the Jewelry es- tablishment of Mr. Joseph B. Boyd, and robbed him of between $2,500 and $3,000 worth of gold and silver watches, breast pins, diamond rings, &c. &c. The store was entered from the rear, and through the gun establishment of Mr. A. R. Grosby, by the use of false keys and pliers. The plan was cunningly laid, and the robbers carried off their booty, leaving no traces of their course, or the place of concealment of the stolen prop- erty. Instant search was made through the town, and for miles upon the river, and through the country, but no clue to their discovery has yet been obtained.

Between fifty and sixty watches were taken, about fifteen of them gold, and the larger part be- longing to customers. The remainder of the jew- elry was all recently purchased, and of the latest styles.

Mr. Boyd offers a reward of two hundred dollars for the recovery of the goods and the apprehen- sion of the robbers, or would give that amount for either.—Pitts. Gaz.

THE TOWNLEY ESTATE.—At last we are enabled to publish something that is tangible and definite respecting the Townley estate. By the decree of the Court of Chancery the real estate goes to the English Treasury, and the personal estate to the heirs of Mary Townley, who is supposed to have married John Lawrence, and removed to this country. So it seems that the Lawrences, if they can prove their descent from Mary Townley, will come in for the largest share of the £25,000,000. The Chases intermarried with the Townleys, but we have no authority for saying they are, or that they are not, heirs to any portion of the Townley estate.

A copy of the decree of the Court of Chancery of the Chase estate is expected in the next steam- er and will be published when received. Particu- lar information respecting the Chases who remov- ed to this country is also expected.—Yarmouth Register.

The Mexican War.

It is now clearly evident that the War in which we are engaged with Mexico is heartily disap- proved by a large majority of the American peo- ple, and there can be no room to doubt, we think, that it will "stink in the nostrils" of the wise, and good, and patriotic of the country, for generations to come.

One extraordinary feature of this war is, that no one scarcely seems to know why it was waged. A christian nation, in the nineteenth century, in bloody contest with a sister Republic, also pro- fessing christianity, for no tangible object which the people can understand! Is it not most sur- prising! Even the great Southern statesman, Mr. Calhoun, intimate as he is with all the affairs of this country, and with every source of knowledge as regards the Government open to him, confesses his ignorance of the object of this shameful war. In his speech on the three million bill, delivered in the Senate on last Tuesday, he says—(we copy from the Union)—"If I rightly understand "the object for which the war was declared, I feel "a deep conviction that by assuming this defen- "sive attitude, all this may be effected. I say, "if I rightly understand—for, strange as it may "seem, to me the object for which this war has "been declared is even at this late day, left to in- "ference!" What a humbling confession for the country.

The manner in which the war has been con- ducted, is also obnoxious to the good sense of the American people.. A great many valuable lives, much precious time, and millions of treasure, have been wasted, and the work is yet all to be done. A new plan of attack has been undertaken because the first has proved impracticable. Our commanders and army have fought and suffered manfully—they have covered our flag with fresh and unfading military glory—yet as for subduing Mexico and bringing about a peace we are as far, or farther, than ever from such an end. The work is all yet to be done too against an enemy exasperated by defeats and indignities and strenghtened by delays.

But admitting that the present campaign against Vera Cruz will be successful, and that our army will enter the city of Mexico in triumph—admit- ting even that we conquer all Mexico—of what benefit will it be to this great nation? Can any one tell? Will it not rather be a curse?—Mr. Calhoun, in the speech above referred to, with the far-reaching eye of a statesman, remarked:

"When I said there was a mysterious connec- tion between our fate and the Mexicans, I alluded to the great fact that we can do nothing with Mex- ico if we were to go on and subjugate her.—If we incorporate her, we are destroyed—if not, our in- stitutions perish! In this view I hold this war to have been, in the first instance, a great depart- ure from the true line of policy which, as I have again and again said, is peace. It is ours to grow and not to add by conquest.

Would that such a line of policy could have influenced our Executive councils before we were involved in such great calamities.—Pittsburgh Gaz.

BILLS FOR NEWSPAPERS.—Publishers of news- papers are permitted to transmit their bills for subscriptions due, free of postage, according to the provisions of Sec. 156 of the Post-office reg- ulations. So says the Postmaster General.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—On Friday last, Micheal Tivilien, whilst excavating coal at Lonaconing, near Cumberland, Md., was so badly crushed by the bank caving in that he died in an hour after the accident.

Great scarcity exists in some parts of Missouri and Illinois, in the article of Sugar and salt. Many farmers, thus far, have been unable to kill their hogs in consequence.

THE WONDERS OF THIS AGE.—The Steamer Hibernia arrived at the wharf on Tuesday, Jan. 26th, at 7 o'clock in the morning. She brought the first copies of Dicken's new Christmas Story, "The Battle of Life." By the five o'clock train that left the same evening, several thousand copies of the entire work, making a 12mo pam- phlet volume of near seventy pages, were despatch- ed to New York. The composition, press work, binding, packing and carting having all been com- pleted in little more than eight hours.

ANOTHER ACCIDENT.—The tow boat Daniel Webster in coming over the bar at the S. E. pass, New Orleans, burst one of her lar-board boilers, killing Mr. Baker, the Pilot, and severely scald- ing several of the crew.

MORTALITY OF VOLUNTEERS.—It is stated, by the New Orleans Atlas, of the 27th of January, that of the Miss. Regiment of Volunteers, for- ty had already died, and many others were dan- gerously ill.

TOUCH NOT, HANDLE NOT.—The stockholders of the Fall River Railroad, nearly 400 being pres- sent have voted that no alcoholic liquors should be carried over their road.

Written for the Western Recorder.

MR. EDITOR: I will venture to send the follow- ing thoughts on the Religious Enthusiastic seats that have arisen, and appeared within my remem- brance in our enlightened day and country, for publication in the Recorder. And I would re- mark first: That notwithstanding the difference in their own creeds, on other points, they have all in their turn taken the judgment seat and con- demned all but themselves, to eternal perdition. We will name as many as six different seets with- in forty years past, that we have been acquainted with.

1st. The Campbellites, who according to their leader, fixed the regeneration of the soul, to be accomplished in the Immersion of the body under water, and no where nor how else, so by this tra- dition they shut all out of the kingdom of Heaven, who do not submit to this ordinance in this way &c.

2nd. The Shakers, who proclaimed themselves the judges of the living and the dead; and all who refused to come to them and confess their sins (for they professed to have power to pardon sin) must be lost.

3rd. The poor filthy Pilgrims, who judged and condemned every body who did not leave their homes, and clothe themselves in rags and sack- cloth and travel with them through the earth, all covered with filth.

4th. The Mormons, who believe themselves to be in the latter day's glory, and all who do not believe in Joseph Smith as a true prophet, and join them, must be lost.

5th. The Millerites, who judged and condemed all as Infidels and unfit for heaven who did not believe in Miller's calculation of the time of Christ's second appearing, at least a number of them went this far.

6th. The Ultra Abolitionists, who appear to believe that their zeal for the liberation of the poor slave will give them a right to a crown of glory, while they at all times assume the judgment seat, and regardless of circumstances pronounce all who hold slaves, to be as bad as horse thieves, robbers, murderers, &c. And all who stand in ecclesiasti- cal connection with the slave holder are equally guilty. And of course all who have died, con- nected in this way with slavery, whether they ever saw a slave or not, are gone to hell, and all who are yet living in any church, a part of which holds slaves, are on their way to eternal perdition, and must finally land there, unless they repent and leave Babylon and vote a certain ticket. Then immediate pardon will be granted for all their thefts, robberies, murders, &c. &c.

But let us examine the judgment of these pre- sumptuous creatures. And first, for about two hundred years, those who have been justly repor- ted, faithful humble ministers of the gospel, have lived, labored and died happy in these United States, in church relation with slaveholders, and have been the happy instruments in the hand of God, in the conversion of thousands of souls, and these have lived and died happy in the Sa- viour. But according to the judgment of a cer- tain party, those pious humble and faithful minis- ters, so called, were no better than horse thieves, robbers, &c., who were greatly blessed in their labor of love, in that they saw many of their fel- low murderers, shouting glory to God, for par- doning mercy, and redeeming love. And it may be presumed, that even some of these presumptu- ous judges, were awakened and converted to God, through the preaching of some one of these high- way robbers, and they have remained in fellow- ship, and fellow laborers too, for years with these murderers, and wept, and sung and rejoiced with them, and given the hand of friendship, when ta- king their leave of them.

OLD SURVETUS, alias A. M'GUIRE.

FROM SOUTH AMERICA.—The New Orleans Picayune has accounts from Rio to the 23d Dec. Slavery was abolished in the Republic of Uraguay on the 26th of October. General Urquiza is said to have projected the withdrawal of Entre Rios from the Argentine Union, under the protection of France and England, unless the confederacy were re-organized on the plan of the United States.

FOR CHINA.—Rev. Moses C. White, of the New York conference, and Rev. J. D. Collins of the Michigan conference having been appointed to the Methodist Episcopal Mission to China, will probably sail in April.

NOTICES

EVANSVILLE CIRCUIT, P. CON.—The Next Quarterly meeting will commence at the White Oak appointment on the first of May, to which we invite Brs. P. T. Laishley—D. R. Helmick—Jno. Clark, H. Reger,—A. Lister—R. M. Walker—M. Lucas, with all others that can attend. Come over Brethren and help us. And if either of the breth- ren has Hymn Books or Disciplines, he will find sale for them at our meeting.

A. J. WAREN, Supt.

MAHONING MISSION.—Br. Clancy, the President, is informed that I wish to be released from my field of labor, on account of the state of my health, which has been very poor for some time, and no prospect of being any better.

DANIEL RICHARDSON.

ZANESVILLE CIRCUIT.—The President Br. Clan- cy will be expected to attend a meeting at Brown- ville, on the last Saturday and Sunday in March, as per his appointment.

COLUMBIA CT. MUSK. CON.—Our President is informed that his appointment will be at Graham's station, on the Ohio river. We also purpose hol ding a two days meeting at Athens Bridge, March 20th and 21st. We invite Brs. H. T. Lawson, C. J. Sears, S. Means, W. Sears, J. W. Southard, F. Edwards, and any other brethren who can attend.

S. ELLIOTT.

PRESIDENTIAL APPOINTMENTS.

Pittsburgh District.

Should it please God to spare my life, and give health to my family, I will try to fill the following appointments.

Union	St.	28th	Feb.
Connelsville	Ct.	7th	March
Fayette	"	14th	"
Wheeling Circuit.		1st Sunday in April.
Tyler	"	2d	" "
Harrisville	"	3d	" "
Mill Creek	"	4th	" "
Buchanon	"	1st	" in May
Braxton	"	2d	" "
Greenbrier	"	3d	" "
Huntersville	"	4th	" "
Valley	"	5th	" "

GEO. BROWN.

Ohio Conference.

Presidential Visitation.

Buford	"	February	27 & 28.
Batavia	"	March	6 & 7.
Cincinnati	"	"	13 & 14.
Lebanon Station,		"	17. Night.
Twin Creek	"	"	20 & 21.
Greenville Mission,		"	27 & 28.

J. M. YOUNG.

Muskingum District.

BR. BASSETT: Please insert in the Recorder, the following list of appointments which I will fill, if able so to do.

2nd	Sunday	March	Otsego Circuit.
3rd	"	"	Lancaster "
4th	"	"	Zanesville "
1st	"	April	Newark "
7th	Wednesday	"	Delaware "
2nd	Sunday	"	Frederick "
4th	"	"	Licking "
28th	Wednesday	"	Mt. Zion "
1st	Sunday	May	Coshocton "
2nd	"	"	Pleasant hill "

GEO. CLANCY, Pres.

BUFORD CT. O. DIS.—Our second quarterly meeting will be held at Liberty Meeting House, commencing March 13th, 1847. Ministerial aid is solicited.

W. G. FOWLER, Supt.

OTSEGO CIRCUIT.—The second quarterly meet- ing will be held at Hopewell M. H. 10 miles north east of Zanesville, including the 2d Sabbath, 14th of March. The visit of Br. Clancy, is expected at that time and place.

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT.

LETTERS RECEIVED.

S. Lancaster, E. S. Hoagland, 1 subscriber; D. Rich- ardson, A. S. Robinson, C. Caddy, 1 subscriber; M. Brack- ley, J. H. Hamilton, R. Rose, R. T. Simonton, J. Nichols, A. J. Waren.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS.

From	For	Pays to Vol.	No.	$	cts.
M. Johnson,		S	26	1	00
S. Lancaster,	L. Cook,	8	52	2	00
E. S. Hoagland,	J. F. Elliott,	7	52	4	00
C. Caddy,	R. Herrick	8	52	4	00
"	J. Truesdale,	9	27	2	00
M. Brackley,	H. Mulholland,	6	52	5	00
J. H. Hamilton,	Jacob Ross,	9	14	2	00
R. Rose,	J. Hollingsworth,	8	39	2	00
"	Mrs. E. Johnson,	8	52	2	00
R. T. Simonton,	H. Snodgrass,	9	12	2	00
"	A. J. Linn,	8	26	1	00
J. Nichols,	W. B. Goodrich,	8	14	2	00
"	C. Scott,	7	52	2	00

New Subscribers, last week, 6;—discontinuances 4.
This " 4, " 5.

Br. Hoagland, we have changed N. Haynes from York to Updegraff's, and credited him in full for Volume 7. The mistake occurred, by our not finding his name at Upde- graff's.

Br. Nichols, you say H. Goodrich. We have W. B. G., is that right?

Received for "Annual Register."

A. M'Guire,	$2 00
O. V. Warren,	1 00
R. Rose, (50 cents overpaid,)	3 50
R. T. Simonton.	1 00

WINER'S PECTORAL SYRUP OF HOARHOUND AND ELE- CAMPANE.—This is an excellent Remedy for Coughs and Soreness of the Breast. Having been thus afflicted for a- bout six weeks the present winter, till our friends were fearful of the results, we were advised to try the above named Syrup, and did so with decided success. Before we had used one bottle of the article, we were entirely relieved, and found that the Cough had left us. Winer's Pectoral is to be obtained at the store of Buckingham & Sturges, Putnam, Ohio.

THE MARKETS.

PUTNAM AND ZANESVILLE, FEB. 1847.

We quote Wheat at 75c., Flour $4,50, Oats 16c., Corn firm at 25a31c., Potatoes 25c.

We hear of sales of Bulk Pork, hog round, at 4a4¼c.,— perhaps the latter figure is nearer the true price here. Clo- verseed $3,25a3,50.

NEW YORK, FEB. 15.

Small sales Genesee flour at $7,25, rather dull. Sales also of Southern brands at $6,97.

Sales Genesee wheat at 1,71 cts.

Sales of white Corn at 100a102 cents. About 50,000 bushels changed hands at 103a105c. for yellow.

Oats sold at 50 cts. per bushel.

PITTSBURGH, FEB. 17.

There was 8 feet 6 inches water at dusk last evening— and still rising.

For Bulk Pork there is a very active inquiry. Sale 3000 lbs. Hams, Shoulders and Jowls, at 5c.; 4000 lbs. at 5¼c., and 10,000 lbs. in other lots at the same.

For Sale.

PROPERTY IN IRVILLE. BLACKSMITHS, ATTEND.

THE SUBSCRIBER, intending to remove to the west, offers for sale his property in Irville, Mus- kingum County, O., consisting of three town lots, with a two story frame dwelling house, a good well of water and a pump at the door; a stable, and blacksmith shop, being a very good stand for business, having no competition. A desirable situation for a blacksmith. Irville is situated in the midst of a populous and healthful section of country. The property will be sold low at private sale. Please call soon and see. SAMUEL MOORE.

Irville, Feb. 25, 1847.

PROSPECTUS

OF THE LITERARY EMPORIUM.

A COMPENDIUM OF

Religious, Literary and Philosophical Knowledge.

IN the first place, light literature will find no place in its pages, i. e., love tales, literary trash, &c. Secondly, sectarianism will not be admitted into the Emporium; or, in other words, it will favor no particular sect; but it will advocate the religion of the Bible in the strongest terms, and will urge the necessity not only of a change of heart, but a virtuous and holy life, in order to be truly happy in this world and to be prepared for that which is to come.— In regard to its literary character, it is designed to be of such a nature, as to water the thirsty soul that is studious- ly endeavoring to acquire a knowledge of man in his past and present condition; also some information in relation to the different sciences and arts, and the variety of the works of nature, with such miscellaneous reading as will invigorate the faculties of the mind, give scope to the im- agination, while it shall address itself to the good sense of all who desire to be truly elevated by reading.

Our object in the beginning was to establish a sound lit- erature, which we deem of much importance to the future destiny of this country. We bless God that he has smiled on our efforts: for although the Emporium has been in existence but two years, and has just entered upon the third, it has already attained a circulation of fifteen thous- and, which is unequalled in the history of Magazines. It is got up in better style, and contains more reading, and from abler pens, than any other magazine of its price in the United States.

Christian Friend, we hope you will aid us in the exten- sive circulation and support of a work, which we think calculated to enrich the mind, and inspire the soul to the love of virtue and its Divine Author. The very extensive circulation of light and frothy literature, as it is called, is taking by wholesale, the very life blood of the morality and religion of the youth of our country. Is it not time for Christians to act in this matter?

 CONTRIBUTORS.—The Literary Emporium contains articles, original or selected, from the following, among other distinguished authors:

J. G. Whittier, Seba Smith, R. S. St. John, Mrs. Judson, Rev. J. N. Danforth, Mrs. E. O. Smith, Miss Webb, Mrs. F. H. Green, Mrs. Stewart, Rev. S. Olin, Prof. McClintock, Rev. J. P. Durbin, Elihu Burrit, Wm. C. Bryant, N. P. Willis, S. Galloway, A. M., Washington Irving, Rev. Dr. Bethune, Rev. L. L. Hamline, Rev. E. Thomson, Rev. T. Dick, D. D., Rev. H. Winslow, Rev. Wm. B. Sprague, Rev. T. H. Stockton, Rev. Robt. Lee, Rev. B. F. Tefft, Mrs. L. H. Sigourney, Mrs. E. C. Em- bury, Miss Sedgwick, Emeline Smith, Eliza Cook, Miss Baker.

The Emporium is published monthly, at $1,00 a year; $5,00 allowed to any person who will obtain fifteen pay- ing subscriber, and at the same rate for a greater or less number. One hundred enterprising and honest Agents wanted for the Emporium and other valuable works. All letters, orders, &c., should be addressed to

J. K. WELLMAN,
Editor and Proprietor, No. 116 Nassau-st, N. Y.

POETRY.

DAILY WORK.

BY CHARLES MACKAY.

Who lags for dread of daily work,
And his appointed task would shirk,
Commits a folly and a crime;
A soulless slave—
A paltry knave—
A clog upon the wheels of Time,
With work to do, and store of health,
The man's unworthy to be free,
Who will not give,
That he may live,
His daily toil for daily fee.

No! Let us work! We only ask
Reward proportioned to our task:
We have no quarrel with the great;
No feud with rank—
With mill, or bank—
No envy of a lord's estate,
If we can earn sufficient store
To satisfy our daily need;
And can retain,
For age and pain,
A fraction, we are rich indeed.

No dread of toil have we of ours;
We know our worth, and weigh our powers;
The more we work, the more we win:
Success to Trade!
Success to Spade!
And to the Corn that's coming in!
And joy to him, who o'er his task
Remembers toil is Nature's plan;
Who, working, thinks,—
And never sinks
His independence as a man.

Who only asks for humblest wealth,
Enough for competence and health;
And leisure, when his work is done,
To read his book,
By chimney nook,
Or stroll at setting of the sun,
Who toils as every man should toil,
For fair reward, erect and free:
These are the men—
The best of men—
These are the men we mean to be.

"The Old Family Bible."

How painfully pleasing the fond recollection
Of youthful connexions, and innocent joy,
When blest with parental advice and affection,
Surrounded with mercies—with peace from on high,
I still view the chairs of my father and mother,
The seats of their offspring, as ranged on each hand;
And that richest of books, which excels every other,
The family Bible which lay on the stand;
The old-fashioned Bible, the dear blessed Bible,
The family Bible, which lay on the stand.

That Bible, the volume of God's inspiration,
At morning and evening, could yield us delight,
And the prayer of our sire was a sweet invocation
For mercy by day, and for safety through night;
Our hymns of thanksgiving with harmony swelling,
All warm from the hearts of the family band,
Half raised us from earth to that rapturous dwelling,
Described in the Bible that lay on the stand;
The old-fashioned Bible, the dear blessed Bible,
The family Bible, which lay on the stand.

Ye scenes of tranquility, long have we parted,
My hopes almost gone, and my parents no more;
In sorrow and sadness, I live broken-hearted,
And wander unknown on a far distant shore;
Yet how can I doubt a Savior's protection,
Forgetful of gifts from his bountiful hand?
O let me with patience receive his correction,
And think of the Bible that lay on the stand;
The old-fashioned Bible, the dear blessed Bible,
The family Bible that lay on the stand.

Ecclesiastical.

Written for the Western Recorder.

CHURCH DIVISION.

THINGS TO BE CONSIDERED.

NO. X.

Mr. Editor: Among the many things which will be to our disadvantage if we divide from the South, for the reasons assigned, in the proposition made for such a movement, we observe:

III. That we shall, by such an act, commit ourselves to a precedent, which, if faithfully and practically carried out, would entirely subvert every reformative measure undertaken; and necessarily preclude the possibility of success in the anti-slavery movement,

How is ignorant and depraved mind, to be informed and purified? By leaving it to itself in its fallen estate, or by embracing it with an appropriate remedy? Certainly not by letting it alone in its ignorance and depravity; but by imparting to it the healing antidote. Has God ever taught us that men are to be reformed by fleeing away from them, and leaving them in their folly and crime? Or are we not rather taught that this is to be done only when all hopes of reformation are gone, and men are given up as incorrigible in their iniquity, and only fit for damnation!

Is there any other way of successfully enlightening and purifying the fallen and vicious, than that of bringing virtuous and intelligent mind in contact with that of the vicious, and thus shedding its elevating influences upon the degraded victims of vice? Does not God visit, in the spirit of conviction, the depraved heart of the sinner? He visits not the transgressor with his approbative smile, unless he repents and puts away his wrong—nevertheless, he visits him, and urges upon him the claims of truth, until he becomes hopelessly lost to every incentive to virtue, or is reformed. The non-intercourse policy, he never resorts to, until in the last extremity of desperate instances. And does He not deign to visit His short-sighted and erring people—commune with them and fellowship what is right with them, though disapproving of their wrongs? Have we nothing to learn from the teachings and example of unerring wisdom and rectitude? Did Jesus Christ withdraw from the corrupt Jewish Church, because he could not induce the proud Pharisees to believe and embrace his teachings? Surely they rejected religious truths of as great magnitude, as does the Southern oppressor. They denied the Messiah-ship of the Anointed of God. And yet the Lord Jesus, in the days of his incarnation sustained an ecclesiastical connection with them, unbroken to his last hour. At the table of the last Supper, he administered and partook of the commemorative elements, with his few chosen followers, without excluding or withdrawing from the traitorous wretch, who sold his Lord for the paltry consideration of thirty pieces of silver! Judging from his examples left us, can we reasonably conclude that Jesus would adopt the non-intercourse policy with the South, were he in our stead? Did the zealous Apostle to the Gentiles withdraw from the carnal Corinthians because they "walked as men" unrenewed by grace, and not as christians? Or did he not rather rebuke them sharply, and labor to lead them to repentance and reformation? Is there nothing in these instances of example from Divinity and Inspiration, to instruct us in the hour of our present emergency? Have they no lessons applicable to the emergencies of the nineteenth century?

Suppose this principle—the principle of non-intercourse—was to be adopted and strictly adhered to in politics, what would be the result? We might have an Abolition President, a large majority in Congress, and a Constitutional guarantee, empowering Congress to entirely put away Slavery, and yet we could not affect the existence of Slavery in the least, unless our Abolition President, and Congressmen were to meet at the Capitol, and unite with Slave-holding members of Congress to transact business in a Constitutional manner. Any attempt to abolish slavery in any other way would be downright rebellion against the laws of the nation, and not loyal legislation. Who does not perceive, then, that the policy of separating from, and refusing intercourse with those we judge to be in error, is, in its tendency, directly calculated to be subversive of reform, and detrimental to the cause we assay to promote? Certainly nothing can be more clear to the reflecting observer, nor more easy of demonstration. E. A. W.

Written for the Western Recorder.

REV. A. M'CAINE.

Mr. Editor: In the notice given in your paper of Br. M'Caine's strictures on the General Conference resolution, on the subject of Slave-holding, you notified your readers that the author of said resolution still lived, and was fully able, and no doubt would, vindicate himself and the General Conference of 1846.

Hence, we thought best to say nothing in reference to his papers, until after that should have been done; and as the author of it has appeared in the "Recorder," in its defence, and that to the satisfaction of all concerned, perhaps, except it be Br. M'Caine, and for aught we know, to his satisfaction, also. Therefore, we think a few thoughts on the subject at this time, will not be to meddle with other men's matters; and the reader may pass them for what they are worth, for we claim no extra wisdom.

We consider the resolution in question perfectly harmless, and placing in jeopardy the standing of no member of the M. P. Church; nor do we believe the General Conference, by passing it, transcended the Bible, or the Constitution of the Church. For so long as the circumstances under which men are placed, are left to decide their guilt or innocence, and those circumstances are not pointed out and defined by the legislative department of the Church, the judiciary thereof is not meddled with, nor is it legislating on moral evil. But because this was not done, the Brother objects, as much of his reasoning will show. But he says the circumstances under which men are placed, can have nothing to do in determining the good or evil of their actions; nor to decide their guilt or innocence in a moral view; for the thing they do, is neither good or evil, in itself, otherwise we destroy the distinction between right and wrong. But let us try this logic, and see if it will hold good. Then the practice of eating meat is either good or evil in itself, otherwise we destroy the distinction between right and wrong; but we are commanded not to eat meat under certain specified circumstances; therefore, it is an evil to eat meat under any circumstances.

But the Romans place the evil in days, and forbid the eating of it on Fridays, and during lent; but Br. M'Caine forbids the eating of it altogether. If our conclusion is wrong, Br. M's. premise is also wrong; and we have no objection for both to be considered wrong; and M. P. Methodists eat meat as before, being careful to be thankful, and not to offend a Br. by so doing. But the weight of Br. M's. reasoning is right and good against the scriptural and constitutional right of the General Conference to legislate on moral evil, and we are pleased that so able a pen has been used upon the subject; but the resolution he opposes contains no such thing; it only says there is an unholy joint in the hog, alias slave holding,) and the judiciary is left to find the circumstances of its existence, and its whereabouts. But perhaps this is what offended our Br.; for he, no doubt, believes the hog entirely holy, having no spot or wrinkle, or any such thing. But some object to the Constitution, for guarding the action of the General Conference against passing any law conflicting with the laws of the State; but if they will be at the trouble to consult the 13th chapter of Paul to the Romans, and the 2nd chapter of 1st Peter, they will find the same sentiment enjoined upon the church by the Apostles.

The men of Sodom will rise in judgment with this generation, and condemn it; therefore, circumstances will determine the guilt or innocence of all men, in the final judgment. There is no being guilty for the existence of the abstract principles of evil; but for acting upon them, after the consequences of such action has been pointed out, and they having the ability to act otherwise, or to avoid such sinful action. Hence slave-holding is sinful in many circumstances, and not sinful in some; but Slavery is an unholy hog, having not one pure joint in its body. Every member of the church has an undoubted right to declaim against whatever he may conceive to be wrong in the practice of another, and to prove it to be so, if he is able; and to seek his reformation and abandonment of the practice; and if he cannot succeed in this, to seek his expulsion, under the authority of the New Testament, and agreeably to the usages of the church to which he belongs. But when an individual departs from duty, and meddles with that, which he has no right to do, he gets into trouble. So when the church in her constituted legislative departments, undertakes to act upon questions not authorized by the Bible, gets into difficulty, and originates many embarrassments. But then offences will come; but woe unto him by whom they come. T. FORSHEE.

New Carlisle, O., Feb. 10, 1847.

Youth's Department.

From the New York Observer.

WHICH IS THE WISEST?

BY PROFESSOR ALDEN.

"Papa, where have you been in this heavy rain, and without an umbrella too?" said James Carter to his father, as he came in with his clothes thoroughly drenched with the rain.

"I have been to Mr. Hyde's," said Mr. Carter,

"What, away up in the hollow?" said James.

"Yes, it is not much over a mile."

James wished to ask his father what he had been to Mr. Hyde's for, and while he was considering in what form the question should be put, his mother entered the room. James was not one of those boys who could say to a father, "what did you go there for?" He knew that it is not always proper to ask his father for the reasons of his conduct, and when it was, he knew that he ought not to use a form of questioning which might be proper to a companion.

"My dear," said Mr. Carter, "old Mrs. Hyde is very sick, and has been so for several days; and I'm afraid she has suffered a good deal from want of attention."

"I had not heard of her being sick," said Mrs. Carter, "but I was thinking yesterday that I had not seen her for some time. Have you been to see her?"

'Yes, I was in the village when I heard of her illness, and I went right up to see her. It began to rain pretty soon after I started."

"You must change your clothes immediately." Mrs. Carter made the necessary arrangements, and he retired to do so.

"Is old Hyde's wife one of your father's relations?" said Robert Harris, a boy who had come to spend the day with James.

"No," replied James.

"What did he go to see her for, then?'

"I suppose he went to cary her something, or to help her in some way."

"What does he do that for!"

"Because he always goes to see and help those who are in trouble."

In saying this, James stated a fact, though he did not, as he supposed, give a reason. The reason why Mr. Carter visited and relieved the poor was, that he had a warm and generous heart, and knew that it was God's pleasure that he should help the poor and afflicted.

"My father," said Robert, "don't do any such thing. He sticks to his business, and that is the way he became so rich."

This was spoken in a tone and manner which showed how much he valued himself on his father's riches. It was true that Mr. Harris never went on errands of mercy—that he gave all his time to business—and that he was quite rich. It was not true that he was happy, or that he made his family so.

"My father is not rich," said James, "and does not expect to be."

"I know what is the reason. He gives away too much, and does not attend to his business."

"He does attend to his business, too, for it is a part of his business to do good; and giving to poor he says, is only lending to the Lord."

"My father lends money to those who can pay him."

"I guess the Lord is as able to pay my father as any of your father's debtors are to pay him."

"I think it is likely he is, but whether he will do it or not is another matter. My father never lends without a note, or a mortgage."

James might have said that his father had better security for what he had loaned than any notes or mortgages, even the express promise of God; but there was something so unpleasant in the conversation, that he was not disposed to continue it; so he made no reply to Robert's last remark.

After a moment's silence Robert said, "Father says you will all come to want if your father goes on as he does now."

"I'm not afraid of it. I wish your father would mind his own business," said James angrily.

"He does, I can tell you, and that is the way he gets ahead so fast."

"Let us talk of something else" said James repenting of his anger, "this don't do us any good."

"Agreed," said Robert, "let us go out and have a run in the rain. It is so dull to stay in the house all the time. If I had known it was going to rain I should not have come. It had no business to rain to day.

James was a good deal shocked at this last remark, regarding it, as it really was, a great insult offered to God. On the whole he thought it not best to reprove Robert and simply answered "we shall get very wet if we go out."

"Well what if we do? Who is afraid of the rain. What a soldier you would make, if you are afraid of a shower of rain! I don't mean to be afraid of a shower of bullets."

"I'm not afraid of the rain, but my father will not let me go out in it, unless it is necessary, i. e. he will not think it best for me to go."

He goes out himself, and I should like to hear my father tell me, I should'nt do what he does himself." Robert did not say what he would in such a case but plainly intimated that it would be something fearful.

"It was necessary for my father to go in the rain."

"Necessary," said Robert in a tone of contempt "what necessity was there for his seeing an old sick" woman? You wouldn't catch my father doing it in any weather. Not he: he knows too much for that. If she owed him, he would see to her. He wouldn't go himself, but would send the constable. Such folks cant come it over him, no how."

This was said in a boastful tone, as though he gloried in his father's shame. James was disgusted with him, and began to wish that he had not come, when he exclaimed "I'm not going to stay in the house all day: so if you won't go out, I'm off." Suiting the action to the word, he was off, greatly to James' relief.

Twenty years after the above interview, James and Robert were still living, but their fathers were in the grave. Both had pursued the course of life above indicated till they were summoned to the bar of God. Mr. Carter never became rich, but Mr. Harris continued to add to his property to the last.

James was now a minister of the gospel useful and respected. His mother had lived with him ever since the death of his father and his younger brothers had been educated and were well settled in life.

Robert the only heir of the rich Mr. Harris was now the tenant of a miserable house which had once belonged to his father. He was surrounded by a large family clothed in rags, and often suffering for want of food. He spent a large part of his time at a grocery where rum was the chief article sold. The riches of the rich man, notwithstanding his bonds and mortgages had been scattered. The promise of God to those who feed the hungry and clothe the naked had not failed.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Phila M. Scovill consort of Obadiah Scovill, departed this life at her residence in the Town of Vienna, on the 25th of Dec. 1846, in the 69th year of her age. The subject of the following brief notice was born in New Haven Conn. and became a subject of the renovating influence of the Holy Spirit in early life and united with the M. E. Church. In life she enjoyed the confidence of those with whom she was acquainted, and in death she gave an impressive evidence of the power of religion. She was confined to her room three months under the influence of a dropsical affliction, during which time she bore her afflictions with christian patience. The evening previous to her departure, the writer of this notice called to see her and found her perfectly resigned to the divine will, and manifesting a desire rather to depart and be with Christ, than to remain in this world of sorrow and affliction. A mother's love was manifested in the the affectionate farewell advice she gave her children, and the thrilling exhortation she addressed to a Son and Daughter-in-law will not soon be erased from the memory of the writer, and I trust never forgotten by the youthful pair. But she is gone, leaving an aged and affectionate companion with a number of children to mourn her loss. The day after her decease religious services were attended to at the Centre Church (Presbyterian) after which the body was borne to the place of sepulture, there to rest until the Resurrection Morn.

C. Caddy.

Vienna, O. Feb. 12th 1847.

Mar Yohannah.—A writer in the New York Courier, who signs himself "B," doubts that this venerable Nestorian has met the fate which recent accounts would seem to indicate. He is a resident of Persia, and not of the mountains of Koordistan, in Turkey, where those revolting massacres have been perpetrated. He suggests that there are other Mar Yohannahs—the name signifying nothing more than "my lord John"—of which there may be many in the Koord country, as well as in Persia. The Nestorians in the latter place have thus far escaped such brutal persecution—and it is hoped our old visiter is not yet cut off in his good works.

A poet asked a gentleman what he thought of his last production, "An Ode to Sleep." The latter replied. "You have done so much justice to the subject that it is impossible to read it without feeling its whole weight."

PROSPECTUS OF THE

OHIO CULTIVATOR,

Vol. III---For 1847.

A semi-monthly Journal, devoted to the promotion of Agriculture, Horticulture & Domestic Industry.

PUBLISHED AT COLUMBUS, OHIO,

By M. B. Bateham, Editor and Proprietor,

Assisted by the contributions of a very large number of practical and scientific writers,—farmers, horticulturists, &c.

Illustrated with numerous Engravings.

TERMS—OeDollar per year—Four Copies for Three Dollars: payments invariably in advance.

THE OHIO CULTIVATOR has now become so well known to the farmers and friends of agriculture in Ohio. that it is unnecessary to say any thing of its character or design. Grateful for the encouragement he has thus far received, the editor and proprietor takes this occasion to inform his friends and patrons, that he is determined to put forth new efforts in their service, and make his paper for the coming year still more deserving of their continued liberal patronage. Besides improvement in the matter for its columns, the mechanical appearance of the paper will be improved by the use of new type, and more illustrations. It will contain the latest and most reliable intelligence respecting the crops and the markets, both in this country, and in Europe, so as to aid the farmer in deciding at what time and price to dispose of his productions. This information alone will be worth, to most farmers, many times the price of subscription, especially now that prices are so much effected by foreign intelligence. In addition to all this, the editor believes that his increased experience and knowledge of the agricultural condition of the State, together with his extended correspondence, will enable him to make each succeeding volume of the Cultivator more valuable than the one that preceded it.

The influence of the paper, wherever it has been generally read, is admitted to have been highly salutary. It has began to awaken a spirit of inquiry and improvement among the farmers, and inspire them with more just and elevated conceptions of the character, duties and pleasures of their noble occupation. As evidence of this it may be stated, that during the past year, Agricultural Societies have been organized in twenty counties of this State; and there is reason to believe that as many more will be formed during the year to come. These associations, in connection with the State Board of Agriculture, and the Cultivator as an organ for the diffusion of intelligence, cannot fail to exert such an influence on the minds and the practice of the farming community, as will in a few years place our young Giant State in that position which she is by Nature designed to occupy—the first State of the Union in agricultural wealth and lasting prosperity.

Farmers of Ohio! Who among you are willing to have no part in this onward march of improvement? Who among you are willing to deprive yourselves and your families of that 'knowledge which is power,' and the great means of progress and elevation, for the sake of the small pittance which that knowledge may cost? And who of you that desire to see this work advance, will not make an effort to arouse your neighbors from the mental torpor that rests upon too many of them? The work is not difficult—pursuade them to read papers devoted to their interests—☞send on their names, with your own, as subscribers to the Ohio Cultivator, and you may rely upon it they will soon begin to awake—to inquire and think—and not only become better farmers, but more intelligent and agreeable neighbors.

Address, M. B. BATEHAM,
Columbus, Ohio.

WELLMAN'S ILLUSTRATED BOTANY.
VOL. II., 1847.
EDITED BY J. D. COMSTOCK, M. D.

Author of Botany, Natural Philosphy, Chemistry, Mineralogy, Geology, Natural History, Phyliology, etc., assisted BY J. C COMSMOCK, ESQ.

THE success of the Illustrated Botany is no longer an experimont, for altho' it has been in existence but one year, it already has a circulation of about five thousand, a sufficient number to warrant its support, which cannot be said of any other work of the kind. Indeed, it is the only work of this character published in this country, which promises stability and a long life. We think the prospects of the second year of the Botany are very flattering. One reason for this opinion is, the fact that it is now very popular, having a large circle of friends. Another very important reason is, the securing of an Editor for the coming year, whose popularity as an author in the various branches of Natural Science, is so extensive as to leave his name familiar to every student in the sciences in this country. We are fully satisfied that the Botany will, under its present Editors, bear the severest criticism, and we intend that it shall become the standard work.

In the course of its publication, it will contain an Introduction to the Natural System of Botany, a thorough Treatise on the interesting and important branch of Vegetable Physiology, Notices on Fossil Botany, and descriptions, both scientific and popular, of numerous species of plants, the properties of which, medicinal and useful, will be fully explained. In short it is intended to present a complete view of the latest and most important facts, discoveries, and theories, in every department of the science.

The whole illustrated by splendid colored engravings, taken from Nature, full size, and finished the highest style of modern art.

This work is designed to be eminently popular in its application, and there is enough of that which is stranger than fiction about it to render it, in no ordinary degree, interesting and instructive.

We do not intend to confine ourselves to the botanical descriptions of each plant, but to make it a thoroughly scientific work, in all the departments of Botany. It will also give information on the cultivation of plants and flowers. In a word, it will comprise the whole science.

TERMS.

This work will be published monthly, with from six to ten flowers, handsomely painted, in each number. Price, $3,00 a year, or two copies sent to one address for $5,00.

☞A very liberal discount allowed to Agents.

J. K. WELLMAN, Publisher and Proprietor,
Febuary 13, 1847. No. 116 Nassau-st.

Horse Stolen.—$20 Reward.

REV. J. I. STILLIANS, requests us to state that on the night of Jan. 19th a large dapple gray horse, 16½ hands high was taken out of his stable on Hacker's Creek, Lewis Co. Va. Said horse is 6 or 7 years old this spring, a little crease fallen, with a white mark 5 or 6 inches long on one of his shoulders, caused by the collar a wind gall on the out side of his left hind leg, near the pastern joint, a horse of good carriage. Any person finding him, and returning him to the owner, or where he can get him will receive the above reward.

Something New.
JUST PUBLISHED
By GEORGE CONCLIN, 39 Main st. Cincinnati,

A NEW HISTORY OF TEXAS.

INCLUDING an account of the late WAR WITH MEXICO, together with other interesting matte relating to that country. This history is published i pamphlet form, 12 mo., containing 152 pages and will b sold cheap.

Also—A NEW HISTORY OF OREGON AND CALIFORNIA, (By Lansford Hastings) containing a minute description of the different routes to those countries—a description of the soil, products of the soil, Towns, Bays, Harbors, Rivers, Lakes, manners and customs of the inhabiants, &c. &c.

DISSOLUTION.

IT is nearly two years since the firm of A. A. Guthrie & Co., was dissolved, so far as the selling of Goods is concerned. It is this day fully dissolved by mutual consent all debts due the concern are to b epaid to A. A. Guthrie —who earnestly requests ear y payments & especially urges all wo have suffered thei accounts to stand open thus far, to come immediately an dsettle.

A. A. GUTHRIE,
G. N. GUTHRIE.

Putnam, Dec. 14th, 1846

PUTNAM BOARDING HOUSE.

THE SUBSCRIBER having been for the last sixteen years keeping Tavern and Boarding House, would respectfully acquaint the public—that he has established a Bording House in Putnam, and hopes by strict attention to business he will merit a share of public patronage. His accommodations shall be good, and his table, for variety not surpassed by any Hotel or Boarding House in th West. R. Putnam.

October 31st, 1846.

N. B. Application for boarding should be made soo. R. n P

JACOB THORN,

WHOLESALE dealer in all kinds of NOTIONS, No. 91, Wilson's Row, the first store below the Court House, is now opening a new and complete assortment of

NOTIONS AND DRY GOODS,

which will be sold wholesale, at prices a little below what they have ever been sold in this place.—Country Merchants and Pedlers, visiting the city are respectfully invited to examine my stock before purchasing elsewhere, among which may be found the following articles:—

800 Packs American solid head Pins.
200,000 Drilled Ey'd Needles, Sharps and Betweens.
2000 Doz Spool Thread.
500 Lbs. Patent do.
800 do. Cotton do.
3000 Doz. Side Combs.
600 do. Fine Ivory do.
500 do. Dressing do.
100 do. Woolen Comforters.
100 Brass Clocks.
1500 Prints (Engravings,) high col'd.
100 Doz. Chapman Strops.
5000 Almanacks.
300 Shawls, different patterns.
100 Gross Kitting Pins.
4 Bbls. Blacking.
30 Doz. slates.
50 Gt. Gro. Agate Shirt Buttons
500 Coils Bonnet Wire.
50 Gross Boot Laces.
500 do. Hooks and Eyes on Cards
100 do. Wood Combs.
200 do. Sherred and G. E. Suspenders
12 Boxes Fire Crackers
12 Doz. Looking-Glasses.
100 Gross Pearl Shirt Buttons.
6 Bales Brown Muslin.
200 Doz. Mitts.

Combs of every description, Buttons, Penknives, Razors, Table and Tea Spoons, Tapes, Eyeletts, Jewsharps, Pencils, Shaving Boxes, Gloves, Ladies cotton Hose, Matches, Dress Handkfs., Laces and Edgings, Spectacles, Thimbles, Beads, Candle Wicking, Night caps, Primers, Calicoes, bleached Muslins, Wafers, &c.

WANTED in exchange for goods at wholesale prices, Feathers, Beeswax, Ginsang, Rags and Hogs Bristles tied up in small bunches, for which will be given twenty-five cents a pound for all that can be brought in good order

Zanesville, O. Nov. 7, 1846.

NOTICE.

THERE will be a petition presented to the trustees of Newton Township, Muskingum county, at there annual meeting on the first Monday in March next, praying for a Township Road to commence at a stone bridge on the old Lancaster Road at Kent's run at the foot of John Williams's hill, thence to run a Northwardly direction to the corners of land owned by G. M. Crooks and Lewis Stine.

January 23d, 1847.

NOTICE

IS hereby given, that a petition will be presented to the Commissioners of Muskingum County, at their March session, praying for a county road, beginning at a point in the Cooper Mill Road in Springfield township, and where the west line of Barnett Workmans land crosses said Cooper Mill road, from thence running north-eastwardly thro' the lands of B. Workman and William Vansant to the lower end of William Vansant's field, (known as the middle meadow,(thence northwardly to the north-west corner of John Vansant's orchard, from thence north-eastwardly on the nearest and best route through the lands of John Vansant and James Vansant, so as to intersect the Flint Ridge Road (so called) near the west end of Cornelius Starkey's farm.

January 15, 1847.

NOTICE

IS hereby given that a petition will be presented to the Commissioners of Muskingum County their March session, praying for an alteration in so much of the county road known by the name of George Norman's road as lies between the Cooper Mill Road and William Vansant's barn. The proposed road to commence at said Cooper Mill road, where the west line of Barnett Workman's land crosses said road. Thence eastwardly to the lower end of William Vansant's field, (known as the middle meadow,) thence north to the lane, thence west so as to intersect the original road cast of William Vansant's barn, all in Springfield township.

January 12, 1847.

COME AND SEE!!

THE SUBSCSIBERS offer very low for CASH, STONE WARE or COUNTRY PRODUCE,

35 pieces assorted Cloths, very low,
20 " Jeans,
300 " Prints, cheaper than ever,
100 " Merinos, Alpaccas, De Laines, &c.,
50 " Tweeds and Cassinets,
25 " Flannels,
22 " Check.

Boots, Shoes, Queensware, Groceries, and a great variety of goods not mentioned.

In a word, they have on hand a LARGE STOCK of goods, which they

WISH TO SELL.

To sell them, they must be sold CHEAP, this they will do. J. C. GUTHRIE & SONS, successors to
Guthrie's & Buckingham.

P.S. We will say to Potters engage not your ware before calling on us. We are dealing EXTENSIVELY in that article, and are determined to buy it on such terms as will prove satisfactory. J. C. G. & S's.

Putnam, O. Jan. 1, 1847.

GEORGE CONCLIN,
BOOKSELLER AND PUBLISHER,
Stationer, Binder, and
BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURER,
No. 39 Main Street, Cincinnati.

KEEPS on hand Books published by the Methodist Protestant Church—such as
CHURCH HYMN BOOKS,
REVIVAL " "
DISCIPLINES,
EVANS' QUESTIONS & ANSWERS, &c.

Also—Just received—A supply of the Christian World in 3 Vols. with Portraits of the Wesleys, &c., by Rev. Thos. H. Stockton.

THE CHEAPEST AND BEST.

New Prospectus for the Year 1847.

FORTY-EIGHT large octavo Pages, and Fifteen Engravings in each No. Published on the first of every month.

Fourth Volume commences in January, 1847.

The No. for Jan. contains a "Pictorial Description of the State of Ohio," elegantly Illustrated with American views, &c. &c.

Other States will appear in subsequent Nos. of the Work.

Robert Sears, 158 Nassau-street, New York, will hereafter furnish his new

Pictorial and Illustrated Family Magazine for 1847, in all respects equal to the Three-Dollar Magazines, at the low price of only one dollar and a half per annum.

Any person sending Five Dollars, shall receive five copies of the magazine for one year, as he shall direct.

All subjects which will admit of it, will be illustrated with engravings. The whole number of the engravings at the conclusion of the volume will amount to several hundred.

Great inducement to subscribe.

We offer to all persons becoming subscribers, a copy of our new work, just published, entitled the Pictorial Description of Great Britain and Ireland.

Containing 262 Views of the Principal Cities, Towns, Castles, Abeys, Costumes, &c. &c., of the Fatherland: a larger number of Engravings than can be found in any book of double the price.

NEW FIRM.

A. A. GUTHRIE, G. BUCKINGHAM and G. N GUTHRIE announce that they have formed partnership for the transaction of Mercantile business under the firm of

GUTHRIE, BUCKINGHAM & CO.

They respectfully invite their friends and the publi generally, to the old stand of A. A. GUTHRIE & Co (recently GUTHRIE'S & LARGE,) where it is the purpose to keep a large assortment of the cheapest an best goods in the market.

Putnam, O. January 1, 1847.

SACRED MELODEON.

WE have received from the publishers, 50 copies of this excellent collection of Spiritual Songs, compiled by Brs. Joel Dalbey and J. B. Peat of the Ohio Conference, and lately published at Cincinnati. For sale at the office of the Western Recorder, by the dozen or single.

PROSPECTUS OF THE

LITERARY ATHENÆUM,

A NEW AND SPLENDID MONTHLY MAGAZINE,

TO BE EDITED BY THE

Rev. Henry D. Moore, of Philadelphia,—and Rev. Andrew A. Lipscowb, Professor of English Literature and Belle Letters, in the city of Baltimore.

ON the first of January, 1847, the subscribers intend issuing the first number of a spendid Monthly Magazine, to be called the "Literary Athenæum," to be devoted to the interest and circulation of a mind-refining, soul-inspiring, spirit-stirring literature; such a literature, in a word, as the progressive taste of society seems to demand.

Between the magazines of the day, which are devoted almost exclusively to the circulation of Christian Literature, and those devoted to the light, and in too many instances, tasteless and corrupting literature—there is a wide and deep chasm, to fill which successfully and profitably, very few attempts have been made. To supply this void, to some extent at least, is the intention of the subscribers, in issuing the "Literary Athenæum."

The general cast and character of the contents of the proposed magazine will be fixed according to the standard of the most sterling intellect, and the most liberal appreciation of the wants of the common mind. Its pages will ever present a feast and a glow, to feed and illumine the loftiest and purest taste and spirit of the admirers and lovers of refining and exalting literary walks and research.

To secure this grand design, effectually and honorably, no pains or expenses will be spared.

The contents will be purely original; consisting of Lectures, Addresses, Essays, &c., on the most popular and exciting literary and scientific subjects, from the most able writers that can be secured—interspersed and relieved by beautiful poetic composition.

Science, Art, and government, in their almost infinite variety development and interest, will be liberay and honorably discussed in its pages.

Arrangements are in progress for an extensive and important European correspondence, which will be a feature of great interest in its varied connections.

In addition to such articles, there will be presented occasional tales of unexceptionable character and style, differing essentially from the weakish romances which fill the pages of the many magazines of the day. Writers in this connection, can be secured, whose productions are the embodiment of life, true to itself,—and which will kindle and glow with the loftiest and purest sentiment, and thrill with the beauties of morality and religion in their loveliest forms.

Each number of the Athenæum will contain four embellishments of the first artistical merit, One of them will be a portrait of some distinguished personage in this country or in Europe, accompanied with an interesting biograpical sketch. Another will be a view of the buildings and grounds, of some one of the popular Universities, in this or the old world, accompanied with a historical, biograpical and statisical sketch in this body of the work. The portraits will be fine mezzotint, and the college views, beautiful line engravings. Then will follow richly colored specimens of flowers and fruit; in connection with which, there will also be presented interesting notices—floral and botanical—of climate, habits, culture, &c. All of which cannot but secure interest and favor.

Each number will comprise sixty pages of letter-press, double column, beautifully stereotyped, and printed on fine white paper; the whole corresponding in all respects, with the character of the other departments of the work.

Such is to be the character of the work at its commencement. If it is successful, as it ought to be, and as is hoped and believed it will be,—improvement will be made as far as possible in the different departments, as they are suggested in the progress of the work.

The subscribers take pleasure in announcing to the public, that they have concluded arrangements with the Rev. Henry D. Moore, of Philadelphia, and Rev. Andrew A Lipscomb, Professor of English Literature and Belle Letters, of Raltimore, who will co-operate as Editors the of new Magazine. Under the management of those gentleman, the subscribers flatter themselves, abundant success will be secured in behalf of the enterprise.

TO PUBLISHERS.

The subscribers would also give notice to Publishers, at home and abroad, that there will be in connection with the work, an extensive review department. This will be made a feature of excelling interest. The department will be conducted fairly and honorably, and all works sent to the office of the subscribers, will receive such notices as their character may demand.

The first number will be issued on the first of January, 1847. Its contents and the name of contributors, will be published shortly.

Terms—Three dollars per annum, in advance.

Editors of papers, copying this Prospectus, and sending a paper with it, to the office of the "Athenæum," shall receive the numbers of the work, and the thanks of the publishers.

All letters, containing orders for the work, post-paid, and enclosing the subscription price, will receive prompt attention. To be addressed to

F. C. WILSON & Co.

Philadelphio, Pa.

THE WEEKLY

CHRISTIAN WORLD;

An Independent, Comprehensive, and Impartial Newspaper; designed for welcome and useful circulation; Among all Friends of Christian Union, Christian Benevolence, and Christian Literature. To be published every Saturday, At the Reading-Room of the Christian Atheneum, over the Book-store of Mr. James Harmstead, Fourth St., between Market and Arch Sts., Philadelphia;

Price:—Two Dollors a-year invariably in advance.

T. H. Stockton,
J. G. Wilson,
Theophilus Stork. } Editors.

W. S. Stockton,—General Agent.

TO persons who are acquainted with the character and objects of the Christian World, as they have been developed during the last six years, it is only necessary to say, that as soon as one thousand paying subscribers are secured, the paper will be put to press. The Old Subscription List ought to supply this number at once.

To other persons, it is proper to remark, that the Christian World, in print, is intended to reflect the Christian World, in action—in a word, daguerreotype it: and then, for purposes of common advantage, to compare the organized and operature Religion of the Age with the Religion of the Bible.

The enlarged literary and business agencies of the Establishment, are deemed amply sufficient to assure the public of successful management. Its immediate connexion with the Christian Atheneum—an Institution which is to be furnished with many of the principal organs of Church and State, both in Europe and America,—will give its conductors early access to invaluable sources of universal intelligence.

DIRECTIONS

1. On receipt of this Prospectus, let the Old subscribers at every Post-office, appoint one of their number, or some other suitable person, an Agent. Let him send us, at once, as many names and as much money as possible. In cases where substantial agents make themselves responsible for their subscribers, this responsibility will be regarded as equivalent to payment in advance—provided they settle their accounts within six months. Even in such cases, however, immediate payments are decidedly preferable; and, to encourage them, the commissions to agants are arranged thus:—On cash orders, 25 per cent.: on deferred remittances, 12½ per cent.

2. As the Prospectus will be widely distributed, let all persons who see it, and feel an interest in it, act promptly in the manner described above. It is thought that a little effort will be sufficient to procure a company, or club, at almost any Post-office in the Union. The times increasingly demand just such a publication as is proposed.

Address,—W. S. Stockton, General Agent, Philadelphia, Pa.: or either of the Associate Editors. All orders will be punctually attended to.

T. H. STOCKTON,
Editor and Proprietor.

Philadelphio, December, 1846.

M. P. DISCIPLINES—NEW EDITION.

WE have on hand a supply, lately received from the Book Agent, Baltimore, which we will be pleased to furnish to brethren of surrounding Circuits, at wholesale or retail prices. For sale at the office of this paper.

DISSOLUTION.

THE partnership of GUTHRIES & LARGE is this day dissolved by mutual consent. All matters pertaining to the closing up of the business will be transacted at the old stand.

A. A. GUTHRIE.
W. P. LARGE.
GEO. N. GUTHRIE.

Putnam, O. January 1, 1847.

JAMES K. LOGAN,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

FOREIGN & DOMESTIC DRY GOODS

No. 83 Wood St., (One door from Diamond Alley,)
Pittsburgh, Pa.

THE WESTERN RECORDER.

VOL. VIII---NO. 22. PUTNAM, MUSKINGUM COUNTY, OHIO, MARCH 4, 1847. WHOLE NO. 386.

The Western Recorder,

Is Published every Thursday,

AT PUTNAM, OPPOSITE ZANESVILLE, OHIO.

OFFICE ON MAIN STREET.

A. H. BASSETT, Editor and Proprietor.

BEVERLY R. WHITE, PRINTER.

TERMS.—Two Dollars per annum, in advance. Two fifty at the close of the year. Payments within three months will be considered in advance.

All letters and communications must be addressed, to the Editor, post paid, except such as contain funds, and directed to Putnam Muskingum Co. Ohio.

Itinerant Ministers and others, who collect from subscribers and remit to us as much as ten dollars within the year, shall receive a copy of the paper free.

Itinerant ministers and preachers, not acting as agents, can have the paper at one dollar.

Clubs of ten or more, paying at the time of subscribing, shall have the paper for $15, i. e. one dollar fifty, each.

FREE DISCUSSION.

Written for the Western Recorder.

AN EASY CATECHISM.

Mr. Editor: The article on Philanthropy by L. G., in the Recorder of Nov. 14, appears to present a summary of the principal points relied on by the defenders of slaveholding. Most of the arguments in it are proposed in the form of questions; and I have thought that if suitable answers could be appended, the whole might form an interesting, and perhaps useful, catechism. As none of your correspondents have seen proper to respond to these queries, the following is respectfully offered; for fairness' sake, I take the questions as they come, without abbreviation.

Question 1. "May there not be such a thing as false philanthropy, or a philanthropy tempered with a zeal not according to knowledge; which is selfish, limited, sectional, and partial?"

Answer. Very true: that philanthropy must be selfish which compels our fellow men to serve us professedly for their interest; that which excludes others from the privileges we enjoy, because they are not of the same race, is certainly limited; the rejection of testimony on account of the condition or color of the witness, is sufficiently partial; and a philanthropy which would not cross a political boundary to commiserate with the unhappy and degraded, might well be termed sectional.

Q. 2. Are those heated, mistaken, but possibly sincere brethren, real, true, and consistent philanthropists?"

A. That heated, mistaken persons should be consistent philanthrophists, is not at all probable; but whether those who labor for the removal of slavery are heated and mistaken, or true and consistent, must be determined from a fair review of their doings.

Q. 3. "Do they really love all mankind, and yet consign millions of christians to hopeless despair—to suffer the wages of sin?"

A. If expressing the belief that they commit sin consigns them to hopeless despair, still it no more detracts from the reality of their love, than from that of the apostles Paul and John. (Philip. III, 18, 19, and 1 John V: 19;) or that of the great Philanthropist, who thus consigned the most eminent professors of that age.

Q. 4. "Do they indeed and in truth sympathize with those that are in bonds, and yet pursue a course that must of necessity exclude themselves from all chance to remedy their condition—or of affording them the light and consolations of the gospel?"

A. If the opportunity of giving present relief, or of affording consolation to the oppressed, can only be purchased by acquiescence in the wrongs of the oppressor, those who "remember them that are in bonds" may be driven to deprive themselves of that opportunity.

Q. 5. "Do they candidly, soberly, and in the light of reason and revelation, look at the bearing and tendency of their assumptions, resolves, &c?"

A. That they all do, is more than ought to be claimed for any class of men; but it is believed that as a body, their candor, sobriety, &c., will not suffer by any comparison, in the estimation of those who know them.

Q. 6. "Do these professed philanthropists expect to extirpate the evils of slavery by decrees or resolves—by conventions, divisions, or secessions?"

A. Probably not; their resolves are intended to express the interest they feel for the despised, and to call the attention of others to this heart-moving subject; conventions are found useful to those who wish candidly, soberly, and in the light of reason and revelation, to examine questions of duty; and the object of division or secession may be rather to free themselves from partaking of other men's sins, and from an embarassing and unprofitable connection.

Q. 7. "What have they [the M. E. C.] done?"

A. They might have done immense good, had they "half a century ago" adhered to the course which, consistently with their principles, they adopted; but from a time-serving course, no good can be expected.

Q. 8. "Do these men merely look at the surface of things?"

A. It seems probable that they look at least as deeply into a subject, as those do whose chief efforts are made to keep that subject out of sight.

Q. 9. "Can they expect to rid themselves of all connection with the evil of slavery, by dissolving all connection with the southern portion of the church?"

A. Certainly not; but only from such connection as lends their sanction to any immoral practice, and thereby makes them responsible for it.

Q. 10. Would such a hasty step free them from all political, commercial, and social connection with slavery?"

A. It would not; nor are we required to break off such connection, even with evil doers. (See 1 Cor. V, 9, 10.)

Q. 11. "Could this be, without dissolving the social compact, severing the bonds of civil union, and ceasing to traffic in, or use, articles of commerce, of food and clothing, the product of slave labor?"

A. If such compact, traffic, or use can be fairly construed into sanctioning oppression, then all just men are bound to abandon it; but it does not follow that because we cannot recognize a man's claim to religious character, we must renounce political or commercial transactions with him, or cease to use articles which pass through his hands.

Q. 12. "Would such a procedure lessen the quantum of human misery, or increase the quantum of human happiness?"

A. The calculation of the quantum of happiness and misery is rather a difficult problem; the course of duty may usually be ascertained by more direct methods.

Q. 13. "Would it remedy the evil, or benefit the slave?"

A. It seems to have more tendency to do so than the other alternative—endorsing the morality of slaveholding.

Q. 14. "Should they organize a free church, will it be pure or free from slavery, or servitude impelled by circumstances, or the laws of necessity?"

A. Such a church would probably be free from that slavery which reduces man to perpetual, personal, absolute subjection to the will of his fellow; but LABOR IS NOT SLAVERY; nor is the necessity of labor, imposed by circumstances, slavery; on the contrary it is commonly a happier lot than that of the idler who boasts exemption from it.

Q. 15. "Will there be none in it who practice fraud, and oppress the hireling in his wages—none whose avarice prompts them to grind the face of the poor?"

A. We cannot tell; but it is certain that if there be such, and the church upholds them in it, or permits it by neglecting the exercise of discipline, it will be unworthy the name of a christian church.

Q. 16. "Will there be none among or around them, who are doomed by the laws of necessity, and surrounding circumstances, to servitude for life—poor and dependent?"

A. Very probably; nor should the church for a moment withhold from such its privileges, whether doomed to servitude by the righteous Providence of God, or the unrighteous acts of men; but if it be designed to ask whether those who oppress them would be admitted to fellowship, it may be answered, there is no reason to assume that they would.

Q. 17. "Would those ill-judging philanthropists have immediate and universal emancipation to take place?"

A. They would, and would greatly rejoice in such an event.

Q. 18. "Whither would the thousands of unlettered, ignorant, and degraded—not to say indolent, and dishonest, sons of Africa fly, or find a resting place?"

A. They would be less anxious to fly, than at present;—there would be room, and work, and calls for them, where they now are; emancipation would but change the relation of masters and servants, from one of arbitrary power and forced obedience, to one of mutual interest and willing service.

Q. 19. "Would they escape from what one of those heated philanthropists styles 'the southern atmosphere of tyranny and oppression,' and seek to 'breath the pure air' of a free State?"

A. Very unlikely; the southern atmosphere, renovated by the process of emancipation, would be the pure air of free States.

Q. 20. "Might they not be repulsed, like the liberated slaves of John Randolph, or threatened with violence, like those whom the governor's (of Ohio) proclamation is designed to protect?"

A. It can hardly be considered probable; for as these repulses are but the echo of the spirit which banishes them from the southern States, the sons of Belial at the north would be ashamed of their violence towards these people, when they see their rights respected at the South.

Q. 22. "Would their condition be better when cast out from the protection and care of their masters upon an heartless world, exposed to the insults and cupidity of unfeeling sharpers?"

A. They would not, of necessity, lose friends by gaining freedom; neither would they in general be exposed to any insults or abuse, which they are not now exposed to. For evidence that their condition would be better, see 1 Cor. VII, 21; read also, candidly, Thome & Kimball's Emancipation in the West Indies.

Q. 22. "Suppose these mistaken zealots should get up a Convention, produce a schism, and organize a free M. P. Church, what great good will they accomplish?"

A. This at least; that those who compose it can, without self-condemnation, advocate Mutual Rights.

Q. 23. "Will they benefit the church South, or North?"

A. Possibly both: the church North as above; the South by protesting, in this solemn manner, against their blighting iniquity.

Q. 24. "Will they contribute, in any degree, to the extirpation of the evil of slavery?"

A. In order to accomplish any thing against an evil, men must first wash their own hands from all participation in it. Those therefore, who adopt this method in relation to slavery, take at least one step of a rational course for its extirpation.

Q. 25. "Will they lighten the burdens of those with whom they professed to sympathize?"

A. Not perhaps immediately; there may be present inconveniences both to them, and to themselves; but believing that the interests at stake are of far greater importance than any incidental sufferings, they do not, on this account, shrink from the contest.

Q. 26. "Will they promote the cause of true religion?"

A. True religion is a religion of justice and humanity; slavery is founded in injustice, and constantly tends to inhumanity; slavery, therefore, dishonors and impedes the cause of true religion; to vidicate which, it may become necessary for other churches to withhold christian fellowship from churches which allow the practice.

Q. 27. "Will they convince the world that they are real, rational, and consistent philanthropists—loving all mankind with a sincere affection?"

A. There is nothing in earnest, untiring efforts for the elevation of a despised class of people, to prove that their philanthropy is not real, rational, and consistent; nor does reproving the wrong doer show, that they do not love all mankind with sincere affection; but as to convincing the world, that is comparatively an unimportant object.

Q. 28. "Or will they augment doubtful disputation, sow the wind, and reap the whirlwind?"

A. There need be no doubtful disputation, where the simplest principles of right are concerned; nor need they sow the wind, who have so much better seed to sow—for a sample read the 58th chapter of Isaiah—seed which when permitted to bring forth fruit to perfection, produces a blessed harvest of righteousness, security, and happiness.

And now, Mr. Editor, if my paper is not already too long, suffer me to ask a few questions in turn.

1. Is the use of such epithets as "heated" "mistaken zealots" "ill-judging philanthropists" &c. calculated to convince or persuade those supposed to be in error?

2. If laborers among us are slaves, (see question 14,) will not some philanthropic person, for the general good, propose they be disfranchised, debarred from testifying, &c?

3. Do not those who speak contemptuously of the poor and dependent, reproach their Maker?

4. If the slaves are still so "ignorant and degraded" after being from 100 to 200 years under the "protection and care of their masters" should not some other means be used for their improvement?

5. If slaves are generally "indolent and dishonest," should we not justly infer that slavery is demoralizing?

6. Ought good men to practice, countenance, or defend, that which degrades and demoralizes human beings?

In conclusion, I wish to assure L. G. that I have more respect for him, than I have shown his article. J. N. C.

Magnolia, Ill.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Rev. Mr. Smallwood's Temperance Address.

This address before the Sons of Temperance in Putnam, is creditable in most respects to the cause, and to its author. We like his graphic description of the customs of by-gone days,—showing by comparison the progress of reform. We commend also his enumeration of the means by which the changes for good have been effected. We can also tolerate the very natural enthusiasm of the speaker when addressing his brethren of the craft,—those who like himself have just buckled on the new harness of the "secret order," and who were delighted with its fitting. True they may be veterans in the cause of temperance, but that is not the point. It is the casting off an old coat and the fitting of the new that furnishes the matter in hand.

We are sorry to meet with a few passages, too, that we consider as seriously objectionable. For example the following: "It is surprising to me that a part of the religious community, should stand opposed to us. Or, rather it would be surprising, if we did not find professedly religious people opposing every benevolent enterprise. The Jewish church with the High Priest at its head, crucified the Lord of life and glory."

That which follows, shows that he refers to opposition, not to Temperance, but to the "secret order."

We would like to know whether Mr. S. in his own mind distinguishes, between Temperance itself, and a particular method of attempting to promote it. The language sounds as if he put down every opponent of secret societies, as the enemies of Temperance. Yet there is no natural affinity between them. This he should have remembered.

There are multitudes of Temperance men, who think they understand full well the nature and tendencies of secret societies. They have seen one of them baffling the power and skill of a whole State for years, and finally rescuing from condemnation individuals accused of a foul murder, by the refusal of witnesses to testify what they know in the case. And the excuse for this refusal was, that obligation to this society forbade it. Yet this society has always maintained the most lofty pretensions to benevolence. These men believe too that secret societies foster a spirit of clanship and favoritism, and that they afford unworthy members an opportunity to continue and execute mischievous plans which without such facilities could not be matured. They believe that in the hands of good men even they possess no superiority for promoting a benevolent plan, while in the hands of the unworthy their tendency is to produce evil. Upon the same principle that they avoid the use of Alcohol do they shun secret societies. They confer no positive benefit, their tendency is to do mischief.

Cannot the "Sons of Temperance," pay their admission fee and regular tax to the treasurer, and can he not answer orders for assistance, without any secret signs. Cannot a suffering stranger just as well present a recent certificate from his secretary as any member of a church or of any other society? Why then should the cause of Temperance come under suspicion by the unwise resort to a mode of organization that public sentiment has long since exploded?

But "look how we have some of the best of the old pioneers of temperance and numbers of the clergy at our head." So had Masonry, and its praises were as loudly proclaimed as being the "hand-maid of religion" as that of the Sons of Temperance. Yet notwithstanding that, an extensive conspiracy was concocted, which ended in murder. This is said, not that "the clergy" were in the conspiracy named but that the members of a secret society could plan, and execute a foul crime in spite of the good man in it, and that by virtue of a secret organization, the criminals escaped.

We believe that thousands of pious men once embraced Masonry in full belief of its innocent nature. These would have shuddered at the thought of crime. But they endorsed an institution that permits bad men under color of secrecy to commit crime and escape punishment. If one secret institution can thus be prostituted in spite of "the clergy," why not another?

Again "we are no more a secret society than the session of a church is, when it sits as it generally does with closed doors." Let us see. May the uniniated visit the lodge by introduction, and witness whatever transpires with the exception of continuing in ignorance of the watch-word or countersign? May every member freely relate to his wife and family all that passes in the Lodge, with the exception of disclosing the pass word? Does the whole secret consist in the word or sign which serves to distinguish between the members and others? If the above statement be true it is so, for members of session are under no obligation to exclude spectators, or to conceal their acts.

Again, "our charitable feature adds likewise to our stability."

We have examined the published constitution of the Zanesville "Olive Branch Division," to ascertain what it may be. We find the admission fee, for persons over 18 and under 50, to be two dollars: if over 50, to 60 years of age 50 cents additional for each year, and from 60 to 70 years of age, one dollar in addition for each year. Thus a man of 60 pays $7 00, and one of 70 years $17 00, for admission. In return each member of one year's standing, if sick without his own fault, by improper conduct, is entitled to receive $3 00 a week, for funeral expenses for himself $30 00, and for his wife $15. To create a sufficient fund to meet these claims, each member must pay at least 6¼ cents a week, & if admission fees, fines, and the weekly collection fail to meet all demands a further assessment is made.

With these arrangements we find no fault. They may form a very good Health Insurance Company, but we see nothing more "charitable" in its features than in the Knox county mutual Insurance Company, or in the London Life Insurance Company. By small contributions from each member a fund is furnished to relieve the necessities of the sick, and to bury the dead. It is a fund from which the member worth $10,000 draws as feely as the poorest mechanic. It is his due and he is right in so doing.

But where is the fund for the poor, the suffering, the widow, even of the Son of Temperance, or his orphans? We can find no provision for them and we think we have thoroughly searched the little manuel named. Let us then honestly call things by right names. Then all will be fair and above board.

But the concluding paragraph fairly casts all before it in the shade. Read it.

"But one thing is clear, if the temperance cause is to advance, and obtain new victories and win a final triumph these glorious results must be done by our society. All other organizations are lifeless and prostrate. Were it not for us the cause would be retrograding. It was so when we arose. Take the Sons of Temperance out of the way and the maker and vender of ardent spirits are in the field without an opponent, and the land is their prey. You must then help us,—you must join us or you can do nothing effective. The question is between Sons of Temperance and no Temperance societies at all. Decide then which you will have."

This we give as a specimen of "tall talking," and would feel rather out of humor with it, if its lofty pretensions did not make it absolutely laughable. Really the "secret order" of the Sons of Temperance like another Aaron's rod, transferred to a serpent, shall swallow up all the others. 'Lifeless, and prostrate' they seem ready for the sacrifice. And upon what basis are such huge calculations formed? Why, a certain class of Temperance men have superadded to their former mode of operations the charm of mystery and the addition of a Health Insurance company.

Now, in all candor, we enquire, what there is in this to promote permanently the cause of Temperance? What magic is there in a quarterly sign or pass word to transform one into a more effective Temperance man than before? What is there in a Mutual Insurance process to effect the object? We see none. Can any one else?

But, twenty or thirty drunkards are already reformed in Zanesville. Well, upon this point the Washingtonians a few years since could out boast you altogether. So small a number as this is but taking the back track and falling in the rear. Would it not have been wise to wait a year or two and ascertain how many should really hold out reformed men? We have so often been saluted with a flourish of trumpets heralding recent reforms both moral and religious, which disappointed in the end the sanguine hopes of their friends, that we think it best not to be in haste, but to make little delay.

We would hope for the best, but there can be no harm in waiting.

In conclusion we say, Let the Sons of Temperance do all in their power. We bid them God speed in all that is good. We will not cast a straw in their way but cordially work with them, if they will permit us. But we are disposed to cut down the vain-glorious spirit of those, who would arrogate all the Temperance cause to themselves, by setting aside those who pioneered in the cause, when they were under the nurse's care, and had not shed their baby dress. Let them ponder the answer of the King of Israel. "Let not him that girdeth on his harness, boast himself as he that putteth it off."

A Pioneer in the Temperance cause.

Putnam, O. Feb. 26, 1847.

Ecclesiastical.

Written for the Western Recorder.

CHURCH DIVISION.

THINGS TO BE CONSIDERED.

NO. XI.

Mr. Editor:—We observe,

4. That by adopting the policy of separation, we shall most effectually exclude ourselves from access, as a church, to that part of the land afflicted with the curse of slave holding laws.

It will debar us from preaching to either slaves or slave holders: and but little probability will remain of our holding any correspondence with the South, that may be of a salutary or beneficial character, towards those engaged in the evil of which we complain. It is a question deserving our sincere attention, whether, because we cannot accomplish all the good we would, shall we therefore deprive ourselves of doing what good we can?

Our commission as ministers of the Gospel, requires of us that we "go into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." And shall we now take to ourselves what will effectually exclude us from all religious access to a large portion of the land? Can we innocently do it? Shall we stand justified before him who has given us this great commission, and solemn charge?

Did our connection with the South debar us from loving God or man, or impose upon us any irreligious burthen, the case would be entirely different. Did it prevent us from manifesting that love, as fully as we might, by being separated, our circumstances would be materialy different. Or did it bind our consciences to approve what God has prohibited and condemned, our situation would be quite unlike what it now is; and we should stand in a very different light before the world, and in the sight of Heaven. But nothing of this character exists. No infringement of the sacred rights of conscience, is experienced from this connection. No profitless and unmeaning task is required of us to be performed, as a religious duty. No religious privilege is withheld from us, by it; nor is there any burdensome right imposed upon our observance. In all these things, we are left as free and untrammelled, with the connection, as without it. What then is the great difficulty in the way of its being continued? Is not this the sum of the whole, We cannot make all in the denomination, think, and act, as we do, on all subjects: and therefore we propose to unchristianise them, and abandon them to hopeless perdition, turning them over to the "uncovenanted mercies of divine vengeance!" It may be contended that their error is a fundamental one, and endangers the soul. Allowing it may be, why should we break a connection on account of it, which while it lends no sanction whatever to that error, affords us the most favorable position for opposing it with success? We do not conceive, however, that it is possessed of such an attribute, only with those who have received proper light, and information upon the subject, and then persist in their adherence to the iniquitous practice.

5. The precedent of such a division would be decidedly inimical, and ruinous to a Republican form of government.

If the minority, refuse to abide the decision of the majority, republicanism can never be sustained. Whether in ecclesiastical associations, or in politics, Anarchy would be the inevitable consequence of the abandonment of the principle of submission, on the part of the minority. And should we divide, as proposed by some, so far as the influence of our example may be felt and regarded, it will tend directly to the overthrow of our civil institutions;—and to the destruction of the Democratic principles in every kind of government. It will be a virtual abandonment of those principles, we have professed to love so dearly; and assuming to dictate and determine the path of duty for others, continuing friendly intercourse with them, only so long as they yield implicit obedience to our injunctions. This, we think no one can fail to perceive. But we forbear, for the present, enumerating more of the disadvantages, with which such a division would embarrass us. And say in conclusion, that in referring to them, we have done it for the purpose of commending them to the attention of others, that they may provide against them, or remove them, if they are disposed to urge on the division.

We will next consider the great object to be obtained by such a separation. E. A. W.

Western Sketches.

REMINISCENCES

OF THE FIRST SETTLEMENT OF OHIO.

NO. III.

Friend Bassett: In my last, I had brought my notes up to the fall of 1789; and mentioned that the corn crops, west of Blue Ridge, were cut off by the frost. In some places the corn got ripe, where the soil was peculiarly favorable, and the corn early in the ground. Mr. Converse says the crop ripened at Waterford, and corn was sold there at half a dollar a bushel; at Newberry and Belpre it was cut off, as Mrs. Dr. Mathews informs me; her brother raised a crop at Newberry, and she tells me a very interesting anecdote of Isaac Williams: He had lived for several years on the Ohio, opposite Marietta, before the settlement of that place, in 1788; and in the spring of 1790, when the scarcity of corn was greatest, he sold his corn at fifty cents a bushel; refusing a speculator who wished to purchase the whole, who lived in our settlement; and of every purchaser, he enquired the number of persons in the family, that he might deal out his corn, in proportion to its size. Here was true benevolence. Mr. Williams, I knew well; he was not rich, but was a great hunter; and always wore very plain, home-spun clothes. His wife was a sister of the Tomlinsons, who lived at, and near Grave creek, Va. During this summer the mills at Wolf creek were got in operation. The fall of '89, Benj. Converse went from Waterford to assist in raising the mill; was taken sick, of the small-pox, and died there, in a few days. A daughter of General Tupper's, who had married Mr. Secretary Sargeant, soon after they came on, also died that fall. This summer, (1790,) an expedition was sent into the Indian country, by Congress, under the command of Major Harmer, and the troops from Fort Harmer, were withdrawn for that expedition; and the Fort, for a time, was placed in charge of one of the Sergeants of the Militia, (Joseph Barker,) with a Militia guard. I never fully understood the character of this expedition, as the "Indian War," as we termed it, had not then broken out. But I believe it was sent out to bring some of the tribes to terms, by getting them to treat; or, by coercion, if necessary. Harmer could never get in sight of the Indians; but a detachment that was sent out to try to bring on an action, was met, and defeated. Col. Converse informs me that the Shawnees had, all the time, since the landing of the settlers, kept aloof, and before the war, took a man by the name of Jno. Gardner, prisoner from Waterford, who made his escape after they had taken him a few miles. It was the Delawares and Wyandotts which came into the settlements peaceably, and traded with the inhabitants. In the fall, the two companies which had left Fort Harmer, under the command of Captains Hart and Ziglar, returned, and garrisoned the Fort. The fore part of the season the settlers suffered for food; but the season for cultivation was very early, and the gardens soon helped out their living. Corn was fit to eat by the 4th of July. My father mentions taking twenty-five or thirty bushels of corn to Wolf creek mills by the 1st of Nov., and while absent, heard of the return of Major Harmer. I have said nothing of the settlers on Point Harmer, of whom there were several, amongst whom were Judge Gilman, Benjamin I. Gilman, Paul Fering, Esq., Old Mr. Warth, with several sons, who were active woods-men, and Mr. Shoeman, a French-man. The progress of clearing and cultivating the land was rapid; but the settlers began to be alarmed about Indians, towards fall, though no one had been killed, as yet. The surveyors were out on the business of surveying the lands. John Mathews (formerly of this county,) had been engaged in the business from 1786. In the fall, Colonel Isaac Stacey took charge of a company which went up to a place on the Muskingum, called Big Bottom, below McConnellsville, now called Rockville, and had with him, about seventeen men, with one woman, who did the cooking; she had a child, and was the wife of a man employed to hunt for the party. They built a block-house and one cabin; and there was an old shanty which had been before put up by some persons who had made a 'Tomahawk improvement.' In the new cabin were Francis and Stephen Choat, a Mr. Shaw and Mr. Patton. In the shanty which had been fitted with a clapboard door, were two brothers, by the name of Bullard. The rest of the party were in the Block-house. Amongst them were two sons of Colonel Stacey, and one of Major Ezra Putnam's, (an early settler.) In the winter, when the weather was excessively cold, and the river was frozen over, an attack was made by the Indians on this place. Colonel Stacey had left some time before, and had cautioned them to be very watchful, as they were the advanced post,—to leave work by sundown,—to close the doors and windows, &c.; but as no actual hostilities had taken place, they were careless, and left the door open. About dark, as the woman was busy getting supper, the Indians having divided into two or three parties, made the attack, by one party going to the cabin, where they secured Francis Choat, Stephen Choat, Mr. Shaw and Mr. Patton; another went to the block-house, and firing in at the door, killed Mr. Troop, who was standing near the fire, and who fell into it. They then rushed in and commenced tomahawking the rest. One seized the child, dashed its brains out, and threw it upon the fire. The mother seized an axe and desperately wounded one of the Indians, but she was soon dispatched. One of the Staceys attempted to escape through the roof, but was shot; his leg broke in falling to the ground. He begged to have his life spared, as he said they had killed all the rest; but he was killed. His younger brother, a youth, had hid himself behind something in the room; after the rest were dispatched, and the Indians were looking to see what plunder they could secure, one of them found Stacey, and taking him by the arm, lifted him up. He begged for life, but another Indian raised his tomahawk to kill him; his captor forbade his doing so, and raised his tomahawk to defend his captive, and the business was settled by sparing Stacey; who made the fifth prisoner in the block-house. The rest were all killed. After plundering such property as suited their purposes, they set fire to the house and consumed the balance, with the dead bodies. When the first gun was discharged, the two Bullards left their shanty, pulling the door too. Before they had gone far, they heard the Indians beating down their door—they heard the groans and screams of the people at the block-house, and made the best of their way down the river. There were twenty-eight Indians. Twelve whites, (including the woman and child,) were killed; five taken prisoners, and two escaped. The Indians had intended to take Waterford and Duck creek Stockades, but the escape of the two Bullards defeated this, and they made off with the prisoners and plunder. Captain Rogers and Samuel Mitchel had a cabin at the mouth of Olive Green creek, and these went with the two Bullards over to Wolf creek mills, and a man that was there from Waterford, took the information there. The Bullards continued on to Marietta. The garrison at Waterford immediately sent a party to the place, (about twelve miles,) to see if any wounded or living remained; but they found no live thing, but the dogs, and these refused to leave the premises. The bodies were so much consumed that one could not be told from the other, except Stacey, who fell on the outside. The logs of the house were green, and therefore were not consumed. They buried the remains in the house, and left. The dogs could not be coaxed to leave; and Colonel Daniel Converse, from whom I received these particulars, (and who had received them from Mr. Shaw, one of the captives, the next summer,) thinks there was something very singular, that the dogs, (of which the party had several,) should not have given the alarm, as is usual for them to do; but it seems, from all accounts, that they did not. The Indians took the prisoners on to the Sandusky, and thence to Maumee river. Stacey was adopted by one of the Indians, and died amongst them. Francis Choat was a Free-Mason, and the Indian agent at the British Fort, Colonel McKee, being also one, he secured his, (Choat's,) freedom. Francis, in some way, sometime after, obtained the release of his brother. Shaw also obtained his liberation, through Colonel Brant, the next summer. Patton remained a prisoner until the close of the war. I saw him when I was a boy, and heard him tell some of the incidents of his captivity. When they heard of the taking of the block-house at Marietta, Anselm Tupper went up with a party, but returned without accomplishing anything but satisfying the minds of the people, as to the facts; and, that no wounded were there. This station was not again occupied during the war. About the same time or perhaps a little earlier in the season, John Mathews and Ebenezer Sproat, who were surveying in the lower part of the Ohio Company's purchase, below Gallipolis, were driven from their work by the Indians. They had each a small guard of soldiers. About daylight the sentinel at Mathews' camp had left his post and gone to the guard fire, a rod or two from Mr. Mathews' tent. Mathews and one man named Patchen, had risen from their blankets in a sitting posture, and were putting on their moccasins, when the Indians fired on them and shot Patchen through the body. Mathews and the rest of his hands ran and escaped with the few clothes they had on. Patchen, after running a few steps, fell, and died, or was killed. The Indians made their second fire upon the guard.—They killed all but one; this one was running in the direction with Mathews and his men, but finding that he was unable to keep up, jumped over a fallen tree, and hid himself close under it. The Indians pursued, and one of them jumped upon the log, but seeing Mathews and the rest of the party far in advance, desisted from the pursuit, and the soldier under him escaped his notice. The surveyors lost their instruments, and other property. The surveying of the lands had to stop until the close of the war. There had been a company formed in the States, called the Scioto Company, who had contracted with the Government for a quantity of land, on certain conditions, to be complied with by the company. They sent an agent to France to sell lands, and procure settlers. A large number of French purchased of the agent, and sailed for this country. I am under the impression that they arrived in the fall of 1790.—They found that in consequence of the failure of the company to comply with the condition of the contract, they were defrauded of their money, and were in a new and wild country, without lands, or that kind of knowledge and experience necessary to procure a comfortable living; and the Indian war added to their difficulties. They mostly located at Gallilpolis, where barracks were prepared for them. A few for a time remained at Marietta. Two, Mr. Shewman and Mr. Thiery, remained there. Mr. J. P. R. Bureau, then a single man, remained a part of the time during the war, and then went to Gallipolis. There were two or three Americans settled with them, and acted as spies. Robert Safford, of Vermont, was one of these.—This was the origin of the settlement of this place, (Gallipolis.) Some returned to France; others left for other places. Those who remained had to brave the difficulties of a new country, and the war with the Indians; but they nobly sustained these, and some of their men are identified with the early history of our State, and the organization of our State Government. Amongst these the names of Colonel Robert Safford and J. P. R. Bureau, Esq., are favorably known to the public. I have mentioned these circumstances, to note the early settlement of Gallipolis; being the third one in the State. HORACE NYE.

Putnam, O., Feb. 25, 1847.

Bridge across Niagara River.—It is stated that Queen Victoria has consented to have Canada united to the American States by a bridge over the Niagara.

Ibaham Pacha has sent his two sons to England to be educated. They are placed under the care of the President of the Pestalozzian School at Workshop.

Religious Intelligence.

PITTSBURGH DISTRICT.

Harrisville Ct. Feb. 19, 1847.

Br. Bassett: By your permission I will say a few words through the W. Recorder to our worthy president, G. Brown, and the friends of Zion in general, in regard to the prosperity of this Ct. We commenced our second quarterly meeting in Harrisville, at which meeting I had the highly appreciated labors of J. I. Stillians and G. G. Collins, as well as those of our worthy local preacher, J. M. Wilson. On Saturday night we moved from the school house to the new Court House where we had a very comfortable room. On Sunday our congregations were large and attentive and also on Sunday night. We held our love feast on Monday at 10 o'clock which was a love-feast indeed to many, and on the same evening before preaching we had a prayer meeting that never will be forgotten by many. The church was abundantly built up, and while the children of God were made to shout aloud, sinners were made to tremble like a Felix of old. As our meeting progressed, it continued to increase in interest, and those that had been fighting under the black flag of darkness almost three score years were brought to enlist under the bloodstained banner of King Emanuel. We are informed in the 15th chap. of Luke that "there is joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth," and while we have been rejoicing here, we believe angels have been rejoicing in heaven. May that joy be increased until the last wandering prodigal shall return home. We closed our meeting on last night after a continuance of six days. Eight united with the church on probation during our quarterly meeting, and we think there are many more that will shortly come into the church. The circuit in general, is in a prosperous condition, 43 have joined the church this conference year on Harrisville circuit. We expect shortly to be able to communicate to you greater things if the good Lord still continues to carry on his work among us. J. Holland, Sup't.

MUSKINGUM DISTRICT.

Demavia Cottage, Feb. 25th 1847.

To the President of the Muskingum An. Con. of the M. P. Church.

Dear Br. Clancy: It is with emotions of gratitude, to the Giver of every good and perfect gift, that we are informed through the medium of the last Recorder, that your health is improving, and that there is some prospect of your shortly resuming your arduous labors on the District. Painful are the afflictions through which in the providence of God, you have been conducted,—but I trust my dear brother, you have learned to regard them as mere links in the chain of a kind providence, designed by the wise Disposer of events, to wean you from the world, and to attach your affections more inviolably to those substantial objects, that are "eternal in the Heavens."

Soon, very soon, we may expect to be released from the toils of Itinerant life, and if found faithful in the vineyard of the Lord, through the merits of the Saviour—hear the welcome declaration of grace, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the Kingdom."

It is matter of great encouragement amidst the sacrifices connected with our profession to witness the prosperity of Zion. I am happy to inform you, that the portion of the vineyard assigned to me by the last Annual Conference, Pleasant Hill Ct. has been favored with some indications of prosperity. It will be gratifying to my worthy predecessor Br. Caddy—who labored faithfully the last two years on this Ct. to be informed that the societies generally are much revived, and the members greatly encouraged.

We have held three protracted meetings, viz. at Hartwood, Pleasant Hill, and Amity. I shall not enter into a detailed statement of the particulars connected with the progress and prosperity of those meetings, as nothing out of the ordinary course occurred. We had preaching, praying, singing and shouting, at all the above meetings, and more and better still, sinners were awakened to a sense of their lost condition, and mourners were enabled to rejoice in pardoning mercy. The number converted we pretend not to know. Thirty one or two have united with the church on the Ct. but the greater source of encouragement is the revival, and reunion of the prominent members, some of whom had been for years separated from each other in point of Christian affiection. "How good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." It is compared in the scriptures to the richest odors, and likewise to the dew of Hermon. The dew that descended upon the mountain of Zion, where the Lord commanded the blessing, even life forever more.

Were it not for the distance to which I find it necessary to have my family situated from my field of labor I could not be better suited with an appointment. Suffice it to say, that I regard Pleasant Hill Ct. as appropriately named, a pleasant Ct. and a very kind people.

Hoping that your restoration to health may prove to be permanent, and that we may enjoy the satisfaction of sitting under your instructions at the time you promised to visit my Ct. I subscribe myself your brother and fellow laborer in the gospel of Christ. Z. Ragan.

Leesburg Ct, Feb. 19, 1847.

Br. Bassett: I embrace this opportunity to give some intelligence of this circuit, to the friends of Zion through the medium of the Western Recorder. I resumed my labors on the Ct. the 2nd Sabbath after the rise of Conference. Grateful to the Divine Being for the mercies of the past, and trusting in the promises of the gospel if faithful for grace for the present and future. And desire to be thankful for as much of the goodness and mercy of the Lord as has been exhibited toward us as a people. We cannot write of so great a display of Divine Power as some of our brethren, but can say we have some good times in waiting on the Lord. Our first Qt. meeting was held at Liberty meeting house, and continued a week. The church was considerably revived. Our 2nd Qt. meeting was held on 4th Sabbath of January at Pleasant Valley. We held that 10 days, it was truly a refreshing time from the presence of the Lord. The members of the church came up to the help of the Lord against the powers of darkness from several classes and labored with faith and prayer for the prosperity of Zion. The Lord heard the petitions of his children and blest them abundantly with the riches of his grace. Sinners were pricked to the heart by the awakening Spirit and were constrained to cry for mercy—the Saviour heard the cry of weeping penitents and sent answers of peace to their sin sick souls, which caused them to rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of Glory. The members at Pleasant Valley feel greatly encouraged at this timely exhibition of divine goodness; eight gave us their names for membership and hope more soon will. We are getting along pleasantly at nearly all of the appointments and are striving to live for greater prosperity. We pray that this year may be replete with the outpouring of the spirit of God and scores of precious souls brought from darkness to light.

Yours &c. Wm. L. Baldwin.

OHIO DISTRICT.

Moon's Mill, O. Feb. 18, 1847.

Br. Bassett: Please publish a brief sketch of visitation. Left home Jan. 14, past through Miami Ct. staid with I. Hunt—found him in usual health. The family seem afflicted. Reached Middletown, Union Ct. Jan. 16, tried to preach 6 times—saw no special interest, but good attention to the word. Set out for Darby Miss. reached my appointment Jan. 23rd, found Br. Davis at his post. Here we had an interesting meeting—one professed conversion, 6 joined the church. Left the meeting going on. Brethren from Catawba rendered good service in singing. Called at Catawba—tried to preach, and past on to pleasant Hill, Springfield Ct. where I met with kind friends. Commenced the meeting on January 30, which lasted three days. Some good was done, I trust at this meeting. Two joined the church—may they prove to be shining lights. Went down to A. Laybourn's, then over to Springfield and out to Hess's. Enjoyed a comfortable season with the brethren. On the 4th of Feb. set out for Port William Ct. Reached the meeting on Saturday—found Br. Rose and his charge in good spirits. Received at this Qt. meeting 2 members, and one preacher from the M. E. Church. Things are going about right May the Lord prosper our Zion.

John M. Young.

Mount Blanchard, Ct. Feb. 16th 1847.

Brother Bassett:—Having to write to you on business, I will just say, that our second quarterly meeting, was held at Br. Eckels, on the 23d ultimo, we had Brs. Swaney and Guest to assist us. The meeting was interesting to many. We had what might be called a Pentecostal shower, which is something uncommon for these days of drouth. Although we cannot boast of three thousand, yet thank the Lord we believe there were three converted to God, who skipt about like lambs upon the mountains, and this was not all, for many of the Old soldiers of the cross were overwhelmed with the love of God, and were not like the Queen no more spirit in them, but filled with the Spirit. Therefore it appears that God has not quite left that church, yet we have many things to discourage us in our pilgrimage, through this dark enchanted ground. O pray for us that we may come off more than conquerors through Him who hath loved us.

A. Besse.

Richwood O. Feb. 17, 1847.

Dear Br. Bassett: While writing to you I will also state that we are in the midst of a glorious revival at Richwood. We commenced our last quarterly meeting on the evening of the 5th inst, and up to this date we have not had one unprofitable meeting. The Lord has graciously revived his work. The dark cloud that has so long shadowed Richwood circuit is now fringed with blessed hope. Golden light begins to flash from behind the dark and gloomy mass. O may the Son of righteousness shed such a flood of living beams that our sky may once more become bright and glorious. We have had numerous conversions, and received into the church upwards of thirty members.

Not being confined by geographical limits, we have stepped over our Conference line and organized a promising society of 14 members within the bounds of the Muskingum Conference yet out of the reach of the travelling preachers of that District. If we have done wrong, we sue for pardon.

I think we shall be able to report two new churches built before the close of the year: one certain.

We have peace now in all our borders. We have received into the church 50 members, and the prospect for more is very flattering; with a general desire through the circuit for a revival of the work of God. May the Lord prosper his work.

We are much indebted to Rev. R. K. Davis and Dr. Howell, for their valuable services: and and to the former we tender our sincere regret in not fulfilling our promise: but we assure him the fault was not on our part. We could not get released. John B. Peat.

FOREIGN NEWS.

From the N. Y. Sun.

ARRIVAL OF THE CAMBRIA.

Fifteen days later from Europe.

The steamship Cambria left Liverpool on the 4th ult., and arrived at Boston on Saturday, 20th. She brings coin and bullion to the amount of nearly ten millions of dollars. Our foreign files extend to the 4th inst. The British Parliament promptly adopted the measures of relief shadowed forth in our advices by the steamer Sarah Sands, viz: the opening of the Ports for corn and all cereal food until the 1st September next and the suspension of the navigation laws. Acts to prohibit the distillation of grain, and to favor the use of sugar and molasses for that purpose, at low duties, were passing through both houses. Next to these measures came the Prime Minister's gigantic projects for the relief and permanent improvement of Ireland, at a cost of thirty millions sterling. Lord J. Russel's plans meet general favor. Money is to be advanced for seed for the next crops. Loans will be made to such of the Irish landlords as wish to improve their waste lands; or the lands will be bought by government at a fixed price. In cases, however, where the landlords will neither improve nor sell, powers will be taken by the Government to buy at a valuation. For the reclamation of waste lands a million sterling is to be advanced. The land so purchased will be resold in small lots, for the purpose of creating a yeoman proprietory, whose social position will fill up the existing void between the peasant and the present race of landlords. Drainage is to be extensively carried out. These are the permanent measures. The temporary projects of relief are a new Poor Law; relief committees to administer funds, and superintend the distribution of food without exacting work in return; giving out-door relief at the poor houses to the aged and infirm paupers; and other measures calculated to mitigate the severity of the present visitation. Further schemes are announced as being in preparation.

Ireland.

The only items of news from this suffering country relates to the dreadful famine, which is indeed terrible. The following is a single instance among hundreds which are recorded.

From the Rev. Samuel Stock, Rector and Vicar of Kilcommon, County of Mayo.

A day ago I entered a miserable cabin, dug out of the bog; a poor woman sat propped against the wall inside; the stench was intolerable, and on my complaining of it the mother pointed to a sort of square bed in one corner; it contained the putrid the absolutely melted away remains of her eldest son. On enquiry why she did not bury it, she assigned two reasons; first, she had not strength to go out and acquaint the neighbors; next, she waited till her other child would die, and they might bury both together I examined the place where it lay; the sight was awful; the poor child lay there, unable even to cry, so exhausted and so far gone no after efforts could save it. It is since dead—it died this day. Here is one case in many.

It is unnecessary to give more such cases. The newspapers are full of them. Hundreds are dying of starvation. The famine is becoming general in the South and West. Thousands of the people are flying to England and Scotland. In Liverpool alone 100,000 received relief during a single week! There is much excitement against some of the Irish Landlords for their uncharitable conduct.—The estates of absentees will probably be taken by government at an appraised value and sold out to the tenantry.

Scotland, Germany.

Accounts from the Highlands and Islands of Scotland continue distressing. The Scottish nobility and gentry are extending relief with princely liberality. In all the churches of the three kingdoms collections were taken up, by request of Her Majesty, for the poor of Ireland and Scotland. Immense sums were contributed. From all Germany we have accounts of distress occasioned by the high price of food. Families are preparing to come to America in hundreds. The trial of 250 Poles for the revolt at Cracow, was soon to begin. Accounts from Prussia are almost as distressing as those from Ireland. In the manufacturing districts, particularly, the destitution is alarming. Robberies are of common and frequent occurrence.

France.

From France we have accounts of more disturbances, and likewise of the threatened famine. The French government, however, is taking active measures to avert the impending calamity.

The Chambers have passed a bill providing that until September next, the lowest duty shall be levied on the importation of all descriptions of food, grains, vegitables and live stock. The duty thus becomes almost nominal, for it does not exceed 25 or 30 centimes per hectolitre and per head. This will, it is hoped, have the effect of causing large supplies of food to arrive from the United States, Russia and Turkey. The government has also, in consequence of the scarcity, forbidden the exportation of potatoes and all other vegetables.

One hundred thousand barrels of flour having been ordered for France in the United States, thirty-five thousand barrels reached Havre one week in eight vessels. The rest is expected shortly.

The scarcity of the last harvest has occasioned great distress in this country, and this distress has led to serious, and even alarming, disturbances in many departments, among others Magenue, Ille et Valaine, Cotes du Nord and Cher. The misery of the lower classes is dreadful, and even people comparatively well off complain of the extraordinary dearness of food.

The Bishop of Oregon, lately nominated by the Pope, is now at Havre, waiting to take his departure for his destination. He is accompanied by several priests, monks, and nuns.

Italy.

On New Year's Day all the people in Rome went in grand procession to pay their respects to the Pope. They were accompanied by flags and bands of music, and sung hymns in his honor. The Pope appeared on the balcony of his palace, and was received with an immense shout of joy from the people. The vast multitude then knelt, and the Holy Father, with much solemnity and emotion, gave them his blessing, to which all the people cried, as with one voice, "Amen!" On the 13th January his holiness preached a sermon in the Church of Saint Andre della Valle. His intention to do so had been kept a profound secret, so as to prevent the collection of an immense crowd. When he appeared in the pulpit, the sensation was intense, and all the congregation literally wept from joy. It was the first time that a Pope had preached for three hundred years. His holiness' sermon is said to have been very eloquent and affecting.

The Pope has introduced important reforms in the administration of criminal justice, and continues to manifest the same liberal opinions as on his election. The love of the people towards him increases every day.

Hungary.

Pesth, January 15.—According to an official report, several thousand persons are in danger of dying from hunger before next spring. A demand for 50,000 florins was made to the aristocracy, but only 8000 florins were accorded: and yet that aristocracy takes all the wealth of the country, and keeps the people in slavery and misery.

Death of Captain Rathbone.—A melancholy gloom has been cast over the mercantile community of Liverpool by accounts which reached this port on the 27th ult., stating that Capt. Rathbone of the packet-ship Columbia, his first and second mates, five seamen, and a boy, were washed over board in a gale of wind on the 13th of January.

From the N. Y. Freeman's Journal

Letter from Father Mathew.—By the kindness of Rev. Mr. Kelley, of Jersey City, we are permitted to lay before our readers the following letter from Father Mathew—at this juncture specially interesting and important. It will be seen that he is very decided in the opinion that the best relief is that sent in the shape of Provisions. Also that great hopes are reposed in the generosity of "the States." Shall it be in vain?

Cork, 11th January, 1847.

Rev. Dear Mr. Kelly: It gratifies me more than I can express, to hear from you, especially as your letter conveys such good tidings. No sum of money, in the present state of this country could afford such relief as shipments of Indian corn, and other bread stuffs and to be sent immediately. The individuals concerned in the corn trade of England and Ireland, have raised the price to an enormous amount. Indian flour is to day in this city £19 the ton, and in the country £23. Our wretched population is rapidly pining away and sinking into the grave. The only consolation we have, is the pious resignation with which they submit to this dire visitation of an all wise Providence. We have seven months of of famine still before us. But with the bright prospect that now opens upon us, of having our markets reduced to reasonable rates, by the benevolence of our commiserating brethren in the States, we hope to stay the ravages of Famine. Untoward, unexpected impediments, have obliged me reluctantly, for the last two years, to postpone my visits to your happy country. Until the Lord in His mercy, shall stay the hand of the Destroying Angel, that is now decimating the Irish People, I cannot promise myself the happiness of spending a few months in America.

—The Kaffir war was nearly at an end on the 5th December last. The Rev. M. Calderwood, long a missionary in that country, was appointed to negotiate with the Kaffirs.

St. Bartholemew's.—The Swedish government has resolved, gradually, to abolish slavery in St. Bartholemew's, and has devoted £2000 per annum for that purpose until the slaves are liberated.

A proposition is before the Legislature of Massachusetts to establish a State Asylum for inebriates, and meets with much favor.

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO.

THURSDAY, MARCH 4, 1847.

Our Address.—Some of our respected exchanges have not observed the change of our address, being now Putnam instead of Zanesville. The two places are separated only by the Muskingum river. Yet as we have convenient access and interchange by bridges, it suits us nearly as well to receive our documents at Zanesville.—The publishers of the N. York Sun, (to whom we are indebted for many favors,) have for a week past, since our respectful notice of their several publications, sent their daily for us to both places. This was, doubtless, through mistake.—The Philadelphia Saturday Gleaner, of which we so lately expressed our admiration, has also come to us from both offices for two weeks past. We felt it our duty to notify the publishers of what we supposed an inadvertence. Always happy to see you at Putnam.

Annual Conferences.—Several Eastern Conferences of the M. P. Church, hold their sessions in the present month.

Both the Boston and New Jersey Conferences convened on the 3d inst.

The Maryland Conference meets at Easton, Md., on the 10th inst.

The N. Y. Conf. at Tarrytown, N. Y., on the 17th—Philadelphia Conf. on the same day.

The Old Veterans Departing.—We learn by the Philadelphia Saturday Gleaner, that the Rev. Ezekiel Cooper, died in that city on Sunday, Feb. 21st, at the advanced age of eighty-four. We presume that he was the very oldest of Methodist Ministers. We see by the old Minutes in our possession, that he was admitted into the itinerant connection in 1785. The Rev. G. Pickering, whose death in New England was announced a few weeks ago, was admitted in 1790. Rev. N. Snethen, late of the M. P. Church, who died in 1845, entered the ministry in 1794. Of the oldest Methodist ministers now surviving, are Rev W. Burke, of Cincinnati, now connected with the M. E. C. South. He was admitted into the travelling connection in '92. Next, Rev. L. Garrett, of the M. P. Church, and now residing in Yauzoo City, Miss, whose name first appears in the Minutes in 1795. The Rev A. M,Caine, of South Carolina, and Rev. Joseph Snelling, of Massachusetts, both of the M. P. Church, first entered the ministry in 1797. An interesting sketch of this last named father, was given in our last paper, by our New England Correspondent. By him we were baptized in infancy about the year 1809. Rev. James Quinn, of the Ohio Conference, M. E. Church, was received into the travelling connection in 1799.

Good Indications, South.—It is well known that many of the supporters of slavery, have gravely insisted that, as a matter of prudence at least, it is necessary to keep their menials in ignorance, or at least that labor and submission are the only arts or sciences which should be taught them.—Their education in the knowledge of letters, is prohibited by legislation, in some of the States, even in Virginia. In Louisiana, if not also in some other States, the offender is subject to the very severest penalties. It is true, there are now numerous missionaries laboring amongst the enslaved colored population in the South. But we believe these are permitted only to give oral instruction.

We rejoice to discover of late some signs of a change of public sentiment in the South, touching the instruction of Slaves. We see in the National Era, an article from the Richmond (Va.) Republican, in which the writer nobly and indignantly repels the monstrous proposal of the Governor of that State, to enact measures further to oppress the colored population, and virtually to expel the free portion of them from the State. He observes that ignorance is often the mother of vice, and asks the grave question "whether we of the white race are not responsible for their ignorance." And he very cogently insists that "to forbid men and women to learn to read the Bible, and at the same time, to condemn them for their ignorance and degradation, is at variance with the plainest dictates of humanity and common sense." He urges, as the first step to the reformation of this class, the repeal of those laws which retard their improvement. And he suggests to his fellow-citizens who are professors of the Christian religion and who feel a concern for the glory of God and the good of mankind, whether it would not be more consistent to pay some attention to the poor in their midst, who are perishing for lack of knowledge, than to expend their time and money in heathen lands.

We have before us the December number of the African Repository, published at Washington City. It contains a "Letter from a Georgian," J. J. Flournoy, Esq. He resolutely repudiates the doctrine that it is necessary to keep slaves in ignorance. He demands why they should be refused 'a bit of education.' I mean, says he, lettered instruction; just enough to enable slaves to read how they should serve God and obey their masters. Did the Scriptures ever foment insurrection, engender revolution, or instil acrimonious passions in human nature? Why not," he continues, "let the descendants of Africa learn to read, and to spend their Sunday holidays at home, poring over God's inestimable lessons, instead of causing them for lack of argument, to gad about on that sacred day, committing often mischiefs or fun."

We have just seen also, in the Presbyterian of the West, proceedings of the Presbytery of Charleston, taking the ground that it is the duty of masters to dedicate their servants to God in the ordinance of baptism.

We are glad to notice these amongst many signs of change of Southern sentiment in reference to the position and privileges of the African race.—And we trust we shall yet be permitted to see the day, when that race shall be regarded not as chattels, or as brutes, but as men, and as immortals.

"City of Rocks."—We notice in the last number of the Nashville Christian Advocate, that the Editor speaks of his city as "The City of Rocks." Now we are familiar with the terms "Monumental City," "City of Notions," "City of Brotherly Love," "The Iron City," the "Queen City," the "Crescent City," and such like, and know how to apply the terms. But "The City of Rocks" is to us a new cognomen. Very well. It means Nashville. It is the residence of Bishop Soule, and the residence of our old friend, Dr. Henkle, now one of the Editors of the Advocate. But we have such a fondness for Geological Science, it strikes us we would like to see those "rocks," and especially the "City of Rocks," if we should ever get that far down South. Wish we had a picture, or at least a good description of the city. Hope it is not a hard place. Br. H. you are gifted in the descriptive. When you have time, please give us some statement at least of the natural position and peculiarities of your rocky locality, and we will be pleased to re-publish it.

More Steamboat Disasters.—The Cincinnati Commercial brings us intelligence of several serious occurrences on the Western Waters.

1. The Steamer California, sunk, two miles below Guyandotte, six persons drowned, names not given.

2. The steamboat Medora, blew up, not far from New Orleans, on the 10th or 11th February.—Four or five persons killed—others dangerously wounded. Names not given.

3. Steamboat National, burnt to the water's edge, one mile below the mouth of Kentucky river. She was bound for Pittsburgh, where she was owned. Heavy loss of property, but no lives.

4. The steamer Tom Metcalfe bound for the Wabash from Cincinnati, with a heavy load of freight, struck the bank near Aurora, Indiana, on the morning of the 23d ultimo, and suddenly went to pieces and sunk. Five persons were drowned. Names not given.

Army News.—The Pittsburg Commercial Journal, by Telegraphic despatches from Philadelphia, informs us that a detachment of eighty cavalry, belonging to the Kentucky and Arkansas troops, were cut off, thirty miles beyond Saltillo, by General Minon. They formed an outpost, and were surprised by the Mexican General, and taken without resistance. Major Borlaney, Cassius M. Clay, and Major Gaines were among the captured. Lieutenant Richey, with ten dragoons, who had been sent by General Scott to General Taylor, was intercepted by the Mexicans, into whose hands, the despatches, said to contain the whole plan of the campaign, have fallen. An attack upon Vera Cruz, was contemplated, about the 1st of March. About 7000 troops, regulars and volunteers, were in Tampico. The rumor of Santa Anna's death proved unfounded. General La Vega had been appointed to the command of Vera Cruz.

Peach and Plum Trees.—An Enquiry.—Our worthy friend at Morgantown, will excuse us that we did not, a little sooner, give attention to the following note from him. We were in daily hopes of seeing our horticultural friend, Br. C. Springer, not doubting that he would be able to give the desired information. But it so happens we have not since got to see him. We trust he will respond to the enquiry in time for our next paper. We have examined what agricultural publications we have, and meet with nothing that would give satisfaction in the case. Meanwhile, should this enquiry meet the eye of the Editor of the "Ohio Cultivator," and he should be pleased to respond, we will take pleasure in republishing, for the benefit of our friend and others. The enquiry is one of great importance to many.

Morgantown, Va., Feb. 12th, 1847.

Dear Sir: I write you for information concerning the modus operandi of stopping the ravages of disease in Plum and Peach trees which infest our country to such an extent that all our efforts to cultivate these delicious fruits prove almost entirely abortive. As you no doubt exchange with some valuable Horticultural works, I thought my chance was as good to write you as any other person. If you are in possession of any facts relative to these points, you will please publish them, which no doubt would be gratefully received by your numerous readers. I would also enquire of you, if you know where a good article of grape Scions could be procured—say a two-year growth, or three. I should like to get about six or eight of the best,—say three or four kinds. If you can inform me on this subject where they could be had, I will be in your debt. Say what time they ought to be transplanted. If they were sent to Pittsburg to Tassey & Best, with directions to send them immediately by first chance, I could get them. Respectfully,

F. Madera.

Literary Institution in Michigan—The Michigan Conference of the M. P. Church, at its last session, resolved to enter into the erection of a Literary Institution at Leoni, Jackson Co. Michigan. A Board of Trustees was appointed, and a Traveling Agent, Rev. R. Bamford. We have just received a letter from said agent, requesting us to publish a statement respecting the School. He represents it in prosperous condition, numbering upwards of forty students. He wishes us to make it known that they are desirous of securing the services of a competent Instructor to be Principal. They wish to obtain a Minister of the M. P. Church who is a linguist. The Editor of the Methodist Protestant is also, through us, requested to give some notice of this matter. The Address of the Agent is Rev. R. Bamford, Leoni, Jackson Co. Mich. To him private letters may be addressed. We feel persuaded that this demand will not long remain unheeded or unsupplied. The people of Michigan know how to appreciate the advantages of learning. Recent emigrants, for the most part, from the N. England States and from N. York, they carried with them the spirit of improvement. And though Michigan is amongst the young States, it is already ahead of some of the old States in public improvements and in educational arrangements. We are not surprised that the Michigan Conference of the M. P. Church, thrugh but 4 or 5 years in existence, should determine to establish an Institution of learning. Success to it.

Columbian Magazine.—The March number of this attractive work is received. It has three good line engravings, The Glee Maiden, The Anglers, and Le Follet, with four figures. Also a piece of original Music by Miss E. A. White. Contents, entirely original, and furnished chiefly by female writers of the first order of talent. Edited by Messrs. Inman and West. $3 per annum.—Two copies for $5. Address Israel Post, Publisher, New York.

Braithwaite's Retrospect, of Practical Medicine and Surgery.—We are again under obligation to the American publisher, D. Adee, N. York, for furnishing us the Seventh and Eighth Parts of this valuable work. They embrace a mass of information, in Medical and Surgical Science, worthy of the attention, not of the faculty alone, but of general readers. As the series advances, the work increases in interest, and the several parts contain more reading matter, rising of 200 pages in each. Price, $1 per year, in advance—very low.

Godey's Ladies Book.—The March number of this beautiful publication has just reached us. It contains as usual, three elegant steel engravings; The Stingy Traveller, Hospitality in the Olden time, and the Fashion Plate. Besides, it contains numerous other illustrations, pertaining to Ladies' Work, Model Cottages, & Children's dresses. Talented and tasty contributors have as usual, supplied the reading matter for this number. Mrs. S. J. Hale is Editor—L. A. Godey, Publisher, Phila. Mr. G. has declined a nomination for President, stating that he had rather cater for the ladies of the U. States.

Godey's Reprint, of Blackwood's Ladies Magazine.—The fifth number of this very neat and interesting publication, accompanies the Ladies Book. The publisher still offers a copy of each of these works for $3 per Annum. Or he will send the Ladies Book and a copy of the London World of Fashion or of the Fountain, a splendid Temperance Annual, for the same price.

Wellman's Illustrated Botany.—The February number of this charming work is received. It is most elegantly embellished with colored flowers, of which we feel constrained to say, that they are not to be excelled but by nature itself. A new artist has been secured. And the new editor, Dr. J. L. Comstock, has taken supervision of the work. His name alone, will commend it to the scientific. Published by J. K. Wellman, New York. Only $3 per year. Two copies for $5. Every body, send for it—especially the ladies. The publisher will please note that we are minus the January number.

Literary Emporium.—We have received the second number of this work. It is neat, interesting, instructive, and useful for families, especially for youth. It discards literary trash, and is furnished at one dollar per year. Two good engravings in each number. J. K. Wellman publisher, N. York.

Columbian Fountain.—No. 4 just received. We respectfully submit whether fairness would not have required, that the Editor lay before his readers those few words of ours, upon which he has commented. We leave it to any of the corps editorial. As you please, brother.

"Reminiscences."—The 3d paper of Maj. Nye, will be found of increasing interest.

☞ Don't fail to read the two articles on our fourth page, on account of their length. They will repay a perusal.

Prices.—The arrival of the Cambria, caused an immediate decline in the price of flour and wheat, both east and west. Flour sells at Zanesville and Putnam at $4. Wheat at 65 cents.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Written for the Western Recorder.

EZEKIEL DAVIS.

Br. Bassett: Another veteran of the Cross has gone. Brother Ezekiel Davis was born, July 3d, 1773, in the State of Delaware; emigrated to the western part of Pennsylvania, and settled in West-Middletown; became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, about the year 1798; continued there until the year 1828 or '29, when he united with the Methodist Protestant Church, and continued a member until he departed this life, on the 7th of February, 1847, at his son's, (James Davis.)

It may be said of Brother Davis, that he adorned his profession, by a well ordered life, and a consistent conversation; spoke the loudest by his example. In the house of God his seat was seldom vacated,—always attentive to the means of Grace, when circumstances would admit. He informed the friends, a short time before he died, that all was well,—his sky was clear,—his prospect bright for glory and immortality in Heaven. Father Davis has left the church and several children and friends to mourn his loss; but our loss is his eternal gain. May this dispensation of Providence be sanctified to their good, and all be so unspeakably happy in the morning of the resurrection, as to meet where sorrow and sighing shall never come. Amen. W. L. BALDWIN.

From the Zanesville Aurora.

[communicated.]

DIED,

On Tuesday morning 23d inst, at five minutes past twelve o'clock, the Rev. JAMES CULBERTSON, senior pastor of the Presbyterian Church of this place. The closing scene of his life was in every respect highly satisfactory. Though speechless for many hours previous to his death, his eye was clearly intelligent, and he gave unequivocal evidence that he knew his friends and family who stood around his bed until a very short time before he expired.—About eight hours previous to his end, his mind appeared to rally with unwonted strength and clearness. Clergymen present embraced the opportunity of repeating some of the scripture promises to him, and then asked him, if these supported him, to signify it by raising his hand, which he did promptly, and at the same time his eye beamed with joy. He was asked, if the gospel which he had preached to others was now his belief and support, and to signify by pressing the hand, which he did promptly and intelligently. He made great effort to speak, but his tongue refused to fufil its office any more, being paralysed together with the right half of his body. In a few hours life gently diminished to a peaceful close without a struggle or the contortion of a single muscle. His end was peace—as a christian minister.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Death of Rev. James Culbertson.—Under the obituary, our readers will notice the death of this eminent and much loved christian citizen, and minister. He cast his lot among the citizens of Zanesville at an early day, and was therefore known generally throughout this and the adjacent counties. He had officiated at the funerals of husbands, wives, brothers, sisters, parents, and children. He had united very many, in matrimony. He had distributed his sound advice, and poured out his fervent prayers at the happy bridal, and in the disconsolate chamber of death. He had been with us and among us for purposes of good, at such times as the great deep of our hearts has been moved. Hence his memory is endeared to all. He now receives his reward;—and may our last end be like his.—Zanesville Aurora.

Cargoes of Food for Ireland.—The new and splendid packet ship Constitution sailed hence yesterday with the following cargo:—Wheat, bushels, 10,000; corn, bushels, 26,000; corn meal, barrels, 2,700; flour, barrels 4000; soda biscuits, boxes, 169; cotton, bales 661; clocks, boxes, 42; beeswax, barrels, 19. The iron steamship Sarah Sands took out the following cargo:—Flour, barrels, 1800; corn, bushels, 4,005; corn meal, barrels 600; cheese, boxes, 461; cotton, bales, 274; bacon, bales, 111; jalap, bales, 20; onion, barrels, 50; potatoes, barrels, 90; rice, tierces, 68; apples, barrels, 50. &c.—N. Y. Sun, 25th.

Free Shipping for the Famishing.—Mr. Lewis, the agent of the Cunard line of steamers, offers to convey in the steamer Cambria, without charge two hundred bbls. of breadstuffs contributed in Boston for the famishing Irish and Scotch.

More arrivals.—The ship Venice, at Boston, from Liverpool, brings 270 steerage passengers 12 of whom died at sea. The ship encountered terrible weather, and shipped a sea which carried away the boat, filled the cabin with water, washed two men overboard, and washed a baby out of its mothers arms into one of the bed cabins, where it was nearly drowned. The passengers, it is said, were in a deplorable condition.

Fall of Idolatry in China.—Dr. Gutzlaff records a remarkable effect of the British invasion of China. The natives expected that their idols would repel the invaders, but seeing them unable to make the least resistance, even to save themselves from the hands of an excited soldiery, veneration gave way to contempt. The idols having proved their worthlessness, the Chinese refused to worship them, and the shrines and the priests were deserted.

Boston, Feb. 24—9 P. M.

Two Powder Mills at Lowell, owned by Messrs Whipples, were blown up last night. One contained 7,500 lbs. and the other 30 kegs. George Reed and Marshall Kinsman were slightly injured. James Lord, West Gardner, was burnt up with his house last evening, 83 Baring Brothers.

Boston, Feb 23d—9 P. M.

Dr. Hitchcock, of Middleboro', Mass, and Mr. O'Kennision, were so severely injured by collision on the Fall River Rail Road, at Randolph depot, that both died this evening. Mr. George H. Haven, conductor Worcester road, was run over by the engine last evening and died to day.

Important News from Europe.—The Rev. Mr. Baird, who returned in the Cambria, states that the King of Persia was about issuing the long expected Constitution, which would be preceded by an edict of law granting free toleration of religion. Dr. Baird reiterates his solemn conviction that great and extensive changes are rapidly approaching in Europe. He apprehends civil convulsions throughout the Continent; but even these he expects will be productive of good, believing that in 'the shaking of the nations' Messiah comes. No man is better able to form intelligent opinions of the course of events in Europe. He has traversed the Continent, held intercourse with the Sovereigns and their ablest Ministers, and enjoys the respect of all.

A Destructive Fire commenced yesterday morning about two o'clock, in the building No. 116 Water street, which was totally consumed, with the adjoining warehouse, No. 298. Both were five story buildings, occupied by Wm. S. Coore for storage of cotton, and contained between 2000 and 3000 bales of cotton, all of which was destroyed. James McCullough, Esq., the owner of the buildings was fully insured.—N. Y. Sun.

A Subscription of over Five Hundred Dollars was raised among the passengers of the Cambria, for the benefit of the suffering poor in Ireland and Scotland. The subscription was set on foot by the Rev. Dr. Baird; General Tom Thumb headed the list with the sum of fifty dollars. The little fellow, before leaving London, presented £100 sterling to the Charitable Fund, for the same benevolent object.

Newspaper Correspondents ought to keep copies of their communications. It is a standing rule in all newspapers offices, never to return communications unless special arrangements are made to the contrary.

Emigration to this country from the different States of Germany, and from Ireland, is going to be immense. We learn that great efforts are making here among domestics to obtain small drafts to send to their relatives, to pay their passage to the New World. It is no uncommon thing for a domestic to send three months' wages to bring over a sister, and when here, both have united to bring over their aged parents, to prevent their being famished by the prevailing scarcity. We are happy that we have an asylum and plenty to keep want from the door.

Accident.—Miss Adelaide Smith was killed at Guelph, Canada West, a short time since by leaping from a sleigh. The horses had been frightened by school boys, and the young lady striking her head on a stone, instantly expired.

Look out.—Those disposed to give some aid to Ireland should be careful into whose hands they pay their donations. The regular committee appointed, for the present, appears to be the proper body to receive contributions.

Freedom of the Press in Bavaria.—The Government of Bavaria, as a mark of special favour to certain faithful editors, has given them permission to receive copies of English, German and French journals, which have been forbidden entrance in to the Kingdom, but under oath not to allow them to go out of their offices for a single moment—not to let any one see them, and return them to the Censors of the Press within twelve hours. What is liberty of the Press worth in Germany? What a contrast with this country.

At Terre Haute, Ia., on the 13th, a portion of the bridge over the Wabash gave way and fell into the river, carrying down with it two men, Messrs Madison and Eastman. The former was rescued but Mr. Eastman, a respectable man of family, was unfortunately drowned.

Most Remarkable Occurrence.—On Monday last, a person at Blackpool, on opening a large cod-fish, found, at one portion of the contents of the stomach, a soda-water bottle, firmly corked, and his curiosity being excited, the weight of the bottle leading him to suppose that it was empty, he drew the cork and perceived a piece of paper which he endeavored to extract; but finding that impossible, he broke the bottle, and found that it had been thrown overboard from the Wisdom, Captain Cobet, on her passage from Sodnay to Liverpool. The document had been written by a Mr. Kenny, a passenger, was dated March 27th, 1845, and stated that they had a very heavy gale of wind three days, the ship had sprung a leak, the pumps were choked, and they had had several of their hands washed overboard and it was to communicate these particulars that he had writen the paper for publication. We think that it is almost the first time that intelligence of the kind has been obtained in so remarkable a manner. We would be glad to be advised of the fact whether the Wisdom outrode the storm. Preston Pilot.

Law Reform.—Why cannot we simplify the language of the law—why not banish its old black letter Vandalism! "Sir, I give you this orange," and I do give it; should not that declaration and transfer be deemed an absolute conveyance? Yet to make it perfectly legal it must run thus:

"I give you all and singular my estate and interests, right, title, claim, and advantage of and in that orange, with the rind, skin, juice, pulp, and pips, to bite, cut, suck, or otherwise eat the same, or give the same away, with or without its rind, skin, juice, pulp, and pips anything heretofore or hereinafter, or in other deed or deeds, instrument, of whatever nature or kind soever, to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding"—with much more of the same effect.

Good News from Delaware.—An act for the GRADUAL ABOLITION of SLAVERY has passed the House of Representatives of that State by a vote of 12 to 8. It is supposed that the bill will also pass the Senate. The FREE States of America will extend a cordial welcome to their sister, who thus breaks the chains of bondage and cleanses the foul stain of Negro Slavery from an escutcheon that no other blot has ever tarnished.

Z. Cour.

A bill to incorporate a company to construct a Railroad from Lexington to Covington, passed the Kentucky House of Representatives on Tuesday by a vote of 37 to 27. It was opposed at great length and with much vehemence, by Mr. Page and others, upon the ground that it would tend to the advantge of Cincinnati. In reply—

Mr. Hanson remarked that if he had been told before he came here, that a proposition to permit the citizens of the State to Construct a great work of improvement under such guards as the Legislature might impose, would be denied on the ground that it would build up a foreign city, he would have replied to that person that they knew little of the liberality of Kentucky. He had supposed that the city was made for the country, not the country for the city.

If Louisville ever became a great city, it would not be by pullingdown Cincinnati. She was not strong enough for that.

The railroad proposed would not terminate in Cincinnati, but in Covington, city of our own State.

Mr. H. illustrated by a map, the position of Lexington, of Bourbon and other counties which would be benefitted by this road. He would never oppose an improvement which would give facilities to the trade of the country, because it would go at last to a foreign city.

He was not in favor for legislating for any city, but for the country, for giving to the country the best markets for the sale of their produce, and the best facilities for getting to that market.

If there is any thing which tends to enrich a State—to replenish her treasury more than any other, it was the advantage of a market. This increases the value of land and of property.

A Dog twenty-seven days without Food!—A gentleman of undoubted veracity informs us that a dog belonging to Mr. M. Clark, of Franklin, Mass., disappeared suddenly and mysteriously on the 22d of Dec. last, and was not heard from until the 17th ult., when he was discovered in an old well, and taken out alive. On the day last named some boys happened to be near the well, and hearing a whine and moan of distress, looked and saw poor Tray, on the fragments of an old curb that had fallen into the well. The curb floated on the surface of the water, supporting the dog, and enabling him to obtain drink. In this cheerless abode and pitiless condition, the dog had remained twenty-seven days, (embracing the coldest weather of the winter,) with nothing to support nature except water. He had gnawed the curb considerably in several places.

We consider this a remarkable case, although we have been assured of naturalists that the dog has been known to live forty days without food, or its substitute. Dogs are enabled to bear hunger a long time on account of having a supply of some substance for the distension of their stomachs—hunger being the effect of the stomach's contraction.—Woonsocket Patriot.

Richard Reynolds of Bristol, England.—The following anecdotes of this extraordinary man are given on the most satisfactory authority:—

During the scarcity of 1795, after relieving the wants of his immediate neighborhood, he sent in a cover to the London Committee, with only these words "To relieve the wants of the poor of the metropolis," and without any signature, the sum of twenty thousand pounds!

Applying to a gentleman whom he thought rich, but who was really only in circumstances of mediocrity, to stimulate him to give liberally, he made use of this argument: "When gold encircles the heart it contracts it to that degree that no good can be issued from it; but when the pure gold of faith gets into the heart, it expands it so that the last drop of life blood will flow into any channel of benevolence."

A lady applied to him on behalf of an orphan. After he had given liberally, she said, "When he is old enough, I will teach him to name and thank his benefactor." "Stop," said the good man; "you mistake: we do not thank the clouds for the rain: teach him to look higher, and thank him who giveth both the cloud and the rain!"

His maxim was; "I am only a steward, and must soon render up my account; therefore I will make my own hands my executors:" yet he laid out £10,000 in estates; the rents to be divided, forever, between seven of the public charities of Bristol, to supply the wants of the poor.

Being importuned by a friend to sit for his portrait, he at length consented.

"How would you like to be painted?"

"Sitting among books."

"Any book in particular?"

"The Bible."

"Open at any part?"

"At the fifth chapter of Romans, the first verse to be legible. Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ."

A Ship of War for Ireland.—The Irish Relief Committee up to yesterday, at noon, had collected between $27,000 $30,000. We understand that they propose to petition Government for a vessel of war to convey the contributions to Ireland, and the Plymouth, now unemployed at Brooklyn, divested of her guns, would be just the thing. We understand from a gentleman who overheard the offer made in the street, that Post Captain U. P. Levy offered to one of the Committee, to command any vessel the Government may lend for this service, giving as a donation his own pay, services and expenses of the voyage, equal to $1,000. Congress ought to do something of this kind, and we move that they meet this liberal offer and grant the Plymouth. Who will second the motion?—N. Y. Sun.

Fatal Accident.—Mr. John Martin was killed on Tuesday at his farm near Newark. He had stored some three hundred bushels of Corn in a loft above his stable and was endeavoring to prop up a beam which threatened to give way, when it broke and precipitated the whole of the contents of the loft upon him. His body was dug from the heap completely lifeless.—Newark Gazette.

Death of Senator Squires.—Senator Squires of Erie and Huron, whose illness prevented him from taking his seat during the session, expired a few days since.—Statesman.

Fire.—The finishing shop of the fork and hoe factory of Buttolph, Sprague & Co., of West Stockholm, was consumed by fire a few evenings since. Estimated loss, $8,000. No insurance.

A Romish Miracle.—When the reformation was spreading in Lithuania, Prince Radzivii was so affected that he went in person to see the Pope, and pay him all possible honors. His Holiness, on this occasion, presented him with a box of precious relics. Having returned home, the report of this invaluable possession was spread; and, at length, some monks entreated permission to try the effects of these on a demoniac who had hitherto resisted every kind exorcism. They were brought into the church with pomp, deposited on the altar, and an innumerable crowd attended. After the usual conjurations, which were unsuccessful, they applied the relics. The demoniac instantly became well. The people cried out, a Miracle! and the Prince, lifing up his eyes and hands to heaven, felt his faith confirmed. In this transport of pious joy, he observed a young gentleman, who was keeper of this rich treasure of relics, to smile, and appear by his motions to ridicule the miracle. The Prince, with violent indignation, took our young keeper of the relics to task; who, on promise of pardon, gave the following secret intelligence concerning them: He stated that, in travelling from Rome, he had lost the box of relics, and not daring to mention it, he had procured a similar one, which he had filled with the small bones of dogs and cats, and other trifles similar to what was lost. He hoped he might be pardoned for smiling, when he found that such a collection of rubbish was idolized with such pomp, and had even the virtue of expelling demons. It was by the assistance of this box that the Prince discovered the gross imposition of the monks and demoniacs; and he afterwards became a zealous Lutheran.—Baptist Memorial.

Employment for Poor Emigrants.—A Farmer residing near Morristown, New Jersey, has hired thirty-five of the able bodied poor Germans who were in the New York Alms House. They were overjoyed to get work. The men receive $6 per month, and the the women $2,50, the farmer agreeing to provide for their children. There are some hundreds more in the Alms House anxious for work on the same terms.

Unless something is done to provide work for the poor daily arriving here, our working people will all be reduced to poverty. During Saturday alone eleven hundred and twenty-six passengers arrived at this port, many of them in distress, and this in winter! We may look for multitudes next summer. Well, we have plenty of land, and if means can only be devised for getting work for them upon the land, the country will be greatly benefitted by this influx of population N. Y. Sun.

Written for the Western Recorder.

On the 25th inst. the Ministers of Zanesville and Putnam, met at the house of Rev. Mr. Smallwood, for the purpose of giving an expression of their feelings on the loss they sustain in the death of the Rev. James Culbertson, late Senior pastor of the Presbyterian church in this place.

At this meeting, the following Ministers were present:

Putnam—Rev. A. Kingsbury, of the Pres. chh.
" " W. I. Fee, of the Meth. E. chh.
" " A. H. Bassett, of the Meth. P. chh.
Zanesville—Rev. Sam'l J. Cox, of the Meth. chh.
" " W. A. Smallwood, of the Ep. chh.
" " G. C. Crum, of the 2d st Meth. chh.
" " J. Miley, of the 7th st. do do.
" " W. C. Hauer, of the Luth. chh.
" " N. N. Wood, Mark st Bapt. chh.
" " J. M. Courtney, of the 1st do do.
" " S. Brown, of the Pres. church.

1st. On motion Rev. Mr. Cox was called to the chair, and Rev. Mr. Courtney Sec'y.

2d. A solemn, and appropriate prayer, was offered by Rev. Mr. Kingsbury.

3rd. Rev. Mr. Smallwood presented the following preamble, and resolutions, which after some interesting remarks, were unanimously adopted.

Whereas, it has pleased the Great Head of the Church, in His wise providence, to remove from the scene of his earthly labors the Rev. James Culbertson, the faithful pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Zanesville during the long period of almost thirty-five years:

And whereas, in our intercourse with him, we have had continual occasion to admire his christian virtues and revere his piety, as now, in his death, we have occasion to feel their loss with an affectionate sorrow.

Therefore, Resolved, that we cherish the remembrance of our departed friend and father, and of the grace, which was in him, with feelings of sincere respect and ardent attachment, and embrace, with a sad pleasure, this opportunity of bearing testimony to his eminent and estimable qualities as a man and a christian, and his devoted and most examplary character as a Minister of Christ.

Resolved, that we offer our heart felt sympathy to the afflicted widow and children of the deceased, assuring them of our prayers for them in the painful circumstances, in which they are now placed, and of our confidence that as God led him, whose death they mourn, all his life long, so will He safely lead them, if they will follow in the steps of their invaluable relative, as he followed Christ.

Resolved, that a copy of these resolutions, signed by the Chairman and Secretary be presented to the bereaved family of our departed brother, as an evidence of our profound regard for him, and of our affectionate interest in those, who of all earthly objects were dearest to him.

Resolved, that the proceedings of this meeting be published.

4th. The meeting was closed with prayer, by the Rev. Mr. Wood. SAMUEL J. COX, Ch'n.
J. M. Courtney, Sec'y.

Written for the Western Recorder.

GRAND MILITARY PARADE.

Dear Editor:—Not long since, through an unlucky circumstance, I had to remain in a small borough in the eastern part of this State, on the ever-memorable 22d of February. It would have made you blush for the honor of our country, had you seen some of the transactions of that day.

I must give you some description of what transpired.

As I understand, a short time before the day came on it was decided by the upper "tens" to have a grand military parade, accompanied with a sumptuous feast at one of the "grog bruising holes" in the place. The morning of the 22d ushered in. A dark, dreary looking morning it was, too. About 9 o'clok I heard the "tap-tap" of the drum, when I looked out to see, what was going to be done. When I looked, what should I see, but a "leetle" boy with a large bass drum hung to him, and an "oscifer" at his side, known by the name of "orderly" (and you ought to have seen the order he manifested) "sergeant," giving the word of command with as much force as Gen. Taylor or Scott would to the army in Mexico. His ranting voice could be heard through the streets exclaiming—'Attention!' 'Music!' 'Wa k straight.' "Keep to the right!" "Turn to the left!" Forward March!" Keep steep!" "March on!" After he had paraded the street (for there was only one in the place of much note,) for some time gathering up his forces, he halted in front of the "hole," to have them inspected by a superior officer, and call the roll. They were duly inspected by the officer, and then ordered to parade through the street.

You must recollect it was intended to be a grand military parade!! And how many "sogers," with their blue-striped coats, striped pants, feathered hats, do you think there were? After counting them several times, I could only make out twenty-four, besides the "oscifers." After they had shown themselves in the street for some time, it was decided that they must have a grand shooting match. And what do you think they shot for? A silver pitcher? No. A gold goblet?—No. What then? Why, whichever two made the best shots, should have their dinners for nothing.

When done shooting they marched up to the "hole," where the feast was ready. I shall say nothing of the feast, for I did not see it, supposing it was good enough. After feasting, some of the soldiers, in the language of the poet,

"To show their modesty and sense,
Often walk'd up to the bar to spend a six-pence."

In the afternoon they marched again, and at 4 o'clock were dismissed in due military form. The soldiers were composed of all sizes and classes of men. From the Christian, (as I believe some of them were,) to the lowest grog bruiser in the country; from beardless boys, to the gray-headed sire; from proud aristocratic fops, to the modest, humble, unassuming citizen. Such mixing of society was intolerable. To conclude the celebration of the day, they had a little "taffy pulling," in the evening.

Mr. Editor, do you not think that the money spent on that occasion, had it been used to relieve the wants of our fellow-men who are starving for bread, and their time spent in some honerable employment, been of much more advantage to themselves and their country? Would to God that men would learn wisdom and stop such "tomfoolery," is the prayer of your correspondent.

I am glad to learn that every person in the village were not soldiers. For in the evening an excellent Temperance address was delivered before a respectable audience, by a worthy divine of the M. E. C., which I hope may have its desired effect. A.

Ohio, Feb. 1847.

Christian Liberality.—There are certain principles laid down in Scripture in relation to giving, and the use of property generally, respecting which there is much practical skepticism.—They are as follows:

1. That which we have we hold as stewards that must give account.

2. The way to increase is to distribute. Some are rich because they are liberal.

3. That which is given to the poor is loaned to the Lord.

4. That which is done to Christ's little ones is done to himself.

A hundred to one is the rate of interest God allows now; and life everlasting in the world to come. Mark x. 29.—Dr. Nevins.

The total receipts of the American Colonization Society during the year 1846, were $39,900.

NOTICES

Rev. W. Hamilton, of Gratiot, will preach at the M. P. Church Zanesville on Sabbath morning next.

Greenville Mission, Ohio District.—Our second quarterly meeting will be held at New Madison, Darke county, commencing, March 27th, to meet the President's visit. We invite Br's. J. Flood, I. Hunt, G. Thornburg, W. Pelan, Wilford Young, J. Q. A. Yonkey. S. P. Kezerta.

Evansville Circuit, P. Con.—The Next Quarterly meeting will commence at the White Oak appointment on the first of May, to which we invite Brs. P. T. Laishley—D. R. Helmick—Jno. Clark, H. Reger,—A. Lister—R. M. Walker—M. Lucas, with all others that can attend. Come over Brethren and help us. And if either of the brethren has Hymn Books or Disciplines, he will find sale for them at our meeting.

A. J. Waren, Supt.

Mahoning Mission.—Br. Clancy, the President, is informed that I wish to be released from my field of labor, on account of the state of my health, which has been very poor for some time, and no prospect of being any better.

Daniel Richardson.

Otsego Circuit.—The second quarterly meeting will be held at Hopewell M. H. 10 miles north east of Zanesville, including the 2d Sabbath, 14th of March. The visit of Br. Clancy, is expected at that time and place.

Buford Ct. O. Dis.—Our second quarterly meeting will be held at Liberty Meeting House, commencing March 13th, 1847. Ministerial aid is solicited.

W. G. Fowler, Supt.

PRESIDENTIAL APPOINTMENTS.

Pittsburgh District.

Should it please God to spare my life, and give health to my family, I will try to fill the following appointments.

Connelsville	Ct.	7th	March
Fayette	"	14th	"
Wheeling	Circuit.	1st	Sunday in April,
Tyler	"	2d	" "
Harrisville	"	3d	" "
Mill Creek	"	4th	" "
Buchanon	"	1st	" in May
Braxton	"	2d	" "
Greenbrier	"	3d	" "
Huntersville	"	4th	" "
Valley	"	5th	" "

Geo. Brown.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Ohio Conference.

Presidential Visitation.

Batavia	March	6	& 7.
Cincinnati	"	13	& 14.
Lebanon Station,	"	17.	Night.
Twin Creek "	"	20	& 21.
Greenville Mission,	"	27	& 28.
Miami Circuit,	April		10.
Lima "	"		17.
Kalida "	"		24.
Maumee Mission,	May		1.
Portage Circuit,	"		8.
Mt. Blanchard "	"		15.
Richwood "	"		22.
Union "	"		29.
Springfield "	June		5.
Miami "	"		12.

I Request the Superindendents, on the above Cts. to give notice through the Western Recorder, where their meetings will be held in their Charges. J. M. Young.

Indiana District.

Mr. Editor: Please state that by divine permission, I will fill the following appointments.

Sugar Creek	"	March	14th
Laughrey	Mission	"	21th
Flat Rock	Circuit	"	28th
White Lick	"	April	11th
Mill Creek	"	"	18th
White River	"	"	25th

Will Br. W. B. Evans inform me by letter or otherwise the place of the appointment on White River Ct. T. Shipp.

Muskingum District.

Br. Bassett: Please insert in the Recorder, the following list of appointments which I will fill, if able so to do.

2nd	Sunday	March	Otsego Circuit.
3rd	"	"	Lancaster "
4th	"	"	Zanesville "
1st	"	April	Newark "
7th	Wednesday	"	Delaware "
2nd	Sunday	"	Frederick "
4th	"	"	Licking "
28th	Wednesday	"	Mt. Zion "
1st	Sunday	May	Coshocton "
2nd	"	"	Pleasant hill "

Geo. Clancy, Pres.

Columbia Ct. Musk. Con.—Our President is informed that his appointment will be at Graham's station, on the Ohio river. We also purpose holding a two days meeting at Athens Bridge, March 20th and 21st. We invite Brs. H. T. Lawson, C. J. Sears, S. Means, W. Sears, J. W. Southard, F. Edwards, and any other brethren who can attend. S. Elliott.

Zanesville Circuit.—The President Br. Clancy will be expected to attend a meeting at Brownsville, on the last Saturday and Sunday in March, as per his appointment.

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT.

LETTERS RECEIVED.

L. D. Johnson, T. S. Johnson, T. Brookover, C. Allen, T. Hornbrook, G. Hughes, Z. Ragan, J. Holland, J. B. Dunn, 1 sub. J. Barnes, J. H. Turner. T. Ellis, J. M. Young, W. L. Baldwin, W. A. Porter, S. P. Kezerta, R. Rose, R. Bamford, J. P. Fay, J. B. Peat. A. Besse.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS.

From	For	Pays to Vol.	No.	$ cts.
J. Barnes, Pa.		8	26	3 00
J. M. Young,	R. Manning,	7	42	1 00
S P. Kezerta,	A. Ross,	8	29	2 00
J. P. Fay,*		7	39	3 00
R. Rose,	M. Fawcett, in full,			3 00
A. Besse.,	J. Rose		6	2 00

*Half this remittance pays Br. Springer, the balance pays us for three-fourths of vol. 7.

New subscribers this week, 4. Discontinuances, 4.

A paper sent to S. Valentine, New Castle, Henry County Ia. has been sent back to us, marked Refused! This subscriber has had our paper for fifteen months, for which we are entitled to the sum of $3,00. We however request our agent in that section, to settle with him at discretion.

Br. J. H. Turner. We have received nothing from Br. P.

Correction,—We see that an error occurred in connection with the last credit given to Br. T. Hansell, Ia. He is indebted to Br. Springer for the 6th volume only, and has paid us for the 7th vol. Br. H. will please excuse this error.

Received for Annual Register.

J. M. Young,	$1 00
W. L. Baldwin,	2 00
W. A. Porter,	1 00
S. P. Kezerta,	1 50
A. Besse, and J. Taylor,	2 00

PROSPECTUS

OF THE LITERARY EMPORIUM.

A COMPENDIUM OF

Religious, Literary and Philosophical Knowledge

In the first place, light literature will find no place in its pages, i. e., love tales, literary trash, &c. Secondly, sectarianism will not be admitted into the Emporium; or, in other words, it will favor no particular sect; but it will advocate the religion of the Bible in the strongest terms, and will urge the necessity not only of a change of heart, but a virtuous and holy life, in order to be truly happy in this world and to be prepared for that which is to come.—In regard to its literary character, it is designed to be of such a nature, as to water the thirsty soul that is studiously endeavoring to acquire a knowledge of man in his past and present condition; also some information in relation to the different sciences and arts, and the variety of the works of nature, with such miscellaneous reading as will invigorate the faculties of the mind, give scope to the imagination, while it shall address itself to the good sense of all who desire to be truly elevated by reading.

Our object in the beginning was to establish a sound literature, which we deem of much importance to the future destiny of this country. We bless God that he has smiled on our efforts: for although the Emporium has been in existence but two years, and has just entered upon the third, it has already attained a circulation of fifteen thousand, which is unequalled in the history of Magazines. It is got up in better style, and contains more reading, and from abler pens, than any other magazine of its price in the United States.

Christian Friend, we hope you will aid us in the extensive circulation and support of a work, which we think calculated to enrich the mind, and inspire the soul to the love of virtue and its Divine Author. The very extensive circulation of light and frothy literature, as it is called, is taking by wholesale, the very life blood of the morality and religion of the youth of our country. Is it not time for Christians to act in this matter?

 Contributors.—The Literary Emporium contains articles, original or selected, from the following, among other distinguished authors:

J. G. Whittier, Seba Smith, R. S. St. John, Mrs. Judson, Rev. J. N. Danforth. Mrs. E. O. Smith, Miss Welby, Mrs. F. H. Green, Mrs. Stewart, Rev. S. Olin, Prof. McClintock, Rev. J. P. Durbin, Elihu Burritt, Wm. C. Bryant, N. P. Willis, S. Galloway, A. M., Washington Irving, Rev. Dr. Bethune, Rev. L. L. Hamline, Rev. E. Thomson, Rev. T. Dick, D. D., Rev H. Winslow, Rev. Wm. B. Sprague, Rev. T. H. Stockton, Rev. Rob't. Lee, Rev. B. F. Tefft, Mrs. L. H. Sigourney, Mrs. E. C. Embury, Miss Sedgwick, Emeline Smith, Eliza Cook, Miss Baker.

The Emporium is published monthly, at $1,00 a year; $5,00 allowed to any person who will obtain fifteen paying subscriber, and at the same rate for a greater or less number. One hundred enterprising and honest Agents wanted for the Emporium and other valuable works. All letters, orders, &c., should be addressed to

J. K. WELLMAN,
Editor and Proprietor, No 116 Nassau-st, N. Y.

GEORGE CONCLIN,
BOOKSELLER AND PUBLISHER,
Stationer, Binder, and
BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURER,
No. 39 Main Street, Cincinnati.

KEEPS on hand Books published by the Methodist Protestant Church—such as
CHURCH HYMN BOOKS,
REVIVAL " "
DISCIPLINES,
EVANS' QUESTIONS & ANSWERS, &c.

Also—Just received—A supply of the Christian World in 3 Vols. with Portraits of the Wesleys, &c., by Rev. Thos. H. Stockton.

For Sale.

PROPERTY IN IRVILLE. BLACKSMITHS, ATTEND.

THE SUBSCRIBER, intending to remove to the west, offers for sale his property in Irville, Muskingum County, O., consisting of three town lots, with a two story frame dwelling house, a good well of water and a pump at the door; a stable, and blacksmith shop, being a very good stand for business, having no competition. A desirable situation for a blacksmith. Irville is situated in the midst of a populous and healthful section of country. The property will be sold low at private sale. Please call soon and see. SAMUEL MOORE.

Irville, Feb. 25, 1847.

MEMORIA TECHNICA:

Or, the Art of Abbreviating those Studies which give the greatest labor to the Memory; including Numbers, Historical Dates, Geography, Astronomy, Gravities, &c.; also Rules for Memorizing Technicalities, Nomenclatures, Proper Names, Prose, Poetry, and Topics in general.—Embracing all the available Rules found in Mnemonics, or Mnemotechny of Ancient and Modern Times. To which is added a Perpetual Almanac for Two Thousand Years of Past Time and Time to Come. Adapted to the use of Schools. By Lorenzo D. Johnson. Second edition, revised and improved.—Boston.

Price—50 cents.

In presenting to the public the "Memoria Technica," which, in some respects, may be said to contain a new theory of instruction, the publishers beg leave to direct attention to some of its peculiarities.

The art of Aiding the Memory, and the deduction of Rules by attention to which it may be made infinitely more available, has been a subject of public interest, and has received the particular attention of a high order of minds in almost every age of the world.

Yet this is the first work of the kind which has ever been prepared in this country for the use of Schools. Whelpley and Worcester in their Compends of Universal History, (for the want of something better,) introduced an abstract of Gray's System of Mnemonics, which like Gourand's, relates only to the memory of figures.

In preparing this work for the press, it has been the object of the author to adapt his illustrations to Common School instruction, and if possible, to lessen some of the difficulties in acquiring useful knowledge, without lessening mental culture. And the hope is cherished that it may be generally adopted as a text-book in schools, by which every teacher of youth may be made a "professor" of all the rules for aiding Memory, that can be made available to a student while acquiring an education.

Should it be asked, does this system really improve the memory? or is it an arrangement by which we lessen the labor of memory? the true answer is, it does both.—In substituting words for numbers, an immense amount of labor is saved to the memory, and consequently of time also. But it will be impossible for the pupil to run through the System in the several sciences to which it is applied, without giving vigorous exercise and additional strength to the power of recollection.

"I mention," says the author, "as illustrative facts, that by this new art, I once committed to memory in a single morning, the whole of the propositions contained in the first three books of Euclid, and with such perfection, that I could for years afterwards specify the number of the book on hearing the proposition named, and could recite the proposition on hearing the number and the book; and I have frequently, in mixed companies, repeated backwards and forwards from fifty to an hundred unconnected words, which have been but once called over to me. I may also add, to prove the simplicity of the plan, that I taught two of my own children to repeat fifty unconnected words in a first lessen of not more than half an hour's continuance."

The work is not intended to take the place of any school book now in use, nor is the system calculated to supercede any study now pursued in schools, but introduced as an auxiliary to them all; for aside from its application to numbers, an acquaintance with the theory of prompter cannot fail to aid the learner in the pursuit of every branch of useful knowledge.

The work contains a vast number of facts so classified and arranged, as to render it as a book of reference, merely, richly worth its cost.

We expect to have a supply of the above work, forwarded to us for sale, in Putnam, at 50 cents per copy. when we find there is demand for them.

PROSPECTUS OF THE

OHIO CULTIVATOR,

Vol. III—For 1847.

A semi-monthly Journal, devoted to the promotion of Agriculture, Horticulture & Domestic Industry.

PUBLISHED AT COLUMBUS, OHIO,

By M. B. Bateham, Editor and Proprietor,

Assisted by the contributions of a very large number of practical and scientific writers,—farmers, horticulturists, &c.

Illustrated with numerous Engravings.

TERMS—OneDollar per year—Four Copies for Three Dollars: payments invariably in advance.

THE OHIO CULTIVATOR has now become so well known to the farmers and friends of agriculture in Ohio, that it is unnecessary to say any thing of its character or design. Grateful for the encouragement he has thus far received, the editor and proprietor takes this occasion to inform his friends and patrons, that he is determined to put forth new efforts in their service, and make his paper for the coming year still more deserving of their continued liberal patronage. Besides improvement in the matter for its columns, the mechanical appearance of the paper will be improved by the use of new type, and more illustrations. It will contain the latest and most reliable intelligence respecting the crops and the markets, both in this country, and in Europe, so as to aid the farmer in deciding at what time and price to dispose of his productions. This information alone will be worth, to most farmers, many times the price of subscription, especially now that prices are so much effected by foreign intelligence. In addition to all this, the editor believes that his increased experience and knowledge of the agricultural condition of the State, together with his extended correspondence, will enable him to make each succeeding volume of the Cultivator more valuable than the one that preceded it.

The influence of the paper, wherever it has been generally read, is admitted to have been highly salutary. It has began to awaken a spirit of inquiry and improvement among the farmers, and inspire them with more just and elevated conceptions of the character, duties and pleasures of their noble occupation. As evicence of this it may be stated, that during the past year, Agricultural Societies have been organized in twenty counties of this State; and there is reason to believe that as many more will be formed during the year to come. These associations, in connection with the State Board of Agriculture, and the Cultivator as an organ for the diffusion of intelligence, cannot fail to exert such an influence on the minds and the practice of the farming community, as will in a few years place our young Giant State in that position which she is by Nature designed to occupy—the first State of the Union in agricultural wealth and lasting prosperity.

Farmers of Ohio! Who among you are willing to have no part in this onward march of improvement? Who among you are willing to deprive yourselves and your families of that 'knowledge which is power,' and the great means of progress and elevation, for the sake of the small pittance which that knowledge may cost? And who of you that desire to see this work advance, will not make an effort to arouse your neighbors from the mental torpor that rests upon too many of them? The work is not difficult—pursuade them to read papers devoted to their interests—send on their names, with your own, as subscribers to the Ohio Cultivator, and you may rely upon it they will soon begin to awake—to inquire and think—and not only become better farmers, but more intelligent and agreeable neighbors.

Address, M. B. BATEHAM,
Columbus, Ohio.

NEW FIRM.

A. A. GUTHRIE, C. BUCKINGHAM and G. N. GUTHRIE announce that they have formed a partnership for the transaction of Mercantile business under the firm of

GUTHRIE, BUCKINGHAM & CO.

They respectfully invite their friends and the public generally, to the old stand of A. A. GUTHRIE & Co., (recently GUTHRIE'S & LARGE,) where it is their purpose to keep a large assortment of the cheapest and best goods in the market.

Putnam, O. January 1, 1847.

POETRY.

The Snow.

BY B. J. LEDON.

The snow! the snow! the beautiful snow,
How gossamer like its fall,
As it lights around, on the whitened ground,
The school boy's shout with its ringing sound,
Is answering clear to his playmate's call,
And his cheek hath a ruddier glow.

It has drifted here! it has drifted there!
And the darkened and muddy street,
Is covered beneath the feathery wreath
Which it lightly flings from its frosty breath,
And the flying balls from the horses' feet
Are dancing in the air.

Huzza for the snow! huzza! huzza!
And the sleighs glide swiftly by,
Whose merry bells, in music tell,
Of the laughing voice and the heart that swells
With the moving glee, and the glancing eye
Like starlight flash as they pass away.

It snows! it snows! and the flakes are they fall,
Hath entered the broken pane;
It hath covered the floor of the shivering poor
As it sweeps thro' the cracks of the gaping door,
And leaves on the earth its glittering train
That speaks of its wintry call.

Why falleth it here on the creaking floor,
In a track so pearly white?
It doth mock their woe, where no embers glow,
And no voice of mirth doth poverty know,
When it falls like a withering blight
In the cheerless homes of the poor.

The hoary guest—no joy he brings
To the pale and shivering form,
Who in terror wild hath grasped her child,
As she sees the drifts on the hearthstone piled,
That shrinking from the storm,
More closely to her clings.

The piercing wind—how it blows
Through her garments so tattered and thin;
And the wrinkles of care are furrowed there,
Where it lifts from her brow the dark matted hair,
But her heart is more cheerless within.
God help the poor, when it snows.

Educational.

GOV. SLADE'S COLUMBUS ADDRESS.

This address was delivered to a large audience assembled in Dr. Hoge's church at Columbus, last week. The address occupied nearly two hours in the delivery, and the Reporter begs the reader to make due allowance for the hydraulic pressure required to reduce it so as to bring it within the columns of a daily paper. It has, however, been carefully prepared, and presents the essential features of the address.

Governor Slade said, the object of the movement with which he was connected is the education of the masses—the true and legitimate end of all efforts at education. The higher literary institutions do not accomplish their just purpose until they reach this result—the proper education of the people and the whole people. At this the present movement directly aims—dispensing its benefits in the spirit of Him whose sun shines and whose rain descends with indiscriminate bounty upon all.

He would now present some facts in regard to the educational wants of the country, brought to light mainly by the returns accompanying the last census. The patient's case must be understood before the remedy can be applied.

According to those returns, there were, in 1840, 550,000 white persons in the United States who could not read and write—now, probably, increased to more than 600,000.—Of this number there were at the North, (that is, north of Delaware, Maryland, the Ohio river, and Missouri,) 207,000 in a population of 9,650,000; and at the South, 343,000 in a free population of 4,680,000. At the west—that is west of the Allegheny mountains, 268,000 in a free population of 5,243,000; and at the East of that line, 282,000 in a free population of 8,918,000. In particular portions of the country, both East and West, the proportion was still greater. For example, in Virginia there were 330,069 white persons over 20 years of age, of whom 58,032 could not read and write—one in six. In North Carolina there were 209,685 white persons over 20, of whom 56,609 could not read and write—one in three and two-thirds. In Illinois, 198,413 whites over 20, of whom 27,502 could not read and write—about one in seven. In Indiana, 268,049 whites over 20, of whom 38,100 could not read and write—one in seven. In some of the counties in the latter State, the proportion was still greater.

Take the following for example.

	Whites over 20.	Could not read and write.
Jackson	3411	1412
Martin	1376	620
Clay	2006	738
Dubois	1459	532
Owen	3014	793
Parke	5178	1314
Montgomery	5510	1058
	21954	6467

Average, a little less than one-third

Gov. S. then glanced at the probable number who will be found at the census of 1850 unable to read and write—augmented as it will be by that portion of the uneducated between the ages of 10 and 20, in 1840, who shall survive until that time. The number between these ages in Indiana and Illinois, for example, was 271,034; and it is fearful to consider how great a portion of that number will probably be added to the 65,602 in those States who were unable to read and write in 1840.

And this, said Gov. S., brings me to consider the condition of the children of the country in regard to the privileges of instruction in 1840. The returns accompanying the census show that there were in primary and common schools 1,845,244; while the whole number between the ages of 5 and 15 was 3,727,080—leaving one million eight hundred eighty-one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six, (at this time probably two millions,) without the benefit of schools. About one-third of this number was in the States of Pennsylvania, Virginia, and North Carolina, and six-tenths in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky, and Tennessee. In Indiana and Illinois the number of children between 5 and 15 was 832,030, while there were in primary and common schools, but 83,065. In Kentucky,* number between 5 and 15, 166,752; number in schools, 24,641.

Gov. S. then spoke of the bearing of these facts upon the Nation's destiny. Six hundred thousand adults unable to read and write!—How many of them are voters—unable to read a word of the Constitution of their country, or the Bible, the great charter of our liberties, or even the votes they deposit in the ballot box, and by which they control the destiny of the nation.

And then, the children! Two millions without schools, and one million one hundred and fifty thousand of them in the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois Kentucky and Tennessee, constituting the heart of this great valley, which is soon to give laws to this nation! Where, said Gov. S., will these children be fifteen years hence? Those who shall survive, will have passed to manhood and womanhood—between 20 and 35. What kind of men and women, and fathers and mothers they shall be, depends on the mental and moral training we now give them. They are committed to fathers and mothers and guardians to train for Church and State—for the pulpit, the senate chamber, the field, the workshop, the counting house, and the ballot box. What a fearful responsibility! How rapidly they are passing beyond the reach of instruction. What we do must be done quickly.

And then what an influence is to be sent forward, through them, upon the teeming millions of the next century. In the language of another, —"The fathers and mothers, and preachers and schoolmasters who are to mould that generation, are now in our arms, and what we make them, they will make the millions of the next century."

And, continued Gov. S., behold the population of our country at the end of the present century. At the past rate of increase, (one third in ten years,) it will amount to 95,000,000. And what portion of those millions will probably be in this valley, may be conjectured, from the past increase of its population and the unparalleled productiveness of its soil —At the beginning of this century, it contained but 560,000. At the end of forty years, it had increased to 6,375,000, and now probably contains more than 8,000,000. Its increase from 1830 to 1840 was 74 per cent.; that portion of it north of the Ohio river and the State of Arkansas, increased during the same time 85 per cent., while the increase of Indiana and Illinois was 132 per cent. What imagination can set bounds to the tide of population which is to roll over this almost illimitable valley? Take your stand at the mouth of the Missouri, and look north, south, east and west, over a territory extending two thousand five hundred miles form the source to the mouth of the Mississippi, and three thousand five hundred from the Allegheny to the Rocky mountains, (to say nothing of the slope to the Pacific ocean,) and think of the teeming millions that are to be spread over its ample surface, and then think of the responsibilities which your relation to them imposes on you.

But there is an element entering into the rapidly augmenting population of this valley which gives to it almost fearful interests. It is the population rushing into it from foreign lands. I have no sympathy, said Gov. S., with those who would exclude any portion of the human race from coming among us. Let us open our arms, and receive them as brethren—recognising the hand of Providence in sending them from countries where they have felt the crushing weight of oppression, to this "land of the free," where their labor may reap its just reward, and their minds feel the expanding and ennobling influence of civil and religious freedom. Let us consider that God is throwing upon us the high responsibility of receiving these his children, and giving them the intellectual and religious training which shall fit them and their children to become a constituent portion of a christian republic. This responsibility is pressing upon us with a constantly accumulating weight.—We cannot avoid it. Let us meet it cheerfully and promptly, in the spirit of christian benevolence and republican liberality.

The considerations thus suggested, Gov. S. said, had produced the movement with which he was connected. It commenced a year ago in the organization of the "Central Committee for promoting national education," consisting of six gentlemen at, and near Cincinnati, of different religious denominations, from whom he had received an invitation to act as an agent to aid in accomplishing the purpose of their organization. That purpose is to ascertain the educational wants of the country, and supply them through the agency, mainly, of female teachers. The rapid increase of the West, and its great importance, suggest that the inquiry should be first made in this direction. The want of well qualified teachers, which is felt everywhere, is felt especially in the newer settlements. The tide of emigration should carry teachers with it; but it does not, to an extent equalling the demand. Special efforts are therefore necessary; and they should, obviously, be made through organizations formed in those portions of the country most needing their aid. Hence this Western organization. It is in contemplation to re-organize a board, under the name of "The Board of National Popular Education," and to increase the number of its members. Its centralization, he said, would be in Ohio—a position favorable to the accomplishment of the purpose of ascertaining the wants of the West, and inspiring confidence in the arrangements which shall be made for supplying them. That supply would at present necessarily be drawn principally from the older portions of the country, and consists, mostly, of female teachers, of whom it is well known there are many well qualified and ready to devote themselves to the self-denying service.

The following educational statistics show at once the abundance of female teachers, at the East, and the economy of employing them. From the last report of the Secretary of the Massachusetts Board of Education it appears that, of the teachers employed in that State during the last year, there were 2,585 males and 4,997 females; and that the average monthly wages, including boarding, was, of the former $31:76 and of the latter 13:15.—In the city of Boston, the number of male teachers was 120 and of female teachers 404.

In Providence, R. I., the number of male teachers is 11—of female 66.

In Connecticut—male teachers 1198, female 1515. Wages per month of the former, exclusive of board, $15:42, of the latter $6:86.

In Ohio, according to the last report of the Secretary of State it appears that male teachers predominate, in the proportion of 3224 to 2095.

These Eastern statistics show, besides the abundance of female teachers and the economy of their employment, the high estimate placed upon their services. Nor is that estimate erroneous. Woman is the natural teacher of children. Who, like her, can mould the tender and susceptible mind, and especially give it moral, or I would say the religious training, which is an indispensible part of of a sound education. I say religious, because religion brings the soul into the presence of the Creator and Judge, and under the direct influence of motives which constitute the only solid ground of a pure morality. The teachings of the Bible must constitute a part of all our systems of Education. The conscience and heart must be trained as well as the intellect. The attempt to carry out the process of a complete education without it, is as unphilosophical as it is irreligious.

The training of children is woman's high destiny—her great mission. And what a mission! What a responsiblity! To form the future man! Into what department of society does not this influence enter—silent and gentle, yet all pervading and all powerful!—What is the power of law—the strong arm of the civil magistrate compared with it? The silent and invisible power that conscience exerts upon the mass of a well educated community, is far greater than all the terrors which the law can inspire!

Gov. S. then proceeded to speak of the arrangments which would be made to select good teachers, & send them to the places where their services may be needed, and arrangements shall have been made for their reception and support. He said that teachers, from the primary to the highest departments of female teaching, would be provided; and dwelt, at some length, upon the importance of the female Seminaries which it was intended to establish for the purpose of preparing teachers, from among the Women of the West, for the education of its children.

And this brings me, said Gov. S., to a very important point. It is the increased interest for educational improvement in this section of the country, which these efforts will awaken. And what efforts will the West put forth when it is awakened to the importance of this great subject—as it surely soon will be! The School Funds of the Western States, especially of those North West of the Ohio, will when brought in connexion with well matured systems of educational reform, give a mighty impulse to the cause of education in this portion of the country. Such systems are now the great desideratum here. They may be summed up in two words—Supervision and Responsibility. Their fruits will be:

A better knowledge of the educational wants of the community;

An awakened general interest in the matter of education;

A more just appreciation of its true nature, scope and objects;

A demand for better teachers;

And a supply of that demand.

My own State, said Gov. S., has adopted a system which promises to work a thorough reform, and make her money and efforts available to the purpose of securing good teachers, and greatly improved modes of government and instruction. The leading agencies in that system are State, County and Town Superintendents. The County Superintendents are, under the instructions of the State Superintendents, besides examining teachers, actively engaged in visiting schools, consulting with teachers, addressing assemblies of parents and children, and exciting that general interest among all classes of the community, in the common schools, which is the only sure guaranty of their real improvement. Among the first fruits of the new system, are Teachers' Associations for improvement, which possess an inappreciable value. The system went into operation under the superintendency of the Lieutenant Governor, who, upon his late election to the office of Governer, received the higher and crowning honor of an appointment to the office of State Superintendent of Common Schools.

The result of such systems of common school improvement will be, that teaching is to become a respectable and honored profession, as it every where should be, for what more important employment than to give direction, at a period of their greatest susceptibility, to the intellect and conscience and heart of a responsible and immortal being?

How few young men leave college to become permanent teachers. With what eagerness do they push for the learned professions, especially that of the law, as the high road to wealth and honor—the all engrossing pursuits of the masses of men. But the time must come when the profession of teaching, in any of its departments, shall take rank with what are now called the learned professions, and become a passport to any honor. Then shall there be a nearer approximation to the period, when ambition to do good shall take the place of ambition for political distinction, which now distracts and perverts so many minds. —When will young men come to feel that this is the only distinction worthy their aspirations? Would that this great subject of popular education could take a hold of their minds and hearts proportioned to its vast importance—that they would court the true honor of thus becoming the real benefactors of their race, rather than the empty honor of mere political distinction, and the short-lived pleasure of mere party triumphs. The time is coming when the nation shall be shaken with this great question, and the true and proper education, physical, moral and intellectual, of ALL THE PEOPLE, shall come to be regarded as indispensable and vital to the preservation and perpetuity of our free institutions.

*The reporter would add to this the following extract from the late Annual Message of Gov. Owsley to the Kentucky Legislature.

"Kentucky spent last year about seven thousand dollars on common schools. Our schools are languishing and the whole State murmur at the inefficiency of the system. No comment on these facts is necessary."

DEATH-BED OF PAINE--1809.

From a letter of Bishop Fenwick, of Boston, originally published in the U. S. Catholic Magazine.

A short time before Paine died, I was sent for by him. He was prompted to this by a poor Catholic woman, who went to see him in his sickness; and who told him among other things, that, in his wretched condition, if any body could do him good it would be a Roman Catholic priest. This woman was an American convert (formerly a Shaking Quakeress) whom I had received into the church but a few weeks before. She was the bearer of the message to me from Paine. I stated this circumstance to F. Kohlmann, at breakfast, and requested him to accompany me. After some solicitation on my part, he agreed to do so, at which I was greatly rejoiced, because I was at the time quite young and inexperienced in the ministry, and was glad to have his assistance, as I knew from the great reputation of Paine, that I should have to do with one of the most impious as well as the most infamous of men.

We shortly after set out for the house, at Greenwich, where Paine lodged, and on our way agreed upon a mode of proceeding with him.

We arrived at the house, a decent looking elderly woman (probably his house-keeper) came to the door, and inquired whether we were the Catholic priests; "for," said she, "Mr. Paine has been so much annoyed of late by ministers of other different denominations calling upon him, that he has left express orders with me to admit no one to-day but the clergymen of the Catholic church." Upon assuring her that we were catholic clergymen, she opened the door, and showed us into the parlor. She then left the room, and shortly after returned to inform us that Paine was asleep, and at the same time expresed a wish that we would not disturb him "for," said she, "he is always in a bad humor when roused out of his sleep; 'tis better to wait a little till he be awake." We accordingly sat down, and resolved to await the more favorable moment. "Gentlemen," said the lady, after having taken her seat also, "I really wish you may succeed with Mr. Paine, for he is laboring under great distress of mind ever since he was informed by his physicians that he cannot possibly live, and must shortly die. He sent to you to-day because he was told that if any one could do him good you might. Possibly he may think that you know of some remedy which his physicians are ignorant of. He is truly to be pitied. His cries when, he is left alone are heart-rending. "O Lord help me!" he will exclaim during his paroxysms of distress; "God help me! —Jesus Christ help me!" repeating the same expressions without any, the least variation, in a tone of voice that would alarm the house. Sometimes he will say, "O God! what have I done to suffer so much?" Then shortly after—"But there is no God!" And again, a little after, "Yet if there should be, what will become of me hereafter!"—Thus he will continue for some time, when on a sudden he will scream as if in terror and agony, and call out for me by name. On one of these occasions, which are very frequent, I went to him and inquired what he wanted. "Stay with me," he replied, "for God's sake, for I cannot bear to be left alone." I then observed that I could not always be with him, as I had much to attend to in the house. "Then," said he, "send even a child to stay with me for it is a hell to be alone." I never saw, she continued, a more unhappy, a more forsaken man—it seems he cannot reconcile himself to die."

Such was the conversation of the woman who had received us, and who probably had been employed to nurse and take care of him during his illness. She was a Protestant, yet seemed very desirous that we should afford him some relief in his state of abandonment, bordering on complete despair. Having remained thus some time in the parlor, we at length heard a noise in the adjoining room, across the passage way, which induced us to believe that Mr. Paine who was sick in that room had awoke. We accordingly proposed to proceed thither, which was assented to by the woman, and she opened the door for us. On entering we found him just getting out of his slumber A more wretched being in appearance I never before beheld. He was lying in a bed sufficiently decent of itself, but at present besmeared with filth; his look was that of a man greatly tortured in mind; his eyes haggard, his countenance forbidding; & his whole appearance that of one whose better days had been but one continued scene of debauch. His only nourishment at this time, as we were informed, was nothing more than milk punch. in which he indulged to the full extent of his weak state. He had partaken undoubtedly but very recently of it, as the sides and corners of his mouth exhibited very unequivocal traces of it, as well as of blood, which had also flowed in the track, and left its mark on the pillow. His face, to a certain extent, had also been besmeared with it. The head of his bed was against the side of the room through which the door opened. F. Kohlmann having entered first, took a seat on the side, near the foot of his bed. I took my seat on the same side, near the head. Thus, in the posture in which Paine lay, his eyes could bear on F. Kohlmann, but not on me easily, without turning his head.

As soon as we had seated ourselves, F. Kohlmann, in a very mild tone of voice, informed him that we were Catholic priests, and were come, on his invitation to see him. Paine made no reply. After a short pause, F. Kohlmann proceeded thus, addressing himself to Paine in the French language, thinking that, as Paine had been to France, he was probably acquainted with that language, (which was not the fact) and might understand better what he said, as he had at that time a greater facility, and could express his thoughts better in it than in her English.

Mons. Paine, j'ai lu votre livre intitule, L'Age de la Raison, ou vous avez attaque l'ceriture sainte avec une violence, sans bornes, et d'autres de vos ecrits publies en France; et je suis persuade que" —Paine here interrupted him abruptly, and in a sharp tone of voice, ordered him to speak English, thus: "Speak English, man speak English." F. Kohlmann, without showing the least embarrassment, resumed his discourse, and expressed himself nearly as follows, after his interruption, in English:—"Mr. Paine, I have read your book entitled the Age of Reason, as well as all your other writings against the Christian religion, and am at a loss to imagine how a man of your good sense could have employed his talents in attempting to undermine what, to say nothing of its divine establishment, the wisdom of ages has deemed most conducive to the happiness of man. The Christian religion, sir———"

"That's enough, sir, that's enough," said Paine again interrupting him; "I see what you would be about; I wish to hear no more from you, sir. My mind is made up on that subject. I look upon the whole of the Christian scheme to be a tissue of absurdities and lies, and Jesus Christ to be nothing more than a cunning knave and an impostor."

F. Kohlmann here attempted to speak again, when Paine, with a lowering countenance, ordered him instantly to be silent, and trouble him no more. "I have told you already that I wish to hear nothing more from you."

"The Bible, sir," said F. Kohlmann, still attempting to speak, "is a sacred and divine book, wich has stood the test and criticisms of abler pens than yours; pens which have made at least some show of argument and———"

"Your Bible," returned Paine, "contains nothing but fables; yes fables; and I have proved it to a demonstration."

All this time I looked on the monster with pity mingled with indignation at his blasphemies. I felt a degree of horror at thinking that, in a very short time, he would be cited to appear before the tribunal of his God, whom he so shockingly blasphemed, with all his sins upon him. Seeing that F. Kohlmann had completely failed in making any impression upon him, and that Paine would listen to nothing that came from him, nor would even suffer him to speak, I finally concluded to try what effect I might have. I accordingly commenced with observing:—"Mr. Paine, you will certainly allow that there exists a God, and that this God cannot be indifferent to the conduct and actions of his creatures. "I will allow nothing, sir," he hastily replied; "I shall make no concessions." "Well, sir, if you will listen calmly for one moment," said I, "I will prove to you that there is such a being; and I will demonstrate from His very nature that He cannot be an idle spectator of our conduct." "Sir I wish to hear nothing you have to say; I see your object gentlemen, is to trouble me; I wish you to leave the room."—This he spoke in an exceedingly angry tone, so much so that he foamed at the mouth. "Mr. Paine," I continued, "I assure you our object in coming hither was purely to do you good. We had no other motive. We had been given to understand that you wished to see us, and we are come accordingly; because it is a principal with us never to refuse our services to a dying man asking for them. But for this we should not have come, for we never obtrude upon any individual.

Paine, on hearing this seemed to relax a little; in a milder tone of voice than any he had hitherto used, he replied: "You can do me no good now —it is too late. I have tried different physicians, and their remedies have all failed. I have nothing now to expect (this he spoke with a sigh) but a speedy dissolution. My physicians, have, indeed told me as much." 'You have misunderstood me," said I immediately to him. "We are not come to prescribe any remedies for your bodily complaints; we only come to make you an offer of our ministry for the good of your immortal soul, which is in great danger of being forever cast off by the Almighty, on account of your sins; and especially for the crime of having villified and rejected His Word, and uttered blasphemies against His Son." Paine, on hearing this was roused into a fury; he gritted his teeth, twisted and turned himself several times in his bed, uttering all the while the bitterest imprecations. I firmly believe such was the rage in which he was at this time, that, if he had had a pistol, he would have shot one of us; for he conducted himself more like a mad man than a rational creature. "Begone," says he, "and trouble me no more. I was in peace he continued, "till you came." "We know better than that," replied F. Kohlmann; "we know that you cannot be in peace—there can be no peace for the wicked. God has said it." "Away with you, and your God too; leave the room instantly," he exclaimed: "all that you have uttered are lies—filthy lies; and if I had a little more time I would prove it, as I did your impostor, Jesus Christ." "Monster," exclaimed F. Kohlmann in a burst of zeal, "you will have no more time. Your hour is arrived. Think rather on the awful account you have already to render, and implore pardon of God, provoke no longer his indignation upon your head." Paine here ordered us again to retire, in the highest pitch of his voice, and seemed a very maniac with rage and madness. "Let us go," said I, to F. Kohlmann; "we have nothing more to do here. He seems to be entirely abandoned by God, further words are lost upon him."

Upon this we both withdrew from the room and left the unfortunate man to his thoughts. I never before or since, beheld a more hardened wretch.

This, you may rely upon it, is a faithful and correct account of the transaction. I remain your affectionate brother.

(Signed) †BENEDICT,
Bishop of Boston.

WELLMAN'S ILLUSTRATED BOTANY.
VOL. II., 1847.

EDITED BY J. D. COMSTOCK, M. D.

Author of Botany, Natural Philosphy, Chemistry, Mineralogy, Geology, Natural History, Phyliology, etc., assisted BY J. C COMSMOCK, ESQ.

THE success of the Illustrated Botany is no longer an experiment, for altho' it has been in existence but one year, it already has a circulation of about five thousand, a sufficient number to warrant its support, which cannot be said of any other work of the kind. Indeed, it is the only work of this character published in this country, which promises stability and a long life. We think the prospects of the second year of the Botany are very flattering. One reason for this opinion is, the fact that it is now very popular, having a large circle of friends. Another very important reason is, the securing of an Editor for the coming year, whose popularity as an author in the various branches of Natural Science, is so extensive as to leave his name familiar to every student in the sciences in this country. We are fully satisfied that the Botany will, under its present Editors, bear the severest criticism, and we intend that it shall become the standard work.

In the course of its publication, it will contain an Introduction to the Natural System of Botany, a thorough Treatise on the interesting and important branch of Vegetable Physiology, Notices on Fossil Botany, and descriptions, both scientific and popular, of numerous species of plants, the properties of which, medicinal and useful, will be fully explained. In short it is intended to present a complete view of the latest and most important facts, discoveries, and theories, in every department of the science.

The whole illustrated by splendid colored engravings, taken from Nature, full size, and finished the highest style of modern art.

This work is designed to be eminently popular in its application, and there is enough of that which is stranger than fiction about it to render it, in no ordinary degree, interesting and instructive.

We do not intend to confine ourselves to the botanical descriptions of each plant, but to make it a thoroughly scientific work, in all the departments of Botany. It will also give information on the cultivation of plants and flowers. In a word, it will comprise the whole science.

TERMS.

This work will be published monthly, with from six to ten flowers, handsomely painted, in each number. Price, $3,00 a year, or two copies sent to one address for $5,00.

☞ A very liberal discount allowed to Agents.

J. K. WELLMAN, Publisher and Proprietor,
Febuary 13, 1847. No. 116 Nassau-st.

Horse Stolen.—$20 Reward.

REV. J. I. STILLIANS, requests us to state that on the night of Jan. 19th a large dapple gray horse, 16½ hands high was taken out of his stable on Hacker's Creek, Lewis Co. Va. Said horse is 6 or 7 years old this spring, a little crease fallen, with a white mark 5 or 6 inches long on one of his shoulders, caused by the collar a wind gall on the out side of his left hind leg, near the pastern joint, a horse of good carriage. Any person finding him, and returning him to the owner, or where he can get him will receive the above reward.

Something New.

JUST PUBLISHED

By GEORGE CONCLIN, 39 Main st. Cincinnati,

A NEW HISTORY OF TEXAS.

INCLUDING an account of the late WAR WITH MEXICO, together with other interesting matter relating to that country. This history is published in pamphlet form, 12 mo., containing 152 pages and will be sold cheap.

ALSO—A NEW HISTORY OF OREGON AND CALIFORNIA, (BY LANSFORD HASTINGS) containing a minute description of the different routes to those countries—a description of the soil, products of the soil, Towns, Bays, Harbors, Rivers, Lakes, manners and customs of the inhabitants, &c. &c.

JACOB THORN,

WHOLESALE dealer in all kinds of NOTIONS, No. 91, Wilson's Row, the first store below the Court House, is now opening a new and complete assortment of

NOTIONS AND DRY GOODS,

which will be sold wholesale, at prices a little below what they have ever been sold in this place.—Country Merchants and Pedlars, visiting the city are respectfully invited to examine my stock before purchasing elsewhere, among which may be found the following articles:—

800 Packs American solid head Pins.
200,000 Drilled Ey'd Needles, Sharps and Betweens.
2000 Doz Spool Thread.
500 Lbs. Patent do.
800 do. Cotton do.
3000 Doz. Side Combs.
600 do. Fine Ivory do.
500 do. Dressing do.
100 do. Woolen Comforters.
100 Brass Clocks.
1500 Prints (Engravings,) high col'd.
100 Doz. Chapman Strops.
5000 Almanacks.
300 Shawls, different patterns.
100 Gross Knting Pins.
4 Bbls. Blacking.
30 Doz. slates.
50 Gt. Gro. Agate Shirt Buttons
500 Coils Bonnet Wire
50 Gross Boot Laces.
500 do. Hooks and Eyes on Cards
100 do. Wood Combs.
200 do. Sherred and G. E. Suspenders
12 Boxes Fire Crackers
12 Doz. Looking-Glasses.
100 Gross Pearl Shirt Buttons.
6 Bales Brown Muslin.
200 Doz. Mitts.

Combs of every description, Buttons, Penknives, Razors, Table and Tea Spoons, Tapes, Eyeletts, Jewsharps, Pencils, Shaving Boxes, Gloves, Ladies cotton Hose, Matches, Dress Handkfs., Laces and Edgings, Spectacles, Thimbles, Beads, Candle Wicking, Night caps, Primers, Calicoes, bleached Muslins, Wafers, &c.

WANTED in exchange for goods at wholesale prices, Feathers, Beeswax, Ginsang, Rags and Hogs Bristles tied up in small bunches, for which will be given twenty-five cents a pound for all that can be brought in good order

Zanesville, O. Nov. 7, 1846.

COME AND SEE!!

THE SUBSCSIBERS offer very low for CASH, STONE WARE or COUNTRY PRODUCE,

35 pieces assorted Cloths, very low,
20 " Jeans,
300 " Prints, cheaper than ever,
100 " Merinos, Alpaccas, De Laines, &c.,
50 " Tweeds and Cassinets,
25 " Flannels,
22 " Check.

Boots, Shoes, Queensware, Groceries, and a great variety of goods not mentioned.

In a word, they have on hand a LARGE STOCK of goods, which they

WISH TO SELL.

To sell them, they must be sold CHEAP, this they will do. J. C. GUTHRIE & SONS, successors to
GUTHRIE'S & BUCKINGHAM.

P.S. We will say to Potters engage not your ware before calling on us. We are dealing EXTENSIVELY in that article, and are determined to buy it on such terms as will prove satisfactory. J. C. G. & S's.

Putnam, O. Jan. 1, 1847.

SACRED MELODEON.

WE have received from the publishers, 50 copies of this excellent collection of Spiritual Songs, compiled by Brs. Joel Dalbey and J. B. Peat of the Ohio Conference, and lately published at Cincinnati. For sale at the office of the Western Recorder, by the dozen or single.

PROSPECTUS OF THE

LITERARY ATHENÆUM

A NEW AND SPLENDID MONTHLY MAGAZINE,

TO BE EDITED BY THE

Rev. Henry D. Moore, of Philadelphia,—and Rev. Andrew A. Lipscomb, Professor of English Literature & Belle Letters, in the city of Baltimore.

ON the first of January, 1847, the subscribers intend issuing the first number of a spendid Monthly Magazine, to be called the "LITERARY ATHENÆUM," to be devoted to the interest and circulation of a mind-refining, soul-inspiring, spirit-stirring literature; such a literature, in a word, as the progressive taste of society seems to demand.

Between the magazines of the day, which are devoted most exclusively to the circulation of Christian Literature, and those devoted to the light, and in too many instances, tasteless and corrupting literature—there is a wide and deep chasm, to fill which successfully and properly, very few attempts have been made. To supply the void, to some extent at least, is the intention of the subscribers, in issuing the "Literary Athenæum."

The general cast and character of the contents of the proposed magazine will be fixed according to the standard of the most sterling intellect, and the most liberal appreciation of the wants of the common mind. Its pages will ever present a feast and a glow, to feed and illumine the loftiest and purest taste and spirit of the admirers and lovers of refining and exalting literary walks and researches.

To secure this grand design, effectually and honorably, no pains or expenses will be spared.

The contents will be purely original; consisting of Lectures, Addresses, Essays, &c., on the most popular and exciting literary and scientific subjects, from the most able writers that can be secured—interspersed and relieved by beautiful poetic composition.

Science, Art, and government, in their almost infinite variety development and interest, will be liberay and honorably discussed in its pages.

Arrangements are in progress for an extensive and important European correspondence, which will be a feature of great interest in its varied connections.

In addition to such articles, there will be presented occasional tales of unexceptionable character and style, differing essentially from the weakish romances which fill the pages of the many magazines of the day. Writers in this connection, can be secured, whose productions are the embodiment of life, true to itself,—and which will kindle and glow with the loftiest and purest sentiment, and thrill with the beauties of morality and religion in their loveliest forms.

Each number of the Athenæum will contain four engraved bellishments of the first artistical merit, One of them will be a portrait of some distinguished personage in this country or in Europe, accompanied with an interesting biographical sketch. Another will be a view of the building and grounds, of some one of the popular Universities, in this or the old world, accompanied with a historical, biographical and statisical sketch in this body of the work. The portraits will be fine mezzotint, and the college views beautiful line engravings. Then will follow richly colored specimens of flowers and fruit; in connection with which, there will also be presented interesting notices, floral and botanical—of climate, habits, culture, &c. &c. of which cannot but secure interest and favor.

Each number will comprise sixty pages of letter-press, double column, beautifully stereotyped, and printed on fine white paper; the whole corresponding in all respects with the character of the other departments of the work.

Such is to be the character of the work at its commencement. If it is successful, as it ought to be, and as is hoped and believed it will be,—improvement will be made as fast as possible in the different departments, as they are suggested in the progress of the work.

The subscribers take pleasure in announcing to the public, that they have concluded arrangements with the Rev. Henry D. Moore, of Philadelphia, and Rev. Andrew A Lipscomb, Professor of English Literature and Belle Letters, of Baltimore, who will co-operate as Editors of the new Magazine. Under the management of those gentlemen, the subscribers flatter themselves, abundant success will be secured in behalf of the enterprise.

TO PUBLISHERS.

The subscribers would also give notice to Publishers, at home and abroad, that there will be in connection with the work, an extensive review department. This will be made a feature of excelling interest. The department will be conducted fairly and honorably, and all works sent to the office of the subscribers, will receive such notices as the character may demand.

The first number will be issued on the first of January 1847. Its contents and the name of contributors, will be published shortly.

TERMS—Three dollars per annum, in advance.

Editors of papers, copying this Prospectus, and sending a paper with it, to the office of the "Athenæum," shall receive the numbers of the work, and the thanks of the publishers.

All letters, containing orders for the work, post-paid, and enclosing the subscription price, will receive prompt attention. To be addressed to

F. C. WILSON & Co.

Philadelphia, Pa.

THE WEEKLY
CHRISTIAN WORLD;

An Independent, Comprehensive, and Impartial Newspaper designed for welcome and useful circulation; Among Friends of Christian Union, Christian Benevolence, and Christian Literature. To be published every Saturday At the Reading-Room of the Christian Atheneum, over the Book-store of Mr. James Harmstead, Fourth St., between Market and Arch Sts., Philadelphia;

Price:—Two Dollars a-year invariably in advance.

T. H. STOCKTON,
J. G. WILSON,
THEOPHILUS STORK. } Editors.

W. S. STOCKTON,—General Agent.

TO persons who are acquainted with the character and objects of the CHRISTIAN WORLD, as they have been developed during the last six years, it is only necessary to say, that as soon as one thousand paying subscribers are secured, the paper will be put to press. The Old Subscription List ought to supply this number at once.

To other persons, it is proper to remark, that the Christian World, in print, is intended to reflect the Christian World, in action—in a word, daguerreotype it: and thereby for purposes of common advantage, to compare the organized and operature Religion of the Age with the Religion of the Bible.

The enlarged literary and business agencies of the Establishment, are deemed amply sufficient to assure the public of successful management. Its immediate connexion with the CHRISTIAN ATHENEUM—an Institution which is to be furnished with many of the principal organs of Church and State, both in Europe and America, will give its conductors early access to invaluable sources of universal intelligence.

DIRECTIONS.

1. On receipt of this Prospectus, let the Old subscribers at every Post-office, appoint one of their number, or some other suitable person, an Agent. Let him send us, at once as many names and as much money as possible. In cases where substantial agents make themselves responsible for their subscribers, this responsibility will be regarded as equivalent to payment in advance—provided they set their accounts within six months. Even in such cases, however, immediate payments are decidedly preferable, and, to encourage them, the commissions to agents are arranged thus:—On cash orders, 25 per cent.: on deferred remittances, 12½ per cent.

2. As the Prospectus will be widely distributed, let persons who see it, and feel an interest in it, act promptly in the manner described above. It is thought that a little effort will be sufficient to procure a company, or club at almost any Post-office in the Union. The times increasingly demand just such a publication as is proposed.

Address,—W. S. STOCKTON, General Agent, Philadelphia, Pa.: or either of the Associate Editors. All orders will be punctually attended to.

T. H. STOCKTON,
Editor and Proprietor.

Philadelphia, December, 1846.

M. P. DISCIPLINES—NEW EDITION.

WE have on hand a supply, lately received from the Book Agent, Baltimore, which we will be pleased to furnish to brethren of surrounding Circuits, at wholesale or retail prices. For sale at the office of this paper.

DISSOLUTION.

THE partnership of GUTHRIES & LARGE is this day dissolved by mutual consent. All matters pertaining to the closing up of the business will be transacted at the old stand.

A. A. GUTHRIE
W. P. LARGE.
GEO. N. GUTHRIE

Putnam, O. January 1, 1847.

JAMES K. LOGAN,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

FOREIGN & DOMESTIC DRY GOODS

No. 83 Wood St., (One door from Diamond Alley,)
Pittsburgh, Pa.

THE WESTERN RECORDER.

VOL. VIII---NO. 23. PUTNAM, MUSKINGUM COUNTY, OHIO, MARCH 11, 1847. WHOLE NO. 387.

The Western Recorder,

Is Published every Thursday,

AT PUTNAM, OPPOSITE ZANESVILLE, OHIO.

OFFICE ON MAIN STREET.

A. H. BASSETT, Editor and Proprietor.

REVERDY H. WHITE, PRINTER.

TERMS.—Two Dollars per annum, in advance. Two fifty at the close of the year. Payments within three months will be considered in advance.

All letters and communications must be addressed, to the Editor, post paid, except such as contain funds, and directed to Putnam Muskingum Co. Ohio.

Itinerant Ministers and others, who collect from subscribers and remit to us as much as ten dollars within the year, shall receive a copy of the paper free.

Itinerant ministers and preachers, not acting as agents, can have the paper at one dollar.

Clubs of ten or more, paying at the time of subscribing, shall have the paper for $15, i. e. one dollar fifty, each.

Western Sketches.

Written for the Western Recorder.

REMINISCENCES

OF THE FIRST SETTLEMENT OF OHIO.

NO. IV.

Friend Bassett:—

I am not able to fix the exact date, or, perhaps, the order, in which the events which I wish to relate occurred. I have heard from those who were actors in these occurrences, the facts related; but I was too young, and the distance of time too long, for me to fix the exact date of all. In consequence of the hostilities of the Indians, which I have related, the settlers had to be gathered into the different stockades, or garrisons, and more vigilant measures taken to secure themselves against the hostilities of their active enemies. I well remember that in our fort, only one room was allowed to a family, unless where there was no fire-place in it to cook in. My father moved from a house outside the fort, but near it, in which he had lived nearly two years, to a chamber in General Tupper's house. More settlers had arrived, and others moved back from out stations; some who were prominent men have not been mentioned by name. Colonel R. J. Meigs, senior, who had marched with Arnold through the wilderness to Quebec, when Montgomery besieged that place, and received a sword from Congress, for his gallantry, was one. Commodore Abraham Whipple, who fired the first gun in the Revolution, under the authority of the State of Rhode Island, and, was said to be one of the men concerned in heaving the tea into the harbor of Boston, and took the first vessel built at Marietta, round to an eastern port, was another. Amongst those in our stockade during the war, I remember, two Colonel Olneys, Major Ezra Putnam, Colonel Robert Oliver, Major Hatfield White, and his son Pelitioh; John Dodge, (the four last returned from Wolf creek mills,) Joseph Wood, Charles Green, Gilbert Devol, junior, Thomas Lord, R. J. Meigs, junior, Ebenezer Nye, Joshua Shipman, J. Russel, Thomas Slocum, a Mr. Flag, Picket Marvin, Andrew Lake, and a brother of his, Joseph; David and Thomas Wells, Richard and Henry Macon, Eben and Thomas Cory, a Mr. Hammond, with Captain Rogers and Edward Henderson, our spies. In General Tupper's family, there were his sons, Anselm, Edward W., and Benjamin; a year later Gen. Rufus Putnam's family, with his sons, Wm. Rufus, Edwin, and son-in-law, Christopher Burlingame. General Benjamin Tupper died of fever, in the fall of 1791, I think it was, and left his family to the care of his widow and elder sons. Joseph Fletcher was in the first part of the war, and several others not now recollected. Every man had to do military duty in some capacity; bastions were erected at each corner of the fort, in one of which a six-pound cannon was mounted; two rows of pickets, twelve feet high, surrounded the fort; loop-holes for guns were cut in every house; the door and window shutters were made bullet proof on the outside. A well seventy-two feet deep was in the centre of the fort. A guard was constantly on duty, and four sentinels were kept in the bastions during the night, who, every half hour, called the time; and beginning at the guard-house, the sentinel sang out, "Look out sharp," and was answerd by the others, "All's well." This served to keep them vigilant, and advise the officer if any were asleep, or neglected their duty. Each fort had a cannon, and each two spies, whose duty it was to examine the woods around the fort, each day, to detect Indians, or signs of Indians, in its vicinity. Labor out of the fort was performed in parties, one part keeping guard, while the other worked; while each kept his arms ready for instant use. Horses were stolen, cattle killed, &c., but for some time no other lives were lost. The dogs were every night turned out of the fort, to give notice of approaching danger. Fixed ammunition was kept constantly on hand,—and pikes were prepared to resist an assault. Every precaution was taken to prevent surprise; and the military experience of so many officers of the revolution, and the courage and experience of the men, now were of great advantage, as well as the experience of those men who had been brought up on the frontier, and accustomed to Indian warfare. It seemed almost impossible for Indians to take our fort, without the aid of either fire or famine. The spring of '91 came very early. Peach trees were in blossom in Feb. After the vegitation had made considerable progress, our spies, Rogers and Henderson, had one day made their round, as usual, for some miles from the fort, and having discovered no signs of Indians, when passing around the end of a hill about a mile from the fort, near the Muskingum, and talking, (contrary to their usual custom,) were fired upon by Indians from the hill, between them and the fort. Rogers was shot through the heart, and instantly killed. As he fell he said, "I am a dead man." Henderson sprang to a tree, which the bullets hit as soon as he reached it. He reserved his fire, and kept the Indians at bay. After a little reflection he determined to try and escape. He sprang from one tree to another, directly from home, until he had somewhat increased the distance between himself and the Indians, when he cut his blanket from his shoulder where it had been secured, and run. He was a tall, athletic man, and could not be easily outrun; having run about half a mile, he took up the point of a hill, where a foot-path led to the fort. Here he discovered an Indian making a fire. He could easily have killed him, but this would have given notice to his pursuers of his whereabouts. Again turning from home he took a circuitous route in the direction of the Ohio, and coming to another path, which led through a gap in a hill, he cast his eyes in the direction, and saw 3 Indians watching for him there. Again turning from his direct course, he ran to Duck creek, following it to the Ohio, and the Ohio to the fort at the point; having run about six or seven miles, and reached our fort about nine o'clock at night. The next day a party went out and brought in the body of Captain Rogers. I saw it; it was not disfigured, except that the scalp was taken. His loss was much regretted. Hambleton Kerr, (or Carr,) was engaged to supply his place. Mr. Carr's father and family, with old Mr. Warth, and family, and Peter Neiswanger, (a spy,) had, for some years, lived on the island opposite Duck creek, before the settlement of Marietta, but moved to the forts at the commencement of the war. The island was known as Carr's island. Soon after Rogers was killed, an attack was made upon Waterford.—There had been a Stockbridge Indian there, by the name of John Miller. Before the war an Indian, called George Whiteeyes, who had been educated at one of the Eastern Colleges, came to the fort, and persuaded John to accompany him to the Indian villages. When the war began, and the Delawares and Wyandottes had taken the Big-Bottom block-house, he found it difficult to get away.—When they were organizing the expedition against Waterford and Duck creek, he wished to go with it, pretending to be a great warrior. After they reached the Muskingum, John contrived to stick a hatchet in his foot, and became too lame to travel. In this condition they left him, with ammunition and other property. As soon as they were out of reach, John destroyed what ammunition he did not want, made his way to Duncan's Fall, constructed a raft, and reached Waterford before the party; warning them, he continued on to Marietta. The Indians made the attack early in the morning, by shooting cattle, probably with a view of drawing the men out of the garrison. One of the Sprague was out feeding some cows; they shot at and wounded him, in the hip, but he reached the fort. McCulloe, one of the spies ran out to secure the retreat of any that might be out, and seeing a man with a cappeau on, such as the spies wore, of the same colored cloth, took him to be his companion, McGaffey, and was approaching him very rapidly, when something induced suspicion, and he halted. The Indian cried out, in good English, "Come on, my good fellow, you shall not be hurt." McCulloe saw at once his mistake, and replied, "Oh! * * * * * * I know you too well;" and made his way back into the gate. The settlers got part of their cattle into the fort, but a large portion of them were killed or driven off. The family of our citizen, Colonel D. Converse, lost a yoke of oxen and two cows, then of very high importance, in securing a subsistence, and hard to be replaced. Mr. Converse saved a favorite heifer that stood near the gate, by sallying out, seizing her by the tail, and with a big stick, guiding her rapidly in at the gate. In so high estimation was that kind of property at that time, that much risk would be run to secure it. Several others lost oxen and cows, much to their subsequent privation. Each man had his post assigned him by the commander, Captain Gray, and each stood his ground manfully. McGoffey had been an officer in the revolution, and had commanded the advanced guard at the battle of German Flats. Others had seen much service. Old Judge Devol had a very long barrelled ducking gun, and sat very patiently at his port hole, watching the Indians, as they were collecting the cattle; shooting them, &c., to provoke the garrison to sally out.—He saw an Indian at a very long shot, and without saying any thing, watched until he got a good aim, and let him have the contents of his gun; saying, "There, I think you have it now." The Indian was desperately wounded, and they soon after retreated, taking the cattle they had collected. D Converse was one of the defenders, and from him I received these particulars. Sprague recovered of his wound, and the Indians finding the garrisons on the alert, returned to their residences. Waterford stockade was on the east side of the river. A little above it, on the west side, was a block-house, and some other defences, called Tyler's station. Hambleton Carr's father had a field of corn, above the mouth of Duck creek. Some time this summer he went to the mouth of the creek in his canoe; just as the he landed the Indians shot him and he fell into the canoe. One of the Warths and another man were coming down the river, on the Virginia side of the Island, and hearing the gun, landed, and ran across the island,—saw the Indians going from the canoe with the scalp, while their victim was still struggling. Hambleton Carr never forgave the Indians the death of his father. He was the most inveterate enemy they had with us: Before the close of the war he killed several Indians. He and Henderson survived the war.—Carr settled at the mouth of Leading creek, and was much respected, though he could neither read or write. Brought up on our frontier, he was accustomed to Indians and the chase. Straight as a reed, he was one of the best specimens of humanity, in his person, I ever saw. Henderson settled at Belpre, and took the first boat load of the produce of Ohio to New Orleans, that ever went there.—They had then to go round by sea to an eastern port and return over land to Ohio. On his second trip, while in the harbor of New York, he took, by mistake, some medicine which killed him. His death was a loss to the country. He was a native of Massachusetts, Worcester county.

HORACE NYE.

Putnam, O., March 6th, 1846.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Sketches in the Western Woods.

NO. IV.

After spending two days traversing the woods in the vicinity of Deer creek and Pipe creek, returned to our wagons, and attaching the teams belonging to both wagons to one,—made our way through mud and brush to within two miles of my claim. Put up for the night with a worthy member of the M. E. Church.—Next morning found the ground covered with snow, which rendered travelling very disagreeable. The snow adhering to the bushes and bending them over the road.

However, by perseverance and the aid of the axe, we surmounted every difficulty, and about 10 o'clock, A. M., safely arrived at the desired cabin.

Pipe creek is a considerable creek, rising in the vicinity of Marion, Grant county, and running nearly a western direction, it empties into the Wabash near Logansport. About three miles from its mouth, it pours over a perpendicular rock twelve feet in height forming one of the best mill seats in all this region. At this place a grist and saw mill are in operation. And 9 miles farther up the creek, in our neighborhood, Mr. Finnimore has a saw mill in operation and intends building a grist mill.

Along Pipe creek, as far as I have been, the land is rolling and dry. Timber—beach, sugar, poplar, walnut, buckeye, hickory, ash, &c. The soil immediately in the vicinity of the creek, is somewhat sandy and very rich. Farther back the sand is mixed a good deal with clay. The ground more level. The timber more lofty and of kinds better suited for fencing, building, &c. beach and sugar being, in general, not so plenty. As a specimen of the Timberology of the reserve I give the following dimensions of trees measured by myself, viz: A white oak nearly twenty-one feet in circumference, a sugar maple thirteen feet, a Walnut about 18 feet. A moose or leather wood shrub 7 inches, a spice wood—the same. A poplar between two and three feet in diameter, was cut on the claim south of mine, and seven logs 12 feet long cut off it leaving 4 or five feet to the first limb.

The Pipe creek country possesses one material advantage over the rest of the Reserve—viz. Its proximity to the canal, which will always be a good market. Another advantage to the new settlers is that it is but a small distance to old settlements where provisions of every kind can be had on reasonable terms.—The Mississineway River is but about 3½ or 4 miles from where I live, and the country along this River having been settled some 7 or 8 years, abounds with all kinds of produce; on this River also there are several mills; for it is one of the best mill streams in Northern Indiana.

In general, in the settlement of new countries, the settler is for a while deprived of religious privileges, for most new countries being at a distance from old settlements it is some time before ministers of the different denominations penetrate through the wilderness to carry the word of life to these "Backwoodsmen."

Not so however with the settlers on the Reserve; for being surrounded on all sides by old settlements, as soon as there are a dozen to assemble together, the ministers are there ready to impart the word of God to all who are disposed to hear.

As for schools I will just say, that the Township in which I reside embracing a considerable portion of country which has been settled several years, is all laid off into school districts, excepting a strip about 2 miles wide on the southern end. The school section, lying a quarter of a mile south of the Mississineway river, is all sold at the average price of $2½ per acre, and the interest of this money is appropriated to the support of schools in the organized districts. Besides this there are some funds coming from other sources. The unorganized portion of the Township will, no doubt, be formed into Districts very soon.

The religious denominations, who have organized societies and regular preaching in this part of the Reserve, are as follows: 1st, Episcopal Methodist, who have a three weeks' circuit embracing the country south of the Mississineway and between Wabash on one side and Deer creek on the other, extending southwest within 5 miles of Logansport; 2nd, Baptists, who have regular monthly meetings on Pipe creek 4 miles from where I live: 3d, United Brethren, who have a mission embracing a considerable portion of the Reserve. (They appear to be blessed with an encouraging degree of prosperity) and 4th, Christians, or New Lights, who have a church at Kokamo, and a small society in our neighborhood. As for Methodist Protestants I know of no organized society nearer than a few miles south of Kokamo. I have been keeping up regular appointments at several points—have found a few who were formerly Meth. Prot. and have good congregations and fair prospects of success.

S. W. Widney.

Miami County, Ia. Feb. 3d 1847.

Ministers' Department.

From the Christian Watchman.

HOW TO PREACH TO ERRORISTS.

Mr. Editor: Through the columns of your valuable paper, I wish to make a few remarks, in regard to ministers' preaching. I do not wish to dictate to a minister, as to what he shall, or shall not say, while he is urging his hearers to seek an interest in the Saviour; but I simply wish to state, that in my opinion, there is much said by some ministers of all evangelical denominations, that has an injurious influence, upon that class of people who call themselves Universalists. I am not opposed to their preaching against their doctrine in all suitable ways; but when we wish to reclaim an individual from the error of his ways, it is not the part of good policy, to go to that individual, and begin by calling him hard names, and heaping upon him all the sins of the whole community in which he may live, or in other words, to tell him that all the sins of the community are nothing but the results of his unholy influence and wickedness. Better by far to go to him and take him by the hand, and tell him candidly, that you believe he is in a fatal error, and by using kind words, you will engage his attention, and unless he has a heart as hard as adamant, he will begin to look within himself and inquire, if these things are so.

Now I have sometimes thought, that, if some ministers (and good men, I have no doubt,) would take a little different course of reasoning, in their zeal to call up the mind of their hearers to the importance of religion, and instead of denouncing the Universalists and calling them infidels, and all the hard names their ingenuity can invent,—if instead of this, they would preach Christ and him crucified, and point their hearers to Him who died that we might live.—instead of calling their attention to the falsity of this, that, or any other doctrines of the day, and tell them that he requires repentance toward God, and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. This I think would have a better tendency to call their attention to the importance of a preparation to meet their God in peace. It is a lamentable fact, that most people cling to the Universalist doctrine, unless they have experienced the love of Christ in their hearts, and when the minister calls them infidels and the like, it tends to shut the door of their hearts to all the reasons and proofs they can bring in support of the necessity of a preparation to meet death.

I have been induced to make these remarks, not from any desire to dictate what a minister shall say, or, how he shall preach, but with a view to call the attention to the importance of using proper means, to call up the attention of this class of society to the importance of seeking an interest in the Saviour while here in this life. I will simply add my own testimony to the facts I have stated. I was formerly a staunch Universalist, and whenever I heard a minister get up and denounce the Universalists as infidels, and the like, it made no more impression upon my mind than the passing wind;—but on the other hand, when I heard them preach Christ and him crucified, and his love to fallen man, and the necessity of repentance, I felt the still small voice whispering in my heart, this is the way, walk ye in it.

D. B. W.

Pulpit Ingenuity.—A popular preacher, at the close of a sermon soliciting contributions for a certain object added the following short address: 'From the sympathy I have witnessed in your countenances, and the strict attention you have honored me with, there is one thing I am afraid of, that some of you may be inclined to give too much. Now it is my duty to inform you, that justice, though not so pleasant, should always be a prior virtue to generosity; therefore, as you will all be waited upon in your respective pews, I wish to have it distinctly understood, that no person will think of putting any thing into that plate who cannot pay his debts." This produced an overflowing collection.

SUCCESSFUL MINISTERS.

"The old ministers," said Mr. Williams of Wern, "were not much better preachers than we are, and in many respects they were inferior to us; but there was an unction about their ministry, and a success attendant upon it, that can now be but seldom seen. And what is the cause of the difference? They prayed more than we do. If we would prevail and "have power with men," we must first prevail and "have power with God." It was on his knees that Jacob became a 'prince;' and if we would become princes, we must be oftener and more importunate on our knees." He was very fond of relating the following anecdote respecting the late Rev. J. Griffith, of Cærnavron:—"Mr. Griffith was to preach one night in a farm-house, and he desired permission to retire to a private room before the service began. He remained there a considerable time after the congregation had assembled. As there was no sign of the preacher making his appearance, the good man of the house sent the servant to request him to come, as the people had been for some time waiting. On approaching the door, she heard what she supposed to be a conversation carried on by two persons in rather a subdued tone of voice. She stood listening at the door, and heard one say to the other, 'I will not go unless thou come with me.' The girl returned to her master and said, 'There is some one with Mr. Griffith, and he tells him that he will not come unless the other accompany him. I did not hear the other make any reply, so I conclude he will not come from there to-night.' 'Yes, yes, he will,' said the master; 'and I'll warrant the other will come with him, if matters are as you have represented them. We shall begin the service by singing and reading till the two come.' At length Mr. Griffith came, and the 'other' with him, and they had an extraordinary meeting that night. It proved the commencement of a powerful revival in the neighborhood, and many were converted to God. 'Nothing, brethren,' Mr. Williams would say, by way of applying the anecdote, 'is necessary to render our ministry as efficient and successful as that of our fathers, but that we should be brought to the same spirit and frame of mind.'"—London Bap. Magazine.

Youth's Department.

THE DISINTERESTED BOY.

It was just at night. The sun had set, and the curtains of night were fast hanging themselves over hill-top and valley, the lonely wood and the busy village. While the night winds were beginning to sweep through the trees, lights were here and there peeping through the windows to tell that though the wind was cold and blustering without, there might be peace and comfort within.

At this hour Mr. Bradley passed through a little village among the hills of New Hampshire, and urging his horse forward as the night became darker, took his way through the main road towards the next town, where he intended to pass the night. As he passed the village he thought he heard some one call, but supposing it might be some one shouting to his fellow, he thought little of it. He heard the call again and again, and at last, on hearing it repeated several times in succession, it occurred to him that some one might wish to speak to him, and he slackened the pace of his horse, and looked behind the chaise to see if he could discover who was calling.

"Stop, sir, stop," said a little boy who was running with all his might to overtake him.

Mr. Bradley stopped his horse, and a little boy of eight or ten years came up, the blood almost ready to burst from his face, and panting at every breath.

"Well, my little fellow what do you wish for?" said Mr. Bradley.

"You are losing your trunk, sir," answered the boy, as soon as he could speak.

"And so you have run all this way to tell me of it, have you, my good boy?"

"Yes, sir."

Mr. Bradley jumped out of his chaise, and saw that his trunk, which was strapped underneath his carriage, was unfastened at one end so that a sudden jolt might have loosened it altogether, and he would have lost it without knowing where it had gone.

"You are very kind, my little lad," said the gentleman, "to take all this trouble; you have saved me from losing my trunk, and I feel much obliged to you."

"You are welcome, answered the boy.

"And now are you tall enough to hold my horse while I fasten the trunk as it should be?" said Mr. Bradley.

Oh yes, sir," said the boy, stepping up and taking hold of the bridle. He held the horse till Mr. Bradley was ready to start, and then "good night, sir," and was stepping away.

"Stop a moment," said Mr. Bradley, taking a twenty-five cent piece from his pocket, "here is a piece of money to pay you for your trouble, and I feel very grateful to you beside."

"No sir," said the boy, drawing himself up erect, and casting his eye full in the gentleman's face, "Do you think I would take money for such a thing as that?"

"Ah," said Mr. Bradley, as he related the story to me, "I saw by his noble look, that he had run from half to three quarters of a mile for the sake of doing a kindness to a stranger, and not for the hope of pay; and I could not find in my heart to urge him to take money, for I knew that the thought of doing good was a greater reward to him than money could have been. So I bade him "Good night," and he ran toward home, while I gave the whip to my horse, and again rode briskly on; but I often think of that journey in New Hampshire, and the noble-hearted boy who lived among the hills."—Mothers' Journal.

Change of Ecclesiastical Relation.—Rev. Adrian Aten, late a member of the Chilicothe Presbytery, has united with the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church, on account of a change of his views on the subject of Psalmody and his dissatisfaction with the action of the Presbyterian General Assembly on Slavery.

SKETCH OF THOMAS DICK, L. L. D.

Who has not heard of the name and fame of Dr. Thomas Dick? Some thirty years ago, Chalmers, with his own peculiar power, brought forward science as a handmaid of religion, and by his "Astronomical Discourses" emblazoned on the firmament the loving kindness of a Savior. Soon after, and with a kindred spirit, "The Christian Philosopher" took the high place, where he is still found; an instructor—an enlightener; and year after year from that period to this, large volumes and condensed pamphlets have emanated from the same rich sources of sanctified knowledge and benevolent feeling.

Broughty Ferry, in which place Dr. Dick resides, is an old and beautiful romantic village, on the Frith of Tay, just where this estuary becomes a noble bay, emptying its briny waters into the German ocean. Situated on the north coast; in the country of Angus, the inhabitants have a commanding view of Fifeshire and the several pretty little towns skirting that county, which is separated here from its sister shire, by some three miles of placid, and sometimes stormy water.—To the west, and six miles off, is Dundee, with its 'Law' and its ancient and modern towers and steeples; and far up the lovely winding Tay, even to the highlands of Perthshire, is a picture vieing in beauty with any upon which the eye can rest.

This town or village seems to be chiefly a resort for bathers in the summer season, while its proximity to Dundee makes it a convenient and pleasant residence at all seasons, and it is the home of many a hardy fisherman. The dark ruin of a castle stands conspicuously on a rising ground, looking to the sea and seems like a ghost of the olden time, gazing, solitary and melancholy, over the glancing waters, heeding not the din of modern ways and doings, as announced every half hour by the horrid railroad whistle.

It was sometime in September of last year that I first found myself on that railroad; and in less than ten minutes from my leaving Dundee, my eye was directed to a neat dwelling with an observatory, situated on an elevation to the left, as the residence of Dr. Dick. I sat silent beside my kind relatives, my thoughts wandering from the past to the present, as I drew rapidly near.

We alighted from the cars, and wended our way up the hill; and soon stopped at the door of a garden in which is the house of the "philosopher." I must confess that I felt some timidity as I rang the bell; I feared that I might be intruding; and so, when the servant said the Doctor was not at home, neither was his lady, I was, for the moment, not sorry. Mrs. M. (Dr. D.'s sister) was within, and presently a mild chastened countenance made us welcome, and invited us to enter. We did so with pleasure, and after some agreeable conversation, in which Mrs. M. told us that her brother was always hapy to see strangers, especially those from the United States, she took us to the Doctor's study and to the observatory, and treated us with a frank kindness not to be forgotten. Here I saw two or three sweet little girls, the dependent orphan grand-children of Dr. Dick, and with them I was soon on intimate terms. Leaving my card and letters, I bade farewell, resolving to call again; and in the meantime gathering some hawthorn leaves to place in my book of herbal memorials.

The next day I went to the valley of Strathmore, visited Glammis castle,, and spent the night not far thence, undisturbed either by the ghost of Macbeth or the witches.

On the morrow I returned to Dundee, and what should I find on my table but a polite, kind note from Dr. Dick, inviting me to take tea with his family that evening at an early hour. Much gratified, I was en route to the Ferry by the five o'clock train.

I would not, if I could, talk much of that delightful evening; I hate the gossiping retail of fireside conversation. The humble, unaffected kindness of the venerable man; the perfect freedom from all pretensions to greatness; the ease, the familiarity, all made me feel at once as if I were in the society of a dear Christian friend whom I had known for years; and the hour of departure came ere I knew that the evening had well begun. Of the United States he spoke with freedom, respect, and kindness, and seemed far from averse, even at his advanced years, to pay a trans-Atlantic visit. A septuagenarian—he is active in mind and body as a man of fifty. His lectures which are yet frequent, are, I am told, deeply interesting. I wish inducements might be held out for him to visit America, with his amiable son.

Dr. Dick is a minister in the Independent Church, the same denomination of which Wardlaw, and Raffles, and Russell are mininters.—Plainness marks the dwelling of this good man, and this, with his appearance, gives weight to much that he has written, and bespeaks the philosopher according to the true meaning of that abused name.

Of Dr. Dick's appearance it is needless to speak. The likeness attached to a very beautiful and cheap edition of his whole works by the Messrs. Biddle, of Philadelphia, is excellent. I saw the original painting over the Doctor's mantel-piece. The plate, however, in my copy, is too dark. It gives the idea of black eyes and raven hair; now the Doctor wears a brown wig; and if I mistake not, his eyes are blue. There is a sweet, subdued expression in the whole countenance, and had it not been for one little circumstance, I would have seen the Doctor again and again, (as I was kindly invited to do,) I had supposed that excitement had long bid farewell to those features, and the calm unclosed sunshine of piety alone gave brightness now. But the lightening is still there.

On the day to which I allude, the polite old gentleman escorted us down the hill from his house to the office whence we take our rail-car seats.—Here we were detained, and meeting several acquaintances also waiting, general conversation ensued. The subject of the discomfort, in some places, of the third class railway trains occupied attention, and the wrongs of the poor soon brought forth burning words, and tones of deepest feeling, which roused me to look again into that countenance. The warmth of heart, which erewhile showed itself only in the amiable attentions of Christian and gentlemanly courtsey, now kindled with just indignation, and gave us a nearer view of the source of that benevolence which has done so much to fan the latent sparks of love for their fellow men in the hearts of others.—Cor. N. O. Observer.

An immense Train.—Since Boston tapped our Western trade by her rail road to the Hudson, we have heard of great business transactions on that route. A train recently passed over the Albany and Boston rail road, which numbered 122 cars, of an average length of 30 feet, making 3,700 feet, and all drawn by one powerful engine.

A Sailor's Prayer Meeting.

The following, from the Sailor's Magazine, is truly interesting, and at the same time instructive to one who reflects on the wide influence which may be exerted by pious seamen:—

Sometimes these meetings have an interest peculiarly their own. The place imparts interest. It is the Sailor's Home, and so unlike the haunts of dissipation and vice to which he has formerly resorted. The persons impart interest. Here the Swedes, Danes, and Norwegians; the dwellers in England, America, and Germany; the French and Finns, strangers of Rome, Jews and proselytes, Chinese and Sandwich Islanders, speak in their own tongues, the wonderful works of God. Such was the meeting on the second evening of the present year, belonging to at least eight nations, to take a part.

After singing, prayer, and reading a portion of the Scriptures by the superintendent, a German sailor arose, and said, he "tank'd Got, his heavenly Fadder, for dis meeting. It did his soul goot to meet his brudder sailors once more." He was followed by a Finnish sailor, who, in broken English, praised the Lord for the deliverances of the past, and the mercies of a new year.

Then a Danish sailor, who but two months before had confessed Christ, arose and gave utterance to his full soul. It was strange to him that he had come all the way from his native country to find an omnipresent and precious Jesus.

Another prayer was offered, when an American sailor addressed his shipmates with much effect. He wept freely as he spoke. He had experienced at sea the love God shed abroad in his heart. It was on board the ship Brooklyn, on her last voyage to Italy. And he had experienced much of the goodness of God since. "Oh, my shipmates, let us be more faithful for Him, who has done so much for us!"

An English sailor then spoke in a similar strain. He had been in this Home and at this Saturday evening prayer meeting before. How often had he thought of this blessed spot in his watches at sea. Thankful was he for his return, and the privileges once more of joining his brethren in prayer and praise.

A Swedish sailor next addressed the meeting with much good sense. The readiness with which he quoted Scripture showed what is his chief companion in the house of his pilgrimage.

A Scotch sailor followed, summing up the instructions and impresssions of the hour in a very forcible and happy manner.

In progress of the meeting two or three others had taken a part; one of whom was a well-educated French sailor. If his shipmates had much to bless God for, he had more; for he had been rescued, not only from those sins to which sailors are addicted, but from the errors and dangers of Romanism. On board the ship "Silas Holmes" he had made the acquaintance of a pious sailor by the name of Montgomerie, from Scouland.

This allusion to Montgomerie recalled to the minds of some present the circumstances of his having arisen in a similar meeting in the same room about three months before and addressed them. He had that evening come directly from his ship, and stood before them a stranger. His remarks were substantially as follows:

"It was in this room I received my first religious impressions, and resolved on seeking the salvation of my soul. I went to sea, and during the whole voyage found no comfort. It was not till I returned to this Home, and to the meeting in this room, that I found peace, believing on Jesus."

The French sailor continued, "Montgomerie was very faithful to me. He showed me wherein my religion was deficient, and directed me to the new Testament to learn what I must do to be saved. Said he, you pray to the saints and to the Virgin Mary; but is that the way? Where does the Bible teach you to pray to them? If you want any thing of the captain, and he is accessible, do you go to the cook, or directly to the captain? Jesus Christ never told you to go to the cook, but to come to him. And blessed be the Lord, I did leave my Roman follies, and go to him. And what joy did I have then! What times we had on board the 'Silas Holmes!' But, my shipmates, one month ago this day he fell overboard and was drowned!" With an appeal to those present to be also ready, the French sailor finished his remarks, when the superintendent, after reminding those present of the approach of another Sunday, the importance of preparing for it, and of keeping it holy, closed the meeting. It was a blessed occasion; an emblem of that meeting gathered out of every nation to sing before the throne, Worthy the Lamb.

Combat between a horse and a lion.—A nobleman, in the early part of the reign of Louis XV., having a very vicious horse, which none of the grooms or servants would ride—several having been thrown, and one killed—asked leave of his Majesty to have him turned loose into the menagerie, against one of the largest lions. The King readily consented, and the animal on a certain day was conducted thither. Soon after the arrival of the horse, the door of the den was accordingly drawn up and the lion, with great majesty, marched slowly to the mouth of it, when seeing his antagonist, he set up a tremendous roar. The horse immediately startled and fell back—his ears erected, his mane raised, his eyes sparkled, and something like a general convulsion seemed to agitate his whole frame. After the first emotion of fear had subsided, the horse retired to a corner of the menagerie, where, having directed his heels towards the lion, and having reared his head above his left shoulder, he watched with eagerness the motions of his enemy. The lion, who presently quitted the den, sidled about for more than a minute, as if meditating the mode of attack, when, having sufficiently prepared himself for the combat, he made a sudden spring at the horse, which defended itself by striking his adversary a most violent blow on the chest. The lion instantly retreated, groaned, and seemed for several minutes inclined to give up the contest, when, recovering from the painful effects of the blow, he returned to the charge with unabated violence. The mode of preparation for this second attack was the same as the first. He sidled from one side of the menagerie to the other, for a considerable time, seeking for favorable opportunity to seize his prey; during all which time the horse still preserved the same posture, and still kept his head erect and turned over his shoulder. The lion at length gave a second srping, with all the strength and violence he could exercise, when the horse caught him with his hoof under his lower jaw, which he fractured. He sustained a second and more severe repulse than the former, the lion retreated to his den as well as he was able, apparently in the greatest agony, moaning all the way in a most lamentable manner. The horse was soon obliged to be shot, as no one dared to approach the ground where he was kept.

Religious Intelligence.

PITTSBURGH DISTRICT.

Waynesburgh Pa., Feb. 24, 1847.

Br. Bassett: Since my last, we have held our 2nd quarterly and two protracted meetings, two of which were very profitable unto the church upon this circuit (Waynesburgh.)

First was held at Johnson's School house, continued five days: some were happily converted and experienced the sweets of the religion of Jesus. Ten names were added to this class, some of whom had previously belonged to the church at other places, but had never given their names since they moved into this neighborhood.

Second meeting was held at Clinton—which was our 2nd quarterly meeting—continued four days—three professed to obtain a change of heart—five gave us their names, as passengers for the heavenly Canaan. Something near 40 persons have joined the M. P. Church on this circuit this Conference year.

Yours respectfully,
W. A. Porter.

Morgantown Va., March 2nd, 1847.

Br. Bassett:—Writing you on business I would drop a word or two concerning our circuit. Our Presidential visit was very interesting, at "Avery Chapel." Br. Brown with his more than usual strength, spent 6 days and nights on my circuit. Result, 5 conversions and 12 added to the church. We have a good religious feeling at every appointment on the circuit, for which I thank God and take courage.

A protracted meeting is now in progress in Morgantown. On Monday evening a large congregation attended on the labors of our good Br. Clawson; several enquired "what must I do to be saved;" 10 joined the church on last evening and are resolved to lead new lives in Christ Jesus.

Brethren and friends pray for us.
Yours &c. A. Gillespie.

MUSKINGUM DISTRICT.

Delaware Ct. March 2, 1847.

Br. Bassett: The time has come; rejoice with us—all is going well. Help us to praise our God. We published our 2nd quarterly meeting to be held in Delaware, but in consequence of the hard rains that fell and swept away the bridges, our brethren could not get there; so we appointed to meet in Pagetown on the 6th day of February. We met according to appointment, but we were disappointed of our help from Mt. Vernon, yet the Lord was with us; our meeting continued 9 or 10 days. The brethren came up manfully to the help of the Lord against the mighty. I can say we had a good time; the church rose up from their idle indifference, and were made to praise God aloud. We had to our help A. K. Earl, who stayed with us 2 or 3 days and labored to the satisfaction of all. May the Lord bless him and family. Our old side brethren gave us their meeting house, and met and labored with us. May the Lord bless them. The Lord displayed his power in converting sinners, the church doors were opened once and four united with us, and many more are under conviction. The brethren at Pagetown are engaged in building a meeting house 28 feet by 38. They are going to have a bell on it. Last year there were 75 members returned to conference, but against we straighten up, we may have 40 or 50 of the old members left; but this does not discourage us, for the Lord is doing a great work on Delaware circuit. You will hear from us again. Wm. Hatfield.

Jackson, O., Feb. 27, 1847.

Br. Bassett:—I will just state that our cause is advancing on Portsmouth Circuit. We have a prospect of organising two or three small societies. Our second quarterly Meeting has just closed. It was one of considerable interest. Six united with the Church.

W. W. Tipton.

OHIO DISTRICT.

Washington Ct. Feb. 23, 1847.

Dear. Br. Bassett: I would inform our president and friends of the religious state of things on this circuit. Our first quarterly meeting held on the 14 and 15 of Nov. at the Union meeting house was a time of refreshing to the church: two united with the class at this place. Father Dobbins was with us and preached with unusual energy. Our Christmas meeting held at Bethel, was favored with the visits of the Holy Ghost. Hearts that had been cold in religion were warmed with holy fire. Some that had backsliden were reclaimed, while others manifested desires to seek religion. Four have united with this class. Our second quarterly meeting, held at White Oak Grove, commencing on the 20th inst. and yet in progress, is a precious time to many souls. The Lord be praised for his wonderful mercy to us. The church at old White Oak is alive in the salvation of God.* Many glad hearts are in a holy rapture, rejoicing in victory over the enemy and in hope of the glory of God. Some have come forward as mourners to be prayed for, and six have joined the church.

We are seeking more holiness of heart and the salvation of sinners. O that the Lord would revive his work of grace among us more abundantly. And to his name shall be all the praise.

James H. Webster.

*We are glad to hear of such good times at old White Oak. Tell the brethren this is the very moment, to avail themselves of that holy energy they feel, for the purpose of building a more commodious house of worship. They have not room to increase much more. Let the brethren not delay. Tell us in your very next letter, how comes on the new meeting house. Ed.

Miami Ct., Feb. 22, 1847.

Br. Bassett: Through the medium of the Western Recorder I would embrace this favorable opportunity to inform our brethren in the Ohio Conference—something concerning the prosperity of this circuit.

When we reached our field of labor we found the church rather in a state of lethargy. But notwithstanding the clouds of darkness that appeared to be hovering around, and the difficulties through which our little Zion has long had to pass—there were still some faithful souls that continued instant in prayer for the Lord to revive his work. At length He that hears and answers prayer, began to make known his power by the awakening of poor souls, from nature's darkness. Whilst we endeavored to extend the banner of our republican Zion, several flocked to its standard and found a firm peace and consolation by relying upon the virtues of the Redeemer's blood.

The church has been generally revived and we have had some old fashioned times whilst approaching the consecrated cross at the altar of prayer. But still there are some classes for which we have been praying that appear to be to a great extent remaining in a state of coldness, and sinners around them are going down to death. Then brethren, will you not pray for us, that the times of refreshing may soon come from the presence of the Lord, and the glory of his power, and visit every class upon the Miami circuit with a revival of pure apostolical religion.

Yours, G. W. Thornburg.

Portage Ct., Feb. 25, 1847.

Br. Bassett: We have held our 2nd quarterly meeting, and several protracted meetings, at all of which the church seemed to be on the rise. The last meeting which closed on last Monday night, was a gracious time, though we had rain and a sleet, so that trees and limbs were falling in every direction through the woods, whilst ice and water covered the ground. Yet the Lord poured out his Spirit graciously upon us; believers were greatly revived, and four were soundly converted, and joined the church. To God be all the glory. We are now hoping for better times in Wood county. I expect to visit Perrysburg in about ten days. Pray for us, that the Lord may send prosperity.

Yours in the Gospel, James Swaney.

Withamsville, O., March 4th, 1847.

Br. Bassett:—Our second Quarterly Meeting for Cincinnati Circuit, was held at Bethesda Chapel. It continued five days. Part of the membership were much revived, and three were found at the altar of prayer, seeking God in the pardon of their sins. Although they did not then find peace, I trust that they will not rest satisfied until they find Jesus precious to their souls.

We have also held two protracted meetings since I last wrote, which resulted in good.

Five have united with us in Church fellowship since Conference. O, that the Lord would revive his work more powerfully on this circuit!

Yours in the bonds of a peaceful Gospel,
O. Warrington, Supt.

MICHIGAN DISTRICT.

Kingsbury, Ia., Feb. 20, 1847.

Dear Br. Bassett: Having a new, and paying subscriber, from among the itinerant ministers of our Conference, for the faithful Recorder, to forward, I would just say, I am now in the midst of a very interesting protracted meeting. Saints have been revived, backsliders are coming back to their Father's house, and sinners have been converted, others are seeking the Lord, and a general interest is felt among all classes of the inhabitants. Last evening, there were six new ones forward for prayer, two of whom have been looked upon as adherents to Universalism, and four of those who had previously come forward have their names with the M. E. Church, were given to the preacher before they professed religion, and it looked rather strange, that individuals united with the old church, should be without religion, untill they were converted to God thro' the instrumentality of the new church. But we say to the preachers of the old side, fetch on your unconverted members, and we will do the best we can to get them soundly converted, to the living and true God. And we shall of course be grateful for any instrumentality of theirs in benefitting such as may be unconverted amongst our people. I have held a previous protracted effort, since I wrote you, with some success, and received a number of good members as the result. I am on a very laborious circuit with some 12 appointments to be filled once in two weeks, and have no ministerial help, excepting one aged, and feeble but very good brother, of the unstationed list; and I find it very difficult, to continue a protracted effort long enough, to effect what might, and ought to be effected. But by the help of the good Lord, I intend to do the very best I can. The work of the Lord is reviving among us on the western part of the Michigan District.

Yours affectionately, James Gay.

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO,

THURSDAY, MARCH 11, 1847.

To Correspondents.—A reply to "A Pioneer of the Temperance Cause," shall be given next week. "Anon" is ever acceptable. "Y. Z." is welcome,—so is our correspondent at Freedom, Pennsylvania. Will he please write again and give us names, dates, age, &c., more definitely? The paper of B. Hibbard, is under consideration. A. M'Caine, in reply to Dr. Reese, is just received. Other correspondents must have patience, especially those who do not prepare their articles for the press.

Hymn Books.—By letter from the Book Agent, Baltimore, we learn that our lot of Hymn Books was then, (March 4th) on the way. They are hourly expected. Send on, you who want. We shall have a few of superior quality, gilt.

COUNTRY POSTMASTERS

Who write us that papers are not taken out by the persons to whom they are addressed, will do their duty, and oblige us, by endorsing their letters "Post Office Business," thus saving us the postage.—Zanesville Courier.

And us, too. We suffer no small amount of unnecessary and unauthorised tax, not to say imposition, through the inattention of Post Masters to the provision, authorising them to frank such communications.

Peace.—No such good news yet. We were only going to say that the New York Sun has received private advices from the city of Mexico, from which a confidence is entertained that the Mexican government will speedily change its policy for prosecuting the war.

Died,—At Cincinnati, on Thursday morning, February 25th, of Bronchitis, Captain Louis H. Shalley. So says the Cincinnati Commercial. Our friend S. has gone. We had a pleasant acquaintance with him for twenty-five years past.

Church Division.—Brother T. Smith, of Michigan, whose letter we publish this week, still insists that the Church must be divided. He will find his views decidedly met by Brother E. A. W., of the Genessee Conference, in the same column. Were it not for this, we were going to give a friendly, conversational reply to the positions of our Brother.

Still another Revolutionary Soldier gone.—Mr. Samuel Brown, died at Chelmsford, Massachusetts, on the 22d of January, aged 81. He was a member of the Baptist Church.

Slavery not abolished in Delaware.—We regret to learn by the National Era, that the bill passed by the House, for the gradual abolition of slavery in Delaware, was indefinitely postponed in the Senate! A motion was made to reconsider the vote of postponement. The vote was, yeas 4, nays 4,—one member absent. The Speaker voted with the nays. Sorry for that.

Settled Ministry.—The letter of Br. Johnson on this subject, which we publish this week, will not be understood as an attack upon the itinerant system. We agree that there are superior advantages in having a minister located, and residing amongst his people, in every village or church, that is able to sustain a minister. And of course that there are corresponding disadvantages in having the services of a minister but periodically upon a Sabbath, once in 2 or 4 weeks. Our brother will not question that in sparsely populated portions of the country, or sections where there are but small church organizations, the itinerant system is the very means under God for producing reformations, and raising up churches. Indeed some denominations which heretofore have had a settled ministry alone, now find it expedient and advantageous to adopt a system of operations, similar to an itinerancy, though perhaps denominated missionary work, or colportage. Yet we have long been convinced, and have often seen to our sorrow, that in the Methodist Community, aye, in the M. P. Church, there are societies, in some very considerable towns, fully competent to sustain a minister stationed amongst them, and whose pastoral position and residence amongst them would greatly contribute to his enlarged usefulness amongst them, and yet those societies for want of moral courage, or christian liberality, do not and will not undertake to sustain a minister. Whilst this is the case, they have to be periodically served, if at all, once in two, 3, or four weeks, by some preacher upon a circuit, who has perhaps from three to thirty other preaching places. And have not societies under these circumstances, in some instances, not only suffered loss, but even dwindled away, for want of more of that pastoral attention, which perhaps, the pastor with his other engagements, could not render. Our correspondent we think has given some very sensible views upon the subject. He has formerly been a travelling minister but is now an unstationed minister of the M. P. Church. By the way, we have lately seen a sermon upon this subject in the Oberlin Evangelist.

Complimentary.—The Methodist Protestant says:—

"Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.—This is one of the best of the family of 'Advocates.' We always open its pages with pleasure, and close them with good feeling."

The Pittsburgh Christian Advocate responds:

"The Methodist Protestant is one of our most welcome exchanges, and the Editor is one of the most sensible of men. Peaceable as we are, we should be tempted to quarrel with any one who would doubt."

Now we do not wish to take part in any 'quarrel' between those two brethren, not even to part them. We have only to say, they must both be in the right, for we concur in the sentiment of each.

By the way, speaking of the "Family of the Advocates," there are two others which we are favored to receive regularly in exchange, and whose visits are ever greeted with pleasure. How can we help liking them well, whilst we find them so friendly?

The Western Christian Advocate says:

"The Western Recorder has been recently enlarged, and very much improved every way, since the Rev. Mr. Bassett has become its Editor. We rejoice at the improvement, and wish the Recorder increased patronage."

The Nashville Christian Advocate says:

"Western Recorder.—This paper—the Western organ of the Protestant Methodist Church—has recently been enlarged, put into an entirely new dress, and much improved generally. The enterprising editor is making it a valuable paper, well deserving liberal patronage."

We do not feel at liberty to express our concurrence with the very kind sentiments expressed by the Editors of the Cincinnati and Nashville "Advocates," but we most gratefully and heartily reciprocate their good will.

As then such respectable as well as disinterested authority has determined that our paper is 'deserving' of 'increased' and 'liberal patronage,' we only submit the fact to the attention of those who should, but do not, patronize it, and those of our ministers who might, but do not, extend its patronage.

Herald of Truth, Cin.—The March No. of this very neat, highly intellectual, and very independent work has reached us. Mr. Hine, the Editor, is an able Reviewer. He has a mind of his own, and anon he makes it manifest, whenever his convictions of true reform require, though at the expense sometimes of the views of those he takes in hand. Well, we like him none the less for this. We have a pithy article in this number, on "The College and the Church." The former he makes "a great benefit, and also a great curse." He points out several leading defects in our educational institutions, the chief of which is, that students are not impressed with the True Object of Life. Then he shows wherein he considers the church wrong. He tells some 'sore truths,' but says 'they must be told before the church will shake the dust from her mantle, and go to work vigorously in the cause of human redemption.' One particular is amusing. He makes the clergy the main supporters of the gallows. He says "they visit the prisoner doomed to death, administer to him the consolations of religion, pronounce him converted and prepared for heaven, but with the same breath declare him unfit for earth, and defend the law that launches him into eternity." Mr. H. however speaks not against the church, for he acknowledges she has the Mighty God, for her founder and head—that her walks are pleasant, and her courts sacred. There are several valuable papers in the March number. But we have not yet read it entire. Yearly subscription, $3, Two copies for $5.

Bishop Soule, was born in Bristol, Maine, August 1, 1781; was converted in June, 1797; commenced preaching in 1798; and entered the itinerancy in 1799.

Adjournment of Congress.—This took place at midnight, or morning of the 4th instant. One of the last acts of Congress was to adopt the Three Million Bill, being an appropriation for the President to purchase a peace. The Wilmot proviso excluding slavery from any new territory to be acquired, which had been adopted by the House, was finally rejected,—several members changing their votes. The National Era says it was defeated by Northern votes! and gives as a reason, that the President has just now more than 500 new offices placed at his disposal. This is humiliating.

Prices.—Putnam and Zanesville.—Wheat 65c., Flour, $4, Corn, 25c. Oats, 15c.

The Colporteur.—This is the title of a small but neat publication in quarto form, the first number of which has been issued from the Zanesville press. It is of religious character, and conducted by Rev. S. Brown, Pastor of the Presbyterian Church, Zanesville. It is to be published occasionally, one, two, or three times per month. The first number contains some good articles, entirely original, and from the pen of Mr. B., who is an excellent writer. Price, two cents per number.

Green Mountain Spring.—We have received the 1st number, Vol. II, of a neat little publication, from Brattleboro, Vt., devoted to the principles of the Hydropathic or Water Cure Treatment. We cheerfully exchange, as requested, for we desire some information respecting the theory. It has a number of converts here, and others as well as we, are enquiring. Dr. Wesselhoeft, the publisher, has a large establishment for water cures, at Brattleboro. As yet we have received the January number, only. Will the publisher please send the subsequent ones. Terms $1 per year.

Written for the Western Recorder

Plan of a Church Register.

Index of a Church Register, adopted by the Quarterly Conference of Zanesville Circuit, Muskingum District, M. P. Church, with explanatory notes; to be kept by each Society on the Circuit.

1st. History of the Society, Page 1.

Note.—Date of origin; cost of property; debts; process of liquidation; collections; expenditures; improvements; names of Trustees, with all the civil and financial affairs annually continued.

2d. Plan of Conference appointments, p. 100.

3d. Names of Members and their families, p. 150.

Note.—This Record may be kept as follows: The page laid off into four columns, headed, 1st: Names of members; 2d. Names of children; 3d. Date of baptism; and 4th, by whom baptised. Sufficient space left opposite parents, for children.

4th. Births, p. 200.

5th. Marriages, p. 215.

6th. Deaths, with remarks, at the pleasure of relatives, p. 230.

7th. Removals with certificates, p. 280.

8th. Removals without certificates, p. 290.

9th. Names of members expelled or dropped, p. 300.

Note.—This Record may show whether for immoral conduct, dangerous sentiments of faith, or neglect of recognised duty, Discipline was exercised.

10th. Ministerial punctuality, p. 330.

Note.—This Record to be kept in the following manner: Each page laid off into twelve columns, headed by the names of the twelve months; the Minister's name standing on the left of these columns; charge his disappointments by a mark in the column, under the month, and credit his sermons, by figures. (Delegates to Conference may be furnished with a correct copy.)

11th. Abstract of the Class Books, p. 336.

Note.—This to embrace not only general attendance at church, class, and prayer meetings, but particularly what each member pays annually for the support of the gospel.

12th, Relief Fund for indigent Members, p. 350.

Note.—Your committee recommend that each first quarterly meeting appoint a Relief committee, who, whilst they conceal the receiver, will credit the donor in this Register, for cash, fuel, food, raiment, or even employ in the depth of winter, so that the widow, the fatherless, the stranger, and the sick that unite with us in christian fellowship, may realize our christian friendship.

13th. Sums raised by the Society for Sabbath School, Bible, and Missionary purposes, p. 370.

14th. Public collections, p. 380.

Note.—Here, also, will be recorded the names of those out of the church who contribute to the support of the gospel, with the amount and date of such contributions.

A well bound blank book, of 400 pages, may be obtained of O. White, Zanesville, for one dollar, which we deem might answer; but would also recommend each class-leader to be furnished with a 12½ cent blank book, which might serve as a day-book to this Register, for many years.

We have paged this index simply as a form;—each Society must judge of the apportionment of these pages, themselves.

Signed, C. S. Callahan,
W. H. Marshall,
& Wm. Hamilton.

Gratiot, Ohio, 6th March, 1847.

[We regret that the following proceedings came to hand a few hours too late for our last week's paper. Ed.]

Written for the Western Recorder.

CONTRIBUTIONS FOR IRELAND.

The undersigned Central Committee of Muskingum County, connected with objects for the relief of Ireland, embrace this occasion to request the committees of the different Townships to forward as rapidly as they can to the ware house of S. Adams & Co. in Zanesville, the produce which they have collected, as it is desirable to ship whatever is donated the first moment it can be done. Citizens who have subscribed and not yet paid in their subscriptions will please do so at once. Money contributions from this County may be paid to either of the Central Committee.

Contributions of money in Provisions from neighboring counties, might be directed to J. E. Palmer Secretary of central commitee.

John Metcalf, Chair.
G. W. Manypeny, Treas.
Wm. Galigher,
John A. Blair,
Jas. E. Palmer, Sec.

The following resolutions were passed at the last regular meeting of the central committee. Resolved, That the provisions which shall be sent to this committee for the relief of Ireland, be forwarded to the committee of the Society of Friends in Dublin for impartial distribution. Also,

Resolved that the central committee of Muskingum County, will receive and forward contributions of Provisions and money from the neighboring counties (which have not the facilities for forwarding the same,) to such destination as the chairman of the respective committees may direct. Also,

Resolved, That all monies contributed for the relief of Ireland be invested in provisions, (except so far as may be necessary to defray contingent expenses) and fowarded without delay to the destination referred to in the first resolution.

J. E. Palmer, Sec.

Zanesville, March 3d, 1847.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

From the New York Courier and Enquirer.

DISASTERS AT SEA.

Our paper yesterday communicated the sad intelligence of the loss of Capt. Rathbone, of the packet ship Columbia, together with his two mates and five seamen, by being washed over board during a gale of wind. We are enabled through the politeness of Capt. Luce of the John R. Skady, to lay before our readers the particulars of that melancholy occurrence, together with an account of the behavior of the crew after the loss of all the officers.

The vessel was scudding in a very heavy gale of wind, and on the morning of the 15th of January about half-past four, Capt. Rathbone came on deck and was walking aft towards the wheel-house when a tremendous sea boarded her. So great was its violence that the wheel-house, in which were four men and a boy, was carried away and with it all the poop stanchions, &c., as far as the main mast. Capt. Rathbone and his two mates were washed overboard with the men in the wheel-house; and the ship being no longer under control of the wheel, immediately broached to.—The crew, who were below, rushed on deck and, having no one to command them went to work in their own way. Their first act was very foolishly to cut away the fore topmast backstay, and the consequence was that fore topmast, fore topsail and fore yard were carried away, and the bowsprit sprung.

They got the ship again before the wind, and finding themselves without officers, the crew began to act in the most lawless and infamous manner. They persuaded the cabin passengers, [seven in all, including one lady,] to take refuge in the upper run, on the plea that there was imminent danger of the poop cabin being washed overboard but no sooner had they descended, than the wretches fastened the scuttle down, and commenced an indescriminate plunder in the cabin. They broke open the desks and trunks of Captain Rathbone and chief mate, from each of which they obtained considerable sums of money. They shipped the cabin furniture and commited every kind of excess. The passengers becoming alarmed at the uproar over head, begged to be let out, which was acceded to, and they ascended to the cabin.—The sailors still persisted in assuring them that the poop cabin might be expected to go any minute, and they persuaded the lady passenger and the stewardess, to take refuge in the forecastle, where they were soon followed by the rest of the passengers, leaving the crew in undisturbed possession of the cabin. Passengers' trunks were opened and rifled of their most valuable contents—the cabin was ransacked from one end to the other, and the elegant furniture, or such as they chose, was carried forward. Table and bed linen, silver spoons and forks, and such articles, were pillaged and stored in each chest.

On the morning of the 18th the ship Lady Falkland hove in sight, and running close down to them hailed to know if any assistance was required, as their situation of distress was evident. The sailors with a shout answered, no; but one of the passengers who had assumed some direction, replied yes. By advice of an old sailor who had not taken part with the rest of the crew in their insubordination, the passenger wrote on a board with chalk, "that the ship was light and staunch, but that having lost the Captain and Mates, they wanted a navigator."

The mate of the L. F. at once came on board in his own boat, which was swamped alongside of the Columbia, but the crew managed to climb on board. The mate of the Lady Fairland then inquired if they would entrust the vessel to his charge, to which the passengers unanimously assented, but the crew said no. The passengers having promised to support him in his authority; he sent his own men back and took the command, but the crew refused to obey him. He at once made sail on the vessel; but when it came on to blow heavily soon afterwards, they refused to take in, and actually suffered the sails and yards to be blown away rather than shorten sail. The only order they would obey was to make sail, and then they hoisted them just so far that they must, as they did soon blow away.

Nor was this all; for the new captain (whose name Captain Luce could not recall) found that they took advantage of his absence from the deck to alter the course of the vessel, seeming determined to wreck her. After this he never went below at all, but kept the deck constantly, snatching a few moments sleep when and how he best could. As they neared the land on the other side, the crew made every effort, and even used threats to compel the mate to run her ashore on the coast of Ireland but he refused, of course, and determined to get along as well as he could.

When they arrived off Cork, the crew insisted that he should go in there, but having taken on board a pilot, he made known to him the condition of things, and he at once offered to take her to Liverpool. When they passed Tuskar the wind commenced blowing again, but the crew refused to shorten sail, and a new foresail which had been bent, was blown away, leaving the vessel with only her spencer and stay sails. They made one more effort to compel the master to run the ship ashore in Beaumorris Bay, but finding him resolute and well backed by the passengers they gave it up.

Finally, a Liverpool pilot was obtained, and when the ship reached the lighthouse, the steward was sent to Liverpool with a letter to Messrs. Barings, and Capt. Cropper was immediately despatched to the ship with six policemen. When the crew found how matters were going, they threw overboard the articles which they had stolen from the cabin, so that when the officers came on board, there was nothing to be found, except some articles of the cabin furniture, spoons, &c., in the forecastle. When Capt. Luce left, the police officers were still on board, having the men under their charge, but it was said to be doubtful if any thing could be done with them. The next arrival will bring the result of their examination.

The highest praise is awarded to the mate of the Lady Falkland, whose conduct throughout commanded the warm admiration of the passengers. Under all the trying circumstances by which he was surrounded evinced the most commendable courage, coolness, self possession and determination; and succeeded, in spite of all the efforts of a mutinous and disobedient crew, in carrying the ship and passengers safely into port. The owners of the vessel should see that he is handsomely rewarded.

Frightful Railroad Accident.

Tuesday morning, an accident occurred on the Fall River station, which the Boston Mail describes in the following manner.

The passenger train from Boston was stuck in the rear by a plough attached to a train for clearing the snow from the track, and the collision was so powerful as to break the woodwork of every seat in the rear car. The following persons were injured by this collision: Dr. Hitchcock, of Middleborough, had both legs crushed and broken, one of them in a most shocking manner, and it is not believed he can possibly survive. Mr. Kennison, road master, had one leg crushed, and a severe contusion in the bowels. His case is more doubtful. Mr. J. W. Appleton, of Boston, was injured in the leg; Sanborn Davis of do. in the hand; James Littlefield of do. in the leg; James Littlefield, of Worcester, and Ephraim Willey, of Boston, in the leg; Mr. A. A. Snow, of Dover, in the head; Jerome D. Snow of do. internally; Reuben Bennett, brakeman, in the leg.

P. S.—We learned, last evening, that Dr. Hitchcock and Mr. Kennison are both dead.

Another accident occurred on the Worcester Railroad at Westborough, the evening previous, which proved fatal to Mr. George H. Haven, one of the gravel train conductors. Mr. H. was on the snow plough at the time, which was thrown off the track, and he inadvertently jumped off into the middle of the track, and was struck by the heavy locomotive, and so severely injured that he died about 6 o'clock the next morning.

Emigrant Passengers to the U. States.—A report has been laid before Congress giving the number of emigrants that arrived in the United States for the year ending September 30, 1846, from which we make the following abstract:

Emigrants arrived in—

Maine,	5,930	Maryland,	9,337
New Hampshire,	25	Virginia,	82
Massachusetts,	14,079	North Carolina,	3
Rhode Island,	83	South Carolina,	408
New York,	98,863	Louisiana,	22,148
Pennsylvania,	7,235	Florida,	90
Delaware,	6	Texas,	354
			158,648

Important from Yucatan.

SUCCESS OF THE REVOLUTIONISTS.

By the arrival of the fast sailing barque Childe Harold, Captain Rich, thirteen days from Havana, the New York Sun has received its regular files of Spanish papers which reach from Havana to the 13th ult., Merida, Yucatan, 7th ditto.—By this arrival we are enabled to announce the entire success of the revolutionists. Yucatan has again ceased to belong to Mexico, and is now an independent republic. Although every preparation had been made to defend the city of Merida, which is the capital Gov. Bartachano was forced to yield to the superiority of the numbers, and on the 2d February the revolutionists, under Gen. Cadenas, marched in and took posession of the town. We have before given an account of the battle between the government troops and the revolutionists, in which the latter were victorious. Gov. Barbochano and officers have been deposed and Gen. Baret named as his successor. By the decree of the 26th January, the Mexican authorities and officers who had not seconded the pronouncimiento were obliged to send in their adhesion at once, in writing, or summary measures would be taken. By another decree the government and council of the State of Campechi, were transferred to Merida. The commander of the American naval forces had given notice, that so long as the Campechians should observe a strict neutrality the blockade of Laguna and Terminos should be suspended; neutral vessels being allowed freely to enter and depart, provided that they in no case bring arms or munitions of war.—N. Y. Sun.

Later from Mexico.

Washington, March 3,—10 P. M.

A slip from New Orleans Picayune office last Wednesday, issued at noon, contains advices from Tampico to the 13th ult. The Tampico sentinel of that date contains extracts from papers of the city of Mexico, of 2d Feb., giving more full details of the capture of the 70 Americans by Gen. Minon. A letter from a Mexican paper, dated San Luis, January 28, announces the arrival of the prisoners and rebukes rejoicings over this bloody victory. It states that Minon's force was 2000. The same letter declares that the Americans were surprised early in the morning at a watering place. The Sentinel says that there are many rumors, supposed with some truth, that Santa Ann is going towards Monterey, and it is possible that Minon was in command of the advanced guard. He is an excellent cavalry officer. He accompanied Santa Anna on his return from exile and may arouse the drooping energies of the Mexicans. The names of the lost 70 Americans were published. Cassius M. Clay is amongst them, with 2 Majors, 3 Captains, 1 Lieutenant, 3 Sergeants, and 61 privates.

An Agent Murdered.—Mr. Hussey, lately murdered in Georgia, was one of many agents of the Philadelphia Saturday Courier. In regard to his death the Courier says:—"Our large and respectable corps of Traveling Agents and Collectors will miss from their number, this week, one of the most energetic and worthy among them: Mr. B. B. Hussey who was basely murdered at Dublin, Georgia, on the morning of the 13th inst. Mr. Hussey had become by his tried integrity, long experience, and agreeable manners, a valuable agent for numerous Literary and Mercantile establishments in the country. He leaves fortunately, no immediate family. Himself and wife were passengers on the illfated steamship "Home," when that vessel was lost; and he escaped to the shores barely with life. His wife his only living friend and companion went down in the raging deep! He was a New Englander by birth, though for a long time a resident of Charleston, S. C., where he was well and favourably known."

Editorial Obituary.—Wakeman Barritt, Esq, one of the Editors of the New York Shipping and Commercial List, died suddenly on Tuesday, at an advanced age. He was once a merchant, possessed great practical talents, and was highly esteemed in public and private life.

Revenue Bill.—The vote on striking out Tea and Coffee in the Revenue bill was only 105 in favor and 104 against it, yet under the excitement and displeasure created, the bill was lost by 236 to 78.

Plenty of Work for the Industrious.—We are gratified to learn that the Hudson River Railroad Company contemplate a rapid construction of their road. They expect to be able to give employment to eight thousand men as soon as the frost is out of the ground. The road will be commenced at several points simultaneously, and by completing it, as they hope to do, in eighteen months, they enhance the value of the property and make it a par stock almost immediately.—This is the right course, and for once we hope to see a well managed Railroad at our door.—N. Y. Sun.

Nantucket.—This spirited little Yankee city gives $200 for the relief of the Irish poor, though it lost $600,000 by fire only eight months ago.

Accident at the Mines.

The Pottsville Democrat Press gives the following account of the recent accident in the mines in that vicinity:

The men, seven in number, had just entered the mines for the purpose of going to work, when the foul air which had accumulated during the night, took fire, and exploded with most fearful effect. The props were thrown down; and a considerable fall of stone, rock and earth followed, burying some of the men, while others were crushed to death. John Devlin and his son fortunately escaped with comparatively little injury, although considerably burned. During the day, and after much labor, Michael Mahan and Thomas McAvoy were extricated, the former much bruised and burnt, and the latter with the leg broken, and other serious injuries; the dead body of Wm. Breunan was extricated about the same time. Two other men, Patrick Donahoe and Patrick Lawless, were still engulfed; at one time, by great exertion, the former was so far extricated, that he could be seen and talked to—he begged of his friends to drag him from his perilous position, but while doing so, another fall came, burying him even deeper than before, after which it is supposed he lived but a few moments. It was not until Sunday morning that his lifeless body, together with that of Lawless, were taken out after immense labor, shockingly bruised and mangled.

RELIEF OF IRELAND.

The following Circular has been addressed to the Irish Relief Committees of the towns in the neighborhood of Cincinnati:

CINCINNATI, Feb. 22, 1847.

We beg to advise you that we have been appointed to receive the contributions of this city, and forward them to Ireland for the relief of the poor of that country.

It is our intention to invest all money in provisions, and forward them at once to N. Orleans for transhipment to the destitute points.

We shall feel pleasure in receiving from your own or vicinity any donation of money or provisions which you may desire to contribute for Ireland, and to aid you in this charity in every way in our power.

We may state that the Directors of the Little Miami Railroad have agreed to transport all provisions for this object free of charge over their road, and the Steamboats from this port have offered to carry portions of freight free to New Orleans, where agents have offered to attend to forwarding, also, free of charge.

Please to communicate the contents of this to any committee in your neighborhood that may be formed to promote this object.

At the close of our labors a full statement of all the receipts and expenditures will be published.

Please to consign any provisions you may send, to the care of Rogers & Sherlock, of this city.

Very Respectfully,
JOHN C. WRIGHT,
JOSEPH LONGWORTH,
JOHN CREAGH,
HENRY E. SPENCER,
R. R. SPRINGER,
W. W. SCARBOROUGH,
THOMAS SHERLOCK,
JAMES PULLAN,
Executive Committee.

RELIEF TO THE HIGHLANDS OF SCOTLAND.—At a large and respectable meeting of the friends of Scotland, held at the corner of Lispenard street and Broadway, for the purpose of devising the best method of giving an unanimous expression of their sympathy in a tangible form for those now suffering in the highlands of Scotland, it was resolved to give a Grand Musical Entertainment, at the Broadway Tabernacle, on Monday, 8th March, 1847, on which occasion some of the best professional and amateur talent of the city will give their voluntary services to entertain the audience who will favor the object with their presence. It is hoped that this effort will meet with the hearty response and co-operation of our countrymen in the city who sympathise with the sufferers.—N. Y. Sun.

LE VERRIER.—The board of Longitude, of Paris, have agreed with the astronomers Gausy, Encke, Strure and Hershall, to name the planet Neptune. Its sign will be a trident.

WATERFALL.—There has been a waterfall discovered in the St. Louis river. It empties into the western part of Lake Superior and has never been discovered by Geographers. It is said to be an immense volume of water, second only to Niagara.

AID TO IRELAND.—Two thousand two hundred dollars were collected at St. Mary's Church, Hudson street, N. Y., on Sunday last for the relief of Ireland.

DEPARTURE OF MISSIONARIES.—The ship Ashburton from Boston to Canton, China, will take out five missionaries of the Baptist church, Messrs Buck, Yates, Tobey, James and Johnson, with Ing Seen Sang, a Chinaman.

Mr. John R. Ackland, of Norfolk, was found dead last Wednesday, in the yard of Parker's Hotel, where he had boarded. He fell or threw himself from his room in the fourth story. He had been burned out of his lodgings some weeks before, and a horror of being burnt to death probably came upon him in his sleep.

The Friendly Sons of St. Patrick, at Philadelphia, have agreed to forego the pleasures of a feast on St. Patrick's day. The money thus saved is to be forwarded to the starving poor in their native land.

OVERLAND MAIL TO OREGON.—The undersigned will leave Washington immediately on the adjournment of Congress, and Independence, Missouri, on the first of April, for Astoria, Oregon. Preparation is made to carry out a large mail of letters which must be post-paid to Independence, Missouri. No documents will be taken, except of much importance. Will Editors generally give notice of the facilities of correspondence with the settlers in Oregon? The Mail will arrive in Oregon on the 1st of June.

S. M. SHIVELY.

FIRE AT MOBILE.—A fire broke out on Wednesday night, 17th Feb., in the range of Ware-houses in the rear of Emanuel's block of new stores on Water Michael street, Mobile. There were six in number, all of which and their contents were destroyed.

BURNED TO DEATH.—Mrs. Mary Blagrove, an elderly lady, was so shockingly burned at the residence of her mother, Mrs. Gibbs, at Richmond, C. H., on Tuesday, in consequence of fire communicating to her clothing while lying in bed, that she survived but two hours.

SEVERAL ACCIDENTS have recently occured in the coal region of Pottsville Pennslyvania. Three persons were killed, and several others were severely injured, by the ignition and explosion of the collected gas in the mine. On the Railroad at Mount Carbon depot, an old man was run over, and his legs crushed above the kees.

An Olive Leaf for the American People.

FRIENDS OF HUMANITY:—Hundreds of your fellow-beings are dying, almost daily dying, of starvation in poor Ireland. Will you not send them bread from your plenteous boards! It has been stated that more have perished by famine in that afflicted land, than those who fell by the cholera in that dreadful year of death. A penny a day will save a human life. Will you let thousands die when they can be rescued so cheaply from the grave? The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ forbid!

Farmers, Mechanics, Merchants, men of the United States, children, wives and mothers, will you let thousands of your kind be thrown unconfined into the grave, when two cents' worth of Indian meal a day will save a human life. Mothers, sisters, daughters, wives of America! there are thousands of your sex dying naked upon the damp, cold ground in Ireland, without even straw to lie upon. Will you not look into your wardrobes and what you can spare to the poor creatures, perishing with famine and the famine fever?

May the God of all grace and mercy and compassion touch the heart of America in view of such a spectacle of wretchedness. Anything—anything to eat or wear, will come to thousands like a ministration of heaven's mercy. The English Government, as you see below, has promised to pay the freight of all contributions of food and clothing which may be forwarded from the United States. Will not the Railroad companies in the United States, and steamboat companies, transport from the interior to the seaboard all such contributions free of charge? All these contributions may be consigned to the Society of Friends in England, who have made arrangements for extensive distribution to the starving, or to any other parties that may be preferred. I cannot add another word. I expect to be obliged to travel all night from London to Liverpool, to transmit the following communication from the English Government, which I received after the mail was closed. Yours for humanity,

ELIHU BURRITT.

London, Feb. 3, 1847.

TREASURY CHAMBERS, Feb. 3d, 1847.

Gentlemen:—I am commanded by the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury to acquaint you, in reply to your letter of the 1st instant addressed to Lord John Russell, that the Lords will be prepared to pay the freight of any provisions or clothing which benevolent persons in the United States may send to Ireland, or to the distressed districts in Scotland, on proof being afforded that the articles were purchased from the produce of private subscriptions, and have been appointed to charitable objects.

I am, gentlemen, your obedient servant,
C. E. TREVELYAN.

Messrs. Elihu Burrit,
and James L. L. F. Warren,
27 New Broad Street.

ALBANY, March 1—8 M. P.

The contributions in Albany to the Irish Relief Fund are over $5700. The three Catholic Churches will increase this sum to over $10,000.

Sir George Simpson, Governor of the Hudson's Bay Company, left N. Y. Friday morning, in the Long Island cars, for Boston, to proceed to England in the Cambria on the first of March.

RELIEF FOR SCOTLAND.—We are happy to learn that subscriptions for the relief of the suffering poor of Scotland have been commenced in this city under the most favorable auspices.—N. Y. Sun.

A medical writer contends that eating Pork is the cause of the extensive prevalence of scrofulous affections.

A Fine Horse was drowned in Philadelphia on Saturday, by backing off the dock. Its owner, a poor man, cried like a child at his loss.

CHEATING A FARMER.—A farmer from Washington County came down to Albany with wool and poultry in his sleigh. He gave a man a ride who treated him liberally, saw the sleigh and load safely deposited in a tavern, then took him to an assignation house, where he left him, and went off with the sleigh, horses and load, worth $250.

EMIGRATION.—The number of German emigrants who arrived at Galveston, Texas, during the quarter ending the first of December, 1846, was 4020, and the number will continue to increase.

From the New England Puritan.

A Gentle Hint.

MESSRS. EDITORS:—There is a prevalent custom in some of our churches, which to some is very unpleasant and annoying. I refer to entering the vestry on the evenings of church meeting, perhaps with hats on, and assembling, some five or six, more or less, around the stove for conversation.

I have just returned from church meeting.—When I entered the vestry it was full half past seven, the appointed hour for the exercises to commence. At this time there were a large number of the brethren around the stove, conversing aloud together—so as to be heard all over the vestry, and so as to render any thing like preparatory meditation, on the part of those who were thus disposed, quite impossible. The officer of the church presiding, after waiting a few minutes, commenced the exercises; then, and not till then, did these brethren come up from the stove, with creaking boots, to their places. Now I doubt not that they were engaged in a profitable conversation, but it was out of time and place. The vestry or lecture room is public property on such occasions; every one has a right there; and none has a right to disturb the meditations or devotions of another. There are persons, I know who accustom themselves, on taking their seats on such an occasion, to have preparatory thought and silent prayer. Do our brethren think, that while conversing around the stove they interrupt and prevent these meditations?

How pleasant is it, on the occasion of a church or prayer meeting, to see members enter and pass silently to their seats! How pleasant to have a quiet room on such an occasion, and to feel that we are "Far from scenes of noise and strife."

Would that our people might learn to enter our places of worship quietly, and avoid all conversation until after the religious exercises are over.—It appears to me that this is required not only by considerations of a religious nature, but that even common civility and courtesy require it at our hands. For one, I forbid myself to stop at the stove however cold I may be; and however I may wish to speak, I charge my tongue to keep silent until after the religious exercises are over.

ORDER AND DECENCY.

DEATH BY ACCIDENT.—Mr. Otis Heath, of Randolph, Vt., aged about 45, was instantly killed on the 11th ult, by the overturning of a sled loaded with logs. A log rolled upon him, breaking his neck.

From the St. Louis Republican of Feb. 20.

DEATH OF WHIRLING THUNDER.—This celebrated Winnebago Chief recently died, at an advanced age, among his people. He was the oldest chief in the nation. In our last war with Great Britain he held a major general's commission in the British service, the fragments of which he preserved with great care till the day of his death. His Indian name was Wa-con-cho-ca-muf-caw.

The celebrated Dean Swift, in preaching an Assize Sermon, was severe against the lawyers for pleading against their consciences. After dinner, a young counsel said some severe things against the clergy and added, that he did not doubt, were the devil to die, a parson might be found to preach his funeral sermon.

"Yes," said Swift, "I would, and would give the devil his due, as I did his children this morning."

Iron Founders be careful of water in your moulds!—Mr. George Bigsby, of the High street Furnace, Providence; lately had his face dreadfully injured, and sight destroyed when "pouring," by the dashing up of the liquid iron, caused by water in the mould.

In the death of Joseph John Gurney of England, the world of mankind loses a Friend indeed—one of the purest and noblest of men. A note to Mr. Allison, published in the Burlington N. J. Gazette says he died 'in profounded peace,' and adds—

"He was taken with his last illness whilst in attendance on a meeting at Norwich for the relief of the poor. The mourning into which the whole community was introduced, was of unusual extent. At the time of his funeral about twenty thousand persons lined the road from his late residence to the grave. His latest days were a beautiful crown to a life eminently dedicated to the service of Him who called him; and his example commends to all the exortation which he sounded at the close of perhaps his last ministerial effort: "Be ye also ready."

OHIO BUSHEL.—An act passed at the last session of the Ohio Legislature, fixes the following weights as the standard bushel of the articles named, when sales are made by the bushel, without special agreement between the parties as to the measurement:—Wheat 60 lbs, Corn 56; Barley 48; Oats 32; Flaxseed 56; Cloverseed 64.

FAST DAY.—Governor Briggs of Massachusetts has appointed Thursday, the 8th day of April next, to be observed as a day of Fasting, Humiliation and Prayer.

RIOT ON THE WORCESTER RAIL ROAD.—A postscript in the Providence Transcript, states that the hands on the five sections of this road have discontinued work. They demand an increase of wages and threaten violence to any who may go to work, and threatened also to shoot one of the contractors. A large armed posse has proceeded to the scene of the disturbance. Mr. Campbell, one of the contractors, was struck over the head by a pistol and his life threatened by 50 men. A military company has been ordered to repair to the scene of disturbance.

TOO LATE.—A servant girl in Brooklyn sent all her earnings ($30) to relieve her distressed relations, in Ireland; and soon after received news of the death of her father, mother, brothers and sisters, eight in number. This is dreadful.

DROWNED.—On Saturday last a son of Dr. Sill, of Winsor, Conn., aged nine years, was drowned in Mill Brook, in that town, by breaking through the ice on which he was skating.

HORRID DEATH FROM RUM.—The Dayton Transcript of the 27th ult. says a poor wretch died in the jail of that place from maina a potu. He raved in the wildest manner running through our streets to escape from the devils and damned spirits which he fancied were pursuing him. We never saw horror and abject terror so vividly depicted before. After suffering the most excruciating mental agony for two days—he died in extreme torture—and seemed to suffer, in advance, the very torment of the damned. His name was Russell. He was the only son of a widowed mother now in the Lunatic Asylum—having been brought there by her son.

RAILROAD ACCIDENT.—While the train of cars for Cumberland was passing over the plain, 42 miles from Baltimore, yesterday, the locomotive came in contact with a six horse team, which was being driven across the track on the turnpike at the time. Three of the horses were instantly killed, and the driver slightly injured. The wagon was dragged some fifty yards along the track, and sustained no damage.—Baltimore Patriot.

A SAD ACCIDENT.—A boy named John D. Hartman, about 12 years of age, was run over at the corner of Front and Baltimore streets, this morning, by a cart loaded with salt, and almost instantly killed.—Ibid.

GREAT MEETING OF THE SMITHS.—All persons bearing the name of SMITH, are requested to meet on Boston Common, on the afternoon of the 4th March, at 4 o'clock, for the purpose of forming an association to ascertain if there is not some large amount of property about to be left to them, by some of the family expected shortly to die in England. By order, JOHN SMITH Sec'y.—Boston Post.

We have a regiment in this city, of Smiths, which could make good use of any thing in that way.—N. Y. Sun

☞And several out this way.

A bill has passed both branches of the Legislature of Michigan reducing the rate of interest to six per cent.

A GREAT LIGHT.—The Nantucket Inquirer says the light of the fire in Boston. was seen by the watch in both the towers of that place. The distance is about ninety miles.

OBITUARY.

MRS. A. P. SOWERS.

For the information of friends at a distance, will you please publish the demise of sister Ann P. Sowers, consort of Daniel Sowers, and Daughter of Col. Robert Patterson of Fayette Co. Pa. She departed this life in the bounds of the Pittsburgh Mission on the evening of the 13th of Feb. 1847, in the 37th year of her age, leaving a kind christian husband, several children and many sympathising friends to mourn her loss.

Sister Sowers embraced Religion in the M. P. Church, Bridgeport, Fayette County Pennsylvania, some 15 years ago.—After which she joined the M. E. Church—but subsequently joined with her husband the M. P. Church and continued a faithful member of the same to her death—which was one of great peace.—Though very sudden and unexpected by all present. She sweetly fell asleep in the arms of Jesus her Saviour in whom she had long confided. The occasion was improved by a short discourse upon the suddenness of the call, the frailty of man and his consequent need of speedy preparation for death. Her remains were deposited in the M. P. grave yard Pittsburgh. WM. BROWNING.

Birmingham, Pa., March 3d, 1847.

RAILROAD ACCIDENT.—The snow plough and first engine of the train from Norwich to Worcester, were thrown off the track on Wednesday. The second engine followed, and being turned round, capsized the tender, and threw the tank on the engineer, John Driscoll, crushing him to death.

NOTICES.

Miami Circuit, Ohio Conference.—We have a protracted meeting appointed to be held at our new Church, 4 miles west of Troy, commencing, April 10, to which we invite Br. Young, our President, Br. S. P. Kezerta, and as many more of our brethren as can attend. Br. Young is also desired to fill an appointment at or near Logansville. J. W. THORNBURGH.

Delaware Circuit, Muskingum Conference. The President's meeting will be held at Westbrook's School House, seven miles west of Homer, and three from Lock.

Our third Quarterly Meeting will be held in the neighborhood of Br. Langwell's, three miles south of Eden, commencing the last Saturday in May, (29th.) To this meeting we invite T. Potter, S. Catlin, S. Lancaster, A. K. Earl, A. S. Robinson. We have no ordained Elder on this Circuit, and have sustained some disadvantage on account of it. I give notice at this early period, that the brethren may have time to arrange their business and attend. Don't fail to come.

WM. HATFIELD.

Waynesburgh Circuit, Pittsburgh Conference.—We contemplate commencing a meeting in Waynesburgh, on the 19th of March, to be continued 2 weeks. To this meeting we respectfully invite Brs. P. T. Laishley, N. Gillespie, J. V. Evans, D. R. Helmick, R. T. Simonton, S. Clawson, J. C. Hazlett, T. Maple, and all other travelling and local brethren who can make it convenient to attend. The reason why we appoint this meeting to continue so long, and invite so many preachers, this is the place appointed to hold our next Annual Conference—we want a revival in this place. Better come and help us than have to preach our funeral when you come to Conference. Come, brethren, and help us.

W. A. PORTER.

GREENVILLE MISSION, OHIO DISTRICT.—Our second quarterly meeting will be held at New Madison, Darke county, commencing, March 27th, to meet the President's visit. We invite Br's. J. Flood, I. Hunt, G. Thornburg, W. Pelan, Wilford Young, J. Q. A. Yonkey. S. P. KEZERTA.

EVANSVILLE CIRCUIT, PITTS. CONF.—The next Quarterly meeting will commence at the White Oak appointment on the first of May, to which we invite Brs. P. T. Laishley—D. R. Helmick—Jno. Clark, H. Reger,—A. Lister—R. M. Walker—M. Lucas, with all others that can attend. Come over Brethren and help us. And if either of the brethren has Hymn Books or Disciplines, he will find sale for them at our meeting.

A. J. WAREN, Supt.

PRESIDENTIAL APPOINTMENTS.

Pittsburgh District.

Should it please God to spare my life, and give health to my family, I will try to fill the following appointments.

Fayette	"	14th	March
Wheeling Circuit.		1st Sunday in April.
Tyler	"	2d	" "
Harrisville	"	3d	" "
Mill Creek	"	4th	" "
Buchanon	"	1st	" in May
Braxton	"	2d	" "
Greenbrier	"	3d	" "
Huntersville	"	4th	" "
Valley	"	5th	" "

GEO. BROWN.

Ohio Conference.

Presidential Visitation.

Cincinnati	March	13 & 14.
Lebanon Station,	"	17. Night.
Twin Creek "	"	20 & 21.
Greenville Mission,	"	27 & 28.
Miami Circuit,	April	10.
Lima "	"	17.
Kalida "	"	24.
Maumee Mission,	May	1.
Portage Circuit,	"	8.
Mt. Blanchard "	"	15.
Richwood "	"	22.
Union "	"	29.
Springfield "	June	5.
Miami "	"	12.

I Request the Superindendents, on the above Cts. to give notice through the Western Recorder, where their meetings will be held in their Charges. J. M. YOUNG.

Indiana District.

MR. EDITOR: Please state that by divine permission, I will fill the following appointments.

Sugar Creek		March	14th
Laughrey	Mission	"	21th
Flat Rock	Circuit	"	28th
White Lick	"	April	11th
Mill Creek	"	"	18th
White River	"	"	25th

Will Br. W. B. Evans inform me by letter or otherwise the place of the appointment on White River Ct. T. SHIPP.

Muskingum District.

BR. BASSETT: Please insert in the Recorder, the following list of appointments which I will fill, if able so to do.

2nd	Sunday	March	Otsego Circuit.
3rd	"	"	Lancaster "
4th	"	"	Zanesville "
1st	"	April	Newark "
7th	Wednesday	"	Delaware "
2nd	Sunday	"	Frederick "
4th	"	"	Licking "
28th	Wednesday	"	Mt. Zion "
1st	Sunday	May	Coshocton "
2nd	"	"	Pleasant hill "

GEO. CLANCY, Pres.

MAHONING MISSION.—Br. Clancy, the President, is informed that I wish to be released from my field of labor, on account of the state of my health, which has been very poor for some time, and no prospect of being any better.

DANIEL RICHARDSON.

OTSEGO CIRCUIT.—The second quarterly meeting will be held at Hopewell M. H. 10 miles north east of Zanesville, including the 2d Sabbath, 14th of March. The visit of Br. Clancy, is expected at that time and place.

BUFORD CT. O. DIS.—Our second quarterly meeting will be held at Liberty Meeting House, commencing March 13th, 1847. Ministerial aid is solicited.

W. G. FOWLER, Supt.

ZANESVILLE CIRCUIT.—The President Br. Clancy will be expected to attend a meeting at Brownsville, on the last Saturday and Sunday in March, as per his appointment.

COLUMBIA CT. MUSK. CON.—Our President is informed that his appointment will be at Graham's station, on the Ohio river. We also purpose holding a two days' meeting at Athens Bridge, March 20th and 21st. We invite Brs. H. T. Lawson, C. J. Sears, S. Means, W. Sears, J. W. Southard, F. Edwards, and any other brethren who can attend. S. ELLIOTT.

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT.

LETTERS RECEIVED.

J. S. Hudson. G. S. Webster, C. Allen, J. Hibbard, J. W. Southard, two, Z. Ragan, J. F. Bane, one subscriber, per W. Munhall; J. Thompson, Anon, F. Sill, J. Gay, 1 subscriber; W. W. Tipton, J. H. Hamilton, J. Swaney, two subscribers and cash; S. W. Thornburgh, one subscriber; T. Hanna, J. H. Webster, two subscribers; W. Hatfield, one subscriber; G. Wheatly, A. M'Caine, E. Y. Reese, W. Browning, N. Watson, O. Warrington, two subscribers; N. Gillespie, two subscribers, pay for one.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS.

From	For	Pays to	Vol.	No.	$ cts.
J. F. Bane,	L. Bancroft,	8	21	1	00
S. Thompson,		9	6	2	00
J. Gay, Ia.,	D. G. Oaks,	9	21	1	00
W. W. Tipton,		8	52	1	00
J. H. Hamilton,	T. Taylor,	8	52	4	00
Jas. Swaney,	S. Biggerstaff,	8	52	1	00
"	John Swaney,	8	52	1	00
J. H. Webster,	T. Done,	8	52	2	00
"	T. Mills,	9	19	2	00
"	D. Davis,	8	24	2	00
S. W. Thornburgh,	G. Fleshour,	8	52	2	00
T. Hanna,	M. M. Laughlin,	8	52	2	00
"	T. S. Belch,	8	52	2	00
"	J. A. Dohrman,	8	52	2	00
"	M. E. Lucas,	7	52	2	00
Guthries & Large, Putnam,		8	52	2	00
Guthries & Buckingham, Putnam,		8	52	2	00
N. Watson, Va.,	D. Kenedy,	8	33	2	00
"	J. A. Lancaster,	8	26	3	00
O. Warrington,	G. V. Witham,	8	35		50
N. Gillespie,	J. Kairns,	9	22	2	00
"	Mrs. N. Shackelford,	9	26	2	00
"	Wm. Durbin,	8	39	2	00

New subscribers this week, 13; discontinuances, 3.

Brother Bane, all right. Much obliged for your agency.

Brother Watson, so soon as we see Brother S., we will seek an adjustment of the account of Brother L. with him.

Brother Southard, we have done just as you requested in your last letter.

Brother Gillespie, we send for both your new subscribers, J. K. and W. G., to Morgantown post office. Is that right?

We feel exceedingly thankful to those subscribers who have been prompt in paying, and to those agents who have collected dues for us, and procured us good subscribers.

Will our correspondent at Peru, Ia. inform his postmaster that our place is not near 300 miles off. He always charges us double postage.

Married,

On the 4th inst., by the REV. C. S. CALLIHAN, MR. RICHARD PICRIL, to MISS LEVINIA ANN SMITH; all of Muskingum county, Ohio.

On Tuesday, February 9, in Switzerland county, Ia. by REV. GEORGE WHEATLY, REV. JAMES H. HARRIS, of the Indiana Conference, to MISS JANE MARY M'CULLOUGH, both of the said county.

On Thursday, February 11, by the same, MARTIN POOR, Esq., of Jefferson county, Indiana, to MISS ELIZABETH CLINES, of Scott county.

ROAD NOTICE.

NOTICE is hereby given to the citizens of Newton township, Muskingum county, Ohio, that a petition will be presented to the Trustees of said township, at their sitting in April, 1847, praying for said Trustees to appoint such persons as the law requires, to view and lay out a township road in said township, commencing at the township line between Hopewell and Newton townships, at the corner, between Peter Stine and John Thomas, running thence to the north east corner of land owned by George M. Crooks, on the same route now open, and then to intersect the old Lancaster road at or near a stone bridge at the foot of John Williams' hill.

March 4, 1847.

SACRED MELODEON.

WE have received from the publishers, 50 copies of this excellent collection of Spiritual Songs, compiled by Brs. Joel Dalbey and J. B. Peat of the Ohio Conference, and lately published at Cincinnati. For sale at the office of the Western Recorder, by the dozen or single.

NEW FIRM.

A. A. GUTHRIE, G. BUCKINGHAM and G. N. GUTHRIE announce that they have formed a partnership for the transaction of MERCANTILE BUSINESS under the firm of

GUTHRIE, BUCKINGHAM & CO.

They respectfully invite their friends and the public generally, to the old stand of A. A. GUTHRIE & Co., (recently GUTHRIE'S & LARGE,) where it is their purpose to keep a large assortment of the CHEAPEST and BEST goods in the market.

Putnam, O. January 1, 1847.

PROSPECTUS

OF THE LITERARY EMPORIUM.

A COMPENDIUM OF

Religious, Literary and Philosophical Knowledge.

IN the first place, light literature will find no place in its pages, i. e., love tales, literary trash, &c. Secondly, sectarianism will not be admitted into the Emporium; or, in other words, it will favor no particular sect; but it will advocate the religion of the Bible in the strongest terms, and will urge the necessity not only of a change of heart, but a virtuous and holy life, in order to be truly happy in this world and to be prepared for that which is to come.—In regard to its literary character, it is designed to be of such a nature, as to water the thirsty soul that is studiously endeavoring to acquire a knowledge of man in his past and present condition; also some information in relation to the different sciences and arts, and the variety of the works of nature, with such miscellaneous reading as will invigorate the facultics of the mind, give scope to the imagination, while it shall address itself to the good sense of all who desire to be truly elevated by reading.

Our object in the beginning was to establish a sound literature, which we deem of much importance to the future destiny of this country. We bless God that he has smiled on our efforts: for although the Emporium has been in existence but two years, and has just entered upon the third, it has already attained a circulation of fifteen thousand, which is unequalled in the history of Magazines. It is got up in better style, and contains more reading, and from abler pens, than any other magazine of its price in the United States.

Christian Friend, we hope you will aid us in the extensive circulation and support of a work, which we think calculated to enrich the mind, and inspire the soul to the love of virtue and its Divine Author. The very extensive circulation of light and frothy literature, as it is called, is taking by wholesale, the very life blood of the morality and religion of the youth of our country. Is it not time for Christians to act in this matter?

CONTRIBUTORS.—The Literary Emporium contains articles, original or selected, from the following, among other distinguished authors:

J. G. Whittier, Seba Smith, R. S. St. John, Mrs. Judson, Rev. J. N. Danforth. Mrs. E. O. Smith, Miss Welby, Mrs. F. H. Green, Mrs. Stewart, Rev. S. Olin, Prof. McClintock, Rev. J. P. Durbin, Elihu Burritt, Wm. C. Bryant, N. P. Willis, S. Galloway, A. M., Washington Irving, Rev. Dr. Bethune, Rev. L. L. Hamline, Rev. E. Thomson, Rev. T. Dick, D. D., Rev H. Winslow, Rev. Wm. B. Sprague, Rev. T. H. Stockton, Rev. Rob't. Lee, Rev. B. F. Teft, Mrs. L. H. Sigourney, Mrs. E. C. Embury, Miss Sedgwick, Emeline Smith, Eliza Cook, Miss Baker.

The Emporium is published monthly, at $1,00 a year; $5,00 allowed to any person who will obtain fifteen paying subscriber, and at the same rate for a greater or less number. One hundred enterprising and honest Agents wanted for the Emporium and other valuable works. All letters, orders, &c., should be addressed to

J. K. WELLMAN,
Editor and Proprietor, No 116 Nassau-st, N. Y.

Horse Stolen.—$20 Reward.

REV. J. I. STILLIANS, requests us to state that on the night of Jan. 19th a large dapple gray horse, 16¼ hands high was taken out of his stable on Hacker's Creek, Lewis Co. Va. Said horse is 6 or 7 years old this spring, a little crease fallen, with a white mark 5 or 6 inches long on one of his shoulders, caused by the collar a wind gall on the out side of his left hind leg, near the pastern joint, a horse of good carriage. Any person finding him, and returning him to the owner, or where he can get him will receive the above reward.

GEORGE CONCLIN,
BOOKSELLER AND PUBLISHER,
Stationer, Binder, and
BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURER,
No. 39 Main Street, Cincinnati.

KEEPS on hand Books published by the Methodist Protestant Church—such as
CHURCH HYMN BOOKS,
REVIVAL " "
DISCIPLINES,
EVANS' QUESTIONS & ANSWERS, &c.

ALSO—Just received—A supply of the CHRISTIAN WORLD in 3 Vols. with Portraits of the Wesleys, &c., by REV. THOS. H. STOCKTON.

For Sale.

PROPERTY IN IRVILLE. BLACKSMITHS, ATTEND.

THE SUBSCRIBER, intending to remove to the west, offers for sale his property in Irville, Muskingum County, O., consisting of three town lots, with a two story frame dwelling house, a good well of water and a pump at the door; a stable, and blacksmith shop, being a very good stand for business, having no competition. A desirable situation for a blacksmith. Irville is situated in the midst of a populous and healthful section of country. The property will be sold low at private sale. Please call soon and see. SAMUEL MOORE.

Irville, Feb. 25, 1847.

MEMORIA TECHNICA:

Or, the Art of Abbreviating those Studies which give the greatest labor to the Memory; including Numbers, Historical Dates, Geography, Astronomy, Gravities, &c.; also Rules for Memorizing Technicalities, Nomenclatures, Proper Names, Prose, Poetry, and Topics in general.—Embracing all the available Rules found in Mnemonics, or Mnemotechny of Ancient and Modern Times. To which is added a Perpetual Almanac for Two Thousand Years of Past Time and Time to Come. Adapted to the use of Schools. By LORENZO D. JOHNSON. Second edition, revised and improved.—Boston.

PRICE—50 CENTS.

In presenting to the public the "Memoria Technica," which, in some respects, may be said to contain a new theory of instruction, the publishers beg leave to direct attention to some of its peculiarities.

The art of Aiding the Memory, and the deduction of Rules by attention to which it may be made infinitely more available, has been a subject of public interest, and has received the particular attention of a high order of minds in almost every age of the world.

Yet this is the first work of the kind which has ever been prepared in this country for the use of Schools. Whelpley and Worcester in their Compends of Universal History, (for the want of something better,) introduced an abstract of Gray's System of Mnemonics, which like Gourand's, relates only to the memory of figures.

In preparing this work for the press, it has been the object of the author to adapt his illustrations to Common School instruction, and if possible, to lessen some of the difficulties in acquiring useful knowledge, without lessening mental culture. And the hope is cherished that it may be generally adopted as a text-book in schools, by which every teacher of youth may be made a "professor" of all the rules for aiding Memory, that can be made available to a student while acquiring an education.

Should it be asked, does this system really improve the memory? or is it an arrangement by which we lessen the labor of memory? the true answer is, it does both.—In substituting words for numbers, an immense amount of labor is saved to the memory, and consequently of time also. But it will be impossible for the pupil to run through the System in the several sciences to which it is applied, without giving vigorous exercise and additional strength to the power of recollection.

"I mention," says the author, "as illustrative facts, that by this new art, I once committed to memory in a single morning, the whole of the propositions contained in the first three books of Euclid, and with such perfection, that I could for years afterwards specify the number of the book on hearing the proposition named, and could recite the proposition on hearing the number and the book; and I have frequently, in mixed companies, repeated backwards and forwards from fifty to an hundred unconnected words, which have been but once called over to me. I may also add, to prove the simplicity of the plan, that I taught two of my own children to repeat fifty unconnected words in a first lessen of not more than half an hour's continuance."

The work is not intended to take the place of any school book now in use, nor is the system calculated to supercede any study now pursued in schools, but introduced as an auxiliary to them all; for aside from its application to numbers, an acquaintance with the theory of prompter cannot fail to aid the learner in the pursuit of every branch of useful knowledge.

The work contains a vast number of facts so classified and arranged, as to render it as a book of reference, merely, richly worth its cost.

We expect to have a supply of the above work, forwarded to us for sale, in Putnam, at 50 cents per copy. when we find there is demand for them.

PROSPECTUS OF THE

OHIO CULTIVATOR,

Vol. III—For 1847.

A semi-monthly Journal, devoted to the promotion of Agriculture, Horticulture & Domestic Industry.

PUBLISHED AT COLUMBUS, OHIO,

By M. B. Bateham, Editor and Proprietor,

Assisted by the contributions of a very large number of practical and scientific writers,—farmers, horticulturists, &c.

Illustrated with numerous Engravings.

TERMS—One Dollar per year—Four Copies for Three Dollars: payments invariably in advance.

THE OHIO CULTIVATOR has now become so well known to the farmers and friends of agriculture in Ohio, that it is unnecessary to say any thing of its character or design. Grateful for the encouragement he has thus far received, the editor and proprietor takes this occasion to inform his friends and patrons, that he is determined to put forth new efforts in their service, and make his paper for the coming year still more deserving of their continued liberal patronage. Besides improvement in the matter for its columns, the mechanical appearance of the paper will be improved by the use of new type, and more illustrations. It will contain the latest and most reliable intelligence respecting the crops and the markets, both in this country, and in Europe, so as to aid the farmer in deciding at what time and price to dispose of his productions. This information alone will be worth, to most farmers, many times the price of subscription, especially now that prices are so much effected by foreign intelligence. In addition to all this, the editor believes that his increased experience and knowledge of the agricultural condition of the State, together with his extended correspondence, will enable him to make each succeeding volume of the Cultivator more valuable than the one that preceded it.

The influence of the paper, wherever it has been generally read, is admitted to have been highly salutary. It has began to awaken a spirit of inquiry and improvement among the farmers, and inspire them with more just and elevated conceptions of the character, duties and pleasures of their noble occupation. As evidence of this it may be stated, that during the past year, Agricultural Societies have been organized in twenty counties of this State; and there is reason to believe that as many more will be formed during the year to come. These associations, in connection with the State Board of Agriculture, and the Cultivator as an organ for the diffusion of intelligence, cannot fail to exert such an influence on the minds and the practice of the farming community, as will in a few years place our young Giant State in that position which she is by Nature designed to occupy—the first State of the Union in agricultural wealth and lasting prosperity.

Farmers of Ohio! Who among you are willing to have no part in this onward march of improvement? Who among you are willing to deprive yourselves and your families of that 'knowledge which is power,' and the great means of progress and elevation, for the sake of the small pittance which that knowledge may cost? And who of you that desire to see this work advance, will not make an effort to arouse your neighbors from the mental torpor that rests upon too many of them? The work is not difficult—pursuade them to read papers devoted to their interests—☞send on their names, with your own, as subscribers to the Ohio Cultivator, and you may rely upon it they will soon begin to awake—to inquire and think—and not only become better farmers, but more intelligent and agreeable neighbors.

Address, M. B. BATEHAM,
Columbus, Ohio.

POETRY.

Written for the Western Recorder.

"FEAR NOT."

Fear not, for I am with thee; be not dismayed, for I am thy God: ISAIAH, XLI: 10.

THOU hast been with me, O my God,
Through all the devious ways,
That my unstable feet have trod,
In bright or gloomy days.

With me when o'er the verdant lea
I ran a thoughtless child
To cull with merry hearted glee,
The lily blooming wild.

Or rosy youth around my brow
A garland fair had wreathed,
With flowers of sweet and lovely hue,
That rich with fragrance breathed.

And now in manhood's vigor warm,
I dwell beneath thy face,
Secure in all the world's alarm,
And strengthened by thy grace.

Amid the wild Atlantic's wave,
The sweeping tempest's gloom,
When none but Thee our bark could save,
From shipwreck's fearful doom.

When sails were rent, and masts were bowed,
And loud the winds did moan,
I saw Thee through the gathered cloud,
And smiled amid the storm.

When first I bowed my trembling form,
With bleeding bosom riven,
An erring youth, before Thy throne,
My sins were all forgiven.

My life has been a checquered scene,
And tears have fallen fast,
But with me Thou hast ever been,
To cheer the gloomy past.

Still will I shelter 'neath thy wing
When storms and tempests lower,
And to thy sacred cross I'll cling
In sorrow's darkest hour.

Lo! undismayed my steps shall be,
To realms of glorious day,
Strengthened and kept, O Lord, by Thee,
While marching on the way.

"Fear not!" O no, why should I fear!
When with me Thou art still,
My weak and fainting mind to cheer,
And guard my life from ill.

And when upon my withered cheek,
Death's human vapors roll,
"Fear not!" shall bid me cease to weep,
Cheer my departing soul. ANON.

Solitudinarian Cabin, February, 1847.

The Poetry of the Poor.

BY R. NICOLL.

We are lowly—very lowly—
Misfortune is our crime;
We have been trodden under foot
From all recorded time.
A yoke upon our neck is laid,
A burden to endure;
To suffer is our legacy—
The portion of the poor!

We are lowly—very lowly—
And scorned from day to day—
Yet we have something of our own,
Power cannot take away.
By tyrants we are toiled to death—
By cold and hunger killed;
But peace is in our hearts—it speaks
Of duties all fulfilled!

We are lowly—very lowly—
Nor house nor home have we—
But there's a heritage for us
While we have eyes to see.
They cannot hid the lovely stars—
Words in creation's book—
Although they hold their fields and lands
Corrupted by our look!

We are lowly—very lowly—
And yet the fairest flowers
That by the wayside raise their eyes—
Thank God they still are ours;
Ours is the streamlet's mellow voice,
And ours the common dew.
We still can gaze on hill and plain,
And field and meadow too.

We are lowly—very lowly—
But when the cheerful spring
Comes forth with flowers upon her feet,
To hear the throstle sing;
Although we dare not seek the shade
Where haunt the forest deer,
The waving leaves we still can see,
The humming birds can hear.

We are lowly—very lowly—
Our hedge-row paths are gone;
Where woodbines laiy their fairy hands
The hawthorn's nest upon.
Yet tender mercies still are felt,
And heaven doth endure,
And hears the prayers that upward rise
From the afflicted poor!

Ode to Nothing.

Mysterious Nothing! how shall I define
Thy shapeless, baseless, placeless emptiness,
Nor form, nor color, sound, nor size are thine,
Nor words, nor figures, can thy voice express;
But though we cannot thee to aught compare,
A thousand things to thee may likened be,
And though thou art with nobody, nowhere,
Yet half mankind devote themselves to thee.
How many books thy history contain,
How many heads thy many plans pursue,
What laboring hand thy portion only gain,
What busy crowds thy doings only do.
To thee, the great, the proud, the giddy bend,
And—like my sonnet—all in nothing end.

Turk's Island Gazette.

TEMPERANCE.

Written for the Western Recorder.

HORRIBLE.

MR. EDITOR: Sir, a few days since the people of this vicinity were shocked by a horrid spectacle. The remains of a human being was found, with the face, neck, bowels and thighs eaten by hogs, and an empty jug close by. From every circumstance it appeared that the body had lain there for more than a fortnight. He obtained a jug of whisky in this place, went to a neighbor's half a mile South of this, requested permission to go to bed, after sleeping for some length of time, he requested the woman to give him some drink from his jug but she told him she could not. He arose and left the house taking his jug with him. The body was found as above described, not more than 150 rods from the house, in the woods more than two weeks after.

On investigating the matter the deceased was found to be a man of middle age, named J. Welch, a native of Ireland, a bachelor, of good education, kind and gentlemanly in his appearance when sober, a carpenter and joiner by trade. He has wealthy and respectable relatives residing in Pennsylvania, engaged in the mercantile business in offices of Trust &c. He has resided in this vicinity for some two or three years, but, Oh the destroyer, he was addicted to intemperance.

What a warning to erring mortals. When I reflect that God will bring every evil work into Judgment, and He has declared in his holy word that no drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of God and "cursed is he that putteth the bottle to his neighbors mouth." Beware you that deal out death to your fellow men, how can you face them in the judgment? How can you stand when the Judge of all the earth shall appear? S. T.

Bermington, Del. Co. O. Feb. 27, 1847.

THE DYING CHRISTIAN.—The believer's death may be compared not so much to the setting sun that sinks behind the darkened West, obscured among the tempests of the sky, as to the morning star that melts away into the light of heaven.

Ecclesiastical.

Written for the Western Recorder.

CHURCH DIVISION.

THINGS TO BE CONSIDERED.

NO. XII.

MR. EDITOR: In examining the question, as to what is the great object to be obtained by dividing the church, as contemplated by some, we observe,

1. That it cannot be to obtain a position where we can more successfully operate against the system of American slavery in the United States; or the existence of slavery in the Southern branch of the Methodist Protestant Church.

Our relation with the Meth. Prot. Church, as it now exists, in no way interferes with our political relations, or action: and therefore a change in our church relations cannot disencumber us from any impediments to our political action against slavery, because no such exist.

And the Genessee Annual Conference has solemnly declared before the world, in conventional action, her firm conviction that our present relation at the North, with the South, affords us the best possible opportunity, under all existing circumstances, for direct and efficient action against slavery as it there exists in the church: And we have, as yet, no competent evidence afforded us, of the incorrectness, of that position. It may be urged by some, that the results of the late General Conference afford sufficient proof of its incorrectness, inasmuch, as the efforts there put forth, failed to secure in their immediate results the desired object. To this we observe that the action of that body upon the subject of slavery, but affords us proof of the fact, that there was not a majority of its members who sympathised with us in our views upon that subject. But this is far from being evidence that the North did not, and could not operate directly against slavery in the southern branch of the Meth. Prot. Church. Indeed, the highly esteemed brother, by whom the writer had the honor of being represented in that body, has assured us, that he felt well satisfied that his energies were never, more directly and efficiently employed, against the monster sin—slavery, for the same length of time, than they were in his deliberations and actions in that Conference. And why should we doubt it? Although he has been an active anti-slavery man for years, he had never before met the evil, so nearly face to face, and consequently could not reach it. In all reason and charity, can it be consistently supposed that the faithful efforts of the North there, and then, made against the existence of slavery in the southern branch of the M. P. C., which kept some forty or fifty of the most influential ministers and members of that portion of the church, trembling on the "anxious seat" under the scorching condemnations of God's truth, and the faithful rebukes of his truth-loving servants for two weeks, or more, are no proper and direct action against slavery!! If not, then the condemning and preaching against any evil, is no action against it! But who will believe such a declaration? And who will pretend, that the action of the northern delegates in the late Gen. Con. against slavery, will eventually effect no more towards the removal of that evil from the church, than as though such efforts had not been made? And certainly, they could not have been made, but for the existence of that relation which some are seeking to annihilate. Are we to conclude that an exception to the bold unqulified declaration of Jehovah, "that my word shall not return unto me void"—has been at last discovered in the General Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church!

And in 1846, is it found that God has borne false witness to the world of the power of his own truth!! Let the one who will volunteer to convict the Almighty of such disingenuousness step forth, and arraign his final Judge, if he will, at the tribunal of human adjudication! And the heavens and the earth will award to him their united benisons, if successful, for undeceiving their long cherished credulity and love! E. A. W.

Written for the Western Recorder.

LETTER FROM REV. LABAN SMITH.

DEAR BROTHER BASSETT:—How many times I have wished that I was a good writer, that I might write a little for your most excellent paper, on the subject of slavery. There are so many of your correspondents* who say they believe slavery to be the worst of sins, and the next breath undertake to defend it, and often from the Bible; so it looks to me. I think I see a great inconsistency in their arguments. If I should undertake to show it, they might take advantage of my manner of communication, and make me appear ridiculous, not on the merits of the argument, but my style. Now, for any man to say a thing is a great sin, and say the next breath we must have nothing to do with it,—it is not our business to meddle with it; I ask, who can believe such to be sincere? Such is the case with many of your correspondents, unless I misunderstand them. It seems to me they take the same ground that our late Gen. Conference took, on the Slavery question, passing condemnation upon it, and seemingly, the next breath justifying it. A. M'Caine sees it so, and is showing, to the full glare of the wide world, the folly of such doings, though by wise men enacted. After all is said and done, the conclusion seems to be that the Gen. Conference has no business to pass its judgment on moral questions. Who then,? Not an An. Con. of course, Who then? Not a Quar. Conference, of course, You see that all those conferences are representative bodies, composed of the back bone of the church, yet have nothing to do with moral questions. What an idea, that? Who then? O, now I see, the classes. No Conference has any business with their decisions. Now do you suppose that even great men can make the world believe that? No, Sir. I am glad there is wisdom and religion enough yet, in the M. P. Church to condemn such doings. Now I would not wish to be understood as doubting the sincerity of those to whom I refer. By no means. But on the subject of slavery they must be in the wrong. Now I hold myself ready to prove to the church and world the position I take on the subject of slavery. And yet must I abide by it? God forbid. I rejoice that a portion of the church of my choice is getting right on this subject. But I hear the alarm of, take care—mind what you are doing. I wonder if such men thought so in the year 1830. Well—I think there are as wise and good men now as there were then. Now we all believe in the improvement of the church. Let us get right, and keep right. There is something said now days about church division. What is the alarm? Who is dividing the church? The church is divided already in sentiment. And as long as we stand in connection with Slavery, every time we meet in conference, or any other great meeting, we must have a religious quarrel.† For my part, I am sick of it. And as Br. Armstrong, of Laporte, said in a letter to you not long since, he had thought he could live better out of the church than in it. So say I. But I think I shall wait another year. For my part, I cannot see what good it will do for us to stand as we do with Slavery. It is said if we stand in connection with it, we can do the slaveholder more good than if it were otherwise. If so, we can do more good to the greatest sinners in the world by being in church connection with them. I cannot agree to such doctrine. I am religiously what I am on this subject. I think I can prove to any reasonable mind, that there is not a greater sin ever committed by man than holding his fellow man in bondage; A. M'Caine to the contrary notwithstanding. I do not write to be seen in argument, but to let you know why I think a Methodist Free Church at the north is called for, now, sooner the better. We cannot go much further with our principles here, as we are, for we are laughed at, professing freedom and equal rights, and at the same time be in church fellowship with slaveholders.

Yours, &c. LABAN SMITH.

Pine Lake, Mich. Jan. 24, 1847,

*Not many, Br. Smith. [ED.

†Why, you surprise us. We feel so good natured, we would not quarrel with you, nor any one else, respecting slavery, nor any thing else. [ED.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Benefits of a Settled Ministry.

The minister of reconciliation is God's chosen medium through which to convey the blessings of salvation to a dying world. There are other means of grace, both merciful and afflictive, but all other human means seem to stand related to the gospel ministry, as cyphers at the right hand of a numerical figure—or rather, as figures of less local value. As God can send no greater blessing upon the human family, than a faithful, pious and efficient ministry,—so no greater subject can occupy our attention, than a wise disposal of this blessing so as to accomplish the greatest amount of good. The word "good" is the only word that measures the idea of a minister of Jesus Christ. It implies wisdom, prudence, discretion, firmness, zeal,—more, even something that is pure and God-like. A good minister of Jesus Christ will labor to overcome all errors, mainly by presenting a more excellent way. If a bushel of chaff is presented, he will bring forward a measure of wheat, and sensible people will be at no loss to judge between them. If it is maintained that a settled ministry is comparatively useless—that the ebbings and flowings, changes, and interchanges of an Itinerancy is better than the constant, faithful labors of a pastor, we have only to look to the moral condition of society where an application of better systems have been tried, to arrive at a right conclusion.

Within an hour or two's ride of my place of residence are six flourishing villages the moral condition of which, presents a decided argument. It is said of A. B. and C. that a "great moral change has come over them."

There is heard at no time, any profane language from young or old. No intoxicating drinks are sold or used—all is quiet and peaceful on the Sabbath. A Sabbath School is held on every christian Sabbath. Often a lecture is published, the object of which is to set forth the unhallowed system of whole sale murder by war or the distressed condition of the oppressed, or a Temperance discourse,

Every week there is a prayer meeting and at the sound of the church going bell, may be seen the delightful crowd pouring forth from every hamlet urging their way to the consecrated spot where the waters of life are poured forth in rich and flowing strains. The minister lives among and in the hearts of his people. He visits them. He fans the flame of devotion. He thinks the prayer meeting this week will be more interesting still, as he has found another case of seriousness. He talks with the children, secures their respect, and attention to the S. School. And above all, stamps the seal of all he says and does, by his own example.

But how is it with D. E. and F? why, they have preaching once in 2 or 4 weeks by the Itinerant minister. He puts up almost always with Br. M. and is off early the next morning. He preaches the right kind of "gospel sermons,"—does not drag into his discourse any "niggerism" and leaves us to use our own "liberty, eat and drink, buy and sell, what we please," &c. No Sabbath School—though once begun, could not be sustained; for they who ought to be there to lead, gather in groops to discuss the affairs of the nation, and to fix a proper approbrium on the reformers of the age. But this is but a faint picture of what every where exists under the circumstances above described.

By way of conclusion, we see 1st. how great a blessing the christian ministry is to a perishing world. We see 2nd, Where a wrong disposition is made of this blessing, the wreck of society—the irregularity of youth—the neglect of gospel ordinances, the contempt in which christian ministers will be held—the undervaluing of the gospel—the general retrograde of morals, and sinking of virtue. 3d. Where a right disposition of this inestimable talent is made, the increased attendance at church—attention paid to learning, visiting the sick, the neighborhood prayer meetings, seriousness in families—frequent conversions—the love and respect that children are taught to exercise towards their parents and their pastors—the deep rooting of good principles in the minds of the people in general. T. S. JOHNSON.

Hamersville, Brown Co. O. Feb. 15, 1847.

EDUCATIONAL.

National Education--Gov. Slade's Agency.

The friends of education have been greatly gratified to learn that the Hon. Wm. Slade, late Governor of Vermont, has relinquished political life, to devote himself to the interests of popular education in our country. The following outline of the plan to be pursued will therefore be interesting:

The enterprise is conducted by a Committee of gentlemen from five different denominations, located at Cincinnati, and styled the Central Committee for Promoting National Education. Gov. Slade is Secretary and General Agent of this Committee.

The object of this organization is to devise and carry out measures for securing the proper education of more than two million American children who are destitute of schools. The two leading measures aimed at are, first, putting in motion agencies that shall raise up schools and create a demand for teachers; and secondly, securing a supply of properly qualified teachers to meet this demand.

Attention will be first directed to the West, because there population is increasing fastest, and there also, is to be the future seat of empire. A great and increasing interest is now felt at the East, in behalf of the educational wants of the West, and lest this interest might be perverted to individual, or sectarian projects, the present organization is composed of gentlemen from different denominations, and the funds collected will in no case be applied till wise and well informed men at the West, of different denominations, and resident on the fields of action, have been consulted.

There are portions of the West where schools and teachers can scarcely be excelled and where no aid is needed. But there are other portions where, though there are many ready to contribute money and effort for the cause of education, yet they are a small minority, and in communities where wealth is in the form of lands and produce, where but little money circulates, where State debts occasion heavy taxes, and where contributions are in constant demand for providing places of worship, school-houses, colleges, roads, bridges, and other material of society, which in older States is already secured. It is in these portions of our country that a liberality is manifested in contributing for such objects, which, considering the relative capital, is rarely equalled at the East. It is hoped and expected that the more favored portions of the West will join their contributions with those raised at the East, in aid of those more destitute.

The first application of the funds must be in employing agencies to raise up schools. In many and very large portions of our country the people would be very willing to pay for schools, and yet, from the engrossing pursuits of other objects, they take no measures to secure them. In other large portions no value is felt for education, and ignorant parents are raising ignorant children without any wish for schools. In such districts experience has shown, that the employment of agents to awaken an interest by lectures and other methods, and to organize schools and send for suitable teachers is in the highest degree successful, and this method will be pursued as far as means will allow.

What a demand would be made for teachers, were the wants of our country to be fully supplied, may be conjectured from these facts. Ohio is the best supplied with schools of any Western State, & yet, last year her Secretary of State ascertained that one hundred and thirty thousand children in that State were without schools. Allowing the ordinary proportion of pupils to teachers, five thousand teachers are now needed in Ohio alone, to supply that State as Massachusetts is supplied; while to furnish the destitutions of our whole country, as presented by the census, would, at the same rate, demand fifty thousand additional teachers.—Vermont Phœnix.

AGRICULTURAL.

From the Ohio Cultivator.

FRUIT TREES IN WASHINGTON CO. O.

The Burlington Pear—Pioneer Fruit Cultivators—Varieties of Apples—The Bitter rot, &c.

MR. EDITOR:—The first attention of the pioneer farmer, is generally devoted to the production of corn and wheat—usually the careful wife of the western emigrant lays up a small store of peach stones and apple seeds to plant about the prospective home—and not unfrequently the first generation pass away ere any greater progress is made in the introduction of fruit. From these seeds there may originate new and choice varieties. In this way was produced the "Burlingame pear" of great excellence—the first tree of which now stands in sight of Harmar, near the Ohio—and many superior kinds of apples in this county.

But those who first settled this county and region, were not content with relying upon this uncertain source for supply.

In 1792 Israel Putnam, grandson of the hero of that name, made a tour through Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island, for the purpose of procuring scions—which during the winter he sent out by a man coming west, whom he furnished a horse; the man came to Marietta and delivered the scions to judge Fearing, who had a nursery of seedlings already situated near Fort Harmer, after which he absconded with the horse.

In the spring of '93 judge Fearing made good use of them, as did others, who were supplied from this stock. This I believe, was the first introduction of choice varieties of apples into the state. Among these was the Russet, R.I. Greening, Pearmain, Seeknofurther, Spitzenburg, Pippins, &c. [See O. Cult. of Aug. 15, 1846.]

The Russet scions were probably obtained from the orchard of Mr. Putnam's father, Col. Israel Putnam then of Pomfret, Ct., afterwards of Belpre, as I am informed by David Putnam, Esqr. of Harmar, that there were trees of this highly valued fruit in his father's orchard at that time, and that they were simply by the name Russet, without the prefix Roxbury at Putnam.

The Russet has ever been the standard apple here, many more of them are raised than of any other variety; there is great difference in them, some in the same orchard possessing far superior qualities. Among the most famous here are those propagated by the late Col. Nye of Marietta. The general impression is that this in common with other ancient varieties of apple is deteriorating, and some of us have on that account procured a part of our trees from abroad, with what advantage time only will determine.

The fruit business is carried on to considerable extent and with fair profit in this county—large quantities are shipped to distant markets.

The summer apples here are the Early Chandler, Summer sweeting; Harvest and Fall, the great favorite is the Cooper, which for the time it lasts is unrivalled; The English Rambo, is excellent with us in November; We have been introducing some new varieties; The American Pippin or Grindstone, the Willow, Rome Beauty, Golden Gate, Baldwin, &c.; which it is hoped may succeed well for late fall and winter; a great difficulty with the Newton Pippin, is that they are not fair, but covered with dark blotches; The Romanite seems to be peculiarly subject to bitter rot, a disease little understood, and so far remediless, which sweeps off whole orchards. We have many excellent nursery men in this county, and the growth of fruit is greatly on the increase.

This is the season for rabbits to trouble them. I have found rancid grease rubbed on the bodies near the ground a preventive—from some observation I think far dangerous to the tree.

We would be glad to learn something in regard to the bitter rot.

Would it not be well for orchardists and farmers generally who have choice seedlings, to communicate accurate descriptions of the new varieties in their orchards; that we may have the benefit of each others improvement.

Yours D. E. GARDNER.

I WISH WE HAD A REVIVAL.—"I wish we had a revival," and remarks of the like kind, are occasionly heard at the present time, and are indications of good to the cause of Christ. But then the question occurs, how much is a revival of true religion desired? Is it desired as much as Jacob desired to be blessed of the angel with whom he wrestled all night? or as much as the Syrophenician woman desired relief for her daughter? or as much as the father desired aid for his child, when he said with tears, help my unbelief! Jehovah assures us that we shall find him when we seek him with all the heart, and that 'he that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him.'

There is, indeed, nothing more desirable than a revival. Can it not be obtained? Try it with the prophet's faith, when he prayed on the mountain for rain. Try it, ye lovers of Jesus, by bringing all your tithes into the storehouse, by seeking the Lord until he come.—Chris. Watchman. E——

Aim to do your duty, and mankind will give you credit when you fail.

STUPENDOUS FRAUDS ON THE STATE.—A most painful evidence of political profligacy has been disclosed at Albany. The sum and substance of the disclosure is, that the State has been robbed of hundreds of thousands of dollars in canal contracts and in appropriations of State funds by parties acting in concert with engineers. The whole amount of which the State has been defrauded has not yet been ascertained.—N. Y. Sun.

Snow has been seen in Florida only twice in twenty years: so says an exchange.

The Arkansas Banner of the 3d inst., contains an account of a brutal murder committed lately on Isaac N. Legget, of Camden, Ouachita county, in that State.

A short Dialogue on Trials.

A. My present situation is very uncomfortable. I am subjected to daily privations and annoyances.

B. True, your situation has its trials; but did you never consider these may be the hedges by which God fences in your other comforts?

A. Explain your meaning.

B. It may be that God, knowing that you must have trials to keep you from setting your heart on this world, sends trouble on you in the present form, to spare himself and you the necessity of trying in more severe forms. Do you not think it highly probable, for example, that God disciplines some of his children by poverty and perplexity, that he may thus save them from heavier blows, such as wasting sickness, and repeated bitter bereavment?

A. (with tears.) I will endeavor, by the help of God, never to complain again.—Ohio Obs.

Something New.

JUST PUBLISHED

By GEORGE CONCLIN, 39 Main st. Cincinnati,

A NEW HISTORY OF TEXAS.

INCLUDING an account of the late WAR WITH MEXICO, together with other interesting matters relating to that country. This history is published in pamphlet form, 12 mo., containing 152 pages and will be sold cheap.

ALSO—A NEW HISTORY OF OREGON AND CALIFORNIA, (BY LANSFORD HASTINGS) containing a minute description of the different routes to those countries—a description of the soil, products of the soil, Towns, Bays, Harbors, Rivers, Lakes, manners and customs of the inhabitants, &c. &c.

WELLMAN'S ILLUSTRATED BOTANY.

VOL. II., 1847.

EDITED BY J. D. COMSTOCK, M. D.

Author of Botany, Natural Philosphy, Chemistry, Mineralogy, Geology, Natural History, Phyliology, etc., assisted

BY J. C COMSMOCK, ESQ.

THE success of the Illustrated Botany is no longer an experiment, for altho' it has been in existence but one year, it already has a circulation of about five thousand, a sufficient number to warrant its support, which cannot be said of any other work of the kind. Indeed, it is the only work of this character published in this country, which promises stability and a long life. We think the prospects of the second year of the Botany are very flattering. One reason for this opinion is, the fact that it is now very popular, having a large circle of friends. Another very important reason is, the securing of an Editor for the coming year, whose popularity as an author in the various branches of Natural Science, is so extensive as to leave his name familiar to every student in the sciences in this country. We are fully satisfied that the Botany will, under its present Editors, bear the severest criticism, and we intend that it shall become the standard work.

In the course of its publication, it will contain an Introduction to the Natural System of Botany, a thorough Treatise on the interesting and important branch of Vegetable Physiology, Notices on Fossil Botany, and descriptions, both scientific and popular, of numerous species of plants, the properties of which, medicinal and useful, will be fully explained. In short it is intended to present a complete view of the latest and most important facts, discoveries, and theories, in every department of the science.

The whole illustrated by splendid colored engravings, taken from Nature, full size, and finished the highest style of modern art.

This work is designed to be eminently popular in its application, and there is enough of that which is stranger than fiction about it to render it, in no ordinary degree, interesting and instructive.

We do not intend to confine ourselves to the botanical descriptions of each plant, but to make it a thoroughly scientific work, in all the departments of Botany. It will also give information on the cultivation of plants and flowers. In a word, it will comprise the whole science.

TERMS.

This work will be published monthly, with from six to ten flowers, handsomely painted, in each number. Price, $3,00 a year, or two copies sent to one address for $5,00.

☞ A very liberal discount allowed to Agents.

J. K. WELLMAN, Publisher and Proprietor,

Eebruary 13, 1847. No. 116 Nassau-st.

JACOB THORN,

WHOLESALE dealer in all kinds of NOTIONS, No 91, Wilson's Row, the first store below the Court House, is now opening a new and complete assortment of

NOTIONS AND DRY GOODS,

which will be sold wholesale, at prices a little below what they have ever been sold in this place.—Country Merchants and Pedlars, visiting the city are respectfully invited to examine my stock before purchasing elsewhere, among which may be found the following articles:—

500 Packs American solid head Pins.
200,000 Drilled Ey'd Needles, Sharps and Betweens.
2000 Doz Spool Thread.
500 Lbs. Patent do.
800 do. Cotton do.
3000 Doz. Side Combs.
600 do. Fine Ivory do.
500 do. Dressing do.
100 do. Woolen Comforters.
100 Brass Clocks.
1500 Prints (Engravings,) high col'd.
100 Doz. Chapman Strops.
5000 Almanacks.
300 Shawls, different patterns.
100 Gross Knttiug Pins.
4 Bbls. Blacking.
30 Doz. slates.
50 Gt. Gro. Agate Shirt Buttons
500 Coils Bonnet Wire
50 Gross Boot Laces.
500 do. Hooks and Eyes on Cards
100 do. Wood Combs.
200 do. Sherred and G. E. Suspenders
12 Boxes Fire Crackers
12 Doz. Looking-Glasses.
100 Gross Pearl Shirt Buttons.
6 Bales Brown Muslin.
200 Doz. Mitts.

Combs of every description, Buttons, Penknives, Razors, Table and Tea Spoons, Tapes, Eyeletts, Jewsharps, Pencils, Shaving Boxes, Gloves, Ladies cotton Hose, Matches, Dress Handkfs., Laces and Edgings, Spectacles, Thimbles, Beads, Candle Wicking, Night caps, Primers, Calicoes, bleached Muslins, Wafers, &c.

WANTED in exchange for goods at wholesale prices, Feathers, Beeswax, Ginsang, Rags and Hogs Bristles tied up in small bunches, for which will be given twenty-five cents a pound for all that can be brought in good order

Zanesville, O. Nov. 7, 1846.

COME AND SEE!!

THE SUBSCSIBERS offer very low for CASH, STONE WARE or COUNTRY PRODUCE,

35 pieces assorted Cloths, very low,
20 " Jeans,
300 " Prints, cheaper than ever,
100 " Merinos, Alpaccas, De Laines, &c.,
50 " Tweeds and Cassinets,
25 " Flannels,
22 " Check.

Boots, Shoes, Queensware, Groceries, and a great variety of goods not mentioned.

In a word, they have on hand a LARGE STOCK of goods, which they

WISH TO SELL.

To sell them, they must be sold CHEAP, this they will do. J. C. GUTHRIE & SONS, successors to
GUTHRIE'S & BUCKINGHAM.

P.S. We will say to Potters engage not your ware before calling on us. We are dealing EXTENSIVELY in that article, and are determined to buy it on such terms as will prove satisfactory. J. C. G. & S's.

Putnam, O. Jan. 1, 1847.

PROSPECTUS OF THE

LITERARY ATHENÆUM

A NEW AND SPLENDID MONTHLY MAGAZINE,

TO BE EDITED BY THE

Rev. Henry D. Moore, of Philadelphia,—and Rev. Andrew A. Lipscomb, Professor of English Literature and Belle Letters, in the city of Baltimore.

ON the first of January, 1847, the subscribers intend issuing the first number of a spendid Monthly Magazine, to be called the "LITERARY ATHENÆUM," to be devoted to the interest and circulation of a mind-refining, soul-inspiring, spirit-stirring literature; such a literature, in a word, as the progressive taste of society seems to demand.

Between the magazines of the day, which are devoted almost exclusively to the circulation of Christian Literature, and those devoted to the light, and in too many instances, tasteless and corrupting literature—there is a wide and deep chasm, to fill which successfully and profitably, very few attempts have been made. To supply the void, to some extent at least, is the intention of the subscribers, in issuing the "Literary Athenæum."

The general cast and character of the contents of the proposed magazine will be fixed according to the standard of the most sterling intellect, and the most liberal appreciation of the wants of the common mind. Its pages will ever present a feast and a glow, to feed and illuminate the loftiest and purest taste and spirit of the admirers and lovers of refining and exalting literary walks and research.

To secure this grand design, effectually and honorably, no pains or expenses will be spared.

The contents will be purely original; consisting of Lectures, Addresses, Essays, &c., on the most popular and exciting literary and scientific subjects, from the most able writers that can be secured—interspersed and relieved by beautiful poetic composition.

Science, Art, and government, in their almost infinite variety development and interest, will be liberay and honorably discussed in its pages.

Arrangements are in progress for an extensive and important European correspondence, which will be a feature of great interest in its varied connections.

In addition to such articles, there will be presented occasional tales of unexceptionable character and style differing essentially from the weakish romances which fill the pages of the many magazines of the day. Writers in this connection, can be secured, whose productions are the embodiment of life, true to itself,—and which will kindle and glow with the loftiest and purest sentiment and thrill with the beauties of morality and religion in their loveliest forms.

Each number of the Athenæum will contain four embellishments of the first artistical merit, One of them will be a portrait of some distinguished personage in this country or in Europe, accompanied with an interesting biographical sketch. Another will be a view of the building and grounds, of some one of the popular Universities, in this or the old world, accompanied with a historical, biographical and statisical sketch in this body of the work. The portraits will be fine mezzotint, and the college views beautiful line engravings. Then will follow richly colored specimens of flowers and fruit; in connection with which, there will also be presented interesting notices—floral and botanical—of climate, habits, culture, &c. All of which cannot but secure interest and favor.

Each number will comprise sixty pages of letter-press double column, beautifully stereotyped, and printed on fine white paper; the whole corresponding in all respects with the character of the other departments of the work.

Such is to be the character of the work at its commencement. If it is successful, as it ought to be, and as is hoped and believed it will be,—improvement will be made as far as possible in the different departments, as they are suggested in the progress of the work.

The subscribers take pleasure in announcing to the public, that they have concluded arrangements with the Rev. Henry D. Moore, of Philadelphia, and Rev. Andrew A Lipscomb, Professor of English Literature and Belle Letters, of Baltimore, who will co-operate as Editors of the new Magazine. Under the management of those gentlemen, the subscribers flatter themselves, abundant success will be secured in behalf of the enterprise.

TO PUBLISHERS.

The subscribers would also give notice to Publishers, at home and abroad, that there will be in connection with the work, an extensive review department. This will be made a feature of excelling interest. The department will be conducted fairly and honorably, and all works sent to the office of the subscribers, will receive such notices as the character may demand.

The first number will be issued on the first of January 1847. Its contents and the name of contributors, will be published shortly.

TERMS—Three dollars per annum, in advance.

Editors of papers, copying this Prospectus, and sending a paper with it, to the office of the "Athenæum," shall receive the numbers of the work, and the thanks of the publishers.

All letters, containing orders for the work, post-paid, and enclosing the subscription price, will receive prompt attention. To be addressed to

F. C. WILSON & Co.

Philadelphia, Pa.

THE WEEKLY

CHRISTIAN WORLD;

An Independent, Cowprehensive, and Impartial Newspaper designed for welcome and useful circulation; Among and Friends of Christian Union, Christian Benevolence, and Christian Literature. To be published every Saturday At the Reading-Room of the Christian Atheneum, over the Book-store of Mr. James Harmstead, Fourth St., between Market and Arch Sts., Philadelphia;

Price:—Two Dollars a-year invariably in advance.

T. H. STOCKTON,
J. G. WILSON,
THEOPHILUS STORK. } Editors.

W. S. STOCKTON,—General Agent.

TO persons who are acquainted with the character and objects of the CHRISTIAN WORLD, as they have been developed during the last six years, it is only necessary to say, that as soon as one thousand paying subscribers are secured, the paper will be put to press. The Old Subscription List ought to supply this number at once.

To other persons, it is proper to remark, that the Christian World, in print, is intended to reflect the Christian World, in action—in a word, daguerreotype it: and then for purposes of common advantage, to compare the organized and operature Religion of the Age with the Religion of the Bible.

The enlarged literary and business agencies of the Establishment, are deemed amply sufficient to assure the public of successful management. Its immediate connexion with the CHRISTIAN ATHENEUM—an Institution which is to be furnished with many of the principal organs of Church and State, both in Europe and America,—will give its conductors early access to invaluable sources of universal intelligence.

DIRECTIONS.

1. On receipt of this Prospectus, let the Old subscribers at every Post-office, appoint one of their number, or some other suitable person, an Agent. Let him send us, at once, as many names and as much money as possible. In cases where substantial agents make themselves responsible for their subscribers, this responsibility will be regarded as equivalent to payment in advance—provided they settle their accounts within six months. Even in such cases, however, immediate payments are decidedly preferable, and, to encourage them, the commissions to agents are arranged thus:—On cash orders, 25 per cent.: on deferred remittances, 12½ per cent.

2. As the Prospectus will be widely distributed, let all persons who see it, and feel an interest in it, act promptly in the manner described above. It is thought that little effort will be sufficient to procure a company, or club, at almost any Post-office in the Union. The times increasingly demand just such a publication as is proposed.

Address,—W. S. STOCKTON, General Agent, Philadelphia, Pa.: or either of the Associate Editors. All orders will be punctually attended to,

T. H. STOCKTON,
Editor and Proprietor.

Philadelphia, December, 1846.

M. P. DISCIPLINES—NEW EDITION.

WE have on hand a supply, lately received from the Book Agent, Baltimore, which we will be pleased to furnish to brethren of surrounding Circuits, at wholesale or retail prices. For sale at the office of this paper.

DISSOLUTION.

THE partnership of GUTHRIES & LARGE is this day dissolved by mutual consent. All matters pertaining to the closing up of the business will be transacted at the old stand.

A. A. GUTHRIE.
W. P. LARGE.
GEO. N. GUTHRIE.

Putnam, O. January 1, 1847.

JAMES K. LOGAN,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

FOREIGN & DOMESTIC DRY GOODS

No. 83 Wood St., (One door from Diamond Alley,)

Pittsburgh, Pa.

THE WESTERN RECORDER.

VOL. VIII---NO. 24. PUTNAM, MUSKINGUM COUNTY, OHIO, MARCH 18, 1847. WHOLE NO. 388.

The Western Recorder,
Is Published every Thursday,
AT PUTNAM, OPPOSITE ZANESVILLE, OHIO.
OFFICE ON MAIN STREET.
A. H. BASSETT, Editor and Proprietor.
REVERDY H. WHITE, PRINTER.

TERMS.—Two Dollars per annum, in advance. Two fifty at the close of the year. Payments within three months will be considered in advance.

All letters and communications must be addressed, to the Editor, post paid, except such as contain funds, and directed to Putnam Muskingum Co. Ohio.

Itinerant Ministers and others, who collect from subscribers and remit to us as much as ten dollars within the year, shall receive a copy of the paper free.

Itinerant ministers and preachers, not acting as agents, can have the paper at one dollar.

Clubs of ten or more, paying at the time of subscribing, shall have the paper for $15, i. e. one dollar fifty, each.

Spirit of Reform.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Progress and Reform.

NO. I.

These two words express the character of the age. Onward, onward, is still the cry. Time rolls, and each revolving year turns up some new scheme for advancing the welfare of mankind, or witnesses some new discovery in science or art to astonish and bless the world.

The mechanic, the scholar, the artist, the naturalist, the politician, the philosopher, the philanthropist and the christian are at work. Saint and sinner, even seem to vie in developing the capacity of men for improvement.

And the fortunate discoverer of some new idea or new truth has scarcely time to announce the fact, & cry "progress," before he finds himself quite in the rear of his neighbor; who in turn stops to make his mark of "progress" only to fall behind a third who dashes past as on the wings of the wind toward a fancied perfection, crying "progress."

In the moral not less than the physical world the same spirit prevails. The watchword is "Reform." The world is full of reformers, each on his own hobby, riding as for life. The condition of the millions has attracted the attention of the units. And the moral, intellectual and physical welfare of men, is coming to be regarded as a subject worthy of the first attention of all who claim to be benevolent. Mind is at last thoroughly aroused, the people are beginning to think, just beginning it is true, but the despotism which has for ages swayed an iron sceptre over mind is soon to end, and the world is to do its own thinking ere long.

As in the physical world there are many vain schemes and false philosophers. Many who seek after the "philosopher's stone," which is to convert every thing it touches into gold, and not a few who yet believe that a "perpetual motion" may be invented. So in the moral there are ignorant pretenders and spurious reformers not a few.

While it is matter of rejoicing, that so much has been done and that so much is in progress for ameliorating the condition of mankind, at the same time it behooves us to guard against the evident tendency of the age, least we rush from the extreme of stupid indifference to its opposite unhealthy excitement or blind fanaticism.

I have feared we shall overlook some most important principles which are essential to a thorough reformation. The effect of getting up a society for the remedy of each specified form of vice, has been to give to those who attach themselves to such associations false views of the general field of effort. To illustrate. One man looks at the social condition of mankind and soon becomes satisfied that it is all wrong, every way wrong, and nothing short of reorganization can remedy the wrong. He becomes the advocate the the "community system" fondly and sincerely believing that children trained in communities will not be selfish but benevolent. This is his remedy for all the evils of life.

Another fixes his eye intently upon slavery and while he beholdes its almost unmitigated outrages upon human rights and its blighting influence upon both master and slave, and its insolent and arrogant demands upon the government, and the country he feels that it is the giant sin of the world, and honestly believes that its overthrow is of paramount importance.

A third throws himself into the temperance reform with his whole soul. He witnesses the wide spread desolation which intemperance has made and is still making, and no wonder that he thinks it the parent of all vice.

A fourth has had the subject of licentiousness under consideration until the deep and damning pollution of those haunts of vice, which are found in all our cities, and even in our towns and villages, stand before his vision until his soul sickens at a view of the extent and enormity of the vice. He feels called of God to expose the shameful sin and labor for its removal.

Then there are others equally ardent and sincere in laboring to forestall or checkmate popery as the thing which most of all endangers our country.

Others again find the chief danger in the ignorance of the people and have set themselves to get up schools for every body's children.

Others regard colleges as the thing above all others necessary to redeem us from ruin and carry safely through this age of progress.

Sunday schools have advocates not a few, who believe that they are the remedy for the prevailing sins of the word.

So it is all are busy, I will not say all are on hobbies. As I said before mind is becoming active, and all these movements indicate a determination to do something for mankind.—In the good providence of God this activity is permitted, and each of these distinct organizations doubtless has a mission to perform, which will be for weal or woe, as properly or improperly directed, to discriminate wisely, to know when and how to act, when all are so busy is not always an easy matter.

With your leave, I propose giving my views of the manner of conducting these reforms in another number. Yours, Y. Z.

Putnam, O. March 8. 1847.

Written for the Western Recorder.

THINGS WHICH I DON'T LIKE.

Mr. Editor:—I observed in your last issue an article from "An Itinerant," under the caption of "things that grieve me," containing some excellent hints to travelling ministers. To bring both sides before your readers I have thought proper to throw off a few items to the people, or professors, containing "things which I don't like." Homely as they are, they may be productive of some good; which will more than compensate me for my labor.

1. I don't like to see the people after having received extra appointments from their preacher to make up former deficiencies in labor, refuse to pay him his disciplinary allowance, because he has not filled his regular appointments.

2. I don't like to hear the people speak of these ministers as seeking for the fleece of his flock, because he complains of not receiving the regular and authorised allowance for his support, when he has complied with the requisition of the Discipline.

3. I don't like to hear some people continually murmuring about the preacher requesting his lawful dues, exclaiming "An hireling," "An hireling!" when they are so narrow and contracted in soul and purse, as to refuse to pay one "quarter" for the benefit of the Gospel, such people must have the privilege of tying their purse strings, and withholding their support from their minister. It is all right. Who has any thing to do with that? But if the preacher should have the presumption to stir up their minds by way of remembrance—if he should inform them that his purse is empty and his larder bare—poor man! he forgets his great and holy calling, and prostrates himself to earthly things. I trow, Mr. Editor, if some of these very kind brethren, who seem to think that their minister can live altogether on heavenly food, had to surround some of their scanty tables, wear some of their thread-bare habiliments, and brave like them, pitiless peltings of the winter's storm, &c., &c., they would be very much inclined to believe that a little of the "fleece" would not be altogether unacceptable at such periods.

4. I don't like to see those who profess to be governed by principles of righteousness and justice, and who have agreed to pay their preacher a stipulated sum, suffer him to labor and toil for their especial benefit, and then allow him to retire without paying him more than one half of his salary. Look at the Ohio District. Only one station and one circuit paid their preachers disciplinary allowance, the rest deficient, two thirds, one half, and one third. Why this? Were they not able? Abundantly so. They had not the desire, or if you please the moral honesty, to do so. But the reader urges that this is too strong an expression. Why so? If I were to employ a laborer for a definite period, for a fixed sum, and he were faithfully to discharge his contract, would it not be morally wrong on my part, to withhold a part of the stipulated amount? Why should a circuit, either by an open or silent inducement, secure the labors of any preacher without informing him of what they expect to perform relative to his support? And who would not rather labor with that people who are really not able to give a preacher his full allowance, than on that circuit, which is more than able yet will not pay more than one half of the disciplinary allowance?

5. I don't like to see some people send their preachers materials for his support, which they cannot exchange for cash, and then present their bills to the Quarterly Conference, charging the very highest cash price. Neither do I like to see people, who say they cannot pay their preachers money for their labor send them unmarketable produce, and dispose of their cash products for their own especial benefit.

6. I don't like to hear the people complain about their preacher neglecting an appointment, when they take the liberty to assemble themselves together in the house of God whenever it seems to them convenient—sometimes absenting themselves from the most trivial and insignificant circumstances. The minister must ride through mud, and storm, and tempest, sick or well, swim rivers and creeks, leave a sick family behind and be there at the "nick of time." But the people can go at what hour they please; and if the clouds are a little ominous, the sun overshadowed, or the roads a little muddy, why, good folks, they can have the pleasure of staying at home and whose business is it? Some can lay abed a little longer on the sabbath—because it is a day of rest; others have so prostrated their strength during the week, that they feel peculiary feeble on that day. Some get the rheumatism, the "sick headache," the dyspepsia—their "food wont digest on Sunday;"—and they sit lazily and yawning by the fireside, or in the shade, but when Monday dawns they are up with the birds and busy as the bees. But the preacher—alas! the preacher,——if he is not at his appointments.———Well, what then? Why there's a "tempest in a teapot!" that's all.

7. I don't like to hear some people complain that their preachers never visit them when they forget to give them an invitation. Neither when they are visited, do I like to hear them, talk about every thing else but religion—their farms, stock, markets, politics, and even the finest of Russias or Birkshires, as if the preachers were interested in such matters. What minister can visit such professors as these, to his own comfort or their edification? If he should introduce religious topics, they will be sure to interrupt him by interposing a long or short horned Durham, the Hessian fly, or the seven-years' Locust. The people are generally the greatest sticklers for pastoral visitation.

8. I don't like to hear members of the church find so much fault about the sermons of their preachers, their appearance and their manners. I heard one preacher complained of because his arms were too long! Some ministers are too prolix, others too rapid in their enunciations, boisterous or prosy. Then there are some too learned in their discourses, and systematic in their delivery: others murderers of the "King's English," illiterate, and who, because not able to divide artistically their discourses, and deal out propositions with scholastic style and perspicuity, are termed, rude uncultivated men, not worthy to occupy the sacred desk. There are others who preach too many doctrinal or practical subjects—others too much appeal to the judgment or the passions—and some with too much "hell" and not enough "heaven" in their sermons. I will illustrate this fault finding disposition, V. W. X. preached at a certain place a good and powerful sermon. After services I spoke to A. B. and C. commendatory of the effort. A. allowed it would have been much better if V. W. X. had thrown a little more "fire" into the delivery. B. Thought it was a very good discourse—but entirely too boisterous. C. thought very well of the sermon, but it was a great pity the preacher did not understand the principles of the English language a little better. Some people want the preachers to wear drab, muff colored, black, plain breathed, or "shad b——d," coats, with the narrow block, or white "broad brim'd hats," their religion, alas! going little farther than their coat and hat. There are some individuals who not like the bee, that on its light and cheerful wing hastes from flower and tree and blossom to cull their rich treasures of dew and sweets to store its beautiful cell with; but (pardon the comparison dear reader,) like that filthy bird,—the buzzard—without its redeeming quality, passing over the most beautiful objects, and feasting upon the most repulsive food. That minister who can satisfy the age in which we now live, and can glide smoothly through the world, without having his sermons hypocritically tormented by some insignificant critic, who neither understands the rudiments of his "mother's tongue." not in possession of more wisdom than will "barely take him to mill,', is somewhat of a remarkable man!

9. I don't like to see the people curtail the allowance of their preacher because conference may have sent them a man whose capabilities for his office they cannot altogether admire. How does it look, Mr. Editor, to see individuals who profess to be illuminated by christian principles—principles which say, "if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink"—reduce into mere insignificance his disciplinary quota, merely because he does not meet their views of what a preacher ought to be? Why not send him home at once? How contemptible to starve a preacher because you don't like him, tormenting both his soul and body.

Anon.

Solitudinarian Cabin, March, 1st, 1847.

FREE DISCUSSION.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Mr. Smallwood's Temperance Address.

Dear Sir:—I see in your paper of the 4th instant, that some one has attempted a criticism upon Rev. Mr. Smallwood's address to the Sons of Temperance, and the order in general. I will endeavor to take up his objections in his own order, and show that the old "Pioneer" has no very serious cause of alarm, though every oodurate, and veteran son of Bacchus should become a son of the "secret order."

After a few laudatory remarks, he tells us that the following is seriously objectionable: It is surprising to me, that a part of the religious community should stand opposed to us.

"That which follows, shows that he refers to opposition, not to Temperance, but to the "Secret Order."

Now, what follows, shows to me no such thing; but is abundantly evident to me, that he referred to the great Temperance cause, throughout the world; which, it is well known, is opposed by many professing christians; and even the majority of the Ministers of the Gospel in Europe,—and especially in France and England! And who would not join with him in most unfeigned regret, that these men of God should be opposed to this righteous cause? It seems to me that no one, not blinded by the raw head and bloody bones of "secret order," would have understood him otherwise.

The next sentence, with its question "sounds" of language, & advice, too puerile to require notice.

Next follows the great and labored point; the attempt to identify and assimilate all secret societies,—no matter what their character or motives. The Illuminati,—the Jacobin Clubs of France,—the order of Jesuits,—the Inquisition, —the Knights of Malta,—and the Twenty orders of Free Masonry, Odd Fellows,—&c. down to the very dangerous order of the "Sons of Temperance." Oh, Mores! Oh, Tempora!! "Full well does our critic understand the nature and tendency of such societies;" and no doubt we shall have a dissertation on them soon, that will astonish the world! We shall be told that the horrid oaths and blasphemies of the Illuminati, are of the same tendency, as the frightful order of the Sons of Temperance,—with no oaths,—no signs,—no mysteries, but the awful one of having a door-keeper and a pass-word, and being a little exclusive. But Captain Morgan!—poor Captain Morgan!—the Free Masons killed him! Well, I have no doubt they did. Yes Sir; I have no doubt that the poor man was cruelly slain; and would to God it was the only murder that was ever perpetrated in our country: And, if I understand the reasoning on the case, it is, that Free Masonry killed Captain Morgan; ergo the "Sons of Temperance," being a "secret society," will kill Captain Somebody! The statement, that witnesses were excused from testifying, in consequence of their oaths to a private society, would never be tolerated in any court. The fact is, that the conspirators, in the case of Morgan, had to flee their country. But, we will pass on.

These men,—i. e. the Pioneer, believe these secret societies foster a spirit of clanship and favoritism. Let us look at this clanship a little; and will Mr. Pioneer tell me what society, moral, civil, or religious, has not a spirit of clanship? Is there not clanship in the different churches, in our country? the Papists, the Old and New School Presbyterians, the Methodists, Baptists, Episcopalians, ay, and the Covenanters? Is there not something like clanship in the great political parties, the Democrat and Whig? Ay, and the slave holders! Yes, and the Liberty party, two! Here is favoritism for you, for which the whole nation has to bleed! We have, also, something like family clans, not a thousand miles from us. I will not extend this point farther; but when these "multitudes of Temperance men" have washed their hands of all clanship and favoritism, then we will bare our backs to another flagellation.

The talismatic "sounds," "secret," or "secret order," seem to have an astounding effect upon the sensibility of these "full well understanding" men. Let us look a little farther into these secrets. If having a door-keeper and a pass-word make us a secret order, then we must plead guilty. But the United States Senate and House of Representatives have their closed doors, and are all either known to the door-keepers, or would have a pass-word. Our Grand Jurors all do the same. The Abolitionists have their secrets, and have some way whereby they can distinguish each other in their nocturnal excursions: The same with our army. All religious societies, more or less, have their private matters, more especially, the Catholics and Presbyterians. Mr. Smallwood has truly said that the Session does its business with closed doors. Dr. Miller, the great gun of the ruling eldership, says this is the very excellence of the system, that the business can be done privately, that no scandal come upon the Church. I have seen men turned out of a Presbytery, that none but the initiated might be present at their secret councils. I believe the General Assembly do the same. If a ruling elder should disclose private things, done in secret Session, to his better half, or his children, he would be subject to censure. I maintain they are consided private tribunals.

The infidel condemns the churches, and all religions. "They confer no positive benefits,—their tendencies are to do mischief." The Catholic church has slain, not only one man, but its tens of thousands. The Greek church, too, has its hands stained with blood! The Protestant religion, (to say nothing of the Mahomedan, and a thousand others,) has not kept its garments entirely unspotted. Our fore-fathers were driven from their home and their country by Presbyterians; and they, in their turn, did not like to be troubled by Quakers, &c. Will "Pioneer" allow this mode of reasoning to be correct? Will he condemn all churches, because there are those who have shed the blood of the saints? Will he condemn all Presbyterians, because some of them have persecuted. As well may the skeptic reason thus, as for "Pioneer" to put every secret order into the same category.

But our reviewer manifests a willingness to Campoon us about our pretentions to charity. There is no more charity in the order, says "Pioneer," "than in the London Life Insurance Company or the Knox Mutual Insurance Company." Is there no benevolence, no charity, no love, in taking men from the miry clay, and placing their feet upon a rock? No benevolence in holding meetings once a week, and opening our doors, our arms, our hearts, to our unfortunate neighbors, and extending to them a "brother's hand, and a brother's welcome?" No benevolence in visiting a sick brother, cheering his broken spirits, and pouring the balm of consolation into his bleeding heart? No love in sitting, night after night, administering to the necessities of a dying brother? No kindness in paying the last solemn offices to a deceased member? No benevolence in taking care of his weekly dues, watching over them with untiring vigilance, and paying them over, when wanted, without reward? No charity in watching over a straying brother, and gently bringing him back to the fold? In all this, is there no charity? All, all, mercenary!

"But where is the fund for the poor, the suffering, the widow, even of the Son of Temperance, or his orphans? We can find no provision for them. Let us honestly call things by their right names." So say I, dear honest "Pioneer," Call us the 'Sons of Temperance, with sundry charitable features," and do not sneer at us because we do not relieve all the wants to which flesh and blood is heir; because we cannot provide for all God's creation.

It will be a solemn time, Mr. "Pioneer," when we shall be brought to the judgment bar, and it shall be said to the Son of Temperance: For I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick, and ye visited me; I was in prison, and ye came unto me. It will not do to say that I thought you was nothing more than a "Knox Mutual Insurance Company." I did not know that you saved the poor inebriate from utter ruin,—his family from poverty, degradation, and death, and threw around him the "broad egis of your fraternal 'Love, and 'Protection.'" You will please "call things by their right names!" before it is too late.

But we have had the Bull by the horns, in the sad tragedy of poor Captain Morgan, and hope that it has been shown, that every thing secret is not to be put in the same category; that while some secret societies may be the very mystery of iniquity, others may be very innocent, and productive of great good;—and since there is a strong propensity in man, to become acquainted with secret and mysterious things, let us make use of it for good. But our reviewer affects a "laugh,"—to make light of the favorable view which Mr. S. takes of the society, and its prospective usefulness. We are told by him, (Mr. S.,) that the cause was retrograding—that all other oganizations are lifeless and prostrate,—that the vender of ardent spirits would be in the field without an opponent, were it not for the Sons of Temperance, &c.

Now, let us look at the facts. Two or three years ago, a large and flourishing society existed in Zanesville; but alas! it has gone the way of all the earth, and left not a wreck behind. In Putnam, too, the hearts of many had waxed cold,—it was an old story; and it was with great difficulty that a respectable meeting could be got up,—although the organziation continued to exist,—and so throughout the whole country.

In Cambridge, the pledge had become a hissing and a by-word. In Columbus, a blight and mildew had come over the cause. In Cincinnati, the very head and front of the cold water army, they had become palsied,—a death-like stupor had come over them. A respectable meeting could not be got up, and a debt of three hundred dollars, for room rent, was hanging over them; and this was the general complexion of the whole State! Under these circumstances, we would turn, with disgust, from those who would ridicule or "laugh" at the strong language made use of by Mr. S. He places much confidence in the efficiency of the organization. He sees its reviving rays enlivening and invigorating the whole country! Those are operated upon who have been wholly invincible to every other means. 4 hundred men in Zanesville, more than one hundred in Putnam, many in Brownsville, Dresden, &c.,—supposed to be not less than a thousand in this county, and two hundred thousand in the State —band-ed together in solid phalanx

"Placing their firm foot upon the line that temperance draws,
And swear they will prevail, or perish in the cause."

Who would not be elated with such a glorious prospect? Who would not be sanguine, when he sees the Ethiopean change his skin,—the leopard his spots,—the lion lie down with the lamb—and, the maniac clothed in his right mind?

Let not the Pioneer be alarmed; instead of an opponent, he will find an efficient auxiliary,—one who will put his shoulder to the wheel, and breast the shock; who will go forth conquering and to conquer, until the land shall revive as the corn, and flourish as the vine; until drunkenness shall be driven from our borders, and temperance stand erect in our streets. "Pioneers" will not despise the day of our youth,—but assist us by their counsel, and cheer us by their smiles. We pledge ourselves to render to the old organization the same aid as heretofore yea, much more. Give us credit for what we have already done, and not grudge us our sanguine anticipations.

In conclusion, we would say to our former associates, those good but unduly prejudiced men, who would render us approbrious and dangerous in the eyes of the people, in the language of the prophet—How can I give thee up, Ephraim? How can I deliver thee, Israel? How can I make the as Admah? How can I set thee as Zeboim? For my heart is melted within me, and my repentings are kindled together.

A Son of Temperance.

Putnam, O., March, 8th, 1847.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Reply to Rev. Dr. J. S. Reese.

Rev. Sir: I have read the reply of the Rev. Doctor John S. Reese to my strictures on the resolution of the last Gen. Con. respecting slavery; and am sorry that the doctor has been placed in no enviable position by his own pen. In my scrictures on the resolution I asserted, that the G. C. of 1846 had no right to meddle with the subject, and that in giving an opinion on the abstract question, they exceeded their powers. For this assertion I offered several reasons; but these reasons, the doctor affirms, have no weight, in his estimation. Wherefore? Is it because they are so insignificant in themselves that they can produce no conviction in his mind? Or is it because he is incapable of perceiving their force? Be the cause what it may, he has offered none to rebut them; nor has he attempted by argument, to defend his own resolution or the act of the G. Conference. By leaving my objections to the resolution, and the principles it contains untouched, he has virtually admitted their correctness: for, if he was competent to show any fallacy in my reasoning, or prove that the results which I argued out were not the legitimate consequences of my positions, he would have done it, and would not have changed a subject of a general character into a personal affair. By this unfair and dishonorable method of defence, he has imposed on me the necessity of turning his argumentum ad hominem against himself; nor shall I suffer him to escape in his cuttlefish obscurity although he has so imploringly begged for quarters.

The first thing I shall notice in the doctor's reply is the alleged satisfaction of the "the brethren from the South" at the passage of the resolution. He says:—"The brethren from the South were generally well satisfied with the resolution, as I understand; and no man, I believe, on the floor of the G. C. from North or South, intimated, that to pass that resolution would be to exceed the powers of the G. Conference." Doctor, allow me to ask you, do you believe what you say? If you do, it is no credit to your "understanding;" for there is not a man of common sense in the United States who can believe, that the brethren from the South would be "well satisfied" with the adoption of a measure, which was intended to work their expulsion from the church, if it did not ultimately involve them and their families in blood-shed and slaughter. But you have said it, and for the declaration I would find an excuse if I could, but I cannot. I would attribute it to hurry if it had been made viva voce in the warmth of debate. Or I would say, you had forgotten what was said, if only one speaker, out of all, had uttered disapprobation. Or, I would say you had written carelessly & without due reflection, if your own pen did not furnish evidence that you went very deliberately to work, and consulted the records of the G. C. of '42 to convict me of weakness or wickedness—of inconsistency or change. Against your declaration then, I will place the language of "the brethren from the South," as published in the Methodist Protestant.

"Mr. Bellamy of N. C. thought the subject was beyond the power of conference. They might as well appoint a committee on Monarchy."

"Mr. Fletcher of Mississippi objected because it would transcend the powers of conference."

"Mr. Whitfield did not believe that the conference had any power to legislate on the subject."

"When the names of Thompson, Paris, Whittaker and Bellamy were called, they wished to say, that they believed that when an abolitionist stole a slave and held him, he was committing sin, and therefore they voted aye."

"Messrs Whitfield, Smith, and Kerlin thought the expression of an opinion was unconstitutional, and therefore they voted no." Many others might be added, but this number is sufficient to prove that you have not written that which is true. Ah, doctor, it would have been better for you to have burnt your pen before you wrote, than to have used it to "burn" yourself; for you will certainly carry the scar with you to your grave.

He next says, a similar resolution was passed by the G. C. of '42 of which I was a member and asks:—"Did not the Gen. Conf. of 1842 exceed its powers by passing a similar resolution? If the conference did wrong in the last act, it did wrong in the first." Undoubtedly. Both conferences were wrong in meddling with slavery; for neither had any right, human or divine to legislate on the subject. But let us go back to the G. C. of 1842.

Of the 52 delegates of which, I believe that conference was composed, there were only 9 from states South of the Potomac. With these 9 the rest, of course, could do as they pleased. I took my seat in that body on the morning of the second day: but before I arrived a committee had been appointed on slavery, of which Enoch Jacobs was chairman. Among other things reported by that committee, was the following resolution. "Resolved, That slavery as it exists in the Methodist Protestant church in these United States, is opposed to the morality of the Holy Scriptures and consequently a great moral evil." Now, here is a resolution which, though it is not unexceptionable as it regards its phraseology, is plain, simple, and intelligible, (but I must take care what I write, otherwise the doctor will say, "endorsed good" by A. M'Caine) for it unequivocally pronounces slavery "a great moral evil." But this resolution was set aside to make room for that double-faced, vague, contradictory, and absurd thing drawn up by doctor John S. Reese which was forced on the southern members by him and his coadjutors the abolitionists. Now can this astute doctor perceive no difference between his bringing a person into my house to injure me, and my turning that person out in the easiest way I can, when his object is known? If he cannot, his discriminative powers must be obtuse indeed. Or does he think that to vote a resolution out of conference is the same thing as to introduce it into it? I was not the author of the resolution, nor did I second it. I gave it no support from first to last, nor did I approve of it, either in its language, its principles, or its objects; but I voted on the same grounds precisely that Thompson, Paris, Whitaker and Bellamy did, and with a view of getting rid of the subject of slavery.

Again: the doctor says "that brother did not then argue that the G. C. would exceed its powers if it should pass that resolution. It was before the conference three days at least, but not one word from this brother about exceeding the powers of the conference during that whole warm discussion. He did not write and publish a single line condemning that act of the General Conference." For these things however, he furnishes no proof.

It affords me no pleasure doctor to contradict the assertions of any man who bears the name of a Methodist Protestant; or to expose the sinistifi-cation (the reader will pardon the use of a low word; I know none more suitable to express my views of the doctor's disingenuousness) and moral obliquity of a minister of the gospel: yet I must say there is not one word of truth in what you have written. The reader will allow that it is not very likely that the oldest man and the oldest minister in the conference, who, the doctor says, "was in good health, always in his seat, and remarkably attentive to the business of the conference"—"a keen observer of of men's rights, of principle, of truth"—"a man so watchful, so prompt, so competent to perceive the mischievous tendency of that resolution," and one who "understands the right of private judgment as well as any other man living"—should be assilent as the grave for the "three days" that the resolution was under discussion, and not say "one word" on the subject. The thing is incredible. But I did oppose it in all its phases, as some in that conference will never forget. I dreaded the introduction of slavery into the conference, knowing it was a firebrand, and therefore I opposed its introduction. I well knew that the conference had no right to meddle with the subject, and therefore I opposed the power which that body had assumed to discuss it. I objected twice against the President, Mr. Shinn, giving an opinion from the chair on the merits of the question, when he had been requested to do so, because I thought his opinion was solicited to give an undue weight to the side of the abolitionists. I stated that he, as President, had an undoubted right to vacate the chair—to call another member to take his place—and to deliver his opinion on the floor in common with other members, but that he had no right to deliver it from the chair, and that I would oppose his doing so. I opposed, "Bible in hand," the doctrines which the resolution contains, and at the request of many friends I 'published' that speech. It has the approbatory signatures of some of the leading men in the nation; and the press in the South has spoken strongly in its praise. The pamphlet containing this speech was sent to the G. C. of '46—was before that body of which doctor John S. Reese was a member—was reported to that body by the committee on slavery—their report was published in the church paper, and yet he now says, "He did not write and publish a single line condemning the act of the Gen Con." For Heaven's sake doctor, if hereafter, you cannot write the truth, be silent—do not write at all.

But the doctor says I have "changed;" and nine times does he come over this assertion in the form of a question, or affirmation. He might, to be sure, write a letter and say, I was insane, or that I stole a sheep or robbed a hen-roost; just about with as much propriety and truth. He says:—"The brother has seen cause, good cause to change his opinion on the subject," and immediately adds:—"it is not at all common for men of his age and mental strength to change their views materially particularly on subjects involving important principles." There now reader, will not that argument convince you that the old man has changed? Again he intimates I have "been convicted of error since '42." But how could that be, as I had not the benefit of his intellectual effulgence before I wrote my strictures? Notwithstanding this misfortune he insists on it that I have changed, and am "now reviewing the resolution and retracting the errors it contains." The doctor then understands my strictures to be written with an intention of "retracting the errors the resolution contains," or he does not. If he so understands them, his mental imbecility is far greater than I ever thought it was.—If he does not so understand them, his own pen shall "convict" him of a wilful misrepresentation of my letters, and of an effort to rob me of the "jewel of consistency." That there may be no doubt hanging over the subject hereafter, (indeed I do not believe there is any now) I will tell him, I have not "changed my opinion" of the language, the principles, or the objects of that resolution from the first day to the present time; nor can I, until I change my opinion of the Bible. At the G. C. of '42, I thought the resolution was a Janus faced production—I think so still. I "then" thought it was intended to entrap, by placing two sentences of such opposite qualities in the same resolution—I think so "now." I thought at that time it was inconsistent, because it condemns what it avows it has no right to touch—I think so still. I "then" thought it was contradictory, because it said it was and it was not sinful to hold slaves—I am of the same opinion "now." I thought 'then' it contained bad theology, by making the principles of eternal justice depend on 'circumstances' —I think so "now." I thought "then" the principles contained in the resolution struck at all religion, natural and revealed—I think so "now." I thought when the resolution was offered, it was intended to prepare the way for the expulsion of slave holders from the church—I think so still. In fine, I thought "then," take the resolution all in all, it exceeded any thing I had ever seen in the same number of words, for bad divinity—pure, universal nonsense—and covered malevolence—I think so "now." For the honor of Methodist Protestantism, and for the instruction of the church, let those who can justify the resolution and its principles do so—I shall be glad to see the defence.

Alexander M'Caine.

Lotts, Edgefield Dist., S. C., Feb. 27, 1847.

Anecdote of Gen. Jackson.

I had room, in a previous communication, to relate an anecdote of Gen. Jackson, communicated to me by Mrs. Polk. at a recent interview. There is no denying that the General was a duellist; that he was so educated, and so practised. At a period of his life quite anterior to his elevation to civic honors, he happened to be at church one Sunday, when Rev. Dr. H——— preached a very pointed sermon on the practice of duelling. Every body was making the application to General Jackson, and the good friends of the church were trembling, not only for the preacher, but lest the old hero should be so offended as never to "darken their doors again." The sermon, delivered by a faithful and conscientious preacher, as the messenger of God, not particularly solicitious about individual hearers, but resolved to strike boldly at a prevalent and damning sin, left a strong, and, if I may so say, a tremulous impression. All were eager to know, as they had been hearing for the General, how he had received it.—Now, whether he had been hearing for himself, or for duellists in general, the result was, he was so much pleased with the fidelity of the man of God, that on Monday morning he sent an order to the tailor, to fit Dr.——— with a new suit of clothes. Mrs. Polk assured me the anecdote was authenic, and it is in keeping with the whole deportment of that strange man towards the ministers of the gospel. He seemed to have a sympathy with integrity, wherever he found it, whether in the field, the forum, or the pulpit.—Journal of Commerce.

Religious Intelligence.

PITTSBURGH DISTRICT.

George's Creek Ct., March 10, 1847.

Br. Bassett:—Permit me to say that the Lord has been kind to us on this circuit. I held a protracted meeting at Henry Clay Furnace, at which meeting the Lord blessed us with his presence, and we had a glorious time; eighteen members were added to the church, and the old members were revived in the spirit of their minds. Glory be to God for his kindness to us.

Br. Brown, our President, preached for us at Zion, with great acceptability. Many were convicted of the necessity of religion—five or six gave their names to the Church. Nearly sixty have joined the church on this circuit, since conference. Pray for us.

Samuel Clawson.

Braxton Co. Va., March 1st, 1847.

Br. Bassett:—Our circuit is in a healthy condition. Br. Martin is well received and labors to profit. Our 2nd quarterly meeting closed last Tuesday. We had a good time. Br. Walker from the Buchanan Circuit, and Br. Smith a local Preacher were over to help us, and labored to much profit. May the Lord reward them. Eight united with us in the army of the Lord, and I trust will make good soldiers. There were eleven conversions. About sixty have joined the church this conference year and our prayer to God is that he may more powerfully revive his work among us. Pray for us.

Wm. M. Betts.

Washington, Pa. March, 9, 1847.

Br. Bassett:—My charge is in a prosperous condition, and has been during the winter.

J. C. Lazlett.

MUSKINGUM DISTRICT.

Mt. Zion Ct. Feb. 27, 1847.

Br. Bassett:—I would inform you and the friends generally, that we have no cause to complain, taking every thing into consideration. The high waters have prevented me from reaching some appointments including a protracted meeting, that was to have been held on the South side of the of the river, at the time of the great freshet.

We have held our second quarterly meeting in our new meeting house on Killbuck—an interesting time. One young man gave his name to the church. Our congregations were large and attentive, and the great Head of the Church was with us, although we were disappointed in expecting help. Yours

J. Hamray.

OHIO DISTRICT.

Darby Mission, March 9th, 1847.

Br. Bassett:—I would say to our worthy president, and the friends of our Zion generally, that the Lord has been with us on this mission, greatly to the refreshing of our fainting spirits. Br. Young held his meeting on the west end of the mission, in Liverpool. It commenced on Friday Evening, and closed the following Thursday night. Was well attended throughout and fraught with much interest. One soul professed justification by faith, and eight united in church fellowship, mostly from the world. We think if Br. Young could have stayed and continued the meeting it would have been profitable; for this the people seemed anxious, but circumstances prevented.

Our 2nd quarterly meeting, held 7 miles South West from Columbus commenced on the evening of 12 Feb. and closed the following Tuesday evening. Expected the labors of Br. Peat but were disappointed. Commenced the meeting under rather discouraging circumstances, being intirely destitute of ministerial aid. But we had some good brethren who were willing to exort, sing and pray, as occasion required. And the Lord sanctioned the united effort of his children, and spake powerfully to the hearts of sinners—caused the empire of darkness to tremble, put the armies of the aliens to flight, and victory turned upon Israel's side. The result was that eighteen souls were added to the church a majority of them from the world. A few came in good standing from other branches of the church. Since our quarterly meeting at our last visit we received three others from the Methodist Episcopal Church in good stand. We have received in this year thirty-four members. O that their names may all be registered in the Lamb's Book of life. And to his name be all the glory, Amen.

Yours in Gospel Bonds,

R. K. Davis.

INDIANA DISTRICT.

Mill Creek Circuit, Ia. Feb 18, 1847.

Br. Bassett:—Our first quarterly meeting was held at Br.———embracing the last Sabbath in October. The Lord was with us of a truth. Our meeting lasted four days. Some six professed religion, and five joined the church. This has been the hardest place on the circuit. Glory to God for his goodness.

Our second quarterly meeting was held at L. Ellis's last Saturday and Sabbath. It was well attended, and undoubtedly good was done. O that God would help us to plant deep the equalizing principles of the Bible this year.

Harvey Collings, Supt.

Tanner's Creek, Ia., March, 9, 1847.

Br. Bassett:—I am through the Divine blessing much improved in health, and am again engaged in the labors of the ministry on Tanner's Creek Circuit. The second quarterly meeting was in progress when I arrived; was glad to meet the kind brethren yet sorry that there was not one of my ministerial brethren had come to our assistance. Weary with the excessive toil of traveling, I have had to do all the preaching. Br. Proctor I have no doubt would have rendered help, but he is confined at home on account of domestic affliction. I am happy to inform you that the Great Head of the Church has of late been manifesting himself to the membership of the church here. An increase of faith and hope and love is freely spoken of by them. We have had a good time. Thanks be to God. We are looking for more prosperous seasons, for you know that when the reviving influence of grace is at work in the membership, its blessed effects are wont to be seen and felt among sinners. I am inclined to think there are some awakenings now among them; may the Lord deepen and increase them abundantly, here and every where.

I purpose, the Lord willing, to see my elder brethren in conference at Cincinnati, and hope there to meet you in person. This evening we have a meeting in order to see if something can not be done here to help the poor famishing sufferers in Ireland. Yours

W. W. Paul.

Spencer, Ia., Feb. 24, 1847.

Dear Br. Thomas Shipp, President I. A. C.—You doubtless heard of my dangerous illness at the time of the sitting of our Annual Conference. (Though I was not so fortunate as my old friends Brs. Brown, Cancy and Young to have some friend to inform my numerous friends at a distance of my situation.) That affliction was long protracted. I have not yet recovered my health. I asked of the first quarterly meeting Conference of White River circuit a release on account of ill health and inefficiency. They refused, hoping I would regain my health. I have dragged out another quarter, sometimes up and sometimes down. In this time I have held several happy and successful protracted meetings though I have not yet got round the circuit. At the second quarterly conference, being much afflicted, I renewed my request, and my brethren under a conviction that I was unable to do regular service granted me a release, and appointed Br. Wm. Barnet in my place, until your official sanction could be obtained which is now asked for. Our last quarterly meeting was much favored with the divine blessing. There were several cases of deep and pungent conviction, some joined the church. In the distribution of Heaven's favors my own family shared largely, for which I hope I shall ever be thankful to the God of all consolation. Wm. B. Evans.

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO.

THURSDAY, MARCH 18, 1847.

Hymn Books.—Our supply of the new edition just from the Baltimore press, has reached us. Those who have been calling for them with so much anxiety, can have them now. We have a few copies in finer binding and gilt edges.

☞The Obituary by Br. Evans, just received, shall be given next week.

Faults in Protracted Meetings.—A writer in the W. C. Advocate lately refers to former times when two days meetings were held, protracted meetings not having come into vogue. Those meetings, he observes, commenced on Saturday with a sermon to backsliders, and the pious were urged to duty and to dilligence. At night a sermon was preached to sinners, and a general rally was made. Penitents would come crowding to the altar of prayer. As the meeting was to be held but two days, no time was lost. There was general attention—a general engagedness, and a general awakening. On Sunday morning, would be a profitable experience meeting—at 11, a sermon calculated to build up the church and overcome infidelity. At night would be another general engagement, and much fruit was gathered. The meeting then closed, and all were exhorted to carry home with them the 'holy fire.' Much good would often result from the two days' meeting.

In reference to the modern protracted meeting, it is previously announced, and understood to be continued for many days. But a limited attention is given to the services during the earlier stages of the meeting, though the ministers are at their posts, and laboring faithfully. The call to backsliders, however, which should have been given on the first day of the meeting, is not made before about Tuesday night. And it might still be one, two or three days more, before the backsliders would be reclaimed the church revived, and the way thus opened for the awakening of sinners.

Who has not observed that when a meeting is commenced, with the understanding that it is to be continued for many days, that the people are not so apt to be engaged at the earlier part of the meeting, as if it had been announced for a much shorter continuance? Thinking there is time enough to get interested and engaged in the progress of the meeting, they attend but at intervals, or by turns, so as barely to keep up a congregation. The preachers however have to be in constant attendance. And when they bring the meeting to a close, they not unfrequently meet with complaints that the meeting should have been continued longer, for they, the complainers, have just begun to feel like having a good meeting.

Upon the whole, we must concur with the writer in the Advocate, that protracted meetings should be appointed for but two days, or not longer than three, unless some remarkable outpouring of the Spirit, or other encouraging circumstances should justify a continuance of the services.

Scott's Weekly Paper.—We published the prospectus of this work at its commencement last summer, to give it our influence, and of course were promised a regular exchange. We have again and again spoken a good word for the 'Weekly,' though it has been by no means a weekly to us, having come very irregularly, though our other Philadelphia weeklies (and we have all the best) never miss us. More than a month ago we received a note from the publisher of the Weekly, stating that if we would publish its terms &c., he would continue sending to us without our taking the trouble to send our exchange. We did so, respectfully, and sent him a copy marked, and have still sent our paper. Our notice was responded to as it seems, by our being struck from his list, for Scott's Weekly has not appeared at our office since the first part of February. We have not in any other instance, met with this kind of courtesy from the newspaper press. And from the reputation of the publisher, we cannot suppose that this has so happened by his knowledge or consent. If we are right, he will send us the numbers issued for a month past,

The 'Pioneer' once more.—Our friend, Dr. J. Hildreth, of Mansfield, Ohio, has sent us a short reply to a 'Pioneer of the Temperance Cause.' He will see that a more lengthy one was previously in hand, for this week's paper. And as we trust it will suit the parties to close this uninteresting, not to say unprofitable controversy, the Dr. will excuse us, that we think best to lay his paper aside.

Missed it.—That varmint at Perrysville, O. who did himself the satisfaction to enclose to us by mail a specimen of his tobacco, and took pains to endorse 'double' upon the envelope for the purpose of boring us with the more postage, is informed that our Postmasters about here are not so green as to require us to pay for any such favors. His meanness is an imposition only upon the United States Post Office Department. He meant to cheat us, but he has cheated the government.

DIED, at Cincinnati, on the 6th inst. Mrs. Orpha Vanansdol, wife of Garret Vanansdol, Esq. aged 52.

Heavy Pork, again.—Mr. John Burton, Mt. Tabor, Indiana, writes us that about the 10th of December, he killed 14 hogs aged 21 months, and next day took them to market. The neat weight was 3297. They were half Birkshire, mixed with the common stock.

New York Illustrated Monthly Sun.—The March number of this beautiful publication has been received, and is not a whit behind the previous number in elegance. The number of engravings is 33, most of which are good and interesting. Besides numerous views of cities, scenery, battles &c. there are several thrilling representations of the distress in Ireland and Scotland. The Illustrated Sun, is amongst the finest things that come to our town. Only $1 per year. M. Y. Beach & Co. N. York.

Sabbath Observance.—We are gratified to learn by the N. Y. Journal of Commerce, that the N. Jersey Railroad from N. York to Philadelphia, by unanimous determination of the directors, is not to be used upon the Sabbath for carrying the mail, nor for any other purpose. We are anxious to see the day when our railroad and steamboat lines generally shall adopt the same policy.

Another good one.—We learn that the Stockholders of the Fall River Rail Road have voted unanimously not to allow spirituous liquors to be transported on their road. The people of New Bedford have requested the New Bedford and Taunton Railroad Company to adopt the same measure. These are encouraging movements.

Important Movement in Ireland.—We are inclined to hope that the present distressing visitation of famine in Ireland, will be overruled by Divine Providence, for the ultimate good of that oppressed country. We see that a great meeting of the landed gentry, was held in Dublin, in January last, for the purpose of considering the present distressing crisis. The following statement respecting this meeting is from the N. York Spectator:

It was attended by nobility and gentry of every political and religious creed, and from nearly every county.

A strong determination to do the utmost in their power pervaded the addresses of the speakers.

Resolutions were adopted embodying these sentiments, and also pointing out the necessity of providing additional means of employment upon works which would permanently benefit the country.

Also, that acts should be passed for affording facilities to landed proprietors for selling portions of their estates—an amendment of the grand jury system—and some others calculated to improve the social condition of the humbler classes,

It was at one time feared that the meeting would not be unanimous in feeling, and it was proposed to prohibit the publication of the proceedings. This prohibition was withdrawn on a motion of a speaker, who said that the unanimity of the meeting was a phenomenon in Ireland.

The meeting was composed of about eight hundred persons, among whom were three marquises, five earls, eight lords, five viscounts, thirty-five baronets, sixty-six deputy lieutenants, and thirty-five members of Parliament. Some idea of the tone and character of the meeting may be formed from the following passages in a document which was drawn up and published as the "declaration of the peers and representatives of Ireland." This manifesto, which is signed by the members of the meeting, of all creeds and parties, including Mr, O'Connell, Mr. O'Brien, with their respective adherents and opponents, and other prominent men, declares:

"That as we feel deeply convinced that our own divisions have been the landing causes of our own misfortunes, and by weakening our influence in the councils of the empire, have deprived us of our share in the general prosperity, so we are no less firmly persuaded, that it is by union alone we can repair the evils that dissension has created.

"That at this awful period of national calamity, it becomes the first duty of every Irishman to devote his undivided efforts to the interests of Ireland; and that neither politics, parties nor personal prejudices should influence his mind in the discharge of such a duty.

"We pray divine Providence to bless our efforts in the cause of our afflicted country, and to promote among us that feeling of united exertion and self reliance which can alone raise us to our proper place in the great empire to which we belong." The declaration also entreats "every member to consider and modify his own opinion so as to meet the united feelings of the general body and to banish from his mind all considerations of party or prejudice, at a time when the lives and interests of his countrymen are so deeply periled."

Call things by their right names.—We have no patience with the practice of some newspapers, to set down under the comprehensive term accident, every suicide and assassination, every fight, row and fracas, and every disaster that results from recklessness or wantonness. The following is taken from an exchange, under the caption of accident, but we consider it an abuse of the term. We consider that the conduct of the young man referred to is totally inexcusable, and if not unlawful, ought to be. The catastrophe therefore which resulted, instead of being called an accident would be more appropriately headed, Frightful results of rudeness, or Painful consequences of carelessness,

Accident.—The Newburg Tel. says: An estimable young lady, about nineteen years of age, a daughter of Chauncey Bowman, of Blooming Grove, was on Monday evening returned home from Chester in a one horse waggon, with a young gentlemen. Two young men, acquaintances, concealed themselves beside the road for the purpose of surprising the young gentleman and lady in the wagon as they came along. Darting suddenly across the track they frightened the horse, which springing, threw the young gentlemen from the wagon, and ran with the young lady about a mile, when she was thrown out, and her skull most shockingly fractured. She lingered until Tuesday morning, when she expired.

Two Sisters of the Society of Friends, named Lucy Elkington and Hannah Gilespy, the one aged 84, and the other 90, were buried in Philadelphia last week. They died within a few hours of each other.

Written for the Western Recorder.

THE GRAPE.

Mr. Editor,—In your paper of the 4th inst. you requested me to respond to the inquiries of Mr. Madera of Morgantown Va., in relation to the culture of the grape, peach and plumb &c. I did not see those inquiries until Saturday, the 13th inst. This is the reason why I did not attend to this before.

With regard to the grape, he does not want roots but simply cuttings from the wood of last year's growth—say 12 or 15 inches long, taken before the Sap starts. These he can bury slanting in the ground, leaving one or two buds above the surface, and they will soon produce him vines. If he would send immediately, or write, to Waterman Palmer, or Rev. Charles Avery, of Pittsburgh, they would furnish him with suitable cuttings, as they have plenty of the article.

We would recommend Mr. Madera, to get the Isabella and Catawba, as these are both natives of the United States, and are the best adapted to every situation and soil. The Isabella originated in South Carolina and is named after Mrs. Isabella Gibbs who first introduced it to the culturists of the north. The Catawba has its name probably, from the Catawba river, although it is said to have been found at many points from that river, over to Pa., Maj. Alden of Georgetown D. C. obtained it in Maryland and introduced it to general notice. It is ripe last of September & 1st of October, a little later than the Isabella. These, two, are probably the hardiest varieties that can be had, and will produce with the least care or attention. They should have a place in every man's garden—particularly the latter.

If we had known Mr. Madera's wish, on this subject, a few days sooner, we could have sent him cuttings, as our next door neighbor started, by steam boat, for a point but a few miles distant from his town.

Mr. Editor, we make these hasty remarks, for your next paper, in relation to the grape, for Mr. Madera's benefit, as the time for propagating it will soon be over for this season; and we wish to put him on the track immediately. But as the peach and plumb question is not so urgent, we should defer what we have to say about them till a future number. C. Springer.

Meadow Farm, Ohio, March, 16*th.*

Written for the Western Recorder.

Illinois ahead, in the Pork Line.

Mr. Editor:—In your paper of Decemner 26th speaking of heavy pork, you enumerate three lots first a fine lot of hogs five in No. weighing 1240 lbs. averaging 249 3-5. Next, lot on the Putnam side of the river, 10 hogs weighing 2756 lbs. average 275. And last, 4 hogs weighing 1128, average 282 lbs. Illinois can beat that, so that you may as well give it up at once. W. Shay sold to W. & M. More at Troy Mills, 8 hogs weighing 3282 lbs. averaging 410 lbs. The same company has packed in all 774 hogs average 270 lbs. 600 of them average 315 lbs. J. H. Stipp of Canton, has packed 1050 hogs, average 240 lbs. Now that's the way to raise pork—128 lbs. to the hog is too much difference. You must come to the West, if you want heavy pork,

Yours as ever,

J. R. Johnson.

Hartford, Knox County, Illinois, Feb. 1847.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Meeting of the Jews for the Relief of Ireland.—The members of the Synagogue in Crosby street, assembled on Monday evening to contribute to the relief of the famishing poor in Ireland. Mr. Lazarus having called the meeting to order, the Rev. J. J. Lyons, pastor of the congregation, made a brief address in support of the great object of the meeting. The reverend gentleman remarked incidentally, that he believed this was the first instance in modern times, within his knowledge, that the children of Israel assembled as a people, to contribute to the extent of their means, for the relief of another nation and other creeds. But there could be no doubt that a sacred duty required them to carry out the promptings of their sympathy in this case. He found it expressly required of them in the Law of God, to be charitable to all men of every creed. He quoted portions of the law enjoining this duty upon the Children of Israel forever—as Leviticus, xix. 9 and 10, xxiii. 22; xxv. 35; &c. He alluded also to the sufferings, persecutions and calamitites which the Jews themselves had undergone, as teaching the importance of that benevolence and charity which all men should entertain for their fellow creatures. He paid a handsome compliment to this country, for her noble liberality in granting freedom of conscience to every sect, and concluded with an eloquent and feeling appeal on behalf of the suffering poor in Ireland. Uriah H. Judah, Esq., next addressed the meeting. He spoke eloquently in behalf of the famishing poor whom they had met to relieve. He expatiated on the happy influences which the sacred obligation of charity exerted upon the human family, and paid a deserved compliment to the benevolence of the ladies, a large number of whom had assembled. He was followed by Jonas C. Phillips, Esq., the asssistant District Attourney, who made a truly beautiful appeal on behalf of the objects of the meeting, adding a vivid picture of the distress now existing in Ireland. M. M. Noah, Esq., next addressed the meeting giving an eloquent exposition of the origin of the famine in Ireland; its causes and effects, and the dreadful extent to which it is now raging among the devoted people of that nation. He remarked that a calamity so wide-spread as this, called for the sympathies of all men of every nation and creed; and he was happy to find this, the oldest of the Jewish congregations in America, uniting their sympathies with suffering fellow creatures in Ireland, without regard to sect or party. He concluded with an eloquent and feeling appeal on behalf of the famishing poor in that distant land, who were united to America by many ties of friendship and interest, as well as by the common ties of humanity. A collection being taken up, over two hundred dollars were contributed at once, which it was supposed would be farther increased at a future time. The meeting then united in singing a hymn, and adjourned.

Fire.—We regret to learn that, the Tavern House of Mr. John Smock, on this side of Jonathan's Creek, in Newton tp., took fire sometime very early yesterday morning, and the conflagration proceeded with such rapidity, that Mr. S. and family barely escaped from the building with their lives. It follows, of course, that little, or nothing, else was saved, the building burning to the ground. We have no estimate of the loss, nor have we learned that any insurance existed upon the property. With Mr. Smock, we sympathise most sincerely in his misfortune.—Zanesville Courier, 16*th.*

Emigration.—Prospects Ahead.—Persons driven from Ireland from want are arriving in considerable numbers in English sea ports. No less than 11,000 had arrived in Liverpool in 14 days and Glasgow, Greenock and Bristol are full, waiting opportunities to our shores. The people, tired of supporting the poor, will have to ship them and the greatest portion will land here. There are, it is said, 40,000 in Bristol, 112,000 in Glasgow, 100,000 in Liverpool now supported by Soup societies. We shall have them here in the summer months, at the rate of 3,000 a month, besides thousands from Holland, Germany, France and Italy. What are we to do with them when they arrive? We must look at the subject in time. One of the difficulties in this large emigration is the reduction of American labor to the present prices of European countries. Already the mechanics residing here native and adopted citizens, complain of the competition. The complaint is principally against the poor German emigrants. But they are not to blame. They must live, and to do that they are willing to work for very little more if any thing, than a mere living. When the number is farther augmented by emigration in the summer, we apprehend the most serious consequences in this city, and we would now earnestly call upon citizens of property to unite in devising some means by which the industrious poor may be settled upon lands in the interior. No time is to be lost in carrying out some plan of this character, by which foreign emigration may be made a blessing instead of a curse to our country.—N. Y. Sun.

Virginia.—Cheap Lands.—There is no State in the Union which has been so thinned of its population as Virginia. She is the parent stem of many States, and the disposition of her people to emigrate West has had its influence on the old Dominion. The state itself, when the current began to set South and South West, did not by wise and liberal legislation, arrest its progress. But things are about to change. The natuaal advantages of Virginia, both in soil and climate, and the low prices at which land is selling, are occupying the attention of Northern farmers; and large purchases of land have been made and are making for farming purposes. The careless and wasteful culture of the slave is superseded by the industry and economy of the enterprising white man, and Virginia in a few years will be a free State, with common schools and liberal laws, as flourishing as any other in the Union. The climate is delightful and salubrious. It is the beautiful country which gave the world a Washington, and a host of illustrious men. The soil is productive, and repays the industry of the husbandman as amply as the most fertile lands of our own State. The fevers of the West and the fatal malaria of the praries are unknown in Virginia.—N. Y. Sun.

A Particular Thief.—A young gentleman from Worcester, now residing in Boston, writes that the gentleman in whose family he is, had a valuable overcoat stolen from his entry. After about a fortnight it was found one morning in a much frequented back building, with a note in the pocket, of which the following is a copy as near as type can make it:

"Sir having ben | very poor | an haveing no | money or clos | temtacon | bing | very strong | i wos tempted | 2 do wat i did | so | i return it | bing very | kostly hoping ul lev | sum ole | clos wharul | finethis at nite | "

The kind-hearted gentlemen complied with the polite request of the thief, deposited a bundle of clothes where the coat was found, and in due time they disappeared.—Worcester Palladium.

We perceive that the Western Recorder of Zanesville, Ohio, has the contributions of Lorenzo Dow Johnson, as its New England correspondent, Mr. Johnson is a good descriptive writer, showing very good powers, though his facility of condensing his thoughts might be improved. He has edited for many years a paper, and has in former times contribed to the colums of the Olive Branch.—Olive Branch.

The first Prayer in Congsess.—We published some days since, an extract from a letter from John adams to a friend, speaking of the "first prayer in Congress." A correspondent has sent to the Christian Register a copy of a prayer, found among the papers of the Rev. Mr, Little, formerly minister of Kennebunk, Maine, which was filed as "Dunche's prayer upon the Declaration of Independence," and which is probably the prayer spoken of by Mr. Adams. We copy it from the Register:—Balt. Patriot.

The Rev. Mr. Duche's Prayer in the Congress after Independence was declared.

O Lord! our heavenly Father, high and mighty, king of kings, who dost from thy Throne behold all the dwellers on Earth, and reignest with Power supreme and uncontrolled over all Kingdoms, empires and Governments, look down in mercy, we beseech thee, upon these our American States, who have fled to thee from the Rod of the oppressor, and thrown themselves upon thy gracious Protection, desiring henceforth to be only dependant, upon thee. To thee have they appealed for the Righteousness of their cause. To thee do they now look up for that Countenance and Support which thou alone canst give; take them, therefore heavenly Father, under thy nurturing care, give them wisdom in council, and valor in the field; defeat the malicious Designs of our cruel Adversaries, convince them of the unrighteousness of their cause, and if they still persist in their sanguinary purposes, O! let the voice of thy unerring justice sounding in their Hearts, constrain them to drop the weapons of war from their unnerved Hands in the day of Battle. Be thou present, O God of wisdom, and direct the counsels of this honorable Assembly, enable them to settle things upon the best and surest Foundations that the Scene of Blood may be speedily closed, that order, harmony and Peace effectually be restored, and truth and Justice, Religion and Piety prevail and flourish amongst thy People; preserve the Health of their Bodies, and the vigor of their minds —Shower down upon them and the millions they here represent such Temporal Blessings as thou seest expedient for them in this world, and crown them with everlasting Glory in the world to come. All this we ask in the name and through the merits of Jesus Christ, thy Son, our Saviour. Amen.

Railroad Meeting.—A meeting of the citizens of Columbus and Franklin county convened at the Court House this morning, at 11 o'clock.—Robert W. McCoy, Esq., was appointed Chairman and Timothy Griffith, Esq., Secretary. Joseph Ridgway, Jr., addressed the meeting at length, urging the necessity and the importance of the county and city subscribing to the stock of the road. The proposition is, that the county shall subscribe fifty thousand dollars to the Columbus and Xenia road, and fifty thousand to the Cleveland road, and that the city shall take the same amount of stock divided in the same manner. A vote of the people is to be taken on the first Monday in April to decide whether it shall be done. W. B. Hubbard, Esq., also addressed the meeting, urging the subscription to the stock. The meeting adjourned until 2 o'clock, P. M.—O. Statesman.

Frightful Railroad Accident.—We conversed last night with several passengers in the great western mail and passenger train on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, which left Baltimore on last Thursday morning, and was detained seven hours at Sykesville, 31 miles from that city, by a frightful accident. It was in the morning, as usual, when the train approached that village, at a speed of twenty-four miles an hour. The National Road crosses the track here, and at the time a five horse team and wagon was about passing over it. The railroad is straight, and both the driver of the wagon, (who was walking) and conductor of the train, were perfectly aware of their proximity, but seems that one or both were on the calculation they could pass first, and so both drove ahead.

The result was, the Locomotive came upon the team just as as the three leading horses had crossed. The Engineer tried to stop the train when too late.

The Iron Horse rushed upon the Horse of flesh and blood. The cow-catcher struck the 'off wheel' horse, and pitched him with prodigious force, some distance from the track, where he lay in agony until an end was humanely put to his sufferings. The wagon bounded off a distance of thirty yards, rolling over and over. The three leading horses startled off in affright, and ran; but the saddle horse was instantly doubled up under the Locomotive, which, broken as it was, plunged on, grinding the creature to atoms. When the passengers got out, nothing was left under the Locomotive but his head and a few bones. Its heart still palpitating, and entrails still reeking, were scattered alongside the track. The more fortunate driver, though knocked down, and carried away insensible, was not seriously injured; but the hair-breadth escape with life awfully frightened him.

But the mischief did not end here. The machinery on the under part of the locomotive was broken, and some part of it catching the track, tore it up completely. For twenty-five or thirty yards, it ploughed into the ground to the depth of two feet, scattering the rails and timber in every direction. It was canted over very much, but did not upset and was nearly ruined. Singularly enough, the Engineer and Conductor hung on to the wreck, and the passengers experienced but a gentle shock. No one belonging to the train was injured in the least. The track had to be re-constructed, and another locomotive procured from Frederick, before the train could pass on. All this accounts for the failure of the mail, Wednesday night.—Pitts. Gaz, Mar. 5th.

Important Decision.

A suit involving principles of law important to community was decided evening before last, in the Court of Common Pleas. The case was an action brought by J. Bruner Phister, against the steamboat Empress, for assault and battery. The plaintiff in this case, alleged that he paid for a deck passage to this city on said boat; that on the passage, the mate committed on him an assault and battery by taking violent hold of, and striking him; also for using improper language, in which plea he claimed extraordinary damages. The defence was that the alleged assault was not committed by the owners of the boat, they not being on board; that if committed by the mates as alleged, it was trifling, and to enforce a compliance of contract, said Phister having engaged to "wood." The court held that boats as common carriers in taking passengers not only engaged to furnish room, but to treat them with respect; that the boat was responsible for the conduct of her officers while acting in their official capacity. That a violation of the rights of passengers by the officers of a boat, subjected her in law to damages to be assessed not only for the actual injury done, but for the lacerated felings inflicted that a non-compliance of contract on the part of a passenger, could not be plead in defence of assault and battery, but the jury might take it into consideration in mitigation of damages.

The jury returned a verdict of $33,33½ for the plaintiff.

This case involved in doubt, whether blow or blows were inflicted or not, and mitigating circumstances were shown. The rights of passengers, particularly on deck, have been unknown or disregarded on some of the boats navigating the western waters. Outrages disgraceful to a Cabin slave driver, have been committed with impunity. The poor deck passengers, in many cases, have been subjected to degrading insults for which their ignorance of their own rights, or poverty, prevented them from seeking redress. We think this decision will have a salutary effect in correcting the manners of brutal officers on our western waters, for some of this class we certainly have. The decision we look upon as good, and exceedingly well timed.—Cincinnati Commercial.

THE FINAL PROCEEDINGS.

We had not time last week to notice the final proceedings of Congress.

The appropriation bills were all passed.

The Senate disposed of all the private bills from the House but one.

The river and harbor bill passed both Houses, but failed to become a law, not being returned by the President.

The bill satisfying the Paul Jones claim also passed both Houses, but was found after the adjournment of Congress on the floor of the Senate. And so the claimants must await the action of another Congress.

The bills establishing Territorial Governments for Minnesota and Oregon were taken up in the Senate, discussed to some extent, and finally laid upon the table!

The bill creating an additional number of general officers was passed, not, however, till the provision authorising the President to appoint a Commander-in-chief was striken out.

A joint resolution was adopted, authorising the President to provide two national vessels for the purpose of conveying relief to the starving people of Ireland.

An attempt to call up the bill appropriating $500,000 to the relief of Ireland failed.

Congress then adjourned, the Executive having succeeded in carrying all its measures, except the lieutenant generalship and the proposed tax on tea and coffee.—National Era.

A Philosopher in a Poor-House.—A late N. Y. paper says among the thousand foreigners now confined in the Alms House of this city is a learned German, Dr. Heidelberg, who was once a preacher, then a professor in the Berlin and Halle Universities, an author, a doctor of philosophy, a rational man now (almost of course a pauper.) He came to this country about two years ago where he supposed his great leaning would find a market. He is a master of the Hewbrew, Greek, Latin, French and German languages, a bitter reviler of the Christian Religion, and at the same time the object of Christian Charity. It is said that he has been brought to his present condition by the united influence of his infidel principles and the worst species of intemperance. When Paine turned "philosopher" he was early in the same predicament.

St. George's Church contributed $600 last Sunday to the Bible cause.

The Post Office Laws

t seems, have been modified in some impor- t respects at the late session of Congress. The king privileges is restored as before the last went into operation, and extends to the recess well as to the terms of Congress; $200,000 s appropriated to pay the postage of the two uses of Congress; it is made an offence to send letters under one envelope; newspapers are to charged three cents postage, except when sent m the office of publication; Mail carriers and ntractors are authorised to carry newspapers of the mail for circulation or sale: the com- ssions and compensation of Postmasters are o altered. We will publish the important tions of the law hereafter.—Zanesville Cour-

ARMS FOR THE MEXICANS.—A French merchant- n run the blockad e of Vera Cruz last month, ing in ten thousand stand of arms and twenty s of gunpowder.

Among the Sufferers at the fire at Head's Man- n, Philadelphia, were Madam Iturbide, ex-em- ess of Mexico.

The Presbyterian Church in Duane street con- buted on Sunday $389,10, for the relief of the ffering poor in Scotland, and $273,31 for those Ireland.

IMPORTANT BILL.—The Oregon Mail bill ich passed the Senate, authorises the Post- aster General to establish a mail route to Ore- n, and appropriate $100,000 for the service. e bill allows a selection between Charleston, vanah, Pensacola and New Orleans as the rting point—thence to Havana—thence to nagres, and across the Isthmus to the Pacific.

A SEVERE TRUTH.—An eastern paper gives a ort sketch uttered by a young lady as follows: When I go to the theatre, I am very careless of y dress, as the audience are too attentive to the ay to observe my wardrode; but when I go to urch, I am very particular in my outward ap- arance, as most people go there to see how eir neighbors dress and deport themselves."

A CIRCULATING LIE.—During a speech on the ilmot Proviso, Mr. Brinkerhoff, of Ohio, paused d drew a half dollar piece from his pocket, and lding it up so that every member of the house uld see what it was, said: Sir! look at this, sir— ok at it, and see its inscription. "Liberty" is mped upon it. Shall we strike it out and in- rt s'avery or shall we hereafter, in the face of e world, continue to use it as a circulating lie? s, for a circulating lie—or shall we make it tell e truth sir?

NEW YORK RELIEF FOR IRELAND.—Messrs. pp and Brown have set apart the receipts of all eir stages during Thursday next. The Friend- Sons of St. Patrick have donated the expenses their annual festival, and dispensed with a cel- ration during this season of calamity in the land their fathers.

The Catholics of this City and Brooklyn, who ve but few very rich people among them, have t a noble example of feeling and philanthropy r suffering Ireland. On one Sunday they col- cted in their several churches $13,756 34.— honorable testimony of their liberality.

The contributions received by the Irish Re- f Committee in this city amount to over $53,- 00.—N. Y. Sun.

AN EMINENT MAN DEAD.—Silas Wood, many ars member of Congress from Long Island, died Huntingdon on Tuesday last, in the 78th year his age. He wrote a history of Long Island, d was a man of unblemished character, ability d frugality, a good neighbor and friend.

A COMET was discovered at the Cambridge Mass) observatory, last Thursday evening, visi- e with the telescope only. Its location is near e star 18 Andromedar. A R 23h 46m North ec ⋈ 50 deg 0 min. Daily motion a degree d half South.

STEAMBOAT BURNT.—The steamboat Cricket, the New York and Stamford Line, took fire at ree o'clock yesterday morning, at the foot of tharine street, and burnt nearly to the water's ge. Every thing except the hull and engine as destroyed, with considerable freight. The e is believed to have been the work of an in- ndiary.

CHARITABLE.—A gentleman named Bruce, a otchman by birth, residing in North Carolina, s purchased 600 bushels of corn to send to his ffering countrymen at home.

PESTILENCE AND FAMINE IN IRELAND.—The ork Reporter of January 12, says:—"This day ain our columns are crowded with details more vful, and examples of moral suffering frenzy, mine and despair, and hid eous death, more ter- ble than we thought could be collected within so ief a space, from the worst scenes of pestilence d famine. Death—death nothing but death to ind up the paragraphs of every letter we receive d to meet the reader's view in every passage of e documents and reports we publish. They e perishing now not in two's or three's but in enties, in each parish—and hundreds in every rony. The earth is red from the fresh graves, d the pestilence is mowing down the people fas- r than fell before the once strong and cheerful borer. In the parish of Kilmoe, twenty bodies e consigned to the earth every day."

The special reporter of the Cork Examiner, entions the complete discontinuance of marria- es in that country.

DUELLING.—Under the new constitution of ouisiana, duelling is severely punished by civil sabilities. In the first case tried, the Jury could ot agree, nine being for acquittal and three for onviction. Where public opinion comes not aid of the law, the law itself has no force.

Franz August Hirsch has been recognised as nsul of Prussia, for Boston.

Francis D. Newcombe, the forger arrested at ew Orleans, escaped from prison. A reward of 1000 is offered for his arrest.

SHIPS OF WAR WITH FOOD FOR IRELAND.—Al- ough Congress failed to pass the bill granting alf a million dollars to the suffering poor in Ire- nd and Scotland, they authorized the President send out the ships Macedonian and Jamestown ith donations, we suppose no time will be lost getting them ready for sea.

ANOTHER SHIP FOR IRELAND.—The New York Relief Committee having loaded the barque Vic- or with contributions for Ireland have chartered nother vessel, the brig Duncan.

ACCIDENT.—As the Zanesville Packet was oming into the canal, on Sunday evening, her ilot, Mr. W. Scales, was at the windlass, which as then in use, and in attempting to check it, it caped from his grasp and struck him a glancing ow, upon the head, fracturing the skull and rowing him senseles to the deck. He lays, we re informed, in a languishing state, so that is recovery is somewhat doubtful.—Zanesville Courier, 16th.

THE IRISH RELIEF COMMITTEE, up to yesterday, had received in all $78,130 76. By a card from Capt. DeKay, in our advertising columus, it will be seen that the U. S. Ship Macedonian is now ready to receive donations for the suffering poor in Ireland and Scotland.—N. Y. Sun Mch. 12.

ELOPEMENT AND ARREST.—An elopement of a very exciting character has occurred in Philadelphia. A man calling himself De Grot alias De Rosseville, who had been enjoying the hospitalities of a gentleman, eloped with his wife, a child three years old, and five hundred dollars in gold, in a brig bound for a distant port. A steamboat, with the necessary officers, pursued the vessel down the Delaware, hove in sight and captured the guilty parties and restored the wife, child and money to a frantic husband, and locked the fellow in jail to answer.

GUY FAUX.—The custom still prevails in England of officers and yeomen of the Guards searching the vaults of both Houses, preparatory to the opening of Parliament. This custom has prevailed since the discovery of the celebrated gunpowder plot.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

REV. JAMES CULBERTSON

Senior Pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Zanesville, O., departed this life Feb., 23d A. D., 1847, aged 61 years and 4 months. The only clergyman, of any denomination, who has closed his mortal life in this town. He was born and brought up in Franklin county, Pa. near Chambersburgh. His parents were both members of the Presbyterian church in full communion, and his father a Ruling Elder. The family connexion was extensive. He received his academical education in Jefferson College, Pa., which he entered quite young. While there he obtained a christian hope during a season of religious interest in the college. He prosecuted his theological studies under the direction of Drs. King and Herron, and was licensed to preach the gospel in April A. D. 1811 by the Presbytery of Carlisle. In the summer of 1812 he came a missionary to the West, and directed his steps to Zanesville and Springfield, (now Putnam.) then small villages. Some three years previously, a Presbyterian church had been organized here and ministered to by Rev. William Jones, (who is still living, but was, at this time vacant. Being invited he commenced preaching in August to the little church of thirty-two communicants and the attending population, among whom he became very popular. Within six months the congregation made out a call for him, and he was ordained to the full work of the ministry, and installed a pastor of the united church of Zanesville and Springfield, by the Presbytery of Lancaster. The congregation had, as yet, no house of worship. He preached alternately in Zanesville and Springfield—in Z. in the court house—in S. in a house prepared temporarily for worship. In A. D. 1816 a respectable brick church was built, near the river, at the corner of what is now the junction of fourth and south streets, in Zanesville, for the convenience of the congregation attending from both sides of the river. Here he ministered the word and ordinances during the prime of his life, for the period of twenty-four years, and the number of communicants increased to nearly 300.

In A. D. 1834 the Putnam church was organized, and consequently but few came from that side of the river being now more conveniently accommodated. Meantime the village of Zanesville had spread out north and east. The walls of the old church began to fail, and it was determined to pull them down and erect a new church on sixth street in the central part of the town. This was accomplished in the years '39 and 40. After the new and commodious sanctuary was completed, he was permitted to labor in it but a short time with his former energies. His health began to fail through attacks of dyspepsia accompanied with symptoms of paralysis. In the summer of 1844, he gave notice to the congregation that it would be expedient for them to employ an assisting minister. This was done, and the assistant entered upon his labors precisely at the same date in the year that Mr. C. had commenced his, thirty-two years previously. After this he preached but one sermon which was in the following November; though he was always able to attend public worship, and, until within a few months of his decease, was able to officiate in marriages, baptisms, and the Lord's supper. The last Sabbath but one of his mortal life, he was permitted to be in his place, and offered prayer at the close of service. On the following Monday evening being at a neighboring house in company with others; when about to retire, he was in the act of lighting the candle of his lantern while standing at the head of a short flight of stairs, when he was instantly paralysed and fell backward down the stairs, wrapt in his cloak, and was taken up senseless, and in eight days expired. During this period he was favorwith two or three lucid intervals. On Sabbath afternoon, about 40 hours before he expired, his reason returned—his eye became clear and intelligent and he appeared to recognize those around him. At that moment his colleague came into the room and approached his bed-side. His left hand, which he could still move, he reached out to him, and he made a violent effort to speak but could not. His tongue was paralysed. His colleague, holding his hand, repeated some scripture promises to him, and then asked him if he could rely on these now, and if so, to press his hand, which he did promptly, at the same time expressing great earnestness in his countenance. He then asked if he firmly believed that gospel which he had so long preached? To this he promptly replied by the same sign. Similar questions had been previously put by another clergyman who was present and similar answers obtained. Prayer was then offered, and the hymn sung,

"O for an overcoming faith
"To cheer my dying hours, &c."

In these exercises he appeared to take great interest. Afterward he sank into a stupor, and death seemed commissioned to finish his cruel task. Thus fell one of Zion's watchmen. The same stroke that severed the tie subsisting between his soul and body, dissolved the pastoral relation between him and the Zanesville church, the only pastorate that he ever held, and held for the honorable period of Thirty-four years. Few such records can, as yet, be made in the western country.

It is not our purpose, in this article, to write a euology upon him who has gone to rest; but simply set down the leading facts of his life which his friends, and the members of his congregation, may wish to preserve from oblivion.

During his ministry in Zanesville he delivered 3798 sermons. He kept an exact register of all his sermons preached including the time, place, and text. Every page was footed up, and the sum total still carried forward, except on the last page. He had, however, been preaching more than a year before he came to the west; so that it is evident he had preached 4000 sermons. Who but God shall estimate their results upon those who heard them! His first sermon in Zanesville was founded on the text 1 Cor. iii. 11. "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." His last, on Mat. xxiv. 13. "But he that shall endure to the end shall be saved." How striking the beginning, and the ending! It seems that he had completely finished his work—beginning at the foundation truth of the gospel and finishing with the very last of the glorious system. And not only so in regard to the messages which he delivered, but in respect of the general church-work which he was instrumental in accomplishing. At first his parish was no doubt the entire county and more. Several churches have been organized from portions of his pastoral charge; and he was the honored instrument of leading his flock through the various vicissitudes incident to the settlement of a new country, and the growth of a large town, up to a most comfortable point. He saw them, at last, worshipping in a spacious, comfortable, and even elegant house, located on the most eligible site on the midst of a town of six thousand inhabitants, and free from a burden of debt. His work was done. The purpose for which God had sent him to Zanesville was accomplished. And now it ought to be made a matter of serious reflection with the present pastor and every member of that church, whether he, or she, will pull down that which God has thus built up in 34 years; or go on to build up the walls of that portion of his Zion, the foundation of which is but now laid. "Other men have labored, and ye have entered into their labors"—not entered in to sit down and enjoy; but entered into their labors.

The funeral services were attended by several members of the Presbytery and by the clergy of Zanesville and Putnam; and an immense concourse of citizens of all the churches, and of no church, testified their respect for Mr. C., as a man, a christian, and a minister of the gospel. Rev. James Hoge D. D., of Columbus delivered the sermon on the occasion.—Zanesville Colporteur.

NOTICES.

Mt. Zion Circuit, Muskingum Conference.—Br. Clancy's appointment will be at Mt. Zion Meeting House, on Killbuck, near J. C. Frederick's 9, miles from Roscoe.

We intend to hold a protracted meeting in the north part of the circuit, to commence March 20th. We would rejoice to see some of our brethren in the ministry come up to our help.

J. HAMBAY.

Frederick Circuit, Muskingum Conference.—The President, Br. Clancy, is informed that his meeting for this circuit will be held at Frederickstown. S. LANCASTER.

Mill Creek Circuit, Indiana Conference—Our third quarterly meeting will be held at Pleasant Grove, including the fifth Sabbath in May. The President is requested to attend.

H. COLLINGS.

Miami Circuit, Ohio Conference.—We have a protracted meeting appointed to be held at our new Church, 4 miles west of Troy, commencing, April 10, to which we invite Br. Young, our President, Br. S. P. Kezerta, and as many more of our brethren as can attend. Br. Young is also desired to fill an appointment at or near Logansville. J. W. THORNBURGH.

Delaware Circuit, Muskingum Conference. The President's meeting will be held at Westbrook's School House, seven miles west of Homer, and three from Lock.

Our third Quarterly Meeting will be held in the neighborhood of Br. Langwell's, three miles south of Eden, commencing the last Saturday in May, (29th.) To this meeting we invite T. Potter, S. Catlin, S. Lancaster, A. K. Earl, A. S. Robinson. We have no ordained Elder on this Circuit, and have sustained some disadvantage on account of it. I give notice at this early period, that the brethren may have time to arrange their business and attend. Don't fail to come.

WM. HATFIELD.

Waynesburgh Circuit, Pittsburgh Conference.—We contemplate commencing a meeting in Waynesburgh, on the 19th of March, to be continued 2 weeks. To this meeting we respectfully invite Brs. P. T. Laishley, N. Gillespie, J. V. Evans, D. R. Helmick, R. T. Simonton, S. Clawson, J. C. Hazlett, T. Maple, and all other travelling and local brethren who can make it convenient to attend. The reason why we appoint this meeting to continue so long, and invite so many preachers, this is the place appointed to hold our next Annual Conference—we want a revival in this place. Better come and help us than have to preach our funeral when you come to Conference. Come, brethren, and help us.

W. A. PORTER.

GREENVILLE MISSION, OHIO DISTRICT.—Our second quarterly meeting will be held at New Madison, Darke county, commencing, March 27th, to meet the President's visit. We invite Br's. J. Flood, I. Hunt, G. Thornburg, W. Pelan, Wilford Young, J. Q. A. Yonkey. S. P. KEZERTA.

EVANSVILLE CIRCUIT, PITTS. CONF.—The Next Quarterly meeting will commence at the White Oak appointment on the first of May, to which we invite Brs. P. T. Laishley—D. R. Helmick—Jno. Clark, H. Reger,—A. Lister—R. M. Walker—M. Lucas, with all others that can attend. Come over Brethren and help us. And if either of the brethren has Hymn Books or Disciplines, he will find sale for them at our meeting.

A. J. WAREN, Supt.

PRESIDENTIAL APPOINTMENTS.

Pittsburgh District.

Should it please God to spare my life, and give health to my family, I will try to fill the following appointments.

Wheeling Circuit.	1st	Sunday	in	April.
Tyler	" 2d	"		"
Harrisville	" 3d	"		"
Mill Creek	" 4th	"		"
Buchanon	" 1st	"	in	May
Braxton	" 2d	"		"
Greenbrier	" 3d	"		"
Huntersville	" 4th	"		"
Valley	" 5th	"		"

GEO. BROWN.

Ohio Conference.

Presidential Visitation.

Twin Creek Station,	March	20	& 21.
Greenville Mission,	"	27	& 28.
Miami Circuit,	April		10.
Lima "	"		17.
Kalida "	"		24.
Maumee Mission,	May		1.
Portage Circuit,	"		8.
Mt. Blanchard "	"		15.
Richwood "	"		22.
Union "	"		29.
Springfield "	June		5.
Miami "	"		12.

I Request the Superindendents, on the above Cts. to give notice through the Western Recorder, where their meetings will be held in their Charges. J. M. YOUNG.

Indiana District.

MR. EDITOR: Please state that by divine permission, I will fill the following appointments.

Laughrey	Mission	March	21th
Flat Rock	Circuit	"	28th
White Lick	"	April	11th
Mill Creek	"	"	18th
White River	"	"	25th

Will Br. W. B. Evans inform me by letter or otherwise the place of the appointment on White River Ct. T. SHIPP.

Muskingum District.

BR. BASSETT: Please insert in the Recorder, the following list of appointments which I will fill, if able so to do.

3rd Sunday	March,	Lancaster Circuit.
4th "	"	Zanesville	"
1st "	April	Newark	"
7th Wednesday	"	Delaware	"
2nd Sunday	"	Frederick	"
4th "	"	Licking	"
28th Wednesday	"	Mt. Zion	"
1st Sunday	May	Coshocton	"
2nd "	"	Pleasant hill	"

GEO. CLANCY, Pres.

MAHONING MISSION.—Br. Clancy, the President, is informed that I wish to be released from my field of labor, on account of the state of my health, which has been very poor for some time, and no prospect of being any better.

DANIEL RICHARDSON.

ZANESVILLE CIRCUIT.—The President Br. Clancy will be expected to attend a meeting at Brownsville, on the last Saturday and Sunday in March, as per his appointment.

COLUMBIA CT. MUSK. CON.—Our President is informed that his appointment will be at Graham's station, on the Ohio river. We also purpose holding a two days' meeting at Athens Bridge, March 20th and 21st. We invite Brs. H. T. Lawson, C. J. Sears, S. Means, W. Sears, J. W. Southard, F. Edwards, and any other brethren who can attend. S. ELLIOTT.

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT.

LETTERS RECEIVED.

Paul Pry, 2; J. Hambay, J. M. Buchanan, P. M.; Dr. J. Hildreth, W. Remsburg, J. C. Hazlett, W. M. Betts, W. Fitzimmons, T. Foster, S. Lancaster, W. W. Tyson, R. White, H. Collings, R. K. Davis, 1 subscriber; J. I. Stillians, W. W. Sterricker, 2 subscribers; S. Clawson, F. W. Porter, R. Rose, 1 subscriber and pay; J. R. Johnson, W. B. Evans, 2 subscribers; J. S. Hudson, J. Burton, W. W. Paul, and W. Smith.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS.

From	For	Pays to Vol.	No.	$ cts.
W. Remsburg,	J. Fordyce, Jr.,	8	52	4 00
"	I. Hoopman,	9	16	2 00
J. C. Hazlett,	P. Potter,	9	12	2 00
"	R. Rankin	9	9	2 00
R. K. Davis,	A. Safford,	8	15	1 00
"	G. E. Chapin,	9	5	2 00
R. Rose,	G. Johnson,	9	23	2 00
J. R. Johnson.	R. Mount,	9	42	2 00
"	R. Young,	8	30	1 00
"	J. Pierce,	8	30	1 00
"	T. Shay,	8	30	1 00
J. S. Hudson,	B. Connell,	8	52	4 00
W. W. Paul,	F. J. Barris,	8	52	4 00
"	Jos. Hall,	8	40	1 00
"	J. Ewbank,	8	52	2 00

New subscribers this week, 7. Discontinuances, 3.

The Post Master at Baltimore informs us that the paper sent to Rev. E. Henkle, is not taken out. We suppose it is owing to his absence in the District. Will Brother Reese do us the favor to signify this thing to Brother H., or his family?

Brother Davis, A. Safford owes us nothing. Glad to put him down again.

Methodist Protestant.—Please change the paper of Rev. R. Rose from Port William Clinton county, O., to Paintersville, Green county Ohio. Also, discontinue the paper of J. Shay, Hartford, Knox county, Illinois. Credit J. Ewbank, Tanner's Creek, Indiana, $2, and charge us.

We have received a note from Brother Stillians, Va., expressing some astonishment that W. B. declines taking his paper, as he represents there could have been no misunderstanding in reference to his consenting to become a subscriber. Never mind, Brother S.—W. B. has sent us 50 cents for the number received, and we are satisfied.—Please see that the other 13 remember us in the course o the year, and we shall rank both agent and snbscribers, amongst our first and best.

Brother Paul, we certainly were not notified to discontinue F. J. B. The Post Master and D. H. S. must have forgotten.

Brother H. Collings, Ia., has surprised us by saying that he subscribed at Conference for Annual Registers, (50 copies,) has waited till now, and has given it up. Now we were requested to forward the parcels of pamphlets for Br. C. and others of that District, to Edinburg, care of Br. A. Shipp,—this was all that was asked of us. We did so, in November last, verily supposing that the brethren would send to Edinburg for them, as we had done our part. We are surprised that Br. C. has not got his pamphlets, and that the publisher has not got his pay.

Brother G. Wheatly, we have done the best we could in sending you missing numbers. Could you take that lot and sell them at half price?

A paper sent to W. Henry, Clarion, Pa., has been returned to us, not taken from the post office. We will discontinue at the middle of the volume, if he wishes, and he will please pay us one dollar, which we will credit in full. Will our agent see to this?

A subscriber who owes us for our paper for nearly a year, and moved from somewhere in Ohio to Allegheny city, not one hundred months ago, has taxed us with the postage on an old song we have been familiar with from a child. Hoping he did not design it as an imposition, we forbear to publish his name at present, and see if he pays up soon.

Received for Rev. C. Springer.

R. Rose, for G. Johnson,	$5 00
J. S. Hudson, for B. Connell,	2 00

Received for Annual Register, 1847.

H. T. Lawson,	$1 00
J. H. Webster,	1 00
W. Browning, Pa.,	2 00
O. Warrington,	3 50
J. Burton, Ia.	2 00

For Annual Register of 1846.

J. Fordyce, Jr.,	$1 00

The Markets.

ZANESVILLE & PUTNAM, March 18.

No changes, worthy of note, have taken place. Flour is still selling at $4,00 per bbl., Wheat, per bushel, 65 cts., Corn 25c., Oats 15c.

PITTSBURGH, March 13.

Flour—Prices left off last week at $4 for good brands, and have gradually advanced to $4,06a4,16, with an upward tendency.

Grain—Wheat is in request at 70c. Oats are more in demand than any other description of grain, and at better prices. Last sales at 27a28c. Rye, 37a40c. Barley—the best samples command 40c. readily, and from that down to 35c. Corn, shelled, has sold readily at 40c. per bu.

Provisions—There has been an improved demand for Bacon, and we have sales reported of 60,000 lbs. city smoked, in lots, at 5¾a6c. for Shoulders, 7c. for Sides, 7a7¼, and occasionally 8c. for Hams. A large amount of Meat is now in Smoke House to cure.

CINCINNATI, March 13.

Flour—The market continued quiet yesterday with a drooping tendency. The sales include, 250 brls. from canal, in two lots; 386 from railroad and store, and a few wagon loads, all at $4,25.

Grain—Wheat 70c. per bu.; Corn in sacks 43a45c.; in ears 33a35c.; Oats 35c.; Barley 50c.; Rye 48c.

Perk—A sale of 33 bbls Mess at $13,50 per bbl.

Bacon—A sale of 5 hhds. com. Hams, at 7¾c., pkd.

☞ DISSOLUTION OF PARTNERSHIP. ☜

THE Partnership heretofore existing under the name and firm of J. J. ANDERSON & Co., has this day been dissolved by mutual consent. It is therefore necessary for all persons indebted to said firm to call and settle their accounts. Those having claims against said firm, will present them to F. R. POTTS, at the old Stand, for settlement,—who is authorized to settle all accounts.

Putnam, O., March 11, 1847. {J. J. ANDERSON, FR'S. R. POTTS.

THE BUSINESS of the Foundry will hereafter be conducted by the Subscriber, at the old Stand.

mar. 18, '47.] FR'S. R. POTTS.

1000 VARIETIES OF BOOKS, MAPS, CARDS, &c.,

PUBLISHED BY THE

American Sunday School Union,

146 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia,

AND OVER

500 SUNDAY SCHOOL LIBRARY BOOKS,

On good paper and type, with numerous plates and engravings, and substantially bound,

EMBRACING

SCRIPTURE STORIES,	BIBLE GEOGRAPHY AND ANTIQUITIES,
ILLUSTRATIONS,	TEMPERANCE,
BIOGRAPHIES,	DUTIES OF CHILDREN,
DOMESTIC DUTIES,	PRAYER,
PARENTAL RELATIONS,	NARRATIVES OF REAL LIFE,
MISSIONS,

Eminently practical and instructive; suitable also for families and individual reading.

Aids to Sabbath School Teachers,

Union Bible Dictionary,	Biblical Antiquities, 2 vols,
Bible Geography,	Teacher's Assistant, 2 vols,
Teacher taught,	Union Questions, 12 vols. &c.

MAPS of Palestine, Jerusalem, Journeyings of the Children of Israel, and St. Pauls' Travels.

All the requisites for conducting a Sabbath School.

A large assortment of SMALL BOOKS for Premiums, from 50 cents per hundred and upwards.

LIBRARIES.

I.—436 VOLUMES,

Being a full set of the Society's Publications, exslusive of Maps, Question Books, &c., each book numbered on the back, with 100 catalogue of the same, without a case $90; including Maps of the Ancient World and Palestine, $92,50; and the whole in a neat case, $97,50.

II.—121 VOLUMES,

Designed especially for common schools and families, with 50 catalogues, and in a plain case, $33; without a case $30.

III.—80 VOLUMES,

With 25 catalogues and case, $20; without case, $17,50.

IV.—40 VOLUMES, $10.

V.—100 VOLUMES, Selected for Sunday Schools. With case $25—without case, $22,50.

VI.—CHILD'S LIBRARY, 18 volumes, $2,25.

PERIODICALS.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL JOURNAL,

Published twice a month, at twenty-five cents per year, in advance—a valuable Family Newspaper and Sabbath School Teacher's Guide; in a form suitable for binding. Not less than four copies sent to one address.

THE YOUTH'S FRIEND,

Published once a month. 16 pages, 18 mo. with cuts, at 25 cents a year. The 20 volumes uniformly bound and numbered, $5,40.

YOUTH'S PENNY GAZETTE,

A valuable paper for Sunday School Scholars & Families, published every other week, with five or six embellishments in each number.

6 copies one year, to one address,	-	$1 00
20 copies do. do.	-	3 00
40 copies do. do.	-	5 00

which is exactly at the rate of twelve and a half cents a year, in advance. Not less than six copies sent to one address.

OFFICERS.

President—ALEXANDER HENRY, 146 Chestnut st., Philadelphia.

Treasurer—HERMAN COPE, 146 Chestnut street. Philad.

FREDERICK W. PORTER, Corresponding Secretary, 146 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

FREDERICK A. PACKARD, Editor of the Society's Publications, 146 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

☞ Documents, Reports, Hints, Descriptive Catalogues, &c., replete with information, are furnished gratuitously on application. Orders from any part of the United States, and British Provinces, will receive immediate attention.

Sunday Schools are advised to send with their orders a list of the books in their libraries to avoid having duplicates forwarded. More than 1000 books can be furnished, if requested.

American Sunday School Union.

General Depository, Philad., 146 Chestnut street.

Branch Depositories.

BOSTON, No. 5 Cornhill.—William B. Tappan, Agent.

NEW YORK, No. 152 Nassau St.—James C. Meeks, Agent.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Fourth st.—W. H. Bulkley, Agent.

Mar. 18, '47.

PROSPECTUS

OF THE LITERARY EMPORIUM.

A COMPENDIUM OF

Religious, Literary and Philosophical Knowledge.

IN the first place, light literature will find no place in its pages, i. e., love tales, literary trash, &c. Secondly, sectarianism will not be admitted into the Emporium; or, in other words, it will favor no particular sect; but it will advocate the religion of the Bible in the strongest terms, and will urge the necessity not only of a change of heart, but a virtuous and holy life, in order to be truly happy in this world and to be prepared for that which is to come.—In regard to its literary character, it is designed to be of such a nature, as to water the thirsty soul that is studiously endeavoring to acquire a knowledge of man in his past and present condition; also some information in relation to the different sciences and arts, and the variety of the works of nature, with such miscellaneous reading as will invigorate the faculties of the mind, give scope to the imagination, while it shall address itself to the good sense of all who desire to be truly elevated by reading.

Our object in the beginning was to establish a sound literature, which we deem of much importance to the future destiny of this country. We bless God that he has smiled on our efforts: for although the Emporium has been in existence but two years, and has just entered upon the third, it has already attained a circulation of fifteen thousand, which is unequalled in the history of Magazines. It is got up in better style, and contains more reading, and from abler pens, than any other magazine of its price in the United States.

Christian Friend, we hope you will aid us in the extensive circulation and support of a work, which we think calculated to enrich the mind, and inspire the soul to the love of virtue and its Divine Author. The very extensive circulation of light and frothy literature, as it is called, is taking by wholesale, the very life blood of the morality and religion of the youth of our country. Is it not time for Christians to act in this matter?

 CONTRIBUTORS.—The Literary Emporium contains articles, original or selected, from the following, among other distinguished authors:

J. G. Whittier, Seba Smith, R. S. St. John, Mrs. Judson, Rev. J. N. Danforth. Mrs. E. O. Smith, Miss Welby, Mrs. F. H. Green, Mrs. Stewart, Rev. S. Olin, Prof. McClintock, Rev. J. P. Durbin, Elihu Burritt, Wm. C. Bryant, N. P. Willis, S. Galloway, A. M., Washington Irving, Rev. Dr. Bethune, Rev. L. L. Hamline, Rev. E. Thomson, Rev. T. Dick, D. D., Rev H. Winslow, Rev. Wm. B. Sprague, Rev. T. H. Stockton, Rev. Rob't. Lee, Rev. B. F. Teft, Mrs. L. H. Sigourney, Mrs. E. C. Embury, Miss Sedgwick, Emeline Smith, Eliza Cook, Miss Baker.

The Emporium is published monthly, at $1,00 a year; $5,00 allowed to any person who will obtain fifteen paying subscriber, and at the same rate for a greater or less number. One hundred enterprising and honest Agents wanted for the Emporium and other valuable works. All letters, orders, &c., should be addressed to

J. K. WELLMAN,

Editor and Proprietor, No 116 Nassau-st, N. Y.

ROAD NOTICE.

NOTICE is hereby given to the citizens of Newton township, Muskingum county, Ohio, that a petition will be presented to the Trustees of said township, at their sitting in April, 1847, praying for said Trustees to appoint such persons as the law requires, to view and lay out a township road in said township, commencing at the township line between Hopewell and Newton townships, at the corner, between Peter Stine and John Thomas, running thence to the north east corner of land owned by George M. Crooks, on the same route now open, and then to intersect the old Lancaster road at or near a stone bridge at the foot of John Williams' hill.

March 4, 1847.

GEORGE CONCLIN,

BOOKSELLER AND PUBLISHER,

Stationer, Binder, and

BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURER,

No. 39 Main Street, Cincinnati.

KEEPS on hand Books published by the Methodist Protestant Church—such as

CHURCH HYMN BOOKS,
REVIVAL " "
DISCIPLINES,
EVANS' QUESTIONS & ANSWERS, &c.

ALSO—Just received—A supply of the CHRISTIAN WORLD in 3 Vols. with Portraits of the Wesleys, &c., by REV. THOS. H. STOCKTON.

For Sale.

PROPERTY IN IRVILLE. BLACKSMITHS, ATTEND.

THE SUBSCRIBER, intending to remove to the west, offers for sale his property in Irville, Muskingum County, O., consisting of three town lots, with a two story frame dwelling house, a good well of water and a pump at the door; a stable, and blacksmith shop, being a very good stand for business, having no competition. A desirable situation for a blacksmith. Irville is situated in the midst of a populous and healthful section of country. The property will be sold low at private sale. Please call soon and see. SAMUEL MOORE.

Irville, Feb. 25, 1847.

MEMORIA TECHNICA:

Or, the Art of Abbreviating those Studies which give the greatest labor to the Memory; including Numbers, Historical Dates, Geography, Astronomy, Gravities, &c.; also Rules for Memorizing Technicalities, Nomenclatures, Proper Names, Prose, Poetry, and Topics in general.—Embracing all the available Rules found in Mnemonics, or Mnemotechny of Ancient and Modern Times. To which is added a Perpetual Almanac for Two Thousand Years of Past Time and Time to Come. Adapted to the use of Schools. By LORENZO D. JOHNSON. Second edition, revised and improved.—Boston.

PRICE—50 CENTS.

In presenting to the public the "Memoria Technica," which, in some respects, may be said to contain a new theory of instruction, the publishers beg leave to direct attention to some of its peculiarities.

The art of Aiding the Memory, and the deduction of Rules by attention to which it may be made infinitely more available, has been a subject of public interest, and has received the particular attention of a high order of minds in almost every age of the world.

Yet this is the first work of the kind which has ever been prepared in this country for the use of Schools. Whelpley and Worcester in their Compends of Universal History, (for the want of something better,) introduced an abstract of Gray's System of Mnemonics, which like Gourand's, relates only to the memory of figures.

In preparing this work for the press, it has been the object of the author to adapt his illustrations to Common School instruction, and if possible, to lessen some of the difficulties in acquiring useful knowledge, without lessening mental culture. And the hope is cherished that it may be generally adopted as a text-book in schools, by which every teacher of youth may be made a "professor" of all the rules for aiding Memory, that can be made available to a student while acquiring an education.

Should it be asked, does this system really improve the memory? or is it an arrangement by which we lessen the labor of memory? the true answer is, it does both.—In substituting words for numbers, an immense amount of labor is saved to the memory, and consequently of time also. But it will be impossible for the pupil to run through the System in the several sciences to which it is applied, without giving vigorous exercise and additional strength to the power of recollection.

"I mention," says the author, "as illustrative facts, that by this new art, I once committed to memory in a single morning, the whole of the propositions contained in the first three books of Euclid, and with such perfection, that I could for years afterwards specify the number of the book on hearing the proposition named, and could recite the proposition on hearing the number and the book; and I have frequently, in mixed companies, repeated backwards and forwards from fifty to an hundred unconnected words, which have been but once called over to me. I may also add, to prove the simplicity of the plan, that I taught two of my own children to repeat fifty unconnected words in a first lessen of not more than half an hour's continuance."

The work is not intended to take the place of any school book now in use, nor is the system calculated to supercede any study now pursued in schools, but introduced as an auxiliary to them all; for aside from its application to numbers, an acquaintance with the theory of prompter cannot fail to aid the learner in the pursuit of every branch of useful knowledge.

The work contains a vast number of facts so classified and arranged, as to render it as a book of reference, merely, richly worth its cost.

We expect to have a supply of the above work, forwarded to us for sale, in Putnam, at 50 cents per copy, when we find there is demand for them.

PROSPECTUS OF THE

OHIO CULTIVTOR,

Vol. III—For 1847.

A semi-monthly Journal, devoted to the promotion of Agriculture, Horticulture & Domestic Industry.

PUBLISHED AT COLUMBUS, OHIO,

By M. B. Bateham, Editor and Proprietor,

Assisted by the contributions of a very large number of practical and scientific writers,—farmers, horticulturists, &c.

Illustrated with numerous Engravings.

TERMS—One Dollar per year—Four Copies for Three Dollars: payments invariably in advance.

THE OHIO CULTIVATOR has now become so well known to the farmers and friends of agriculture in Ohio, that it is unnecessary to say any thing of its character or design. Grateful for the encouragement he has thus far received, the editor and proprietor takes this occasion to inform his friends and patrons, that he is determined to put forth new efforts in their service, and make his paper for the coming year still more deserving of their continued liberal patronage. Besides improvement in the matter for its columns, the mechanical appearance of the paper will be improved by the use of new type, and more illustrations. It will contain the latest and most reliable intelligence respecting the crops and the markets, both in this country, and in Europe, so as to aid the farmer in deciding at what time and price to dispose of his productions. This information alone will be worth, to most farmers, many times the price of subscription, especially now that prices are so much effected by foreign intelligence. In addition to all this, the editor believes that his increased experience and knowledge of the agricultural condition of the State, together with his extended correspondence, will enable him to make each succeeding volume of the Cultivator more valuable than the one that preceded it.

The influence of the paper, wherever it has been generally read, is admitted to have been highly salutary. It has began to awaken a spirit of inquiry and improvement among the farmers, and inspire them with more just and elevated conceptions of the character, duties and pleasures of their noble occupation. As evidence of this it may be stated, that during the past year, Agricultural Societies have been organized in twenty counties of this State; and there is reason to believe

POETRY.

[The following is an improvement by our poetical friend, W. H., of Gratiot, O, upon a "Patent Steam Song" which recently appeared anonymously in the N. Y. Sun. [Ed. W. R.

STEAM SONG.

I sing of steam,
A famous theme
In these surprising days,
When people use
Their valves and flues
For everything that pays!
Now only heed
The lightning speed
With which the Yankee people travel—
They go so fast
We look aghast,
And we the secret can't unravel!

I've not a doubt
That they'll have yet
Across our Rocky mountains, height
A smooth rail road to run upon;
And advertise to carry freight
From Boston through to Oregon!

What a wonderful improvement
Would this national movement
Confer on this land of the free,
Had our men and our money
We are spending quite funny
Been laid out on this route, don't you see?
The effects of steam
Past power to dream
It ties the Oceans fast together;
An unknown land
Is brought to hand
And savage tribes are made our brothers.

How strange—miraculous the story
Is that of famous Fulton's glory;
And yet if he should now arise,
I think he'd scarce believe his eyes,
To see such wonderful appliance,
The world is making of his science.

O for the good old days of Adam,
When every gentleman and madam
Did travel on the feet—
They ne'er did dream their sons and daughters
Would go by steam across the waters,
And make the two worlds meet.

Yet so it is—and who for sooth can tell
But what we'll have a rail road yet to——well
There is a road both wide and broad
And thousands jostling, jumping, hieing,
With alcoholic steam a flying
Their weary round,
Till a fearful bound
Will launch them down to end less sighing.

READER,
My steam and my smoke
May all seem a joke
If you try not the personal portion;
Which way do you travel,
Steep and narrow, broad and level,
To better or worse your condition?

Written for the Western Recorder.

The town of Blen.

BY THOMAS BROOKOVER.

In Kanta's vale there was a town
Of most contemptible renown:
Blen was the burg, and curs'd by heaven,
With troops of plagues that numbered seven!—
By every Hoosier good or vicious,
And by all people superstitious,
'Twas said that seven bad genii,
Hung o'er them in the stormy sky,
Rode on the storm, sigh'd in the breeze,
Skim'd o're the plain, sat on the trees!
And when autumnal winds did bluster,
And Cynthia shone with peerless luster
Between two parting clouds, oh then,
The spirits haunted gloomy Blen,
And on such nights were surely seen!—
Then were forebodings dark I ween!

But spirit of the impious woman,
Was a more clear and fearful omen
In Blen, that something ill would come,
And send them to an awful doom!—
Seven women there were wandering,
From house to house and slandering,
I'll not portray their horrid hearts,
Nor tell their dark infernal arts,
Suffice it then to hear and toll,
That Blen was set on fire of hell!
Discord, contention then arose,
And war was in their list of woes:—
Young Milo long had liv'd in Blen,
Belov'd by all his countrymen,
Till tongue of slander harp'd his name,
And clouded o'er his honor, fame;
Wounded in tend'rest point of pride,
He met his foe in field,—and died!

Some into Hades were quickly hurl'd
Some sadly scatter'd o'er the world;
Like gone-by dream, the memory
Of Blenton is to mental eye.

Feb., 1846.

Ecclesiastical.

Written for the Western Recorder.

CHURCH DIVISION.

THINGS TO BE CONSIDERED.

NO. XIII.

MR. EDITOR:—Respecting the object of dividing the church, North from the South, we observe,

2. That it cannot be to dissolve a sinful relation with slavery in the Methodist Protestant Church at the South.

And that for the best of all reasons——the entire absence of all substantial evidence of the existence of such relation. What is the character of our present relation to slavery, as it exists in the Methodist Protestant Church, at the south? We answer, 1. Not one of participation. By means of it, we hold no slaves. And we have no joint interest in slave property there, any more with the connection, than without it.

2. Our relation is not an approbative one This is too well known to be denied, or questioned by any. For our unqualified condemnation of slavery among them, has been repeatedly given, and still ringing in their ears, disturbing their noon-day reveries, and midnight slumbers.—— Haunting their dreary consciences with the torturing lacerations of God's burning truth, which has long since extorted from them the pitiful cry, "Let the abolitionists go, if they will! The sooner they leave the church the better it will be for us!" And we, as on all other occasions, are hastening to do their bidding.

Be patient, slaveholders—we are making all the expedition possible!———But 3. This relation is not one of authoritative control. The discipline recognises the individual responsibility of all, in their respective, spheres and relations. And each Annual Conference is held alone responsible, as an individual, for its own doings Hence we have nothing to do with the particular legislation of the southern conferences. We can neither make, nor repeal their laws and regulations, and therefore cannot be responsible for them.

We have neither right nor power to exercise over the south judiciary jurisdiction, and how can we be thought culpable for the abuses that may exist from the inefficient manner in which the functions of that department may be discharged at the south? Our relation to the south, is not one of executive responsibilities. As we do not make their laws, nor judge of their delinquencies, so we do not enforce those laws. The executive powers of the officers of our church, they can no more constitutionally use out of the prescribed limits of their respective charges, than the man who was never invested with such powers. Authority conferred by ordination, differs of course, materially from that received by an appointment to an official relation, and duties; and therefore cannot be regarded as coming within the limits of these provisions.

It will be perceived then, that by the connection we hold with the south, it cannot justly be said of us, that we countenance or tolerate slavery, by participating in its wrongs, or its profits—by sanctioning or in any way approving of it, either by express declaration, ex enuating, apology, or significant silence upon the subject: Nor by having the power to put it away, and suffering it to exist from indifference or sympathy in its behalf.

But it is maintained by some that, although we may not be responsible for the actions of other conferences, in their individual capacity, yet we are culpable for the existance of slavery as connected with the southern portion of the church.—— Because, say they, the discipline recognises, and provide for the existence of slavery in the church: And we subscribe to the discipline; and hence we sanction slavery, by so doing. We will reserve the examination of this question, "Does the constitution and Discipline of the Methodist Protestant Church sanction, or tolerate slavery?," for other numbers. E. A. W.

Ministers' Department.

A CONSTANT REVIVAL.

The late Rev. Mr. McCheyne, a young Scotch minister, who was called to his rest at the early age of twenty-nine, left an example of singleness of purpose, and of ardent, devoted and intelligent piety, eminently worthy of record. In his ministry he was determined to know nothing but Christ and him crucified, and he was wise in the application of this knowledge in such a way as to promote the spiritual interests of others. His preaching was accompanied with a constant revival—and though he labored earnestly, and with his whole heart, his early death was occasioned, not by excessive work, but by typhus fever.

Among Mr. McCheyne's parishioners we are told there was a gentle, noiseless, but almost constant awakening. "He entertained so full a persuasion that a faithful minister has every reason to expect to see souls converted under him, that when this was withheld, he began to fear that some hidden evil was provoking the Lord, and grieving the Spirit." In one of his MSS. he says: "As I was walking in the fields, the thought came over me, with almost overwhelming power, that every one of my flock must soon be in heaven or hell." "Ah, sinners! you little know how I fear that you will lay the blame of your damnation at my door." Of a sermon that he preached on 1. Cor. ix. 27, a hearer said:—"It was like the blast of the trumpet that would awaken the dead:" A stranger wrote to him on one occasion: "It pleased God to bless that sermon to my soul. It was not so much what you said, as your manner of speaking, that struck me. I saw in you a beauty in holiness, that I never saw before. You also said something in your prayer that struck me very much. It was, 'thou knowest that we love thee.'" In his prayers Mr. McCheyne appeared always as in the immediate presence of his God and Saviour, and hence the impression made by his manner of uttering those words.

Just after entering upon his ministry, he wrote: "I see a man cannot be a faithful minister until he preaches Christ for Christ's sake—until he gives up striving to attract people to himself, and seeks only to attract them to Christ." "If worldly motives go with me, I shall never convert a soul." He compared himself to the pole on which the brazen serpent was elevated; the dying must look at the serpent, not at the pole. His idea of preaching was that of one, like Ahimaaz, coming with all-important tidings, and intent on making these tidings known. A countrymen who happened to hear him, said: "Before he opened his lips, as he came along the passage, there was something about him that sorely affected me."

His aim was to preach the gospel, and not "about the gospel," as he called it. In a memorandum of a pastoral visit, he says: "M. G. lies sore upon my conscience; I did no good to that woman; she always managed to speak of things about the truth." "It is through the truth that souls are sanctified, and not by essays upon the truth." "Are you not afraid of being short of sermons?" one asked. "No! I am just the interpreter of scriptures in my sermons; and when the Bible runs dry, then I will." His divisions are described as 'so textual and so feeling, & they brought out the spirit of a passage so surprisingly.' He aimed to preach the mind of the Spirit in the passage, and was afraid he should grieve the Spirit if he did not. After an absence of considerable time, he closed his first sermon to his people on returning, in this way: "Dearly beloved and longed for, I now begin another year of my ministry among you; and I am resolved, if God give me health and strength, that I will not let a man, woman or child among you alone, until you have at least heard the testimony of God concerning his Son, either to your condemnation or salvation. And I will pray, as I have done before, that if the Lord will indeed give us a great outpouring of his Spirit, he will do it in such a way as to show that it is the Lord's work, and not man's."

From the Watchman of the Valley.

Faults in Singing.

MESSRS. EDITORS:—An article appeared in the Watchman some time since, on speaking distinctly, which forcibly reminded me of words and phrases I used to hear when a child, and indeed often hear now.

I often heard the song, "Life let us cherish" sung, and e in let was sounded like a, and f, in life, being drawled to it, I could distinguish nothing but "Lye flat." And what "Lye flat us cherish" meant, I could not imagine.

This is one among many similar instances I could mention. I find I was not altogether to blame for not understanding more, when a child. It is evident, I think that there is not feeling enough on this subject to make the improvement demanded. If parents would speak intelligibly, children would be wiser.

I was once at a "big meeting," and during the exercises a minister arose and commenced singing, and the only words I could distinguish for some time, were "Ye'll die, ye'll die." Well, I thought, that is a singular step. What does he mean in singing to the congregation "Ye'll die?" We know it, but nothing has been said or done to call forth such a singular course. However, by degrees I got the run of the tune, and finally I understood the words were, "I yield, I yield, I can," &c.

Again, the idea of going to heaven in a yaw was singular, till I understood what was meant by "Jesus my yawl to heaven is gone."

Another example. In the beautiful words, "And put a cheerful courage on," we hear "curry John."

I will now give a specimen of this barbarous pronounciation, in the hymn "When I can read my title clear," sung to the tune "Ninety fifth."

1. Whenni cannread dmy title clear
To mansion zin the skie
Zile bid farewellile, bid farewellile, bid farewell to wevry fear
Rand dwipemy weeping ngeyes.

2. Should dearth thagainst tmy soul lingage
Jand firery darts sbe hurld
Dthen ni can smilat, then ni can smile, then ni can smilat Satan's zrage
Jand dfaca frowning world.

3. Let cares zlikea wildeluge come
Maud storm zof sorrow fall,
Mayi but safe, fmayi but safemayi but safely reach chmy ho
My God dmy heaven my yall.

4. There shalli bathemy weary soul
Lin seazof heavenly rest,
Tand dnot ta wavand, dnot ta wavand, and dnot ta wavof trouble roll
Lacrossmy peaceful breast.

I have wondered many years why a specimen of such mangling of hymns in singing was not given, or did not meet my eyes.

I hope the attention of all will be secured, that improvement on this subject may be made more rapidly.

Youth's Department.

A little Boy Seven Years Old.

You'd scarce expect one of my age,
To speak in public on the stage;
And if I chance to fall below
Demosthenes or Cicero,
Don't view me with a critic's eye,
But pass my imperfections by.
Large streams from little fountains flow;
Tall oaks from little acorns grow;
And though I am both small and young,
Of judgment weak, and feeble tongue;
Yet all great learned men, like me,
Once learn'd to read their A, B, C.
But why may not Columbia's soil
Rear men as great as Britain's isle;
Exceed what Greece and Rome have done,
Or any land beneath the sun?
May not Maryland boast as great
As any other sister state?
Or, where's the town, go far and near.
That does not find a rival here?
Or where's the boy, but three feet high,
Who's made improvements more than I?
These thoughts inspire my youthful mind
To be the greatest of mankind;
Great, not like Cesar, stain'd with blood;
But only great, as I am good.

TWO NOBLE-HEARTED CHILDREN.

It is a beautiful sight when children treat each other with kindness and love, as is related in the following little story. "Last evening (says the narrater,) I took supper with Lydia's father and mother. Before supper with Lydia, her parents, and myself, were sitting in the room together, and her little brother Oliver was out in the yard drawing his cart about. The mother went out and brought in some peaches; a few of which were large, red-cheeked rare-ripes—the rest, small, ordinary peaches. The father handed me one of the rare-ripes, gave one to the mother, and then one of the best to his little daughter, who was eight years old. He then took one of the smaller ones, and gave it to her brother. He was four years old. Lydia went out and was gone about ten minutes, and then came in.

"Did you give your brother the peach I sent him?" asked the father.

Lydia blushed, turned away, and did not answer.

"Did pou give your brother the peach I sent him?" asked the father again, a little more sharply.

"No, father," said she, "I did not give him that."

"What did you do with it?" he asked.

"I ate it," said Lydia.

"What! Did you not give your brother any?" asked the father.

"Yes, I did, father," said she, "I gave him mine."

"Why did you not give him the one I told you to give?" asked the father rather sternly.

"Because, father;" said Lydia, "I thought he would like mine better."

"I did not mean to be disobedient, father," said she; and her bosom began to heave, and her chin to quiver.

"But you were, my daughter," said he.

"I thought you would not be displeased with me, father," said Lydia, "if I did give brother the biggest peach;" and the tears began to roll down her cheeks.

"But I want you to have the biggest," said the father; "you are older and larger than he is."

"I want you to give the best things to brother," said the noble girl.

"Why?" asked the father, scarcely able to contain himself.

"Because," answered the dear, generous sister, "I love him so—I always feel best, when he gets the best things."

"You are right, my precious daughter," said the father, as he fondly and proudly folded her in his arms. "You are right, and you may be certain your happy father can never be displeased with you for wishing to give up the best of every thing to your affectionate little brother. He is a dear and noble little boy, and I am glad you love him so. Do you think he loves you as well as you do him?"

"Yes, father," said the little girl. "I think he does, for when I offered him the largest peach he would not take it, and wanted me to keep it; and it was a good while before I could get him to take it."

NARRATIVE.

From the "Pictorial Life of Rev. George Whitefield."

Anecdotes of Whitefield.

AN INCIDENT TURNED TO GOOD ACCOUNT IN PREACHING.

Soon after Mr. Whitefield's arrival at Edinburg, an unhappy man, who had forfeited his life to the offended laws of his country, was to be executed. Mr. Whitefield mingled with the crowd that was collected on the occasion, and was struck with the solemnity and decorum with which so awful a scene was conducted. His appearance, however, drew the eyes of all upon him, and raised a variety of opinions as to the motives which led him to join the crowd. The next day being Sunday, he preached to a very large congregation in a field near the city, and, in the course of his sermon, he adverted to the scenes of the preceding day. "I know," said he, "that many of you will find it difficult to reconcile my appearance yesterday with my character. Many of you, I know, will say that my moments would have been better employed in praying for the unhappy man than in attending him to the fatal tree, and that, perhaps, curiosity was the only cause that converted me into a spectator on that occasion; but those who ascribe that uncharitable motive to me are under a mistake. I went as an observer of human nature, and to see the effect that such an example would have on those who witnessed it. I watched the conduct of almost every one present on that awful occasion, and I was highly pleased with their demeanor, which has given me a very favorable opinion of the Scottish nation. Your sympathy was visible on your countenances, particularly when the moment arrived that your unhappy fellow-creature was to close his eyes on this world for ever; then you all, as if moved by one impulse, turned your heads aside and wept. Those tears were precious, and will be held in remembrance. How different was it when the Saviour of mankind was extended on the cross! The Jews, instead of sympathizing in his sorrows, triumphed in them. They reviled him with bitter expressions, with words even more bitter than the gall and vinegar which they handed him to drink. Not one of all that witnessed his pains, turned his head aside, even in the last pang. Yes, my friends, there was one—that glorious luminary," pointing to the sun, "vailed his brightness, and traveled on his course in tenfold night."

A TRUMPETER CONVERTED.

A black trumpeter, belonging to an English regiment, resolved to interrupt Whitefield while delivering an expected discourse in the open air. At the hour appointed for the sermon, he repaired to the field where it was to be preached, carrying his trumpet with him, on purpose to blow it with all his might, about the middle of the sermon. He took his stand in front of the minister, and at no great distance. The concourse that attended became very great, and those who were toward the extremity of the crowd pressed forward in order to hear more distinctly, and caused such a pressure at the place where the trumpeter stood, that he found it impossible to raise up his arm which held the trumpet, at the time he intended to blow it. He attempted to extricate himself from the crowd, but found this equally impossible, so that he was kept within hearing of the Gospel as securely as if he had been chained to the spot. In a short time his attention was arrested, and he became so powerfully affected by what the preacher presented to his mind, that he was seized with an agony of despair, and was carried to a house in the neighborhood. When the service was over, he was visited by Mr. Whitefield, who tendered some seasonable counsels, and the poor trumpeter, from that time, became an altered character.

SCOFFER TURNED PREACHER.

While at Rotherham, in Yorkshire, Whitefield's endeavors to propagate divine knowledge were treated with contempt, and malicious falsehoods were circulated to counteract the good effects of his ministry. Among the most virulent of his opposers was a Mr. Thorpe, who, with three of his associates, agreed to mimic the preacher for a wager. It was concluded that each should open the Bible, and hold forth from the first text that should present itself to his eye. Accordingly, three in their turn mounted the table, and thus profanely entertained their wicked companions. When they had exhausted their little stock of buffoonery, it devolved on Mr. Thorpe to close this very irreverent scene. Much elevated, and confident of success, he exclaimed, as he ascended the table, "I shall beat you all!" The judges were to be the members of the convivial assembly which had met on the occasion. Mr. Thorpe, when the Bible was handed to him, had not the slightest preconception what part of the Scripture he should make the subject of his banter. However, by the guidance of an unerring Providence, it opened at that remarkable passage, "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish," Luke xiii, 3. No sooner had he uttered the words than his mind was affected in a very extraordinary manner. The sharpest pangs of conviction now seized him, and conscience denounced tremendous vengeance upon his soul. In a moment he was favored with a clear view of his subject, and divided his discourse more like a divine who had been accustomed to speak on portions of Scripture, than like one who never so much as thought on religious topics, except for the purpose of ridicule! He found no deficiency of matter, no want of utterance; and he has frequently declared, "If ever I preached in my life, by the assistance of the Sprit of God, it was at that time." The impression that the subject made upon his mind, had such an effect upon his manner, that the most igant and profane could not but perceive that what he had spoken was with the greatest sincerity. The unexpected solemnity and pertinency of his address, instead of entertaining the company, first spread a visible depression, and afterward a deep gloom upon every countenance. This sudden change in the complexion of his associates did not a little conduce to increase the convictions of his own bosom. No individual appeared disposed to interrupt him, but, on the contrary, their attention was deeply engaged with the pointedness of his remarks; yea, many of his sentences, as he has often related, made, to his apprehension, his own hair stand erect! When he had left the table, not a syllable was uttered concerning the wager; but a profound silence pervaded the company. Mr. Thorpe immediately withdrew, without taking the least notice of any person present; and returned home with very painful reflections, and the deepest distress imaginable. Happily for him, this was his last bacchanalian revel! His impressions were manifestly genuine, and from that period, the connection between him and his former companions was entirely dissolved. The result was his conversion to God, his separation from his former companions, and his entrance into the Christian ministry. He became pastor of the Church at Masboro, in Yorkshire, where he continued usefully to labor for thirteen years, till his death in 1776.

ANECDOTE OF GOV. BRIGGS OF MASS.

At a temperance Pic Nic, in Woburn, on the 27th ult., at which Gov. Briggs had been expected, but from which he was detained, by regard to his health, Mr. J. L. Bennett, of Andover Theological Seminary in the course of some remarks, related the following anecdote concerning the Governor:

During one of those delightful weeks last September, a gentleman and lady from Berkshire were riding through a retired village of Connecticut. As they passed a certain farm-house the gentleman inquired for one 'Widow Johnson, and was directed some two miles distant. As he approached the cottage of the widow, he espied her walking in the garden. Jumping from his carriage, he immdiately accosted her with the appellation of 'Mother Johnson.' The old lady, being somewhat dim with age, did not at first, recognize the stranger. 'What!' inquired the gentleman, 'do you not know me, whom you named when a boy, to whom you gave two dollars?' 'Ah?' quoth the lady, are you the one I called Geo. N. Briggs, when a babe?' 'Yes,' was the prompt reply; 'I have now come sixty miles, on purpose to see you before you die.' I need no here describe the welcome the old lady gave to one, who, amid the responsibilities and honors of public life, still recollected a poor widow, and obeying the precept of 'pure religion,' visited her in her loneliness. Suffice it to say, after a few hours' tarry, as evening approached, the gentleman left without once intimating to the widow that she had been honored with a visit from the Governor of Massachusetts. We naturally infer from his attachment to this venerable friend, tho' a humble woman, that he will always continue friendly to the temperance cause. He has been for along time one of its prominent supporters, and were it not for ill health, would be here to-night, to prove himself a true friend. Therefore, in this connection, I will offer the following sentiment:

"His Excellency, Geoge N. Briggs—whose Christian name was given by a lady, whom, forty years after, he sought to honor in grey old age—we to-night name him 'Rough an Ready' for conflict, not with Santa Anna, but with Satan! Alchohol!. May he, for an equal number of years, remember his friend, the Total Abstinence Society."—Christian Watchman.

WELLMAN'S ILLUSTRATED BOTANY.
VOL. II., 1847.
EDITED BY J. D. COMSTOCK, M. D.
Author of Botany, Natural Philosphy, Chemistry, Mineralogy, Geology, Natural History, Physiology, etc., assisted BY J. C COMSMOCK, ESQ.

THE success of the Illustrated Botany is no longer an experiment, for altho' it has been in existence but one year, it already has a circulation of about five thousand, a sufficient number to warrant its support, which cannot be said of any other work of the kind. Indeed, it is the only work of this character published in this country, which promises stability and a long life. We think the prospects of the second year of the Botany are very flattering. One reason for this opinion is, the fact that it is now very popular, having a large circle of friends. Another very important reason is, the securing of an Editor for the coming year, whose popularity as an author in the various branches of Natural Science, is so extensive as to leave his name familiar to every student in the sciences in this country. We are fully satisfied that the Botany will, under its present Editors, bear the severest criticism, and we intend that it shall become the standard work.

In the course of its publication, it will contain an Introduction to the Natural System of Botany, a thorough Treatise on the interesting and important branch of Vegetable Physiology, Notices on Fossil Botany, and descriptions, both scientific and popular, of numerous species of plants, the properties of which, medicinal and useful, will be fully explained. In short it is intended to present a complete view of the latest and most important facts, discoveries, and theories, in every department of the science.

The whole illustrated by splendid colored engravings, taken from Nature, full size, and finished the highest style of modern art.

This work is designed to be eminently popular in its application, and there is enough of that which is stranger than fiction about it to render it, in no ordinary degree, interesting and instructive.

We do not intend to confine ourselves to the botanical descriptions of each plant, but to make it a thoroughly scientific work, in all the departments of Botany. It will also give information on the cultivation of plants and flowers. In a word, it will comprise the whole science.

TERMS.

This work will be published monthly, with from six to ten flowers, handsomely painted, in each number. Price, $3,00 a year, or two copies sent to one address for $5,00.

☞ A very liberal discount allowed to Agents.

J. K. WELLMAN, Publisher and Proprietor,
Eebruary 13, 1847. No. 116 Nassau-st.

Something New.
JUST PUBLISHED
By GEORGE CONCLIN, 39 Main st. Cincinnati,
A NEW HISTORY OF TEXAS.

INCLUDING an account of the late WAR WITH MEXICO, together with other interesting matters relating to that country. This history is published in pamphlet form, 12 mo., containing 152 pages and will be sold cheap.

ALSO—A NEW HISTORY OF OREGON AND CALIFORNIA, (By LANSFORD HASTINGS) containing a minute description of the different routes to those countries—a description of the soil, products of the soil, Towns, Bays, Harbors, Rivers, Lakes, manners and customs of the inhabitants, &c. &c.

JACOB THORN,

WHOLESALE dealer in all kinds of NOTIONS, No 91, Wilson's Row, the first store below the Court House, is now opening a new and complete assortment of

NOTIONS AND DRY GOODS,

which will be sold wholesale, at prices a little below what they have ever been sold in this place.—Country Merchants and Pedlars, visiting the city are respectfully invited to examine my stock before purchasing elsewhere, among which may be found the following articles:—

800 Packs American solid head Pins.
200,000 Drilled Ey'd Needles, Sharps and Betweens.
2000 Doz Spool Thread.
500 Lbs. Patent do.
800 do. Cotton do.
3000 Doz. Side Combs.
600 do. Fine Ivory do.
500 do. Dressing do.
100 do. Woolen Comforters.
100 Brass Clocks.
1500 Prints (Engravings,) high col'd.
100 Doz. Chapman Strops.
5000 Almanacks.
300 Shawls, different patterns.
100 Gross Knitting Pins.
4 Bbls. Blacking.
30 Doz. slates.
50 Gt. Gro. Agate Shirt Buttons
500 Coils Bonnet Wire
50 Gross Boot Laces.
500 do. Hooks and Eyes on Cards
100 do. Wood Combs.
200 do. Sherred and G. E. Suspenders
12 Boxes Fire Crackers
12 Doz. Looking-Glasses.
100 Gross Pearl Shirt Buttons.
6 Bales Brown Muslin.
200 Doz. Mitts.

Combs of every description, Buttons, Penknives, Razors, Table and Tea Spoons, Tapes, Eyeletts, Jewsharps, Pencils, Shaving Boxes, Gloves, Ladies cotton Hose, Matches, Dress Handkfs., Laces and Edgings, Spectacles, Thimbles, Beads, Candle Wicking, Night caps, Primers, Calicoes, bleached Muslins, Wafers, &c.

WANTED in exchange for goods at wholesale prices, Feathers, Beeswax, Ginsang, Rags and Hogs Bristles tied up in small bunches, for which will be given twenty-five cents a pound for all that can be brought in good order

Zanesville, O. Nov. 7, 1846.

COME AND SEE!!

THE SUBSCSIBERS offer very low for CASH, STONE WARE or COUNTRY PRODUCE,

35 pieces assorted Cloths, very low,
20 " Jeans,
300 " Prints, cheaper than ever,
100 " Merinos, Alpaccas, De Laines, &c.,
50 " Tweeds and Cassinets,
25 " Flannels,
22 " Check.

Boots, Shoes, Queensware, Groceries, and a great variety of goods not mentioned.

In a word, they have on hand a LARGE STOCK of goods, which they

WISH TO SELL.

To sell them, they must be sold CHEAP, this they will do. J. C. GUTHRIE & SONS, successors to
GUTHRIE'S & BUCKINGHAM.

P.S. We will say to Potters engage not your ware before calling on us. We are dealing EXTENSIVELY in that article, and are determined to buy it on such terms as will prove satisfactory. J. C. G. & S's.

Putnam, O. Jan. 1, 1847.

SACRED MELODEON.

WE have received from the publishers, 50 copies of this excellent collection of Spiritual Songs, compiled by Brs. Joel Dalbey and J. B. Peat of the Ohio Conference, and lately published at Cincinnati. For sale at the office of the Western Recorder, by the dozen or single.

NEW FIRM.

A. GUTHRIE, G. BUCKINGHAM and G. N. GUTHRIE announce that they have formed a partnership for the transaction of MERCANTILE BUSINESS under the firm of

GUTHRIE, BUCKINGHAM & CO.

They respectfully invite their friends and the public generally, to the old stand of A. A. GUTHRIE & Co., (recently GUTHRIE'S & LARGE,) where it is their purpose to keep a large assortment of the CHEAPEST and BEST goods in the market.

Putnam, O. January 1, 1847.

PROSPECTUS OF THE

LITERARY ATHENÆUM,

A NEW AND SPLENDID MONTHLY MAGAZINE,

TO BE EDITED BY THE

Rev. Henry D. Moore, of Philadelphia,—and Rev. Andrew A. Lipscomb, Professor of English Literature and Belle Letters, in the city of Baltimore.

ON the first of January, 1847, the subscribers intend issuing the first number of a spendid Monthly Magazine, to be called the "LITERARY ATHENÆUM," to be devoted to the interest and circulation of a mind-refining, soul-inspiring, spirit-stirring literature; such a literature, in a word, as the progressive taste of society seems to demand.

Between the magazines of the day, which are devoted almost exclusively to the circulation of Christian Literature, and those devoted to the light, and in too many instances, tasteless and corrupting literature—there is a wide and deep chasm, to fill which successfully and profitably, very few attempts have been made. To supply this void, to some extent at least, is the intention of the subscribers, in issuing the "Literary Athenæum."

The general cast and character of the contents of the proposed magazine will be fixed according to the standard of the most sterling intellect, and the most liberal appreciation of the wants of the common mind. Its pages will ever present a feast and a glow, to feed and illumine the loftiest and purest taste and spirit of the admirers and lovers of refining and exalting literary walks and research.

To secure this grand design, effectually and honorably, no pains or expenses will be spared.

The contents will be purely original; consisting of Lectures, Addresses, Essays, &c., on the most popular and exciting literary and scientific subjects, from the most able writers that can be secured—interspersed and relieved by beautiful poetic composition.

Science, Art, and government, in their almost infinite variety development and interest, will be liberay and honorably discussed in its pages.

Arrangements are in progress for an extensive and important European correspondence, which will be a feature of great interest in its varied connections.

In addition to such articles, there will be presented occasional tales of unexceptionable character and style, differing essentially from the weakish romances which fill the pages of the many magazines of the day. Writers in this connection, can be secured, whose productions are the embodiment of life, true to itself,—and which will kindle and glow with the loftiest and purest sentiment, and thrill with the beauties of morality and religion in their loveliest forms.

Each number of the Athenæum will contain four embellishments of the first artistical merit, One of them will be a portrait of some distinguished personage in this country or in Europe, accompanied with an interesting biograpical sketch. Another will be a view of the buildings and grounds, of some one of the popular Universities, in this or the old world, accompanied with a historical, biograpical and statisical sketch in this body of the work. The portraits will be fine mezzotint, and the college views, beautiful line engravings. Then will follow richly colored specimens of flowers and fruit; in connection with which, there will also be presented interesting notices—floral and botanical—of climate, habits, culture, &c. All of which cannot but secure interest and favor.

Each number will comprise sixty pages of letter-press, double column, beautifully stereotyped, and printed on fine white paper; the whole corresponding in all respects, with the character of the other departments of the work.

Such is to be the character of the work at its commencement. If it is successful, as it ought to be, and as is hoped and believed it will be,—improvement will be made as far as possible in the different departments, as they are suggested in the progress of the work.

The subscribers take pleasure in announcing to the public, that they have concluded arrangements with the Rev. Henry D. Moore, of Philadelphia, and Rev. Andrew A Lipscomb, Professor of English Literature and Belle Letters, of Baltimore, who will co-operate as Editors of the new Magazine. Under the management of those gentlemen, the subscribers flatter themselves, abundant success will be secured in behalf of the enterprise.

TO PUBLISHERS.

The subscribers would also give notice to Publishers, at home and abroad, that there will be in connection with the work, an extensive review department. This will be made a feature of excelling interest. The department will be conducted fairly and honorably, and all works sent to the office of the subscribers, will receive such notices as their character may demand.

The first number will be issued on the first of January 1847. Its contents and the name of contributors, will be published shortly.

TERMS—Three dollars per annum, in advance.

Editors of papers, copying this Prospectus, and sending a paper with it, to the office of the "Athenæum," shall receive the numbers of the work, and the thanks of the publishers.

All letters, containing orders for the work, post-paid, and enclosing the subscription price, will receive prompt attention. To be addressed to

F. C. WILSON & Co.

Philadelphio, Pa.

THE WEEKLY

CHRISTIAN WORLD;

An Independent, Comprehensive, and Impartial Newspaper designed for welcome and useful circulation; Among all Friends of Christian Union, Christian Benevolence, and Christian Literature. To be published every Saturday At the Reading-Room of the Christian Atheneum, over the Book-store of Mr. James Harmstead, Fourth St., between Market and Arch Sts., Philadelphia;

Price:—Two Dollars a-year invariably in advance.

T. H. STOCKTON,
J. G. WILSON,
THEOPHILUS STORK, } Editors.

W. S. STOCKTON,—General Agent.

TO persons who are acquainted with the character and objects of the CHRISTIAN WORLD, as they have been developed during the last six years, it is only necessary to say, that as soon as one thousand paying subscribers are secured, the paper will be put to press. The Old Subscription List ought to supply this number at once.

To other persons, it is proper to remark, that the Christian World, in print, is intended to reflect the Christian World, in action—in a word, daguerreotype it: and then for purposes of common advantage, to compare the organized and operature Religion of the Age with the Religion of the Bible.

The enlarged literary and business agencies of the Establishment, are deemed amply sufficient to assure the public of successful management. Its immediate connexion with the CHRISTIAN ATHENEUM—an Institution which is to be furnished with many of the principal organs of Church and State, both in Europe and America,—will give its conductors early access to invaluable sources of universal intelligence.

DIRECTIONS.

1. On receipt of this Prospectus, let the Old subscribers at every Post-office, appoint one of their number, or some other suitable person, an Agent. Let him send us, at once as many names and as much money as possible. In cases where substantial agents make themselves responsible for their subscribers, this responsibility will be regarded as equivalent to payment in advance—provided they settle their accounts within six months. Even in such cases however, immediate payments are decidedly preferable, and, to encourage them, the commissions to agents are arranged thus:—On cash orders, 25 per cent.: on deferred remittances, 12½ per cent.

2. As the Prospectus will be widely distributed, let all persons who see it, and feel an interest in it, act promptly in the manner described above. It is thought that a little effort will be sufficient to procure a company, or club, at almost any Post-office in the Union. The times increasingly demand just such a publication as is proposed.

Address,—W. S. STOCKTON, General Agent, Philadelphia, Pa.: or either of the Associate Editors. All orders will be punctually attended to.

T. H. STOCKTON,
Editor and Proprietor,

Philadelphia, December, 1846.

M. P. DISCIPLINES—NEW EDITION.

WE have on hand a supply, lately received from the Book Agent, Baltimore, which we will be pleased to furnish to brethren of surrounding Circuits, at wholesale or retail prices. For sale at the office of this paper.

DISSOLUTION.

THE partnership of GUTHRIES & LARGE is this day dissolved by mutual consent. All matters pertaining to the closing up of the business will be transacted at the old stand.

A. A. GUTHRIE.
W. P. LARGE.
GEO. N. GUTHRIE.

Putnam, O. January 1, 1847.

JAMES K. LOGAN,
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in
FOREIGN & DOMESTIC DRY GOODS
No. 83 Wood St., (One door from Diamond Alley,)
Pittsburgh, Pa.

THE WESTERN RECORDER.

VOL. VIII---NO. 25. PUTNAM, MUSKINGUM COUNTY, OHIO, MARCH 25, 1847. WHOLE NO. 389.

The Western Recorder,

Is Published every Thursday,

AT PUTNAM, OPPOSITE ZANESVILLE, OHIO.

OFFICE ON MAIN STREET.

A. E. BASSETT, Editor and Proprietor.

BEVERDY H. WHITE, PRINTER.

TERMS.—Two DOLLARS PER ANNUM, in advance. TWO FIFTY at the close of the year. Payments WITHIN THREE MONTHS will be considered in advance.

All letters and communications must be addressed, the Editor, POST PAID, except such as contain funds, directed to Putnam Muskingum Co. Ohio.

Itinerant Ministers and others, who collect from subscribers and remit to us as much as TEN DOLLARS within a year, shall receive a copy of the paper free.

Itinerant ministers and preachers, not acting as agents, have the paper at one dollar.

Clubs of ten or more, paying at the time of subscribing, will have the paper for $15, i. e. one dollar fifty, each.

SPIRIT OF REFORM.

Written for the Western Recorder.

PROGRESS AND REFORM.

NO. II.

In my first No. I expressed the opinion that zealous advocates of the benevolent societies of the day were in danger of overlooking first principles, and by reason of giving undue prominence to particular branches of reform, make themselves but partial reformers.

Another objection to the course pursued by some of these associations is, that they would have them supersede the church, and not a few already regard a good standing in some one of these, as sufficient ground of hope for heaven. Zeal substituted for faith. Overlooking or denying the old fashioned notion of total depravity, many content with a mere outward reformation, which leaves the heart just as full of pride and selfishness as it ever was. And the vain self-righteous reformer (or reformed,) plumes himself on his great superiority over the less noisy, but truly humble christian.

Multitudes of christians in their honest zeal to advance some cherished reform, in their kindness or blindness, to the wicked men who may chance to be engaged in the same enterprise; carefully avoid every thing which might seem to disprove this vain glorious spirit, and give countenance to the prevailing notion that the church is but one of a series of means designed to reform the world, no better and perhaps not quite so good, as Temperance or an Anti-slavery Society.

Indeed judging from the conduct of some they attach much less consequence to the church than they do to some of these organizations. Thus the Lord's own chosen agent for reforming and saving men, is elbowed out of place, degraded in the eyes of the world, and rejected by mankind.

Let none infer from these remarks that the principle of voluntary association is wrong. The unfounded dogma that the church, as such, is to do our thinking, and by bulls and decrees prescribe the circle in which we must discharge all our moral obligations, is too absurd to be tolerated, except by fanatics. It is the glory of Protestanism, that it concedes the right of private judgment, inseparable from which, is the duty of individual effort. The benevolent societies of the age are but a more perfect developement of the spirit of Protestantism. Many (not all) of them are useful, some are indispensible; they furnish a broad platform on which all true christians may unite their labors for the welfare of the world. At the same time they may be made the means of uniting the hearts of christians more firmly, thereby bring in some degree the symmetry of the christian character which has been so marred by sectarianism. Nor do I say that unconverted men should be excluded. But one thing should be most firmly maintained, and that is that christian influence should predominate.

It may be set down as undeniably true that every organization designed to reform men must be based upon christian principles, and in its measures harmonize with the divine arrangement or utterly fail of success. As auxiliaries to the church, such organizations may, and doubtless do accomplish good; when properly conducted—as substitutes for, or opponents to the church they can only prove a curse to the world.

But says my reader, there are no societies forming to be benevolent, that oppose the church, and if they do, it is only a corrupt church—it is the spirit of most of them that they are "handmaids of religion." True, in words they all, or nearly all acknowledge the supremacy of the church, but in works, multitudes of their members deny it. Take a few church members when called to choose between their favorite society and the church, how clearly is a preference for the former.

From the earliest ages of christianity it has been the policy of the devil to cheat men out of their souls by some cunningly devised scheme of saving them better than christians; anything better than the humbling doctrine of justification by faith. A moral life—zeal for some great reform,—a great amount of religious feeling—deeds of charity—some work of righteousness—is relied upon for salvation. A secret hope is cherished that the works will secure Eternal life. Good and wise says the arch adversary, throw yourself with all your heart, into one of these societies, and all is well.

I must reserve for a subsequent number further remarks upon this subject.

Yours Y. Z.

Putnam, March 19th, 1847.

ITALICS.

Italics, in composition, may frequently be so employed as to give great point and effect to an author. Some of our correspondents, however, are, we think, a little over fond of them. An observing writer has good humoredly remarked that, when he reads a production too much italicised, he loses all enjoyment from it, as he can not help fancying the writer standing behind him, looking over his shoulder and saying of every other sentence, "Is not this impressive"—"Look! this is very much to the point, is it not?"

An inexperienced writer is very apt to use italics in great profusion. He fancies that his reader will not know where emphasis should be placed, and accordingly, wishes to help him out with the matter. This is a mistake. The very profusion of italics all force where emhasis is important. It would much better to have no italics, than to use them without judgment. In their absence, an intelligent reader will naturally supply them. But where they are scattered, with no discrimination through a column of matter, there is evidence of inexperience; and many a reader will, from such evidence, conclude that the article is worthless, and pass it without a second thought. We do not make these remarks in reference to any individual case. We hope, however, our correspondents will bear them in mind.—Meth. Protestant.

Western Sketches.

Written for the Western Recorder.

REMINISCENCES

OF THE FIRST SETTLEMENT OF OHIO.

NO. V.

FRIEND BASSETT: In my last I have related some incidents in advance of others to be related in this. On the 30th of April 1791, Daniel Converse was standing outside of the gate at Waterford after a night on duty when he was accosted by two of the Spragues and Daniel Davis and asked to go with them to the woods to cut a tree to make a drum hoop. They had their guns. Converse being fatigued by being up all night declined. They urged,—he replied he had no gun—they said "dont be afraid, never mind your gun." In consequence of the intimation that fear prevented, he went without a gun. When about a quarter of a mile from the fort, finding a tree that suited their purpose, Jonathan Sprague handed his gun to Converse who was in the act of putting the strap of the powder horn over his head, when Sprague seeing Indians, snatched his gun from Converse crying "Indians" and run, Converse replying "tree and fire" but they heeded not his advice. There were nine Indians in the bushes partly between them and the fort. While Converse was endeavoring to reach the fort he came suddenly upon two of them who seized him. He had no arms and was about sixteen years of age, of course he had no alternative but to submit to be a prisoner. Finding they were discovered, the Indians made the best of their way to their homes on lake Erie near the mouth of Portage river, where they retained him a prisoner, about eleven weeks, when they took him to Detroit about the last of July. While in the vicinity of that place he was casting in his mind the means of escape when he received from an Indian trader of the name of Riley a message, that if he could escape from the Indians he would get him into the fort; but in the meantime he must give no intimation of acquaintance by looking towards his establishment or speaking of him. After this he watched his opportunity, walked off in another direction and reached the house of a Frenchman, who immediately saw his condition and directed him into the loft of his cabin and soon after sent him part of a loaf of bread. He also furnished him a Cappeau, and treated him very kindly. Riley came to see him and while with him the Indians came to the house in hunt of him. Riley told him to fear nothing they should not hurt him. That if necessary he could whip the whole of them. He went down and the Indians left without discovering him. By the advice of Riley the next morning the Frenchman took Converse on his Canadian pony behind him so as to reach the fort at the instant the gate was opened in the morning, when he entered at full gallop with Converse and rode swiftly up to the house of an acquaintance, another Frenchman, where Converse was received. Here he became sick; when Maj. Smith the commandent of the fort (then in possession of the British) was advised of his condition. He sent his son with him to the Hospital with orders to receive and treat him kindly; and himself furnished him many comforts in food and clothing and indeed treated him with great kindness while he remained there. While here Shaw who had been taken at the Big-bottom, visited him. When he had sufficiently recovered Major Smith sent his son to secure a passage in a vessel about to sail for Fort Erie and furnished him with the necessary stores, clothes and a letter to the commandent of Fort Erie. Shaw went in the same vessel. When they reached Erie and presented his letter, the officer sent them to Fort Niagara then also British. From here he made his way down the lake to St. Johns and from thence through Vermont to Connecticut laboring to procure means as he found employment. In Conecticut he remained some time and went to school reaching his home in Ohio in about two years and ten months.

It was on this voyage with Shaw he learned from him the circumstances of the taking of Big-bottom. Mr. Converse has kindly furnished me these circumstances.

Mr. Kelley who had been at Waterford on the first settlement of that place, had left there with his family, and gone to a place about thirty miles below the Muskingum, in Virginia, called Belville, he had four sons and two daughters. He was this summer plowing or hoeing in a field near the garrison; there was with him his second son, John, about 10 or 12 years of age; and another, Joseph, about four years old. When he was at the fence farthest from the fort, the Indians who had been concealed, rushed upon him I believe, and endeavored to secure him, but he was an athletic man, and his resistance was so great, that they dispatched him. John ran for the fort and got so near before the Indians could overtake him, that he was rescued from their pursuit. Joseph they took prisoner, and carried him to the Maumee river, where their towns were. Here he remained, adopted into an Indian family, and was treated with all the kindness of the other children by the father, until the close of the war; when Col. R. J. Meigs, Sr., Indian agent, obtained his liberty and brought him to his mother, who had resided in our stockade, from soon after the death of Mr. Kelly. Joseph is still a resident of Marietta, a respectable citizen, and has a large family. John is I believe a citizen of Morgan County, Ohio.

I have said that Harmer made an expedition into the Indian country in 1790. This year 1791 a more formidable one was sent out from Cincinnati under the command of Governor St. Clair. It is not my purpose to give a history of this. It proved very disastrous to the whites, they having been totally defeated. But having been acquainted with several who were in that massacre (it could hardly be called a battle) amongst whom was Wm. Walls Esq. the father of our neighbor Mrs. Reed, and Mr. Fowler, a quarter-master in our army in 1812: from whom I had some incidents, I will relate a little of them. Fowler belonged to the surveyors' department and was a hunter by profession. He had hunted for my Grand Father, Tupper, while surveying in 1786. General Ganoe of Cincinnati, had charge of the surveying department, and had employed Fowler. The army encamped in the woods. St. Clair was confined with the gout. When the Indians attacked, Fowler joined a battalion who were engaged. He told me that after firing a few shot, he broke the cock of his gun, but by this time there were enough spare guns, of those who were killed, or wounded, he picked up several, and found almost every one with the cocks broke; which had been done by drawing them back so hard in the aggitation of the moment. He however supplyed himself, and continued to fire very deliberately, until the battle became so hot, that the battalion with which he fought, charged; when they did so, the Indians gave way. The battalion made several charges, and at last the Indians had passed round the flank of this battalion, and returned to the main body, where there was less resistance, and more scalps, and plunder. When this battalion found no further resistance in front, they returned. When they got back they found the Indians surrounding the camp, almost tired of killing, and the troops and followers of the camp in the utmost confusion; being shot down, and tomahawked without resistance; and driven together in great masses. The party with which he fought fired at the Indians fifteen or twenty times, then made a charge to reach the main body—a few did so, but the most perished. About this time the whole retreated in confusion, making little or no resistance,—the Indians following and killing from the rear. Fowler being a woodsman left the main rout and escaped.

I have heard Mr. Wells say he was in the Commissary's department, that in the melee of the retreat, succeeded in getting hold of the tail of an officer's horse, which enabled him to hold on to run, until he got beyond the mass of the army and so escaped. This disaster encouraged the Indians; besides the plunder enabled them to carry on the war with more effect. Ammunition, guns, tents, clothes, provisions, horses and even cannon, all, were theirs, besides the multitude of scalps which they much valued. It also much dispirited the settlers. Only those who have gone through an Indian war can rightly estimate the difficulties of our situation at this time. No crops could be raised, but at the most imminent peril, no pasture for cows, oxen, or horses, but the woods, and every moment in danger of life while hunting for them. No mills but a horse or hand mill to grind the grain when raised; no roads but the river; its banks thickly covered with a dense forest, giving shelter to concealed foes, watching for their prey,—some being killed, while others left, and few or none adding to their number. It was calculated much to dispirit those who remained—when they worked, one half must watch, while the rest worked.—In illustration: Near the fort Harmer, Benjamin I. Gilman, Jr. was clearing a lot or making roads, where now the town plot of Harmer covers. He hired Robert Warth to work, while he stood sentinel with his gun; in plain sight of the fort. The Indians crept to within gun shot, fired, killed Warth dead on the log; Gilman made his escape. The cannon at the fort gave the alarm, but Warth was scalped, and the Indians escaped. The case of Converse & Kelly, are also illustrations of the difficulties. Another occurred at Belpre. Major Goodale was hauling logs with a yoke of oxen. He had hauled several to near the lower stockade in Belpre. The Indians secreted themselves near a log, ready to hall, (as appeared by the tracks,) and when he stooped to hitch his chain, two sprang upon him and secured him,—there were but two there. The tracks were followed some miles over into Hocking but he was never heard of afterwards. Probably his resistance was so obstinate that they dispatched him before they reached their towns. He left a widow and a large family of children to struggle through an Indian war in a new country.

A skeleton was found on, or near big Hocking by Joshua Fleehart which from the loss of a certain tooth was supposed to be that of Major Goodale. A report has been circulated that he had been on the lake near where Mr. Converse was taken, at a Mr. Whitaker's, and had died there of fever. Mr. Converse has investigated that report—was acquainted with Whitaker and his wife, has been there since the war; and is satisfied there was no foundation in facts for this report.

HORACE NYE.

Putnam, O. March 18, 1847.

TEMPERANCE.

From the Missionary Herald.

Temperance in the Sandwich Islands.

The temperance societies of Hamakua embrace all the churches and all the schools. The pledge precludes the use of tobacco as well as intoxicating liquors. Mr. Lyons found that few comparatively had violated their engagement; and most of these renewed their pledge. The different societies had their annual celebration, in Jan. One of these celebrations held amid the scenery of Waipio, is decided below.

The whole valley seemed full of life. The four schools, and multitudes of adults, assembled at the appointed place, midway between the extremes, and, forming a procession, marched to the shore. Waving banners, fantastic dresses, imitations of caps and plumes, and the rough music of rude Hawaiian drums, gave the procession a military aspect. Performing several evolutions along the shore, and the deafening roar of the dashing surf, the procession formed into several columns, opening in the centre, and facing each other. Hymns, songs, and portions of Scripture were repeated in concert; after which the two choirs of singers, one belonging in the valley, and the other from abroad, united in singing an appropriate hymn. Prayer followed, and then all proceeded to a spacious yard, and sat down beneath an overspreading awning to the temperance banquet. This being ended, a meeting was held, the exercise of which consisted of singing, addresses,—one by a blind man,—and a dialogue between a farmer and a school master. At the close, the contribution towards the missionary's support was brought forward, and exhibited before the whole assembly. This consisted of a purse of money, containing fifteen dollars, and four large rolls of kapa, cloth, a bridle, &c., the whole amounting to about sixty dollars. It was contributed by the church members and some forty or fifty children, and was their first effort to aid in supporting their own missionary. Prayer closed the exercises of the day.

NEW TEMPERANCE MOVEMENT.—Moral reform, in any of its departments, will be permanent only so far as it is sustained by the religion of the gospel under the auspices of those who are experimentally acquainted with its principles. Worldly men may be led to the conclusion that the Sabbath should be observed, and take measures for the promotion of that object. But reform, to be extensive and abiding, must be the work of Christians. Irreligious men may become aroused to the evils of Slavery, and accomplish its abolition.—But the same evils will come up in another form, or give place to other evils as great, unless Christians, as such are efficient actors in the work.—And so with the Temperance movement. It will not become a permanent reform, unless Christians are steady and active friends and supporters. Its strong hold must be the Church. Its superstructure must be built on the foundation of which Jesus Christ is the chief corner-stone.

In some parts of the country this fact is beginning to be appreciated. And in the city of New York a movement is on foot for a City Temperance Society on strictly Christian principles. A writer in the Observer says, "that committees or delegates have already been appointed from sixty or seventy of the leading Churches and congregations of the various religious denominations in the city, to form such an organization; the plan meeting with great favor from our most intelligent and devoted pastors and laymen, so far as it has been submitted."

The details of the organization, are not given. But we hope that the whole enterprise will be marked with the wisdom that the Holy Ghost teaches. We wish it success.—Cin. Prot.

MISSIONARY INTELLIGENCE.

From the Cincinnati Chronicle.

VIEW OF PROTESTANT MISSIONS.

CHRISTIANITY—CIVILIZATION—PROGRESS.

There must be some—we hope many—of our readers, who are willing, if not glad, to turn aside from the beaten round of newspaper topics, (Politics, Finance and War,) to consider subjects not less important, and more universal in their interest to mankind.

Christianity has now been nearly two thousand years in the world. During that time it has progressed from the Age of Martyrdom to that of Persecution, and from that of Persecution to that of Liberty. Under Martyrdom it grew. Against Persecution it conquered. With Liberty it harmonizes with Science, and combats with Philosophy. Because, in this latter form of growth its conquests are not separately distinguished from those of science, letters and philosphy, some have superficially concluded that it did not grow at all. But this is the most erroneous of all opinions. What was the discovery, settlement, independence, and self government of America, but one of the most glorious triumphs of Christianity? What was the conquest of British India but the initial step in the overthrow of all the Brahmic Paganism? What was the opening of the Chinese ports, but the opening of the broad path which leads the christian ministry to the temples of Bhud and the schools of Confucius? What is our settlement of Oregon, and the soon to be made railroad over the northern Andes, but a grand highway, over which Christianity, rolling with commerce, from the shores of the Atlantic to those of the Pacific, shall have completed the circle of earth, and the cycle of time? Then will art, science and philosophy revisit the ancient gardens of the world—renew their glory in the sunlight of Christianity, and re-echo the voices of prophets in lands where they long have slept!

Too many forget that christianity is no longer the enemy, but the friend, confident and associate of science and philosophy; for science is no longer falsely so called. All branches of knowledge have now become, like the seven primary colors to the white light—only so many elements in the great mass of truth. As such they lend illustration to the Divine Law, and make more lovely, and beautiful, and varied the whole landscape of christian civilization.

We shall not pause, however, to consider this deeply interesting subject. Our object here is to give a slight sketch of the progress of the Missionary Societies. It has been thought by many that foreign missions have not accomplished very much; because they have not accomplished all. It seems to us that this is both an unfair and unreal view of that work. It will be found on examination, that the Missionary Societies have accomplished much or more, than could reasonably be expected of the same number of agents. We have digested from tables prepared for, and published in the Foreign Missionary Chronicle, the following view of Protestant Missions. It will correct the misapprehensions of many persons as to the real progress of the Missionary cause:

AMERICAN BOARD.
Missionaries,	131
Assistant Missionaries,	33
Native Assistants,	169
Communicants,	24,586
Scholars,	31,327
ENGLISH WESLEYAN.
Missionaries.	174
Assistant Missionaries,	39
Native Assistants,	123
Communicants,	76,792
Scholars,	29,639
ENGLISH EPISCOPAL CH. MISSIONARY.
Missionaries,	117
Assistant Missionaries,	34
Native Assistants,	1,147
Communicants,	9,171
Scholars,	35,700
ENGLISH BAPTIST.
Missionaries,	90
Assistant Missionaries,
Native Assistants,	121
Communicants,	38,594
Scholars,	9,261
INDEPENDENT LONDON MISSIONARY.
Missionaries,	161
Assistant Missionaries,	22
Native Assistants,	59
Communicants,	10,468
Scholars,	20,711
BAPTIST (AMERICAN.)
Missionaries,	40
Assistant Missionaries,	5
Native Assistants,	150
Communicants,	6,500
Scholars,	2,000
METHODIST (AMERICAN.)
Missionaries,	26
Assistant Missionaries,	0
Native Assistants,	0
Communicants,	1,448
Scholars,	491
EPISCOPAL (AMERICAN.)
Missionaries.	14
Assistant Missionaries,
Native Assistants,	1
Communicants,	50
Scholars,	750
PRESBYTERIAN (AMERICAN.)
Missionaries,	42
Assistant Missionaries,	7
Native Assistants,	6
Communicants,	136
Scholars,	944
UNITED BRETHREN.
Missionaries,	187
Communicants,	18,375
SCOTCH FREE CHURCH.
Missionaries,	28
Assistant Missionaries,	3
Native Assistants,	75
Communicants,	20
Scholars,	3,200
FRENCH PROTESTANT.
Missionaries,	13
Assistant Missionaries,	3
Native Assistants,	2
Communicants,	571
Scholars,	1,013
GERMAN.
Missionaries,	25
Assistant Missionaries,	3
Native Assistants,	35
Communicants,	79
Scholars,	1,941

GOSPEL PROPAGATION.
Missionaries,	44
Native Assistants,	254
Communicants,	2,664
Scholars,	7,399
SCOTCH ESTABLISHED.
Missionaries,	6
Assistant Missionary,	1
Scholars,	940
SOCIETIES FOR THE JEWS.
Missionaries,	35
Assistant Missionaries,	54
GRAND AGGREGATE.
The total number of all persons enumerated in the Missionary Church of different denominations, is as follows, viz:
Missionaries,	1,147
Assistant Missionaries,	211
Native Assistants,	2,140
Communicants,	189,778
Scholars,	154,816

The Distribution of the Misssonary effort is more instructive than the number. It shows where that effort has been most successful, and under what circumstances. The localities of the Missionary effort may be thus described:

ISLANDS OF THE PACIFIC.
Missionaries,	107
Assistant Missionaries,	34
Native Assistants,	121
Communicants,	41,468
Scholars,	27,540

The great body of Missionaries and Communicants in the Pacific, are in three places—the Sandwich Islands, under the exclusive charge of the American Board; the Georgian Islands, under the care of the Independent London Missionary Society; and New Zealand, which is divided between the labors of the English Wesleyans and the English Episcopal Church Society. They have all proved fruitful grounds of Missionary labor.

WEST INDIES.
Missionaries,	306
Assistant Missionaries,	16
Native Assistants,	40
Communicants,	112,200
Scholars,	16,590

The Societies which have occupied this field have been the English Wesleyan, the English Baptist, the United Brethren, and the Independent London Missionary. Their chief places of effort have been JAMAICA, TRINIDAD, ANTIGUA, the BAHAMAS, DANISH ISLANDS &c., &c. The negroes of the West Indies were the chief subjects of Missionary effort, and the great number of communicants there, shows how successful has been this religious enterprise among them. The English Wesleyan Missionaries alone have 55,000 communicants in those Islands. It must be remembered that most of the slaves of the West Indies were, previous to the effort, positively Heathen. Even yet, great numbers of them adhere to "Devil Worship." These missions to the West Indies were the preparation of the abolition of slavery in the British Islands. One of the most distinguished of the Baptist Missionaries there testifies, that unless there had been the twenty years' previous labors of the Missionaries, it would have been impossible for great Britain to have abolished slavery in the West Indies.

INDIA AND CEYLON.
Missionaries,	331
Assistant Missionaries,	50
Native Assistants,	1,377
Communicants,	10,944
Scholars,	61,344

India is, all in all, the most important of the Missionary fields; and there is scarcely a doubt that through the missions there, the whole of the vast empire of Great Britain in Asia must, at no distant day, receive and adopt the principles and worship of christianity. The following are the results of Missionary effort in

INDIA AND CEYLON.
Missionaries,	331
Assistant Missionaries,	50
Native Assistants,	1,377
Communicants,	10,944
Scholars,	61,344

The reader will see, by this table, that the Missionary enterprise is in India conducted upon the true method of introducing a new civilization among a people. This is by employing native workers. In India, we see a strong body of native workers employed, whose agency is chiefly in the great number of schools, which show, as above, no less than sixty thousand scholars.

The Mission to the KARENS, in Burmah, under the charge of the Baptists, is one of the most remarkably interesting and successful in the world. Any reader would be pleased and absorbed, in reviewing its history.

Five sixths of the India Missions are under the care of English Missionaries—chiefly Episcopal and Baptist. The result proves them to have been very successful.

AFRICA.
Missionaries,	186
Assistant Missionaries,	27
Native Assistants,	129
Communicants,	16,680
Scholars,	16,447

These Missions are almost all English—Episcopal and Wesleyan chiefly. The principal localities are Sierra Leone, Cape of Good Hope and South Africa, and Liberia. At Sierra Leone, the Missions are under the charge of the Episcopal Church Missionary and the Wesleyans. In South Africa, they are of the Independent London Missionary and the Wesleyans. In Liberia, the majority of Missionaries are American Methodists.

In America, the Missionaries to the Indian Tribes are all American—chiefly under the care of the American Board.

In review of the facts stated above, it appears that the chief and most successful of the Protestant Missions have been in the West Indies, Ceylon, Burmah, among the Karens, Sandwich Islands, New Zealand, Georgian Islands, South Africa, and Sierra Leone. In the Island of Jamaica, the Sandwich Islands, New Zealand, and Hindostan, the success of Missions has certainly been equal to and beyond any enterprise, conducted by the same number of persons, in any form of civilization.

The number of persons employed, at one time, is 3,499. The result is 52 communicants and 36 Scholars to each person engaged in the business of Evangelism! Is the result in christian countries themselves equal to that? If it be, it certainly does not very greatly exceed it. Unless the "Signs of the Times," are very incorrectly read or interpreted, the greatest and most enlightened Paganism of the world—that of Hindostan—is rapidly giving away, before the double attack of science and christianity. It must be a faint heart—a sceptical intellect—an unprogressive spirit, which sees nothing in the steady advance of Missions and the yet more rapid movement of Governments and conquests over Pagan lands, to foreshadow the speedy and permanent triumph of Christianity, both in name and substance, over the old and crumbling civilizations of the world.

For any purpose of progress, both Paganism and Mahomedanism have long ceased to exist. The moment the nations which sustained them ceased to be in the advance of physical civilization, they ceased to advance in anything. They had nothing spiritual to commend. They are now crumbling out of existence, like the stones of an ancient wall, from which the mortar has dropped away, and on which the water is constantly dropping.

Men may prepare, before another generation has passed away, to see wonderful things. The new civilization will bloom in fresh glory over the wasted fields. The spiritual will take its place in the advance of the new order, and a sublime and triumphant harmony govern Christian civilization.

EDUCATIONAL.

From the Boston Practical Educator.

Memoria Technica.

The art of aiding the memory is of very ancient origin. Herodotus informs us that it was a study eagerly pursued by the ancient Egyptians. The great men of Greece and Rome availed themselves of its uses, and acknowledged their indebtedness to the "Mnemonic Art," for the readiness and accuracy with which they could state facts, and make long speeches without notes.

Dr. Gray, a learned English clergyman, published a work, in 1730, bearing the title of "Memoria Technica," which book may be regarded as the progenitor of all that has followed in the Mnemonic line of descendants. So great was the popularity of this work, that it went rapidly through six editions. Such was the estimation in which literary men held it, for the aid it afforded in remembering the dates of events, the latitude and longitude of places, the distances of planets, and all that kind of knowledge where the answer is given in figures, that Dr. Priestly said, "every liberally educated man is inexcusable," who does not avail himself of its advantages.—The work having never been published in this country, the reader is referred to an abstract of it, in Whelpley's, or Worcestor's Compend of History.

In will be seen that, Gray, like merchants in making their private marks on goods, made letters take the place of Arabic figures. But from his figure alphabet, no word can be formed which has a meaning, or which conveys to the mind an idea. Hence the toil of wearing *un*meaning words into the mind was abandoned. M. Feinaigle, a German, made a very great improvement on Gray's "Key," by leaving the vowels without a numerical value, and so arranging the consonants as to make date-words, which had a meaning—words which would give exercise to the understanding as well as the memory, by which the retentive faculties became more vividly impressed, and by which the progress of the learner was made more rapid and easy. But Feinaigle's theory, as a whole, (published in England in 1812,) was too cumbersome for practical use, and his large work, of more than three hundred pages, never reached a second edition. Very happy improvements have been made on Feinaigle's work, by several French and English writers. The American people are principally indebted to Prof. F. F. Gouraud, for the French version, which he has applied to a great variety of topics, with such "extreme ingenuity," as to make it of very little use to students acquiring an education.

"The Art of Memory" has hitherto been thought by its professors, in lectures to select classes, and, more generally, at an expense which placed it out of the reach of the masses. It has therefore contributed little or nothing, as yet, to the advancement of primary education in modern times. The new Memoria Technica, by L. D. Johnson, lately published, is the first work of the kind which has ever been prepared for the use of schools—and baptised with the title of the work which has been respected and studied by so many literary men—and is designed to make every teacher "professor" of all the Mnemonics that pupils need. The figure alphabet, which bears several points of resemblance to some three or four others, is entirely new in principle, being based on the same philosophical classification of consonant sounds, as that of Phonography, as taught by Andrews and Boyle. The pupil who learns it, becomes familiar with the sounds of letters, and the proper exercise of those organs by which consonant elements are distinctly enunciated; also with the spelling of words, and the formation of sentences, on the plan of "Parker's Exercises in Composition." But notwithstanding the extensive application of the figure alphabet, if the work before us contained nothing else, it would lose half its claim to consideration as a school book.—The substitution of rational words for figures, saves memory from labor. But "topical Mnemonics," or that part of the book which relates to the memory of words, nomenclatures, short sentences, &c., &c., makes memory, and renders it more tenacious and elastic. Take the fifty-six sovereigns of England, or a hundred towns and cities in the order of their population, or the one hundred and forty-six plants, with the Class and Order assigned to them in Botany, with the sentiments assigned to them in the 'Language of Flowers'—and experience will prove, that either, or all those lessons, can be committed in one-fourth the time, by the aid of "prompters," than without them—and all without perverting a philosophical memory, or of lessening mental culture. If time be valuable to the pupil, then this work has a claim to the attention of teachers, and the guardians of youth.

When we have seen boys and girls, by the aid of this system, commit, with accuracy, one thousand historical events, arranged in the order of their occurrence, without turning aside from their daily advocations—(and one instance we know where a boy recited six thousand facts, without a failure)—we have been compelled to believe that this work is happily adapted to benefit those—and they are not the few—whose employment leaves them but little time for study. It is adapted to place a vast amount of frame-work knowledge, to say the least, with a tenacious recollection, at the student's control, and with comparatively little labor. This hasty glance at a subject which is now proposed to be incorporated into the education of youth, is here submitted to those who are wiser than ourselves. But we hesitate not to express the hope, that the time is not far distant when the pupils in our public schools shall have the full benefit of the Memoria Technica, as a text-book.

From the Philadelphia U. S. Gazette.

Two of the Episcopal Churches had their collections on Sunday last, for the sufferers in Ireland. The results were as follows:

Church of the Epiphany Philadelphia,	$500 00
St. Andrew's,	540 00
Sunday School children at St. Andrews,	160 00
	$1,200 00

Religious Intelligence.

PITTSBURGH DISTRICT.

West Milford, Va., March 2nd, 1847.

Br. Bassett:—I avail myself of the present opportunity to say something in regard to the state of the church in the bounds of Clarksburgh Circuit; up to the present date we have had no special revival.

During the winter we have held several protracted meetings; there was generally a good state of feeling among the members, but few accessions to the church.

We have wound up the labors of our second Quarterly meeting. Brothers, J. Clark, and B. Baley were with us. Br. Clark's health being too delicate to preach, his labors were confined to exhortations. Br. Baley preached twice with considerable energy. May the Lord bless these Brethren.

At this meeting one young man was happily converted. May the Lord guide him through the toils of life and bring him to the church triumphant above.

So far as I have knowledge, we have general peace. May the Lord send us prosperity.

Hanson Reger, Sup't.
A. Lister, Assistant.

Manchester Circuit, March 2nd, 1847.

Br. Bassett: As some time has elapsed since I have reported to the President the condition of this circuit, I will occupy a part of this sheet in complying with the Disciplinary Requisition on this point.

So far this year, we have not been blessed with as great an increase in our numbers, as during either of the two years preceeding. However, we have enjoyed peace, and some prosperity. In all, twelve have been received. In the general, we have a most excellent membership. Many appear anxiously endeavoring to secure the excellencies of christian character and experience, which will warrant a triumph over the last enemy, & a glorious immortality. Our second Quarterly Meeting closed last evening. We were favored with the assistance of Br. John Burns during the entire meeting. Considerable interest was manifested both by the church and the unconverted, though few were induced to abandon their sins and seek Christ. This Circuit has done what I fear many of her Sisters in the District are leaving undone: Namely—Raised collections at the several appointments, in compliance with a Resolution of the last Annual Conference, for the benefit of Br. A. Shinn. Surely, this duty should not be neglected by any. For the last five weeks, it has been with great difficulty that I have filled my appointments, in consequence of my throat being ulcered and very sore. It is now a little better, and I trust will soon be well, that my labors be not cut short with my present loving and beloved charge. This however is a matter which must be referred to Him in whose hands are my life, and labors. I trust that my heart will ever be resigned and submissive, that in all things, I may be able to say, the will of the Lord be done.

Yours &c., Jos. Burns, Supt.

MUSKINGUM DISTRICT.

Otsego Ct., March 18, 1847.

Br. Bassett: In addition to our regular quarterly, we have held a number of protracted meetings, the majority of which were not only interesting, but beneficial to the church. We have had a number of revivals of religion on this circuit this year. Many trembling mourners have been brought to bow at the altar of prayer, and when they were willing to give up all for the sake of Christ, they found him to the joy, and satisfaction of their souls, and were enabled to rise and tell what a dear Saviour they had found. I have had the pleasure of witnessing the conversion of scores of precious souls this year, with the accession of a goodly number to the church. At Otsego, we have received 13; at Jacobsport, 40; at Prospect, 15; and a number more at various other classes, making in all 83, received into the church on this circuit this Conference year, all from the world but five or six. Br. J. Baker has been laboring with us during the last quarter, and has attended on all protracted occasions, and labored with his usual zeal and energy. We were also favored with the presence of Brs. Case, and Hamilton, on several occasions. I am truly thankful to the brethren for their help for it was profitable. But to God be all glory. Prospects I think are brightning on this circuit, and we are still hoping to see greater displays of the matchless power of Almighty God, in the salvation of precious and immortal souls. Yours truly,

Wm. Duling.

OHIO DISTRICT.

Lima Circuit, Ohio, March, 17, 1847.

Br. Bassett: By your permission I will say a few things through the Western Recorder to our president, J. M. Young, and the friends of Zion in general, in regard to this Circuit. I commenced my labors on this circuit in the month of December. Found things in a bad condition. The appointments were all gone down. We have succeeded in getting them all up again, and reorganized in some places. The congregations are now good. We report a decrease of 40 members discontinued in consequence of a neglect of christian duty. Our second quarterly meeting has just closed. We had a pleasant time.

G. M. Hunt.

Selfishness.—God has written upon the flower that sweetens the air—upon the breeze that rocks the flower on its stem—upon the rain drop that refreshes the spring of moss that lifts its head in the desert—upon the ocean that rocks every swimmer in its deep chambers—upon every penciled shell that sleeps in the caverns of the deep no less than upon the mighty sun which warms and cheers millions of creatures that live in its light—upon his works he has written—"none of us liveth to himself." And probably were we wise enough to understand these works, we should find that there is nothing—from the cold stone in the earth, or the minutest creature that breathes—which may not, in some way or other, minister to the happiness of some living creature. We admire and praise that flower that best answers the end for which it was created, and bestows the most pleasure. We value and praise that horse which best answers the end for which he was created, and the tree that bears fruit the most rich and abundant. The star that is the most useful in the heavens is the star that we admire the most.

Now is it not reasonable, that man, to whom the whole creation, from the flower up to the spangled heavens, all minister—man who has the power of conferring deeper misery or higher happiness than any other being on earth—man, who can act like God if he will—is it not reasonable that he should live for the noble end of living, not to himself but for others.

The following Missionaries have left Boston in the ship Ashburton for Canton:—Rev. Mr. Toby and wife; Rev. Mr. Shuck, wife and two children. Rev. Mr. Johnson, Rev. Mr. James, Rev. Mr. Spaulding, Mr. James R. Andrews, of Salem; Mr. Dodge, of do.

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO.

THURSDAY, MARCH 25, 1847.

Books.—A good brother in charge of a circuit, writes as follows:

"I wish we could get some Hymn Books and Disciplines—they are much needed here. Have you any on hand? If you have, let us know how to come at them."

Answer. We have the books—and the way to 'come at them' is for you to take a trip to our town, with your purse full of cash. We will be glad to see you, and equally glad to supply the necessities of your people for the books. Our supply of Disciplines will not last long. We have but three dozen left, of a lot of twelve dozen.

Planet Mercury.—The New York Sun says that the planet Mercury can be seen with the naked eye, from about sunset till half past seven, about three or four degrees below Venus, and a little to the right. We presume that our New York cotemporary has had a view of the little planet, for we know that he is near the Sun. But somehow, from this very circumstance, we have never been enabled to get a glimpse of him.

We see that Professor Mitchell of the Cincinnati Observatory, is delivering a course of Lectures at the Tabernacle, New York city.

Baltimore Conference, M. E. Church.—This body convened in the "Foundry Church," Washington City, on the 9th instant. It is said that five Bishops were present, viz: Rev. Messrs. Hedding and Janes, of New York; Waugh, of Baltimore; and Morris and Hamline, of Cincinnati.

New Post Office Law.—An act was passed by Congress, near its adjournment, embracing some considerable modifications of our mail privileges. Transient or occasional papers cannot be sent, except by the publishers, unless the postage is pre-paid, three cents each. Two letters may not be enclosed in the same envelope to different persons, under a penalty of $10. The franking privilege is restored to those postmasters whose salary is less than $200 per year. We have not seen the law in full, nor do we learn at what time it goes into effect. We believe that our postmasters intend waiting for instructions, before they enforce its provisions. We may hereafter publish it in full.

Sears' Magazine.—The March number is before us containing a Description and Pictorial Illustrations of Georgia, Florida, and Alabama.—This volume of 'Sears,' for 1847, is to be a great book—containing a Pictorial Description of the United States, in full. We intend to order a good lot of copies for our best Agents. We have several to whom we are determined to send it, and we wait only to see for how many others we shall order it. Every Agent who collects the present year as much as twenty dollars of our dues for the Western Recorder, shall have a copy of Sears. Mr. S., that "Great Britain," if you please.

Confession of a Sabbath Breaker.—A Cincinnati correspondent of the Ohio Statesman gives an account of a very unprofitable speculation made by a gentleman, in purchasing 1500 barrels of flour for shipment to New Orleans, on the strength of the news by the Sarah Sands, a few weeks ago. He lost by the transaction, $1200. He says it served him right enough, because he should not have made the purchase on a Sunday.

Great Fire at Towanda.—The Dollar Newspaper brings particulars of a destructive fire at Towanda, Pennsylvania, on the 12th inst. More than twenty buildings were destroyed, in the fairest and densest portion of the village. The Court House was consumed, and twenty-five families were rendered houseless, and many lost all they possessed.

Mnemonics.—We direct the attention of Teachers and School Directors, to the numerous notices by Boston newspapers, of the new work of Rev. Mr. Johnson, which we insert in our advertising columns. We are gratified to learn that orders for the "Memoria Technica," have already been received by the publishers, from different parts of Ohio. The work has been introduced into the schools of Boston, and should any considerable interest in its behalf be excited in Ohio, the Author will probably be induced to take a tour to our State in view of visiting its principal Seminaries and other Institutions of learning.

Maryland Conference, M. P. Church.—This body convened at Easton, Maryland, on the 10th inst. At the time our paper went to press, the last Methodist Protestant, in which we expected to receive the proceedings, from some cause, had failed to reach us. But the Columbian Fountain (bless it) which is just received, informs us that a very harmonious session was held, closing on the 17th. Rev. Eli Henkle was re-elected President. The appointments for Baltimore are as follows: E. Baltimore Station, J. J. Murray; Central, Dr. F. Waters; West Baltimore, J. Varlen, P. L. Wilson; Liberty Street Mission, No application. Our friend, Dr. J. S. Reese, is left without an appointment at his own request. The Conference has loaned Br. J. R. Cox to the Church at Charleston, S. C. Next Conference to be held at Georgetown, D. C. 2d Wed. in March 1848.

Presbytery.—The 'Colporteur' states that the Presbytery of Zanesville, stands adjourned to meet in Brownsville, O. on the first Tuesday of April, at 2 o'clock, P. M.

An old Subscriber.—Discontinued at last—The Pittsburgh Gazette announces the death, at Brownsville, Pa. of Jacob Bowman, Esq. a venerable and respected citizen of that place, in the 84th year of his age. The Gazette states that he was the oldest subscriber of that paper "having taken in uninterruptedly from its commencement to his decease, a period of over 60 years."

News from the Army. A Battle.

An Extra of the Cincinnati Commercial, brings intelligence of great engagement between Gen. Taylor and Santa Anna, about the 22d February. The news came by New Orleans papers of the 13th inst. The battle is said to have commenced near Saltillo, and to have continued two days. The Mexicans had 20,000 men, Santa Anna commanding in person. General Taylor's force, when the battle commenced, consisted of 5,000 men, and he was making his retreat to Monterey. He is said to have lost 2000 men, whilst the Mexican loss is reported to be 4,500. We are of course, doubtful of the accuracy of these numbers. Col. Morgan (from Mt. Vernon, Ohio as we are told) was mortally wounded, and his command entirely cut up. A train of 120 waggons was captured by the Mexicans, also, one hundred pack mules. It was thought that Gen. Taylor's situation was still critical, doubts being entertained of his being able to make good his retreat to Monterey. He has volunteers only under his command, General Scott having taken the regular force from that part of the country. This is now much regretted.

O, Human Ambition, where is thy blush? O, Cruel War, when will thy bloody tale be told? The details of this last battle, (and perhaps not the last) should the accounts prove true, will carry lamentation, and weeping, and woe, to how many thousands of families in these two Republics! And yet there are those in this Christian country, who will justify this wholesale human butchery: and who seem regardless at once, of the millions of expense, the tens of thousands of human sacrifices, and the incalculable amount of suffering and bereavement inflicted upon survivers!! If "blessed are the peace makers," what, may we infer, is to be the reward of those who are war makers?

Ladies' National Magazine.—We have received the April number of this work in advance of all other Magazines. It is embellished with two engravings. The Children in the wood, and the Spring Fashions. Edited by Mrs. A. Stephens, C. J. Peterson, Publisher, Philadelphia.

DIED, at Columbus, Ohio, on the morning of the 23d instant, Mr. Jacob Medary, Post Master of that city, and brother of Mr. Samuel Medary of the Ohio Statesman.

Loss of the Tweed.—In another column will be found an account of the destruction of the British vessel, Tweed. It is said there were on board, crew and passengers, 150 persons, of whom 71 perished. When the Tweed sailed from Havana, she left behind 25 passengers, many of whom had their baggage on board.

Written for the Western Recorder.

NEW ENGLAND CORRESPONDENCE OF THE WESTERN RECORDER.

Boston, March, 11th, 1847.

Dear Friend Bassett:—The last Western Recorder bearing date March 4th, I regard as a rich number, spiced off with all the variety required to make a Newspaper. The one containing my last letter never reached me. I saw it a moment in the office of the Olive Branch. I think your patrons and friends in the West, cannot be otherwise than pleased with the Recorder as a family paper.

I see you have some sharp shooting on the question of slavery. That the true light now shineth, at least, through the free States, there can be no doubt, so that the whole affair falls upon the conscientiousness, and integrity of those who understand and know the truth. There is a great, and a fearful responsibility resting on the politicians, the ministers, and the churches of non-slaveholding states, in this behalf.—Whether these several sects will do their whole duty, remains to be determined. We are in a great moral battle field, on which some are fighting for themselves and their party, and some I hope are doing battle nobly for the cause of God and humanity. There is a great temptation placed before those whose sectarian attachments lead them to sympathise with slaveholding interests. If the Protestant Methodists, situated just as they are do not yield more or less to this temptation, they will be unlike most others in the same condition. Four Missionaries have this day left our harbor for China. They are sent out by the great Baptist denomination. They "got up" a meeting last Sabbath evening to celebrate their departure. It was one of peculiar interest. Were there room in my sheet I should admire to give you a short report of their speeches, but suffice it to say, they seemed to love the work which lay before them. God bless them! as they go across the great waters, and when they reach the land of their destination, may they make the perishing millions of China feel their influence!

The Boston P. Methodist conference held its session in Waymouth last week. I meant to have done myself the pleasure, to have been in attendance, but was prevented by the sudden death of a friend, which called my attention fifty miles another way.—How true it is that man may appoint, but God can disappoint

But although I cannot repeat any of the proceedings of the Conference, yet it should afford your readers some pleasure to be informed that from the knowledge I have of some of them, I am prepared to say that if unimpeachable character, and humble simplicity of aim, be evidence of goodness, they may be regarded as good men fearing God, and eschewing evil.

But one great fault which has every where pervaded the New England ministers and churches is this; having been called upon to witness the disgusting desecrations of religious excitement, in the hallucinations of Millerism they have turned away from the points of direct application of the truth to men's consciences, through fear, I have thought, lest any true religious excitement might be prostituted into a perversion of true piety.

Hence the preaching in New England for the last three or four years, has been on topics which would do more to gratify the intellect than to affect the heart. The pious and unpretending Protestant Methodist ministers have by no means escaped the contagion.—Hence there are no revivals in the churches, and I suppose very few additions of members!

There is beginning to be however a waking up in many parts of New England. In the small town of Bristol, Rhode Island, hundreds have recently entertained a hope in Christ—and many other churches are returning to the more appropriate and holy work of instrumentally saving souls. God grant that the time may not be far distant when the Protestant Methodist ministers may show their zeal for God and the salvation of man in this behalf.

O, Br. Bassett, do you know the exceeding pleasure which may be derived from laboring successfully, and irrespectively of all other considerations, for the salvation of undying souls? I trust you do. May you be able then, through your wide spread preaching instrument, the Recorder, to touch a chord in the breasts of your ministers, which shall vibrate in the songs of the redeemed coming home to God. L. D. J.

☞ We insert the following from Rev. Mr. Brown, over his proper signature, being assured that he has no intention to take part in a controversy respecting 'secret societies,' but only calls for correction in a point of fact, touching the Presbyterian Church

Written for the Western Recorder

Br. Bassett: A friend has referred me to an article or two in your paper relative to Rev. W. A. Smallwood's address on Temperance recently delivered in Putnam. In your paper of March the 4th, some person, who holds a ready pen, makes some friendly criticisms on a portion of Mr. S's. address, which was very justly liable to correction. In your paper of March 18th, a Son of Temperance replies, and in his argument makes some assertions relative to the Presbyterian Church which are not correct. Mr. Smallwood had said in his address, on page 21, "we (the Sons of Temperance) are no more a secret society than the session of a church is, when it sits, as it generally does, with closed doors." This assertion Mr. S. would not have made had he been better informed. We regret that he attempted to justify the organization of the S. of T. by appealing to a non-fact. But a "Son of Temperance" has defended this assertion with a vengeance, when he uses the following language; "I have seen men turned out of Presbytery, that none but the initiated might be present at their secret counsels. I believe the General Assembly do the same. If a ruling elder should disclose private things, done in secret session, to his better half, or his children, he would be subject to censure. I maintain they are considered private tribunals." Again; "our fore-fathers were driven from their home and their country by Presbyterians." I am not willing that your correspondent should be permitted to address your numerous readers with such bold assertions, without a gentle hint that possibly his name may be called for. The Presbyterian church begs to be excused from being haggled in a controversy about secret societies. Yours very respectfully,

S. Brown.

Zanesville, March 23, 1847.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

From the New York Sun.

DISASTER AT SEA.

Loss of the Royal Steamer Tweed.

The Royal Mail steamer Tweed, Capt. Parsons, left Havana on the 9th of Feb. for Vera Cruz having 58 passengers and a crew of 91 men— in all, 149 souls. At half past 3 o'clock in the morning, February 12th, while going with full speed, she struck with tremendous force on the rocks of the Alacranes (Yucatan,) and in less than twenty minutes, she sunk entirely! The cabin was the first torn open by the concussion, and at the same instant the water came rushing in, drowning many before they could escape from their berths.—The upper cabin deck was burst through, and upon the scattered pieces of this many endeavored to save themselves. And now occurred those desperate scenes, more awful from the piercing shrieks of the sufferers, which no pen can describe. Many of those who gained the deck threw themselves into the sea and were lost at once. Others seized hold of boards, buckets, chairs, tables, or whatever they could reach, and calling upon God for assistance, dashed into the waves, some who occupied rooms in the deck cabin, preferring instant death to longer useless struggles, blew out their brains with pistols, or destroyed themselves with a razor or knife! By little and little, the long saloon cabin began to sink under water, and then all sprang from the ship. Some never rose again; others began to swim towards a cluster of rocks which were out of the water, about 50 yards from the vessel. Never was light so long in coming. When day dawned the saved might be seen here and there in little groups, with all their limbs bruised, naked and exhausted.—Gradually they collected together, and now saw a few unfortunate sailors clinging to the top of a wheel house. They made the most pitiful signs for succor, but there were no boats nor any other mode of assistance, and the sailors soon perished. Upon these rocks without provision, without aid, and ready to die, some from exhaustion, but most from hunger and thurst, did these poor beings remain for five long days. On the 5th day the brig Emily, the one by which we receive these particulars, hove in sight. Her appearance was hailed by one universal shout of joy, while tears and prayers of gratitude escaped from all.—The survivors were safely embarked on board the Emily and carried into Sisal. A card is published in the Noticioso, expressive of their gratitude to the Captain and officers of the brig. It appears that a small boat which afterwards floated to them, had been sent to Sisal for aid. On her way thither she was picked up by the Emily, Captain Camps, who immediately changed his course and ran for the wreck. The Tweed was a noble vessel. She had on board a large quantity of quick silver and valuable freight, the loss of which no doubt exceed $1,000,000. She was commanded by Capt. Geo. Parsons; E. Ellison, 1st officer, C. H. Onslow, 2d do E. Knott, 3d do. T. Rowlatt, Midshipman, S. B. Rowlatt, Surgeon. Don Escudero, of Yucatan, one of the most prominent men, was lost, together with his wife. They were drowned in their berth.

Ireland.—An agent of the Society of Friends traveling with a view to explore some of the Western and Southern parts of Ireland, thus describes the prevailing manifestations of woe:—Thou wouldst hardly recognize the country in passing through it; every living thing but man, has disappeared; no dogs, no pigs, no poultry. I do not think I have heard a poor person laugh since I left home. How changed! It is no exaggeration to say that there is no playing of children in the streets. The people have a sickly, livid hue.—I heard the remark that they were beginning not to know their neighbors, from their altered looks."

Distressing.—A distressing occurrence took place, one mile east of St. Clairsville, during the past week. A man, named Jonathan Shaw, of Allegheny conny. Pa. had been conveying his two sisters to a new home in the west; and was returning. In Pickaway county, Ohio, he received a kick from a horse, and caught cold in the wounded part, the knee, before coming this far east. Lock jaw was the consequence, and he died on the 5th instant, among strangers. Our fellow-citizen, the Rev. Young, took an active part in seeing to his wants, providing for the decent burial of his remains, and in forwarding the sad intelligence to his wife and two children, who expected him home to remove them, also, to the west. His brother and brother-in-law were just in time to witness the interment; as the body had been kept as long as possible, and they arrived while the funeral procession was proceeding to the grave.—Belmont Chronicle, March 12.

Sailing of the Irish Relief Ship.—The barque Victor, Capt. R. W. Clarke, left port yesterday for Cork, laden with part of the donations of the people of this city, for the relief of the famishing poor. Heaven speed her on her holy mission! She takes out 5695 barrels and 230 half barrels corn meal, 72 sacks and 12 barrels corn, three barrels flour, 19 barrels and 2 boxes bread, one barrel beans, four barrels hops. and 16 boxes and bags clothing. At a rough calculation, we estimate that this charge of food will support, for a single month, one hundreth part of the suffering population of that country.—The barque will, we hope, arrive out within thirty days. No time is to be lost in getting off the Relief Ships now loading at other ports, as the months of April, May and June, will, we fear, witness great distress from want of food.—N. Y. Sun 11th.

Public and Private Industry.—Legislative Idleness.—Industry is indispensable to the successful prosecution of any occupation in life. It is also indispensable to health and happiness; for indolence invariably leads to vice. These truisms are no where more highly appreciated than in our own country. But it is evident that our public men are fast losing sight of them. Take, for example, the proceedings of Congress, and of our State Legislatures generally. How much precious time is wasted? How many efforts are made to kill time, how many speeches against time, and how much business postponed to the end of the session? All the business transacted at the last session of Congress could have been gone through within three weeks instead of three months. Should a private citizen attempt to manage his business upon the economical principles of Congress, he would forfeit his credit, lose the confidence of the public and become a bankrupt. And why should indolent politicians be exempt from the same just retribution? Why should the people ever again confer power on any Congressman or Legislator whose influence has once blocked the wheels of the national or state government. —N. Y. Sun.

The fire at Columbia, S. C., 3d instant, commenced in the book store of Messrs. Tarbox & Co., or in the adjoining store of Samiss and Rooney, in Broad street. It extended right and left and back to Oglethorpe street.

Fires.—The steam saw mill at Cumberland, Md., was destroyed by fire on Friday night. Also an adjoining sash factory. Loss about $15,000, insurance $4000.

Terrible Accident.—A gentleman by the name of Fox, with his wife and five children, were crossing Wildcat river, in Indiana, with a waggon and team, when the horses turned into deep water, drowning the five children and a female.

A House set on Fire by Water.—On Sunday, the 24th Jan., the house at East Dennis, occupied by Mr. David Farnsworth, was set on fire and narrowly escaped destruction, in consequence of a glass globe of water containing two small fishes, having been hung up against a south window. The house having been shut up two or three days, Mr. F., on approaching, saw smoke issuing from the chimney. Five minutes elapsed before he got in, as he had to return to his father-in-laws, for the key. On entering, he found one of the window curtains was burnt, and that a covered easy chair, standing by the window was in flames. After extinguishing the fire, he ascertained the cause. The glass globe filled with water hung where the rays of the sun fell directly upon it, forming a lens, or burning glass, and a part of the curtain happening to be in the focus, was set on fire. Repeated experiments were afterwards made with the same globe. When filled with water and exposed to the sun, paper placed in the focus was instantly ignited; but when the water was turned out, the same effect was not produced. If Mr. F's. house had been destroyed, every body would have said that it was set on fire by an incendiary.—Scientific American.

The Wail for Ireland.

A fair was recently held in Brooklyn, (N. Y.) for the benefit of the poor of Ireland. In the Post office of the fair, where every body could find a letter if they only applied, was found the following epistle, which is prose and poetry combined:

Misthur—Shure but its the heart of swate Ireland that 'ud like to embrace ye, for all that ye'v done for her aid, me asthore; but the death of her childer, does so her bewilder, that its meself is afeared she'll niver smile more. When the wail of swate Erin sthruck the shores of Long Island, its yerself took it up, and rapatied yer crying, until far and wide, from lakes to the sea side, it rang—"gave Erin bread, her childer are dying." Shure but its all thrue, that first said by you—that niver a haperth; had thousands, of bread. That fathers an' mothers, and sisters an' brothers, must soon have relafe or the green turf o'er their head.

Och! how swate Erin's now waping, for the host that's slaping, the victims of famine——that monsther so dread.—Each of his foot print's a grave for the fair or the brave; and he's made the "Green Isle" a graveyard for his dead.—Darlint, may ye niver sup sorrow; and, och! ne'er know the horror, that spreads like a pall o'er the "Emerald Isle." Her thanks, and the best, shall be borne to the West, by every proud sail that shall reach ye, ere-while. For what ye have done and what ye are doing, shure but it 'ill long live on Green Erin's story; and faith, be it said, may each hair ov yer head, be a lighted mowld candle to show ye to glory.

And, Misther Advertiser, we'v larnt to be wiser, than to think the rich are our foes, as we'v often been towld. And throth you had betther print this lady's letter, or return it widout breaking the seal or its fold. KATE O'NEIL.

Drowned.—On Wednesday last, a man named John Easter, of Bedford township, in this county, was drowned in the Walholding canal, about three miles above Roscoe. He was riding along the towpath, and it is supposed he fell off of his horse into the water. His body has not yet been recovered.—Cosh. Whig.

Seat of Government.—The legislature of Michigan have located the Capital of that State in Lansing, Ingham County.

The three Million Bill.

An ACT appropriating three millions of dollars, to enable the President to conclude a peace and limits with Mexico.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That whereas a state of war now exists between the United States and the Republic of Mexico, which it is desirable should be speedily terminated upon terms just and honorable to both nations; and whereas assurances have heretofore been given to the Government of Mexico that it was the desire of the President to settle all questions between the two countries on the most liberal and satisfactory terms, according to the rights of each and the mutual interests and security of the two countries; and whereas the President may be able to conclude a treaty of peace with the Republic of Mexico prior to the next session of Congress, if means for that object are at his disposal; and whereas, in the adjustment of so many complicated questions as now exist between the two countries, it may possibly happen that an expenditure of money will be called for by the stipulations of any treaty which may be entered into; therefore the sum of Three Millions of Dollars be, and the same is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the President to conclude a treaty of peace, limits, and boundaries with the Republic of Mexico, to be used by him in the event that said treaty, when signed by the authorized agents of the two Governments, and duly ratified by Mexico, shall call for the expenditure of the same, or any part thereof, full and accurate accounts for which expenditure shall be by him transmitted to Congress at as early a day as practicable.

JOHN W. DAVIS,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
G. M. DALLAS,
Vice President of the United States and President of the Senate.

Approved, March 3, 1847.
JAMES K. POLK.

Rail Road Accidents.—On Saturday night Feb., 20, a large ware-house belonging to B. Higgins & Co., at Paris, built over the Mansfield and Sandusky City Rail Road was broken down by the great weight of wheat it contained, emptying its contents into the track, and entirely obstructing a passage for the last week. Fortunately there were locomotives on both sides, and consequently passengers have met with very little inconvenience or delay.

On Saturday afternoon the 27th one of the locomotives on the Mad River and Lake Erie Rail Road, came in with a long train of wheat cars and ran them on the side track leading to the Basdown thro' Mr. Caswell's ware-house. Before they were secured they became uncoupled from the locomotive, when the whole train rushed down the track, burst in one door, and burst out at the other and ran directly over a pile of pig iron, perhaps a foot high; the first car pitched off the wharf standing on end, the next followed, standing on end on the top of the second, and the third reared upon the second, without injuring itself or spilling its load—thus arresting the progress of those behind.—Sandusky Clarion.

We learn that at the last regular meeting of the Directors of the Mad River and Lake Erie Railroad Company, at Bellefountaine, in addition to the order for the removal of the office to Sandusky City, Mr. Dewitt C. Henderson, was appointed Superintendent, in place of Wm. Durbin removed—and that Mr. Robert Patterson was reappointed Treasurer of the Company, and removes to Sandusky City with the office.

We also learn that agents interested in the construction of that contemplated extension of the road from Springfield to Dayton, were in attendance at this meeting, and got assurances from the Company, that they would furnish the iron for the contemplated extension of the road, provided a sufficient amount of stock could be obtained to grade the road and prepare the superstructure for the iron. The Daytonians have set their hearts upon this work, and seem determined to carry it through. In addition to liberal individual subscriptions in and about that city, the County was recently authorized, by a large vote, to subscribe 25 000 to aid in the construction of the road. This will, in all probability, enable them to procure the requisite amount of stock to secure the liberal offer of the Company, and, at the completion of the work.—Urbana Gaz.

We learn from the Cincinnati Gazette, that at a late meeting of the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton Railroad Company, it was determined to commence the survey and final location of the route of the road from Cincinnati to Hamilton immediately, preparatory to putting the line under contract. The Company intend, if possible, says the Gazette, to have the grading completed this year, so as to have the road ready for the superstructure early next season.

The Dangers of Whaling.—Captain Avery late of bark Alibree of Mystic, was killed by a whale, August 16, lat. 45 N. lon. E. The line being capsized he was thrown into the water and taken down by the line. It was about half an hour before he arose, when it was found his right thigh was broken, and ankle put out of joint, but badly done by the line. His remains were taken on board and buried the next day. The ship was brought into Honelulu by Mr. Swain, 1st mate, who upon his arrival declined to continue in command, and the Alibree was ordered home in charge of the 2d mate. Among our papers from Sandwich Islands we find the names of no less than twenty-three persons reported, who have been killed by whales within a short space.—N. Y. Sun.

Destructive Fire.—A fire has occurred in Towanda, Pennsylvania, which destroyed most of the business part of the town. Loss upwards of $80,000.

More Trouble.—It is said that Lord Palmerston is about to demand the liberation of 3 negroes, whom he affirms are English subjects detained in slavery in the Island of Cuba.

Relief per U. S. Ship Macedonian.—Societies, Churches, Committees or Persons desirous of sending supplies to the starving people of Ireland and Scotland by this ship, are respectfully notified that contributions will be received on board said ship at Pier No. 3 North River, in front of the warehouse of Davis, Brooks & Co., No 38 and 39 West st., or at their office, No. 2 Broad st., where receipts will be given and directions complied with regarding the application of said donations—a list of which will be published. A great error has prevailed in relation to the vessel. She is not the "Macedonian" captured from the British, but another vessel named after the old prize. She was built for the Exploring Expedition, and was launched at Norfolk in 1837. Com. De Kay announces that he will sail as soon as the cargo can be got on board.—N. Y. Sun.

The next Steamer due here is the Hibernia. She was to leave Liverpool on the 4th March, and is therefore now thirteen days out. She will probably arrive on Friday or Saturday.—New York Sun.

Fire and Loss of Life.—We are pained to learn that the dwelling house of a Mr. Jones, in Thompson, Geauga county, was consumed by fire on Thursday night last, and melancholy to record, two of his children were burned. Mr. Jones and his wife put their children, one aged five and the other three, in bed, fastened their house and went to a protracted meeting.—About half past 9 o'clock the house was discovered to be on fire. Several persons in the neighborhood ran to it, and by tearing down one corner of it, took out the children with their limbs burned off and their bodies nearly consumed.—Painesville Telegraph, Feb., 17.

The Mexican Clergy.—The nearest approach we have yet seen towards peace has been the determination of the Mexican Clergy to move promptly and decisively in the matter, having successfully resisted the extraordinary amount claimed of them by the Government to carry on the contest, though compelled to pay something towards the war expenses. They could not foresee at what moment an infuriated soldiery, urged by ambitious officers, might not lay violent hands on all the Church property; therefore to guard against that calamity, they are speaking openly and decisively in favor of terminating the war. A reaction in all probability will soon take place in public opinion.—N. Y. Sun.

Damages.—Walter Urquhart and wife recovered $1,675 damages against the Connecticut River Steamboat Company, for injuries received by Mrs U., in 1845, her arm having been broken by carelessness.

Fire and Loss of Life.—A correspondent of the Albany Argus informs the editors of that paper that the dwelling of Hezekiah A. Holdridge, in North Blenheim Schoharie Co., was burned down on Monday last. Mrs. Holdridge and five children were burned to death, and the sixth and only remaining child so badly injured that it cannot long survive.

Mrs. Emma Smith, wife of the Mormon prophet, J. Smith, has returned to the city of Nauvoo, and taken the hotel known as the Mansion House.

A Mail Lost.—The stage running between Steubenville and Wellsville, slid into the river three miles below the latter place on Tuesday night last. The principal mail, containing the letters, was lost, and one horse drowned. No other accident occurred.

Population of New Orleans.—A census has lately been taken in the Crescent City, to which many of the citizens object; giving the number of the population as 94.499. The census of 1840 gave 98,837 as the population. Thus by deducting the first from the second, we have a decrease in population of New Orleans, since 1840, of four thousand, three hundred and eight. The Delta insists that this is almost impossible, and hopes that orders will be given for taking a new census.

The French ship C. Colon, or Christopher Colombe, Capt. Dury, was struck by lightning on her voyage from New Orleans to Havana, previous to Feb. 20. She was loaded with cotton and corn, and is said to be a total loss, being burnt to the water's edge. Cargo fully insured at New Orleans.

Frozen to Death.—A farmer of Lorett who had been to market at Quebec, with a load of hay, perished in the night during a storm, 27th ult., within a short distance of his home. Both man and horse were found next morning covered with snow. The cold was usually severe.

New States.—Wisconsin has been admitted into the Union, and will be represented in Congress at the next Session. The opening of the Thirtieth Congress will witness a representation from Thirty States.

Buffalo.—There are now waiting for the ice to give way and the trade of Lake Erie to open, 17 steam boats, 10 propellers and 1 sloop. The amount of new tonage constructing at Buffalo for 1847, comprises 1850 of sailing vessels and 2500 of steamboats.—N. Y. Sun.

The Ten Regiments are ordered to be enrolled as rapidly as possible, the recruits from New York, to rendezvous at New Orleans.

The Presbyterian Advocate publishes a decision of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, by which it appears that the salaries of clergymen cannot be taxed under the tax law of April 30, 1841.

A Good Man.—A Mr. Peter Miller died at Easton, Pa., in the 81st year of his age. He left no family, and his estate, valued at half a million is appropriated to various public objects; one of which is to invest a large sum the income of which is to be loaned on good security, to young farmers and mechanics purchasing property, and entering into business in the country.

Murder.—Noah Heaton, residing near Toronto, Canada, was murdered 20th ulto, and James Hamilton, who was indebted to him, has been arrested on suspicion of being the murderer..

The Legislature of Iowa adjourned last month without electing Senators to Congress.

An anti gambling law has been passed in Pa., giving magistrates summary power to enter suspected buildings. A person enticing another into a gambling house, is to be responsible for losses incurred, and liable to a fine of not more than $500 nor less than $50.

The Beef Market.—We must look for a falling off in the beef market, and a rise of prices from obvious causes. We required south an immense quantity for the army last fall. Almost every steamboat bound to New Orleans carried down cattle. Drovers were scouring Tennessee, Missouri and Illinois, and bought up everything. Upwards of 20,000 head were required for the army supplies. Then the foreign demand for beef increased. In 1846, the foreign shipments from New Orleans were 44,189 bbls, but the previous year only 9,167. The amount sent to the Eastern States was also considerable. The dearness of grain will tend to increase the price of beef.—N. Y. Sun.

The Death of the Lady of Senator Allen, of Ohio, is announced in the Washington Union. She died in that city last Saturday morning of pleurisy, aged forty years; leaving a daughter thirteen months old. Mrs. Allen was the daugher of the late Governor McArthur, of Ohio, and was greatly esteemed.

Caution to Hotel Thieves.—On Sat. morning last, a person from N. Y. calling himself Phelps, stopping at Noe's Hotel, Somerville, entered a boarder's room and stole a valuable gold watch, and made off by railroad to New York. Mr. Noe pursued on horseback, riding eleven miles in forty-five minutes, over a wretched road, overhauling the thief at Elizabethtown, when the watch was found upon him. He was taken back for trial. Mr. Noe deserves much credit for his promptness.

The New Orleans Picayune of the 6th announces the first reappearance of a bank note which its editors marked & set afloat, nearly two years ago.

The Oregon Mail Line of Steamers are to run monthly from Charleston, S. C. to Chagres, touching at St. Augustine, Key West and Havana: the mail will then be conveyed by land carriage, across the Isthmus, from Chagres to Panama, where it will be received by steamers for Astoria, or the mouth of the Columbia River, touching at Monterey, San Francisco and other places. The cost is not to exceed $100,000 per annum. U. S. Postmasters are to be appoined at Astoria and other points on the Pacific. Postage on a single letter to Chagres 20 cts., Havana 12 1-2 cts., Panama 30 cts., and to the Pacific coast, 30 cts.—N. Y. Sun.

Dreadful Accident.—At St. Louis on the morning of the 24th ult., two brothers, by the name of Uris and William Garreau, in the employ of Messrs. Hart and and Brester, who were engaged in re-shingling a large four-story building, fell from the roof to the pavement and both were killed—the oldest immediately, and the other living about an hour.

From the Emancipator.

Congressional Law for the District of Columbia.

Some considerable time since, we were informed of the case of clergyman in Hampden County, who had given great offence to some politician in his church, by preaching a bold and faithful sermon "Slavery, and the duty of American citizens in regard to its Abolition." The worst paroxism of indignation was occasioned, as we understand, by his statement that there was still a law existing in the District of Columbia, and owing its force only to the authority and act of Congress, by which a slave, arrested for murder, is subject to be cut in quarters, and the quarters to be exposed in the most public places of the county. A torrent of indignant denials almost overwhelmed the good man, without giving him a chance to produce his authority or prove his operation. His appeal to Judge Jay hardly availed to procure even a suspension of judgment. Under these circumstances, we volunteered to write to a member of Congress, to procure an exact and certified copy of the law & a statement of its present validity. We received in reply, the following copy and certificate, which we suppose, will be fully satisfactory to all reasonable people.

Be it enacted &c. "That when any negro or other slave shall be convicted by confession or verdict of a jury, of any petit treason or murder, or of wilfully burning of a dwelling-house, it shall and may be lawful for the justices before whom such conviction shall be, to give judgment against such negro or other slave to have the right hand cut off, to be hanged in the usual manner, the head severed from the body, the body divided into four quarters, and the head and quarters set up in the most public places in the county where such fact was committed."

The above is copied verbatum from the 4th chapter of the Laws of Maryland of 1729, being the whole of the 2nd section of said chapter, as contained in the first vol. of the Laws of Maryland, "revised and collected by William Kelly, Att'y."

The act was in force in 1801 when it was continued with the District of Columbia by act of Congress approved on the 27th of July of that year, entitled "An act concerning the district of Columbia" and is now in force within that part of said district which lies North of the Potamac, being all that portion which was ceded by Maryland to the United States.

J. R. GIDDINGS.

Hall of Rep. March 18th, 1846.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Written for the Western Recorder.

MISS MARY BOVEY.

Br. Bassett: It becomes my painful duty, to record the death of our much esteemed Sister Mary Bovey, who departed this life, March the 7th, 1847, after an illness of three weeks, in the 27th year of her age. She embraced religion in her 18th year, and united with the Methodist Protestant Church, of which she remained an acceptable member until her death. In former days, the Lord saw fit, to take her pious parents to himself. After the death of her Father, which occurred about a year ago, the family was divided. Mary, and her youngest sister, the one her mother left in her care, when she left the world, went and lived with Br. L. Cook of Cardington, where they found a comfortable home with that pious family. About three weeks before her death, she went to see one of her sisters, who lives about fifteen miles distant. The day being wet and cold, by the time she got there, she was exhausted, sickness having thrown its withering arms around her, before she left home. She continued to grow worse, though her sufferings were not great. After the lapse of some two weeks, she consented to have a Physician called in. He came, and after examining the case, pronounced it an affection of the Lungs.

The disease continued its rapid march, until death threw its icy arms around her, at which time she said, I am in water. A sister standing by, asked her where the water was. O, said she, you dont see it, but I do.

The friends seeing that she was fast sinking, asked her if she thought she was dying. (She not being able now to speak) answered in the affirmative, by nodding her head. They then asked her if she was prepared to go. She answers yes, by the same sign, her speech having entirely failed her. She then swooned away, and appeared as though gone, for half an hour. She then revived, and recovering her speech exclaimed See, see. O: how pretty! on being asked what she saw, she replied, those Angels, dont you see them? She continued gazing at them, for a short time, with a sweet smile upon her countenance some one asked her if she was going to meet her parents? Yes, said she, they are waiting to hail me as I come. She then raised her hands, and commenced shouting Glory! Glory! Glory to God! and thus fell a sleep in the arms of Jesus. Her remains were brought back to Cardington, the place of her former residence. At the appointed time for the funeral, a large congregation assembled to witness the solemn scene. Br. A. K. Earl preached a very appropriate sermon, on the occasion. After which, she was borne to the grave, there to rest in silence until the resurrection morn. She has left 7 sisters, to mourn their loss. The Lord support them under their affliction. Yours,

Samuel Lancaster.

Written for the Western Recorder.

BR. CHRISTIAN WHITEMAN

Was born April 25, 1806, in Fairfield County Ohio, where he lived until 1833, during which time he married, and became charged with the care of a family. In 1833, he removed to Sandusky County, Ohio. Soon after his removal he became awakened to a sense of his ruined condition by nature; he had such a view of the law of God as a rule of moral action, and such an application of the same to his conscience, that sin became exceeding sinful, until he cried out in the bitterness and anguish of his soul, with the Publican, God be merciful to me a sinner. But in the darkest hour of his extremity he was enabled to lay hold of Christ by faith confessing with his mouth the Lord Jesus and believing in his heart that God had raised him from the dead. His load of sin was removed, and he made to rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory, in a soul satisfying evidence that old things were done away, and all things had became new. He joined the church and submitted to the ordinance of Baptism, continued happy in the communion of the church about a year, when some difficulty occurred that discouraged him, when he left the church. He did not continue long in this situation till he found he had left his Father's house, and like the Prodigal Resolved to return. From this time he lived a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, until he removed to Owen County, Indiana, in 1845. About this time we organized a society of the Methodist Protestant Church in the neighborhood where Br. J. Gardener from Coshocton County, Ohio, had located. Br. Whiteman and his family joined with us, and he was elected leader of the class. This office he filled with great acceptability until he was called from his labors to his reward in heaven.

He was highly esteemed, not only by the church but all who knew him. His last moments were most triumphant. He told his friends when the last trial was at hand that the storm would soon be over. He took an affectionate leave of each member of the family, giving suitable advice, and charging them to meet him in heaven. When a friend offered some refreshment he refused, and said before to morrow he would eat bread in the Kingdom of God. Just before his departure he said, in three hours I will be in heaven. He died September 13th, 1846, leaving an affectionate wife and seven children with his class, numbering 30 members, to mourn his loss. "Mark the perfect man and behold the upright for the end of that man is peace."

Yours sincerely, Wm. B. Evans.

Spencer, Ia., February 24, 1847.

Written for the Western Recorder.

JAMES ADY, Sr.,

Departed this life at the residence of his son, (Joshua Ady,) five miles west of M'Connelsville, on the 14th of December, 1846, in the 86th year of his age. The subject of this brief notice was born in Harford county, Maryland, December 26, 1760, and became a subject of the renovating influence of the Holy Spirit, in the 18th year of his age. Being deprived of the facilities to a religious life that many of his surviving friends now enjoy, he passed four years of his infancy in combating the enemy of all righteousness; at the end of which time, God, in his Providence, afforded him the opportunity of becoming a member of the mystical body of Christ, and in the 22nd year of his age he united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, with which he stood faithfully identified until the spring of 1827, when he emigrated to Ohio, and settled with his family among their friends in Harrison county, near Harrisville; where, with his companion, he united with the Methodist Protestant Church, at its organization in that neighborhood, at Holmes' meeting house. There he remained a useful member until the spring of 1832, when he removed to Morgan county, where he lived a useful and respected member of society, and esteemed by all who knew him.

A short time before his decease, the writer of this notice called to see him, and found him perfectly resigned to the Divine will, and manifesting a desire to depart and be with Christ, rather than remain longer in a world of sorrow. His remains were deposited in the Mt. Zion Church-yard, by the side of his consort, whose remains were there deposited a few months previous. And while their bodies are there, to lie until the Resurrection Morn, I have no doubt but that their happy spirits are associated in the Paradise of God. But they are gone, leaving sons and daughters, with a numerous train of relatives and friends, to mourn their loss. May they follow them as they followed Christ, that they may meet to part no more.—Amen, and Amen. C. J. SEARS.

☞ Methodist Protestant will please copy, for the information of Eastern friends.

From the Methodist Protestant.

"Long Pieces"—A Scene in the Editor's Office.

Ed.—Do you wish our readers to read your article entire, Mr. Scribblelong?

S.—Certainly, sir—why else would I print?"

Ed.—Take an editor's advice then, and condense to one eighth of its present dimensions, and it will be read by some who get the paper."

S.—(colouring)—How can I without violence to the subject?

Ed.—If you cannot condense, then write eight separate articles; change your title in each, for variety's sake, and your labor will not be lost; but to publish that long thing, in this age of hurry and rapidity, why we might as well publish so much Greek, for all the readers who will go through with it.

S.—(a little piqued)—How long do you think a newspaper article ought to be, Mr. Editor?"

Ed.—Not more than a column, unless it be first rate, something spirited and of general interest; never more than two columns.

S.—Ahem! that's rather a Procrustean rule, I fancy.

Ed.—It is a rule founded upon close observation and editorial experience. Pray, tell me when did you read patiently a longer article in any newspapers.

S.—(thoughtfully)—Well, let me see, I read my last essay upon 'Perseverance,' which was full four colums of the "Heavytides Gazette" and—

Ed.—(smilingly)—Your own article. Who else read it? No one except yourself and the proof-reader perhaps.

S.—(passionately)—Mr. Editor I did not come here to be insulted; if you do not like my MS. return it.

Ed.—(handing it)—"It is here, sir."

S.—"That will do—good morning."

Ed.—"Good bye." (Exit Mr. Scribblelong.)

The Markets.

Zanesville & Putnam, March 25.

Flour, $4,00 per barrel; Wheat, 65 cts. per bushel; Corn, shelled, 27 cents, 25 cts. in the ear; Oats 16 cts., Clover Seed $3,00, Timothy Seed $2,00.

Pittsburgh, March 19.

Flour, $4,00 to $4,05 per bbl; a good article will bring $4,06, readily. Sale of 100 bbls., prime article, at $4,10. Corn, sales from first hands at 37c. Oats, sales of 140 bu. from wagon at 26c.; 400 do at the River, at 28c. Clover seed dull at $3,50; Timothy seed in demand at $1,62a2,00. Bacon, Hams 7½c. per lb., Shoulders, 6c.

Cincinnati, March 19.

Flour,—Sales are being made at $4,40@4,41; some at $4,50@4,50 per bbl. Corn Meal, per bushel, 43@45c. Dried Apples, 60@65c. per bu.; Dried Peaches, $1,50@1,60 per bushel.

Beef Cattle—Sales at $4,25@5,00 pr. cwt.

Baltimore, March 19.

The flour market has become quite unsetttled. Plenty of sellers, but no buyers at the prices demanded. For Howard st., holders asking $6 12½ per brl.

Corn—Sales White at 80c, and Yellow at 84c. The sales of both descriptions this week are 60,000 bushels.

New York, March 19

The market for flour has given way a fraction. Genessee and Western sold to-day at $ 6 87½, but most holders continue to ask $7.

Sales of Cornmeal are $5 per brl, also for future delivery at $4 62½

Bacon,—10@10½c. for hams, and 7½@7½c. for shoulders,

Boston, March 19.

Flour,—Moderate sales, Genessee, at $7,25. George town, Ohio, via N. O. &c., are selling at $7,00.

White Corn, 88@89c.; Yellow 93@94c.

Bacon—Sales Western, at 8½c, and of Hams at 9½c.

Philadelphia, March 19.

Flour—Sales to-day were all at 5 87½. Few sellers ask more than that price.

Wheat—White stands at 134c to-day; Red is held at 125 with sales.

NOTICES.

Bucyrus Circuit, Musk. Conference.—Our next Quarterly Meeting will be held at Everhart's School House, commencing, May 29th. To this meeting we respectfully invite Brs. G. Brown, J. Jack, I. Thrap, G. M. Scott, and J. Sowder. Please remember, I am alone, and need help. Come, by all means.

A. S. Robinson

Wheeling Circuit, Pittsburgh Conference.—Br. Brown, the President is informed that his appointment for this Circuit, is at Br. Geo. Dowler's, commencing Saturday, April 3d, at 11 oclock. He is also informed that Br. Alexander Marple is now in readiness to be employed, should there be a call for his services. S. Hazlett.

Lima Circuit, Ohio Conference.—Our presidential meeting will be held at Uniopolis, commencing at 11 o'clock, Saturday, 19th of April. We invite Brs. I Hunt, G. Thornburg, J. Park, W. Pelan, S. P. Kezerta, J. Borton. Come, brethren, and help us. G. M. Hunt.

Frederick Circuit, Muskingum Conference.—The President, Br. Clancy, is informed that his meeting for this circuit will be held at Fredericktown. S. Lancaster.

Mill Creek Circuit, Indiana Conference—Our third quarterly meeting will be held at Pleasant Grove, including the fifth Sabbath in May. The President is requested to attend.

H. Collings.

Miami Circuit, Ohio Conference.—We have a protracted meeting appointed to be held at our new Church, 4 miles west of Troy, commencing, April 10, to which we invite Br. Young, our President, Br. S. P. Kezerta, and as many more of our brethren as can attend. Br. Young is also desired to fill an appointment at or near Logansville. J. W. Thornburgh.

Delaware Circuit, Muskingum Conference. The President's meeting will be held at Westbrook's School House, seven miles west of Homer, and three from Lock.

Our third Quarterly Meeting will be held in the neighborhood of Br. Langwell's, three miles south of Eden, commencing the last Saturday in May, (29th.) To this meeting we invite T. Potter, S. Catlin, S. Lancaster, A. K. Earl, A. S. Robinson. We have no ordained Elder on this Circuit, and have sustained some disadvantage on account of it. I give notice at this early period, that the brethren may have time to arrange their business and attend. Don't fail to come.

Wm. Hatfield.

Evansville Circuit, Pitts. Conf.—The next Quarterly meeting will commence at the White Oak appointment on the first of May, to which we invite Brs. P. T. Laishley—D. R. Helmick—Jno. Clark, H. Reger,—A. Lister—R. M. Walker—M. Lucas, with all others that can attend. Come over Brethren and help us. And if either of the brethren has Hymn Books or Disciplines, he will find sale for them at our meeting.

A. J. Waren, Supt.

PRESIDENTIAL APPOINTMENTS.

Pittsburgh District.

Should it please God to spare my life, and give health to my family, I will try to fill the following appointments.

Wheeling Circuit.	1st	Sunday	in	April.
Tyler	" 2d	"		"
Harrisville	" 3d	"		"
Mill Creek	" 4th	"		"
Buchanon	" 1st	"	in	May
Braxton	" 2d	"		"
Greenbrier	" 3d	"		"
Huntersville	" 4th	"		"
Valley	" 5th	"		"

Geo. Brown.

Ohio Conference.

Presidential Visitation.

Greenville Mission,	March	27 & 28.
Miami Circuit,	April	10.
Lima "	"	17.
Kalida "	"	24.
Maumee Mission,	May	1.
Portage Circuit,	"	8.
Mt. Blanchard "	"	15.
Richwood "	"	22.
Union "	"	29.
Springfield "	June	5.
Miami "	"	12.

I Request the Superintendants, on the above Cts. to give notice through the Western Recorder, where their meetings will be held in their Charges. J. M. Young.

Muskingum District.

Br. Bassett: Please insert in the Recorder, the following list of appointments which I will fill, if able so to do.

4th	"	March,	Zanesville Ct.
1st	"	April	Newark "
7th	Wednesday	"	Delaware "
2nd	Sunday	"	Frederick "
4th	"	"	Licking "
28th	Wednesday	"	Mt. Zion "
1st	Sunday	May	Coshocton "
2nd	"	"	Pleasant hill "

Geo. Clancy, Pres.

Indiana District.

Mr. Editor: Please state that by divine permission, I will fill the following appointments.

Flat Rock	Circuit	March	28th
White Lick	"	April	11th
Mill Creek	"	"	18th
White River	"	"	25th

Will Br. W. B. Evans inform me by letter or otherwise the place of the appointment on White River Ct. T. Shipp.

Zanesville Circuit.—The President Br. Clancy will be expected to attend a meeting at Brownsville, on the last Saturday and Sunday in March, ☞ per his appointment.

Greenville Mission, Ohio District.—Our second quarterly meeting will be held at New Madison, Darke county, commencing, March 27th, to meet the President's visit. We invite Br's. J. Flood, I. Hunt, G. Thornburg, W. Pelan, Wilford Young, J. Q. A. Yonkey. S. P. Kezerta.

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT.

LETTERS RECEIVED.

Jos. Burns, S. Hazlett, M. U. Ensminger, A. S. Robinson, one subscriber; T. Hanna, L. D. Johnson, J. M. Winn, J. H. Freeman, B. Tout, W. Remsburg, H. Reger T. Brookover, S. Lancaster, E. Reynolds, J. W. Smith, P. M., J. F. Bane, J. B. Peat, G. M. Hunt, O. P. Stephens, one subscriber; N. Parker, P. M.—L. G.—C. H. Williams, M. Jared, two subscribers; C. J. Sears.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS.

From	For	Pays to Vol.	No.	$ cts.
Jos. Burns,	J. Brown. Va.,	8	52	2 00
M. U. Ensminger,		7	52	2 00
L. Starkey,	"	9	26	2 00
C. Springer,	J. Richey,	7	52	1 00
Wm. Duling,	W. Wisecarver,	8	29	1 00
C. H. Williams,	W. B. Adams, Ia.,	8	27	50
M. Jared,	G. W. Jackson, Ill.	8	52	2 00
C. J. Sears,	T. Rivers,	8	46	1 00
H. Sturges, Putnam,		8	52	2 00

